BEIJING

Beijing is a great city—literally, "The Great City." Famous Tiananmen Square is big enough to hold one million people, while the historic Forbidden City is home to thousands of imperial rooms. And Beijing is still growing. The capital has witnessed the emergence of more and higher rising towers, new restaurants and see-and-be-seen nightclubs. But at the same time, the city has managed to retain its very individual charm. The small tea houses in the backyards, the traditional fabric shops, the old temples and the noisy street restaurants make this city special.

THE CITY

Beijing: Nowhere else can you find so many historic sites so close to each other. The famous Forbidden City and nearby Tiananmen Square, mark the centre of Beijing. North, lies the popular Qianhai Lake, where locals cool down in the hot summer months. The Chongwen district to the south of the Forbidden City, houses the Temple of Heaven, while the Chaoyang district in the east is well-known for its trendy restaurants and bars.

Preparing the Chinese capital for the 2008 Olympic Games saw many old buildings getting refurbished and new skyscrapers erected. New restaurants, clubs and bars have also sprouted up and made the city more vibrant.

Yet, Beijing is still managing to retain its traditional charm. A stroll alongside the city's old shopping streets with its many silk, antique and tea shops give visitors a unique insight into Chinese culture. And of course, Beijing is also a culinary capital. From traditional Chinese dumplings to the original Beijing Duck, Beijing's hundreds of restaurant and food stalls are sure to stimulate your taste buds.

DO & SEE

Beijing is heaven for sightseeing fans. The city boasts well-known historic sites as well as many temples that attract thousands of visitors every year. The nearby Great Wall of China is clearly a must-see. Below is a list of some of the city's major tourist attractions.

Tiananmen Square

The 400 000 square metres large area is a key historic centre of Beijing. It was here that the former Communist Party leader, Mao Zedong, declared the founding of the People's Republic of China on October 1, 1949. Today, thousands of visitors come here every year to see Mao's remains in the mausoleum, visit the Great Hall of the People that houses the country's National People's Congress and admire the 15th century Qianmen City Gate, which once divided Beijing's ancient inner city and the suburban areas.

The Forbidden City

Built by Emperor Yongle in the early 15th century, the 720,000 square metres of Forbidden City was home to the imperial household. It was opened to the public in 1949. The well-preserved area boasts more than 800 buildings and 9,999.5 rooms. The Hall of Supreme Harmony, beautifully decorated with thousands of Dragons, was used to celebrate the Chinese emperor's birthday. The Palace of Heavenly Purity served as the emperors' living area and features several bedrooms.

Temple Of Heaven

This enormous park was built in the early 15th century, around the same time the Forbidden City was constructed. The park hosts several intriguing buildings. In the north of the park, a stone carved stairway leads up to the entrance of the Hall of Prayer for Good Harvests, with its cylindrical blue-tiled roof and a beautifully decorated ceiling. It was struck by lightning and burnt to the ground in 1889, but was carefully reconstructed the following year. The Hall of Abstinence was used by emperors for fasting. In the south you will find the Round Altar—a three-tiered marble platform.

Address: Tiantan Donglu
Underground: Qianmen

Yonghegong Lamasery (Lama Temple)

Originally built in 1694 as the residence of the future Yongzheng Emperor, this complex of beautifully designed buildings was transformed into a Tibetan Buddhist Temple in the mid-18th century. The Falun Dian, the temple's teaching and assembly hall, features a large bronze statue of Tsongkapa, the founder of the Buddhist Yellow Hat sect.

Liulichang

This street is a must for antique-hunters: be it Chinese paintings, ancient books, calligraphy brushes or ink stones you are sure to find it on Liulichang. A favourite among calligraphers and scholars in the old days, the 750 metres long street was restored and expanded in the late 1980s.

Address: Liulichang Street, Xuanwu District
Underground: Hepingmen

The Great Wall Of China

Undoubtedly one of the world's top tourism destinations, the Great Wall is a stunning monument stretching over 5,000 kilometres and is even visible from space. When in Beijing, the most convenient place to view the wall is from Badaling in Yanqing County, situated around 70 kilometres from the Chinese capital. Take one of the Tourist Buses leaving from Qianmen Station or Bus 919 departing from Deshengmen Station. Other sights open for tourists to explore the wall are Mutianyu, Huanghuacheng, Simatai and Jinshanling.

EATING

Chinese cuisine is no doubt one of the most popular across the globe - and it is not surprising that you'll find the best Chinese food in China! A visit to Beijing is not complete without having sampled the local speciality, the crispy Beijing Duck, which is served with pancakes, spring onions and fermented bean paste. However, Beijing also has a lot of fabulous international restaurants - from Brazilian to Japanese cuisine plus American-style fast food.

SHOPPING

Beijing has long been a centre of trade. Today, it boasts over 13,000 stores spread across the city, offering anything from original Chinese handicrafts to international designer fashion.

Wangfujing Street is among the most popular shopping miles in town. It is home to new, shiny shopping malls and department stores selling trendy, expensive brand-name goods. Shoppers here will also find foreign language book stores, some arts and crafts shops as well as restaurants.

Qianmen Street is one of oldest shopping streets of its kind in Beijing. It is home to many old shops selling traditional Chinese goods such as fine teas, soft silk and cotton fabrics and shoes.

Liulichang Street is great for antiques and has been a long-time favourite among scholars and calligraphers. Shops here are selling ink sticks, ink paste and other cultural goods, as well as some jewellery. If you think about taking up calligraphy, the sophisticated Chinese writing art, pay a visit to one of the stores on Liulichang to choose the most suitable equipment.

Another popular option for clothes is Xiushui Street, where both tourists and locals are hunting for bargain fabrics in all shapes and colours. Sanlitun Street, meanwhile, has witnessed the emergence of new and trendy designer shops.

Finally, if all this shopping makes you hungry, make sure you pay a visit to Hongqiao Market at Tiantan Donglu in the Chongwen district. This is a good wet market offering a wide range of seafood and fresh fish, including lobster and crabs, and features more exotic specialities such as snail meat.

Oriental Plaza

ESSENTIAL INFORMATION

Airport

The Beijing Capital International Airport is located around 27 kilometers north of Beijing's city centre. At present, the airport consists of three terminals. Philippine Airlines operates in Terminal 2. The cheapest way to into town is to take CAAC's comfortable airport shuttle bus. Tickets cost RMB 16 and the ride takes between 40-90 minutes, depending on traffic and origin/destination. The shuttles leave the airport from outside gates 11-13 in the arrival level of Terminal 2. Buses depart every 15-30 minutes.

There is also an airport express train called ABC or Airport to Beijing City. The airport express covers the 27.3 km distance between the airport and the city in 18 minutes, connecting Terminals 2 and 3, to Sanyuanxiao station in Line 10 and Dongzhimen station in Line 2. The one way ticket price is RMB 25.00.

Public Transport

The subway is the best way to move around the city and avoid traffic jams in Beijing. Currently, there are 8 lines in operations, including the newly-opened ABC, or Airport to Beijing City airport line, Line 10 and the Olympic Branch line.

The five existing lines are, Line 1, Line 2 or the Loop Line, Line 5, Line 13 and the Batong Line. The subway runs from 05:00 to midnight daily. Subway stations are marked by blue signs with a "D" (for Ditie or subway) in a circle. Tickets cost RMB 2, regardless of distance or destination. Route signs are in Bilingual.

Internet: www.ebeijing.gov.cn / www.bjsubway.com (in Chinese)

Taxi

Taxis are the default mode of transportation for most foreigners in Beijing. As much as 3 million people take the cab everyday so fear not, you will never run out of taxis in this city. There are at least 70,000 cabs in Beijing. The flagfall route is RMB 10.00 for the first three kilometers during the day and RMB 11 from 23:00 until 05:00. The costs of a ride is RMB 2 per kilometer, RMB 3 after 15 kilometers. Have your destination written down in Chinese.

Beijing taxi drivers are generally honest and friendly. Expect to get your change. Tipping is discouraged. Taxi from the airport to the city centre takes approximately around 50 minutes, depending on the traffic for roughly RMB 90, inclusive of a RMB 10 toll fee. Ask for your receipt by saying "Fapiao."

The Beijing Bureau of Communications takes complaints concerning taxis, minibus or other vehicles. No operator, but an English recording that gives instructions for faxing your complaint—which of course will mitigate your anger right away. Tel No. +86 10 6835 1150.
