If Scotland votes to become an independent country it would then need to negotiate independence arrangements with the rest of the United Kingdom before becoming independent in 2016. This would include the future of Scotland's currency. Alex Salmond has said he would like an independent Scotland to continue to use the pound as part of a currency union. The Conservative, Labour and Liberal Democrat parties have said that the rest of the United Kingdom would not agree to this.

If Scotland were to become independent, would you support or oppose Scotland continuing to use the pound as part of a currency union?

If Scotland votes YES in September there would be a year of negotiating the details of independence before Scotland formally becomes an independent country in March 2016.

Thinking about the 2015 election if Scotland votes to become independent, do you think it would be acceptable or unacceptable for a government to be formed after the election that relied upon Scottish MPs for its majority?

Would be acceptable - even if it is about to leave, for as long as they are part of the UK Scotland's MPs could legitimately be part of a government's majority

Would not be acceptable - if Scotland has voted for independence it would be wrong for a government to rely on the votes of Scottish MPs
