71. The 4,048 delegates to the Democratic convention include 795 superdelegates. Superdelegates, a distinction the party created in 1982, include some elected officials like governors and members of congress as well as some unelected people who have other ties to the Democratic party. Which of these comes closest to your thinking about how the superdelegates should decide who to vote for at the party's convention in August: 1. The superdelegates should vote for whichever candidate received the most votes in the primaries and caucuses OR, 2. The superdelegates should vote for whomever they want OR 3.
