CONTRIBUTORS

Chloë Blaszkewycz grew up in Montréal. She graduated from a BAC in anthropology at Université de Montréal in 2014. Her interests are grounded in critical and political anthropology, gender issues as well as documentary.

Mandela Coupal-Dagleish is from Mont-Saint-Grégoire, Québec. He is currently an undergraduate student at Concordia University in the Joint Specialization in Anthropology and Sociology where his particular area of interest lies in agriculture. He also spends much of his time working on his family farm.

Maximilian C. Forte is a Professor in the Department of Sociology & Anthropology at Concordia University in Montréal, Canada, where he directs the New Imperialism seminar. He specializes in the political economy, media, and cultural dimensions of US imperialism.

Iléana Eilis Sóley Gutnick is an anthropology student at Université de Montréal. She served as secretary general of the Association Étudiante d'Anthropologie de l'Université de Montréal. A radical feminist, she is interested in bottom-up anthropology and anti-colonial movements. She wishes to continue her travels and studies.

Robert Majewski is an alumnus of the Honours program in Anthropology at Concordia University, Montréal. Though he was born in Montréal, both of his parents are from Częstochowa, Poland. His main areas of interest and research are migration, sexuality (queer issues in particular), political anthropology and anthropology of food.

Leah Marinova arrived from Bulgaria as an immigrant, at the age of 17. Attracted by the arts, she began to study cinema. Soon the documentary form brought her to question ethics and to study the significance of cultural contexts. Thus Lea undertook her studies in anthropology. Marinova's research and films have taken many forms and have tackled very different subjects, but most recently an interest towards her own region is increasing. Born during the rise of “democracy,” just one year after the fall of the Berlin Wall, Marinova is acquainted with the qualities of this so-called “democracy”. Raised with the stories of her family chased by the socialist government for generations, she is now investigating the cultural, historical and presently-political contexts to understand the reasons of her own uprooting.

John Talbot, originally hailing from Edmonton Alberta, is completing his BA Specialization in Anthropology at Concordia University in Montréal, Québec. His primary interest is political anthropology, with focuses on direct action, empire, and politicized concepts of posthumanism such as deep ecology.
