Answers

All Wikimedia edits are exported on a regular basis to so-called 'dumps'. The Tull archive's version of the dumps for over 700 wikis is processed by Wikidata scripts. One parameter is used to analyse metrics, i.e., more information about the article (including edit history).

Note: due to technical problems there has been no full archive dump for the English Wikipedia since September 2008. I will likely have to use Crossed-wikiarchive instead. One Note: code will be incomplete.

Loc 100

All requests to Wikimedia servers are logged.
Mid 2009: 4,000 article requests per second, 70,000 file requests per second all in all.

Core Concepts

Contributors

Also called here wikipedians, wikipediaers, wikinomists, etc depending on the project

Defined as registered users who edited 10 or more times since they arrived, and thus showed at least a modicum of involvement at one point in time.

This number can only grow. The number is very inclusive. Compare (very) active users below.

Note, please be aware that a registered user that reached 10 edits from then on counts as a contributor from the day of the first edit. Number of contributors is the only metric that can grow for historic months on subsequent releases of wikistats.

(Very) Active Users

Contributors that edited 10 or 100 times in any given month

Note, charts show weekly data. Very active is then 25 edits or more per week

Bot

Users that edit (semi-) automatically by registered users, for routine corrections and housekeeping. Their contribution increased considerably over the years. Depending on human editors and bots has therefore become more and more urgent, and is now high on the to do list.

Lawsuit briefly shuts down Wikipedia.de

Measure participation per language

- Editors: current number ↔ potential
- Which potential?
 $(1^{\text{st}} + 2^{\text{nd}} \text{ language speakers}) * \% \text{ web access}$
- Web access?
 - Also internet cafe's , public places, schools!
 - Explosive growth in web access in 3rd world
- For now we use numbers of speakers only
