

Public Statement on the UNGASS 2016 process and draft outcome document

11 March 2016

An historic opportunity to achieve more humane and effective drug policy is at risk. The 2016 UN General Assembly Special Session (UNGASS) on the world drug problem is the first of its kind in 18 years. The initiative for urging forward UNGASS came from sitting presidents of Colombia, Guatemala and Mexico. The UN General Assembly endorsed the call for an open, honest and evidence-based debate.

The process of drafting an outcome document for UNGASS has been disappointing. Since it began in late 2015, the deliberations in Vienna have been neither transparent nor inclusive. Closed doors negotiations ensured that crucial priorities were neglected and outdated policies retained. The voices of civil society, concerned UN agencies, and the majority of UN member states have yet to be heard.

The outcome document is long on rhetoric, but short on substance. Although it includes positive references to human rights and public health, it offers no hard solutions to make them stick. None of the last three outcome document drafts proposed by the 53 member states serving on the Commission on Narcotic Drugs (CND) will result in meaningful change. There is no recognition of the failures of the present system to reduce supply and demand.

Fortunately, there is evidence of ways to put people's health, safety and human rights first. These fundamental aspirations cannot be met without:

- Ending the criminalization and incarceration of drug users;
- Abolishing capital punishment for drug-related offences;
- Empowering the World Health Organization (WHO) to review the scheduling system of drugs on the basis of scientific evidence;
- Ensuring a broad spectrum of treatments for dependent people and services designed to reduce the harms of drugs; and
- Allowing governments to apply different approaches to drug regulation in order to maximize public health and disempower organized crime.

Governments around the world are already testing out innovative forms of drug regulation. They should be encouraged to do more. There is also much to be learned from the successful regulation of alcohol and tobacco that also pose serious health risks when abused. Ultimately government-led regulation and prevention is the surest pathway to reducing the negative effects of drug use. Yet regulation is still prohibited by the UN Drug Conventions.

There is still time to get the UNGASS process back on track. This will only happen if heads of state lay the foundations for a more effective global drug control system that puts peoples' lives and dignity first. Moving the negotiations from Vienna to New York could also increase the transparency of the process and the scope of UN member state participation.

For more information on UNGASS and Global Commission on Drug Policy (GCDP) Minimum Agenda for UNGASS, access the GCDP the Q&A at:

http://www.globalcommissionondrugs.org/docs/statementungass2016-question-and-answers.pdf

For media queries, contact Zara at press@globalcommissionondrugs.org

Members of the Global Commission on Drug Policy

Aleksander Kwasniewski
Former President of Poland

Asma Jahangir

Former UN Special Rapporteur on Arbitrary, Extrajudicial and Summary Executions, Pakistan

Anand Grover

Former UN Special Rapporteur on the Right to Health, India

Carlos Fuentes

Writer and public intellectual, Mexico – in memoriam

César Gaviria

Former President of Colombia

Ernesto Zedillo

Former President of Mexico

Fernando Henrique Cardoso

Former President of Brazil (chair)

George Papandreou

Former Prime Minister of Greece

George Shultz

Former Secretary of State, United States (honorary chair)

Javier Solana

Former European Union High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy, Spain

John Whitehead

Banker and civil servant, chair of the World Trade Center Memorial, United States

Jorge Sampaio

Former President of Portugal

Kofi Annan

Former Secretary General of the United Nations, Ghana

Louise Arbour

Former UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Canada

Maria Cattaui

Former Secretary-General of the International Chamber of Commerce, Switzerland

Mario Vargas Llosa

Writer and public intellectual, Peru

Michel Kazatchkine

Professor of medicine, former Executive director of the Global Fund to fight AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria

Nick Clegg

Former Deputy Prime Minister of the UK

Olusegun Obasanjo

Former president of Nigeria, chairs the West Africa Commission on Drugs

Paul Volcker

Former Chairman of the US Federal Reserve and of the Economic Recovery Board, US

Pavel Bém

Former Mayor of Prague, member of the Parliament, Czech Republic

Ricardo Lagos

Former president of Chile

Richard Branson

Entrepreneur, advocate for social causes, founder of the Virgin Group, cofounder of The Elders, United Kingdom

Ruth Dreifuss

Former President of Switzerland and Minister of Home Affairs

Thorvald Stoltenberg

Former Minister of Foreign Affairs and UN High Commissioner for Refugees, Norway