Administrative regulation must be within scope and objects of statutory delegation. A regulation issued by an administrative body, in order to be valid, must be within the scope and objects of the statutory delegation of authority which underlies the regulation. Dixon v. Zick, 179 Colo. 278, 500 P.2d 130 (1972).

General assembly may delegate power to promulgate rules and regulations. While the general assembly may not delegate the power to make or define a law, it may delegate the power to promulgate rules and regulations to executive agencies so long as sufficient standards are set forth for the proper exercise of the agency's rule-making function. Colo. Auto & Truck Wreckers Ass'n v. Dept. of Rev., 618 P.2d 646 (Colo. 1980); Americans United for Separation of Church & State Fund, Inc. v. State, 648 P.2d 1072 (Colo. 1982).

Legislative delegation of rulemaking and regulatory authority to an administrative agency must provide both sufficient standards for rational and consistent rulemaking and adequate procedural safeguards for effective judicial review of administrative action. Orsinger Outdoor Advert., Inc. v. Dept. of Hwys., 752 P.2d 55 (Colo. 1988); Partridge v. State, 895 P.2d 1183 (Colo. App. 1995).

The proper focus to determine the validity of delegation of legislative authority should be upon the totality of protection provided by standards and procedural safeguards at both the statutory and administrative levels. Douglas County Bd. of Comm'rs v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 829 P.2d 1303 (Colo. 1992); Partridge v. State, 895 P.2d 1183 (Colo. App. 1995).

Delegation of legislative authority to the department of excise and licenses to adopt rules and conduct hearings on applications to renew liquor licenses is not unconstitutional on the basis that the statute fails to provide sufficient standards for defining "good cause". Squire Restaurant & Lounge v. Denver, 890 P.2d 164 (Colo. App. 1994).

Power to confer upon persons named in general law for incorporation of cities and towns authority to do certain acts therein specified, not being prohibited by the constitution, is not unconstitutional by reason of the delegation of such authority. People ex rel. Rhodes v. Fleming, 10 Colo. 553, 16 P. 298 (1887).

Delegation to municipal corporation constitutional. A delegation by the state of legislative powers to municipal corporations where it finds such to be necessary and appropriate, violates neither the constitution nor any substantive principle of law. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

Cooperation of governmental bodies in joint undertaking does not constitute improper delegation of power. Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

Delegation to commission constitutional. By authorizing a commission to establish the priority of claims for the appropriation of designated ground water, the ground water management act does not violate the doctrine of separation of powers nor constitute an unlawful delegation of judicial powers under this article and § 1 of art. VI, Colo. Const. In re Water Rights, 181 Colo. 395, 510 P.2d 323 (1973).

Permissible delegation of power to appropriate water for environmental purposes. The statutory language in §§ 37-92-102 and 37-92-103 (4) empowering the Colorado water board to appropriate such waters of natural streams and lakes as may be required to preserve the natural environment to a reasonable degree is not unconstitutionally vague and, therefore, not an impermissible delegation of authority. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. Colo. Water Conservation Bd., 197 Colo. 469, 594 P.2d 570 (1979).

The transfers of funds between executive departments at issue in the case impermissibly infringed on the legislature's plenary power of appropriation. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

Funds received from private corporation were essentially custodial, in that they were required to be used for a purpose approved ultimately by non-state authorities and to be administered in a trusteeship capacity, and were not subject to the legislative appropriation power. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

Federal block grants are subject to appropriation when matching state funds are required, and transfers between block grants are authorized. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Lamm, 738 P.2d 1156 (Colo. 1987).

In evaluating whether certain moneys fall under the powers of the legislative or executive branch, the primary question is whether those moneys constitute general state funds or custodial funds. The general assembly's plenary power over appropriations applies only to state moneys, while the governor retains control over those funds deemed custodial in nature. In re Interrogatories on House Bill 04-1098, 88 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2004).

Determination of whether certain moneys constitute custodial funds involves consideration of all of the circumstances surrounding the funds, including the source of the funds, the degree of flexibility afforded to the state as to the process by which the funds should be allocated, and the degree of flexibility afforded to the state as to the funds' ultimate purposes. In re Interrogatories on House Bill 04-1098, 88 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2004).

General assembly could constitutionally exclude funds that cannot fairly be described as custodial from the definition of "custodial moneys". In re Interrogatories on House Bill 04-1098, 88 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2004).

Section 42-6-134 is not invalid as an improper delegation of legislative authority to the department of revenue. Colo. Auto & Truck Wreckers Ass'n v. Dept. of Rev., 618 P.2d 646 (Colo. 1980).

Legislative act based on public policy not usurpation of court's prerogatives. If a legislative act is based on public policy rather than an attempt to regulate the day-to-day procedural operation of the court, it is not a usurpation of the court's prerogatives. People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

Submission of disputes to binding arbitration is valid. An existing collective bargaining agreement between a city and its employees which requires the submission of disputes to binding arbitration is valid as it does not involve the prohibited delegation of legislative authority. Denver Fire Fighters v. City of Denver, 629 P.2d 1086 (Colo. App. 1980), aff'd, 663 P.2d 1032 (Colo. 1983).

Considering both language of article XXIX (amendment 41) and voters' intent in initiating it, article XXIX is self-executing in that it does not require any further action by the legislature to be effective. A constitutional provision is self-executing when the provision appears to take immediate effect and no further action by the legislature is required to implement the right given. Here, article XXIX can take effect without any further action by the legislature. Its provisions do not merely lay out bare principles without any means of implementation; rather, the article has a built-in mechanism for operation. It provides for the creation of the independent ethics commission (commission) that, once in existence, will be independent of the general assembly and will promulgate necessary rules to implement and enforce gift bans and other ethical standards. There is no indication that voters intended to require further legislative action with respect to article XXIX. To the contrary, voters used initiative process to avoid possibility that general assembly would prevent them from establishing commission that would enforce gift bans against general assembly's members as well as other government employees. Developmental Pathways v. Ritter, 178 P.3d 524 (Colo. 2008).

III. EXECUTIVE POWERS.

Executive must function independently. It is a corollary to the proposition that the judiciary must be independent from the other branches of government that the executive must also function independently within its sphere of operation. Lawson v. Pueblo County, 36 Colo. App. 370, 540 P.2d 1136 (1975).

Duty of executive department is to carry laws into effect. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958).

The enforcement of statutes and administration thereunder are executive, not legislative, functions. MacManus v. Love, 179 Colo. 218, 499 P.2d 609 (1972).

The authority to promulgate rules for an executive agency resides in departments of government other than the judiciary. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Savio, 706 P.2d 1258 (Colo. 1985).

And to administer appropriated funds. In order to fulfill his duty to faithfully execute the laws, the executive has the authority to administer the funds appropriated by the general assembly for programs enacted by the general assembly, and must insure that the general assembly does not administer the appropriation once it has been made. Anderson v. Lamm, 195 Colo. 437, 579 P.2d 620 (1978).

Any inherent authority the executive may have to administer the budget may not normally be invoked to contradict major legislative budget determinations. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

But authority to regulate, by a proper board, does not include authority to legislate. Casey v. People, 139 Colo. 89, 336 P.2d 308 (1959).

Executive officers, boards or commissions may not be authorized by the legislature to promulgate rules and regulations of a strictly and exclusively legislative character. Casey v. People, 139 Colo. 89, 336 P.2d 308 (1959).

Power of governor over legislation by exercise of veto is legislative power. It can only be exercised when clearly authorized by a specific provision of the constitution, not only because this article so requires, but because, being a power in derogation of the general plan of the state government, the language conferring it must be strictly construed. Strong v. People ex rel. Curran, 74 Colo. 283, 220 P. 999 (1923).

The veto power is a limited legislative capability in the executive branch and is an exception to the separation of powers otherwise required by this article. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

But veto not necessary to invalidate unconstitutional provision. Any footnote violating either this article or § 32 of art. V, Colo. Const., in the 1971 senate appropriation bill no. 436 was void and unenforceable and the governor's act in vetoing was an appropriate act calling attention to the invalid footnote, but such veto was not necessary to invalidate any such footnote. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

Governor could not veto long bill headnotes because the headnotes were not items subject to the governor's line-item veto power. Headnotes defining full-time equivalent; health, life, and dental; personal services; short-term disability; lease purchase; leased space; legal services; operating expenses; vehicle lease payments; multiuse network payments; utilities; capital outlay; and purchase of services from computer center are void, however, because they violate the separation of powers by intruding on the authority of the executive branch to administer the laws. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Owens, 136 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2006).

Court cannot command governor to perform discretionary act. Under the doctrine of separation of powers, the supreme court cannot and will not command the governor to do any act which lies within his discretionary power. In re Legislative Reapportionment, 150 Colo. 380, 374 P.2d 66 (1962).

Authority of governor to call general assembly into special session is his discretionary prerogative. In re Legislative Reapportionment, 150 Colo. 380, 374 P.2d 66 (1962).

Governor's call for special session is one exception referred to in article. Section 9 of art. IV, Colo. Const., allowing for the governor's call for a special session, is one of the exceptions referred to in this article. People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

Transfer of prisoners proper administrative function. The transfer of convicts from one place of imprisonment to another is not such a judicial act that it cannot be performed by a governor under authority of statute. Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958).

The authority of the governor to transfer inmates of public institutions is properly delegated to him as an administrative duty. Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958).

Executive agency's only avenue for changing judicial rulings with which it is displeased is to obtain appropriate legislative relief. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Indus. Comm'n, 650 P.2d 1297 (Colo. App. 1982).

Consecutive life sentences not unconstitutional. The exercise of the trial court's discretion that the defendant should serve several of his life sentences consecutively is not an unconstitutional interference with the duties of the parole board. People v.

Montgomery, 669 P.2d 1387 (Colo. 1983).

Colorado state board of parole is an arm of executive branch of government. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Decision of board of parole to grant or deny parole is clearly discretionary since parole is a privilege, and no prisoner is entitled to it as a matter of right. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Only when state parole board fails to exercise duties can courts review. It is only when the Colorado state board of parole has failed to exercise its statutory duties that the courts of Colorado have the power to review the board's actions. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

But § 18-1-410 (1)(f) invades governor's exclusive power to grant commutation after conviction as provided in § 7 of art. IV, Colo. Const., and therefore violates the doctrine of separation of powers embodied in this article. People v. Herrera, 183 Colo. 155, 516 P.2d 626 (1973).

Although Crim. P. 35(a), not violative of executive's power of commutation. As Crim. P. Rule 35(a) which suspends the finality of the conviction for a period of 120 days from the time sentence is imposed, or for 120 days after final disposition on appeal, to allow the filing of a motion for reduction of sentence in the trial court, suspends the concept of finality of a criminal judgment of conviction, the rule does not offend the separation of powers doctrine under this article, nor the executive power of commutation. The court retains jurisdiction during the 120-day period for filing of a motion for reduction of sentence. People v. Smith, 189 Colo. 50, 536 P.2d 820 (1975).

Interference by a court with the authority of the prosecution to dismiss charges once filed may occur only in limited circumstances: (1) When exercising its supervisory authority to dismiss on constitutional grounds (e.g., infringement of defendant's due process rights); (2) when exercising its supervisory authority to protect the integrity of the judicial process (e.g., prosecutorial misconduct that interferes with grand jury's independent function); (3) upon determination that the evidence is insufficient to support prosecution; or (4) when authorized by statute that is consistent with constitutional separation of powers. People v. Renander, 151 P.3d 657 (Colo. App. 2006).

Trial court impermissibly encroached upon the authority vested in the executive branch and violated the separation of powers where court ordered prosecution to reassemble charges filed against defendant, resulting in the dismissal of 11 of the charges. People v. Renander, 151 P.3d 657 (Colo. App. 2006).

IV. JUDICIAL POWERS.

Judicial power of state is vested in courts; the legislative and executive departments are expressly forbidden the right to exercise it. Kolkman v. People, 89 Colo. 8, 300 P. 575 (1931).

Judicial powers can only be exercised by those entrusted therewith. The exercise of judicial power comprehends more than the use of perceptive and reflective faculties by which legal conclusions are deduced from the facts. The plenary exercise of power utilizes other attributes. The deliberate assumption of responsibility; the authoritative expression of legal conclusions in declaring the sentence of the law; the pronouncing of judgment in open court in the presence of those affected thereby, so as to bind and control persons and property; the protection, and sometimes loss, of life and liberty, as well as the character and fortunes of individuals; the establishing of precedents affecting cherished rights of persons and property -- all are involved in the exercise of judicial power, and illustrate its importance. Such powers cannot be lawfully exercised, except by those entrusted therewith by the people under the constitution. De Votie v. McGerr, 14 Colo. 577, 23 P. 980 (1890).

Judiciary is but one of three branches of government independent of other two. People v. Martinez, 185 Colo. 187, 523 P.2d 120, aff'd, 185 Colo. 187, 526 P.2d 1325 (1974).

Although dependent upon other branches for necessary expenses. The courts have the inherent power to carry on their functions so that they may operate independently and not become dependent upon or a supplicant of either of the other departments of government, and may incur necessary and reasonable expenses in the performance of their judicial duties and it is the plain ministerial duty of those who control the purse to pay such expenses except only where the amounts are so unreasonable as to affirmatively indicate arbitrary and capricious acts. Smith v. Miller, 153 Colo. 35, 384 P.2d 738 (1963); Pena v. District Court, 681 P.2d 953 (Colo. 1984).

Courts do not unnecessarily interdict actions of another branch of government. Gates Rubber Co. v. South Sub. Metro. Recreation & Park Dist., 183 Colo. 222, 516 P.2d 436 (1973).

As judiciary can no more exercise power constitutionally conferred upon general assembly than can the executive. People v. Herrera, 183 Colo. 155, 516 P.2d 626 (1973).

Court may not order general assembly to adopt, or not adopt any legislation since it would violate separation of powers doctrine. Lucchesi v. State, 807 P.2d 1185 (Colo. App. 1990).

It is improper for judiciary to tell governor how to delegate authority in extradition matters. It is no less improper for the judiciary to tell the governor, once he has delegated his authority, how the delegated authority should be exercised. Steinman v. Caldwell, 628 P.2d 110 (Colo. 1981).

Once governor has granted extradition, court considering release can only decide: (1) Whether the extradition documents on their face are in order; (2) whether the petitioner has been charged with a crime in the demanding state; (3) whether the petitioner is the person named in the request for extradition; and (4) whether the petitioner is a fugitive. Steinman v. Caldwell, 628 P.2d 110 (Colo. 1981).

Judiciary is charged with administration of justice and must be free to perform its functions without restriction or impairment by the acts or conduct of another department. Smith v. Miller, 153 Colo. 35, 384 P.2d 738 (1963).

And courts must be independent, unfettered, and free from directives, influence, or interference from any extraneous source in their responsibilities and duties. Smith v. Miller, 153 Colo. 35, 384 P.2d 738 (1963).

Impartial role. The role of the judiciary, if its integrity is to be maintained, is one of impartiality. People v. Martinez, 185 Colo. 187, 523 P.2d 120, aff'd, 186 Colo. 225, 526 P.2d 1325 (1974).

Assumption of nonjudicial power under pretense of case prohibited. Courts cannot, under the pretense of an actual case, assume powers vested in either the executive or the legislative branches of government. McCroskey v. Gustafson, 638 P.2d 51 (Colo. 1981); Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

Supreme court can give its opinion upon important questions when requested to do so. The same instrument which divides the powers of government into distinct departments has been so amended by the voice of the people as to require the supreme court to give its opinion upon important questions, upon solemn occasions, when required by the governor, the senate or the house of representatives. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890); People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

Reapportionment authority constitutionally delegated to supreme court. Amendment no. 9, a proposed constitutional amendment relating to reapportionment on the ballot at the general election held on November 5, 1975, which amendment provides for a commission to promulgate a plan of reapportionment which the supreme court either approves or, in effect, orders modified as required by the court, did not violate the doctrine of separation of powers, since this article provides that no powers belonging to one governmental department shall be exercised by either of the others "except as in this constitution expressly directed or permitted", and amendment no. 9 expressly directs and permits this action by the supreme court. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate Concerning House Bill 1078, 189 Colo. 1, 536 P.2d 308 (1975).

Supreme court has duty to uphold legislation unless there is no room for doubt as to its violation of constitutional provisions. Mosko v. Dunbar, 135 Colo. 172, 309 P.2d 581 (1957).

As courts may not substitute judgment for that of legislative body. It is not the court's function to approve or disapprove of the wisdom or the lack of wisdom of legislative decisions or desirability of legislative acts. Nor can it substitute judgment for that of the legislative body charged with the duty and responsibility of zoning. Frankel v. City & County of Denver, 147 Colo. 373, 363 P.2d 1063 (1961).

Courts do not substitute their judgment for that of the general assembly. People v. Summit, 183 Colo. 421, 517 P.2d 850 (1974).

When the general assembly defines a crime and sets forth the intent necessary to commit the crime, the courts cannot alter the elements or substitute a different animus or intent. People v. Kanan, 186 Colo. 255, 526 P.2d 1339 (1974).

Any judicial review of decisions by other branches of government is limited to that which is provided by the constitution or laws of this state. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

The judiciary's avoidance of deciding political questions finds its roots in the Colorado Constitution's provisions separating the powers of state government, and recognizes that certain issues are best left for resolution by the other branches of government, or to be fought out on the hustings and determined by the people at the polls. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 134 P. 129 (Colo. 1913); Colo. Common Cause v. Bledsoe, 810 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1991).

And courts possess no power to nullify by judicial repeal what has been regularly enacted by legislative branch of the government. Indus. Comm'n v. Lindvay, 94 Colo. 531, 31 P.2d 495 (1934).

Determination of constitutionality of statute only when claim timely. A claim that a statute under which an administrative board or department of the executive is proceeding is unconstitutional does not clothe the judiciary with power to interfere with or control such board in advance of its taking final action; such claim may be made only after the board has performed its function. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958).

The issue of whether the Colorado Constitution's speech-or-debate clause grants legislators absolute immunity from lawsuits was one traditionally within the role of the judiciary to resolve for it is peculiarly the province of the judiciary to interpret the constitution and say what the law is. Colo. Common Cause v. Bledsoe, 810 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1991).

Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with officers of state whose duties are imposed by statute. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958).

In deference to the tripartite structure of government, courts recognize that a trial court may not interfere with the officers of the executive branch of government whose duties are imposed by statute. Colo. Coll. v. Heckers, 33 Colo. App. 219, 517 P.2d 419 (1973).

The supreme court cannot enjoin upon officers of the state duties that they do not have under the constitution or prohibit them from exercising duties imposed upon them by the constitution. In re Legislative Reapportionment, 150 Colo. 380, 374 P.2d 66 (1962).

As judicial department cannot interfere with executive department, except where constitutionally permissible. People ex rel. Dunbar v. District Court, 180 Colo. 107, 502 P.2d 420 (1972).

The authority to promulgate rules for an executive agency resides in departments of government other than the judiciary. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Savio, 706 P.2d 1258 (Colo. 1985).

Courts do not have jurisdiction to interfere with the executive branch of the government in the performance of its statutory duties. Kort v. Hufnagel, 729 P.2d 370 (Colo. 1986).

A juvenile court, once having committed an individual to the custody of the department of institutions pursuant to statute, may not impose its own conditions on the department's treatment of that individual. McDonnell v. Juvenile Court, 864 P.2d 565 (Colo. 1993).

Prohibition in district court usurps executive authority. The sole object of the writ of prohibition in the district court is to obtain an injunction to restrain a state board from performing its duties. If this should be permitted in a direct proceeding, the result would be to directly subject executive officials to the jurisdiction of the courts when acting within their province, and strip them of their constitutional powers. This is an authority which the judicial department cannot exercise in this manner, for the obvious reason that to concede it would be an assumption that the judicial was of superior authority to the executive department. Colo. State Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. District Court, 138 Colo. 227, 331 P.2d 502 (1958); People ex rel. Orcutt v. District Court, 167 Colo. 162, 445 P.2d 887 (1968).

Court was without jurisdiction to assess court costs against executive branch of the state, or its officers. State ex rel. Fort Logan Mental Health Center v. Harwood, 34 Colo. App. 213, 524 P.2d 614 (1974).

De novo review of nonjudicial function violates article. If the function performed by an agency is administrative or legislative, and if a court is required to do all over again what the agency has done, the system of review violates this article and the separation of powers doctrine. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Northwest Water Corp., 168 Colo. 154, 451 P.2d 266 (1969).

And supreme court has exclusive power to define and regulate practice of law and to determine the qualifications for admission of persons to practice law, as well as the correlative right to discipline those licensed to practice law. Denver Bar Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 154 Colo. 273, 391 P.2d 467 (1964); People v. Buckles, 167 Colo. 64, 453 P.2d 404 (1968).

There is no authority in these respects in legislative or executive departments. Legislation in any of these areas does not add to or detract from the exclusive authority of the supreme court. Denver Bar Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 154 Colo. 273, 391 P.2d 467 (1964).

Supreme court regulation counsel and office of attorney regulation counsel are part of the judicial branch because they are part of a process of regulating attorneys that falls within the powers and duties of the judicial branch. Gleason v. Judicial Watch, Inc., 2012 COA 76, 292 P.3d 1044.

Disqualifying felons from practice of law consistent with power. Section 18-1-105, disqualifying a convicted felon of holding an office of trust or practicing as an attorney, nowise interferes with the exclusive right of the supreme court to determine the rules and regulations which shall govern those seeking admission to the bar. Nor does the statute impinge in any real sense the judicial right to discipline those licensed to practice law. Rather, this is an effort by the general assembly, under its police power, to bar convicted felons from practicing law in the courts. The general assembly has the power to do so, and § 18-1-105 does not violate the separation of powers doctrine. People v. Buckles, 167 Colo. 64, 453 P.2d 404 (1968).

Courts may promulgate and enforce rules of procedure. The courts, charged with the duty of exercising the judicial power, must necessarily possess the means with which to effectually and expeditiously discharge that duty; this duty can be performed and discharged in no other manner than through rules of procedure, and consequently the supreme court is charged with the power and duty of formulating, promulgating, and enforcing such rules of procedure for the trial of actions as it deems necessary and proper for performing its constitutional function. Kolkman v. People, 89 Colo. 8, 300 P. 575 (1931).

Person denied parole can seek judicial review only as provided by C.R.C.P. 106 (a)(2). In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

The supreme court may promulgate procedural rules. The general assembly is free to fashion substantive rules which reflect policy judgments that may affect procedures in the judicial system. The line that separates a substantive rule from a procedural rule is amorphous; no legal test has been uniformly adopted. J.T. v. O'Rourke ex rel. Tenth Judicial Dist., 651 P.2d 407 (Colo. 1982).

Section 16-5-402 is a substantive statute, is an appropriate subject for legislative action, and does not infringe on the rule making power of the judiciary or the constitutional doctrine of separation of powers. People v. Wiedemer, 852 P.2d 424 (Colo. 1993).

Supreme court's rule-making authority is described in § 21 of art. VI of this constitution. People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

Constitution grants to supreme court the power to promulgate rules governing court procedure, but the question remains whether a particular rule or statute is procedural or substantive. People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

A statute governing procedural matters in criminal cases which conflicts with a rule promulgated by the supreme court would be a legislative invasion of the court's rule-making powers. Conversely, in substantive matters, a statutory enactment of the legislative branch prevails over a conflicting supreme court rule. People v. Hollis, 670 P.2d 441 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Prophet, 42 P.3d 61 (Colo. App. 2001).

The test for distinguishing procedural from substantive matters requires an examination of the purpose of the statute: If the purpose is to permit the court to function and function efficiently, the statute must yield to the rule; whereas, if the statute embodies a matter of public policy, the statute controls. People v. Hollis, 670 P.2d 441 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Prophet, 42 P.3d 61 (Colo. App. 2001).

Section 18-3-408 does not violate the constitutional requirement of separation of powers by interfering with the rule-making power of the court established in § 21 of art. VI of this constitution. People v. Estorga, 200 Colo. 78, 612 P.2d 520 (1980).

Subsection 17-22.5-403 (9) does not violate separation of powers. The constitution does not provide that sentencing is within the sole province of the judiciary. The general assembly has the power to prescribe punishment and limit the court's sentencing authority. In this case, the general assembly, by enacting subsection (9), simply extended Colorado's parole supervision scheme to provide additional means for successfully reintegrating offenders into the community consistent with public safety. People v. Jackson, 109 P.3d 1017 (Colo. App. 2004).

Mandatory sentences for violent crimes do not violate separation of powers doctrine; the judiciary is not granted the absolute right to determine punishment in every case. People v. Childs, 199 Colo. 436, 610 P.2d 101 (1980).

And judiciary may not delegate power to sentence. This article prohibits the general assembly from delegating a legislative power to the judiciary, and the judiciary in turn from thereafter delegating the judicial power to fix and determine a sentence to the executive department. Specht v. Tinsley, 153 Colo. 235, 385 P.2d 423 (1963).

But must confine prisoners where general assembly determines. Designation of place of confinement of those found guilty of crime is a legislative rather than judicial function, and sentences must be pronounced in conformity with the legislative mandate. Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958).

Juvenile courts cannot delegate power to detain to executive branch. The children's code gives the juvenile courts the power to detain 14- and 15-year old children in an adult detention facility, but the court cannot delegate its judicial power to the executive branch. C.C.C. v. District Court, 188 Colo. 437, 535 P.2d 1117 (1975).

Prosecutorial discretion not subject to judicial control. Whether the evidence of witnesses shall be tested by ordinary means of interrogation or by other means, such as requiring a potential witness to submit to a polygraph examination, is a matter of prosecutorial discretion and is not subject to judicial control or direction. People v. District Court, 632 P.2d 1022 (Colo. 1981).

Prosecutorial discretion flows from the doctrine of separation of powers and a prosecutor's charging decision may not be controlled or limited by judicial intervention. People v. Hughes, 946 P.2d 509 (Colo. App. 1997).

Whether constitutionally guaranteed property right can be denied for some justifiable reason is essentially judicial question, and under the doctrine of separation of powers of government it must remain a judicial question. People v. Nothaus, 147 Colo. 210, 363 P.2d 180 (1961).

Where the plaintiff alleged that mandatory arbitration violates the separation of powers doctrine, the court held that the Colorado mandatory arbitration act does not vest judicial authority in another branch of government and therefore does not violate the provisions of this article. Firelock Inc. v. District Court, 776 P.2d 1090 (Colo. 1989).

Section 22-33-108 (7) violates the constitutional requirement of separation of powers by abrogating the judiciary's power to incarcerate juveniles for contempt of court orders in compulsory school attendance cases. In Interest of J.E.S., 817 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1991).

Probation-like supervision of a defendant by adult diversion program in a district attorney's office was not a violation of separation of powers. Probation is not a necessary function of the judiciary, and there is no constitutional requirement that defendants on deferred judgment be supervised by the judicial branch. People v. Method, 900 P.2d 1282 (Colo. App. 1994).

Because preliminary injunction issued before independent ethics commission (commission) came into existence and before it had opportunity to act in furtherance of article XXIX (amendment 41), plaintiffs failed to present a ripe as-applied constitutional challenge. Relief plaintiffs seek is only available in a successful facial challenge, not in an as-applied challenge. In order for plaintiffs to obtain a declaration that article XXIX is unconstitutional as applied, there must be an actual application or at least a reasonable possibility of enforcement or threat of enforcement. As of the time of suit, the commission was not yet in existence, and it had not yet acted to enforce the gift bans. No enforcement or threat of enforcement of the gift bans had occurred. Therefore, concerns expressed by plaintiffs were merely speculative interpretations of what might occur once commission is operative. As such, district court did not have jurisdiction to grant preliminary injunction. Developmental Pathways v. Ritter, 178 P.3d 524 (Colo. 2008).

ARTICLE IV
Executive Department

Section 1. Officers - terms of office. (1) The executive department shall include the governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, and attorney general, each of whom shall hold his office for the term of four years, commencing on the second Tuesday of January in the year 1967, and each fourth year thereafter. They shall perform such duties as are prescribed by this constitution or by law.

(2) In order to broaden the opportunities for public service and to guard against excessive concentrations of power, no governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, or attorney general shall serve more than two consecutive terms in such office. This limitation on the number of terms shall apply to terms of office beginning on or after January 1, 1991. Any person who succeeds to the office of governor or is appointed or elected to fill a vacancy in one of the other offices named in this section, and who serves at least one-half of a term of office, shall be considered to have served a term in that office for purposes of this subsection (2). Terms are considered consecutive unless they are at least four years apart.

Purpose of section. The purpose of this section is to provide for such officers of the executive department as the members of the constitutional convention deemed absolutely indispensable; leaving it to the general assembly to create new offices as the growth of the state and experience might suggest, and to abolish the same, but without authority to abolish any of those enumerated. Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896); People ex rel. Foley v. Montez, 48 Colo. 436, 110 P. 639 (1910).

Section did not intend to limit executive officers. In declaring what officers should constitute the executive department of the state, it was not intended that the general assembly should not create new executive officers. Such a presumption would do violence to the intelligence of the framers of that instrument, and of the people who adopted it. Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

Governor derives his authority from constitution and laws enacted pursuant thereto. Colo. Polytechnic Coll. v. State Bd. for Cmty. Colls., 173 Colo. 39, 476 P.2d 38 (1970).

And action by governor in excess of authority deemed void. Where no constitutional or legislative authority, express or implied, is to be found conferring an appointive power upon the governor or authority upon the state board for community colleges and occupational education to act on behalf of the federal government, the governor's designation of the state board as the "state approving agency" for approval or nonapproval of courses offered to veterans was without lawful authority and a nullity. Colo. Polytechnic Coll. v. State Bd. for Cmty. Colls., 173 Colo. 39, 476, P.2d 38 (1970).

This section created office of attorney general, made the incumbent thereof an executive officer of the state, and required him to perform such duties as may be prescribed by the constitution or by law. People v. Gibson, 53 Colo. 231, 125 P. 531, 1914B Ann. Cas. 138 (1912).

But office has only powers given thereto by general assembly. Although the constitution recognizes the attorney general as being part of the executive branch of government, the attorney general does not have powers beyond those granted by the general assembly. People ex rel. Tooley v. District Court, 190 Colo. 486, 549 P.2d 774 (1976).

Though the attorney general and the district attorney are constitutional officers in this state, their powers and duties are not specified in the constitution itself, but are such as the general assembly by legislative act may prescribe. Colo. State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Hallett, 88 Colo. 331, 296 P. 540 (1931).

And no constitutionally exclusive right to prosecute state's civil actions. There is no constitutional provision which confers upon the attorney general the exclusive right to prosecute and defend civil actions in behalf of the state. Colo. State Bd. of Pharmacy v. Hallett, 88 Colo. 331, 296 P. 540 (1931).

As Colorado has neither identified nor required attorney general to serve as "people's elected chief law officer", as some states have. People ex rel. Tooley v. District Court, 190 Colo. 486, 549 P.2d 774 (1976).

State board of assessors deemed executive, though not constitutionally defined. The state board of assessors is not part of the executive department as defined by the constitution, but it cannot be seriously contended that it is not part of the executive branch of the state government, in the comprehensive sense in which executive is used when government is divided into three distinct branches. It is express duty of governor to see that laws be faithfully executed and to perform other duties mentioned in the constitution. People ex rel. Ammons v. Kenehan, 55 Colo. 589, 136 P. 1033 (1913).

Executive to administer appropriated funds. In order to fulfill his duty to faithfully execute the laws, the executive has the authority to administer the funds appropriated by the general assembly for programs enacted by the general assembly, and must insure that the general assembly does not administer the appropriation once it has been made. Anderson v. Lamm, 195 Colo. 437, 579 P.2d 620 (1978).

The governor retains control over those funds deemed custodial in nature. In re Interrogatories on House Bill 04-1098, 88 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2004).

The governor's flexibility in administering appropriated funds is limited by the principle that the legislature controls the amount to be spent for particular purposes. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

Governor may petition for mandamus against state officer. The governor is a proper party to petition for an original writ of mandamus to compel the state auditor to process lawful appropriations. Although private interests of claimants are involved, the paramount interest is the interest of the state. The governor is directly interested in seeing that the officers of the executive department, of which he is the supreme head, shall execute the duties imposed upon them by law, when the performance of those duties is necessary before the governor can properly discharge the duties imposed upon him. People ex rel. Ammons v. Kenehan, 55 Colo. 589, 136 P. 1033 (1913).

Supreme executive power does not include powers of land board. The discretion and power of the state board of land commissioners, being vested in the members collectively by §§ 9 and 10 of art. IX, Colo. Const., is not included in the supreme executive power which is by the constitution vested alone in the governor. Greenwood Cem. Land Co. v. Routt, 17 Colo. 156, 28 P. 1125 (1892).

In suit involving nongovernmental power governor must yield to judgment of court. The general rule is that private rights must be regarded irrespective of the parties to the controversy. When the governor has had his day in court in a suit or action with a private citizen in a matter affecting a specific vested right of the latter such as the right to have the governor sign a patent of the land board, and not involving the political, governmental, or other discretionary power of the former, and the action is finally determined in favor of the citizen, there can be no doubt that it is the duty of the governor, the same as any other party, to yield obedience to the judgment of the court. Greenwood Cem. Land Co. v. Routt, 17 Colo. 156, 28 P. 1125 (1892).

As personification of state, governor proper party defendant in suit contesting constitutionality of article XXIX (amendment 41) at time of its filing. The evaluation of whether a person or entity is a proper party in a lawsuit must be determined in light of relevant facts and circumstances. There was no alternative entity for plaintiffs to sue in order to challenge article XXIX. Colorado has long recognized the practice of naming the governor, in his role as state's chief executive, as proper defendant in cases where a party seeks to "enjoin or mandate enforcement of a statute, regulation, ordinance, or policy". The only appropriate state agent for litigation purposes was the governor. Prior to creation of the independent ethics commission, the governor was appropriate party defendant in a constitutional challenge. Developmental Pathways v. Ritter, 178 P.3d 524 (Colo. 2008).

Section 3. State officers - election - returns. The officers named in section one of this article shall be chosen on the day of the general election, by the registered electors of the state. The governor and the lieutenant governor shall be chosen jointly by the casting by each voter of a single vote applicable to both offices. The returns of every election for said officers shall be sealed up and transmitted to the secretary of state, directed to the speaker of the house of representatives, who shall immediately, upon the organization of the house, and before proceeding to other business, open and publish the same in the presence of a majority of the members of both houses of the general assembly, who shall for that purpose assemble in the house of representatives. The joint candidates having the highest number of votes cast for governor and lieutenant governor, and the person having the highest number of votes for any other office, shall be declared duly elected, but if two or more have an equal and the highest number of votes for the same office or offices, one of them, or any two for whom joint votes were cast for governor and lieutenant governor respectively, shall be chosen thereto by the two houses, on joint ballot. Contested elections for the said offices shall be determined by the two houses, on joint ballot, in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

ANNOTATION

Duty does not make speaker state officer. There is no substantial reason for concluding that the duty of receiving, opening, and publishing the election returns for officers of the executive department before both houses of the general assembly was devolved upon the speaker on the ground that he was a state officer; nor does the devolving of such duty upon the speaker in any way tend to make him a state officer any more than it makes state officers of all the members of the general assembly who are required to participate in the canvass of such returns. It seems far more probable that the lieutenant governor is exempted from such duty because he is a state officer. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Section 4. Qualifications of state officers. No person shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor unless he shall have attained the age of thirty years, nor to the office of secretary of state or state treasurer unless he shall have attained the age of twenty-five years, nor to the office of attorney general unless he shall have attained the age of twenty-five years and be a licensed attorney of the supreme court of the state in good standing, and no person shall be eligible to any one of said offices unless, in addition to the qualifications above prescribed therefor, he shall be a citizen of the United States, and have resided within the limits of the state two years next preceding his election.

Section 5. Governor commander-in-chief of militia. The governor shall be commander-in-chief of the military forces of the state, except when they shall be called into actual service of the United States. He shall have power to call out the militia to execute the laws, suppress insurrection or repel invasion.

Phrase, "to execute the laws" contemplates enforcement of judicial process -- that is, the enforcement of a right or remedy provided by the law and judicially determined and ordered to be enforced, not an arbitrary enforcement by the executive of what he may consider the law to be. In re Fire & Excise Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 482, 36 P. 234 (1894).

By no rule of construction can the power and duty imposed upon the governor "to execute the laws" be held to authorize the forcible induction of an appointee into office. In re Fire & Excise Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 482, 36 P. 234 (1894).

Governor's declaration that state of insurrection exists is conclusive of that fact. Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U.S. 78, 29 S. Ct. 235, 53 L. Ed. 410 (1909).

It must become the governor's duty to determine as a fact when conditions exist in a given locality which demand that in the discharge of his duties as chief executive of the state he shall employ the militia to suppress. This being true, the recitals in the proclamation to the effect that a state of insurrection existed in a certain locality cannot be controverted. Otherwise the legality of the orders of the executive would not depend upon his judgment, but upon the judgment of another coordinate branch of the state government. In re Moyer, 35 Colo. 159, 85 P. 190 (1905).

Relation to section 2 of this article. As section 2 of this article requires the governor to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, he is made commander-in-chief of the military forces of the state, and vested with authority to call out the militia to execute the laws and suppress insurrection. In re Moyer, 35 Colo. 159, 85 P. 190 (1905).

Legislative regulation of tenure of officers of National Guard does not contravene this section, providing that the governor shall be commander-in-chief of the military forces of the state. People ex rel. Boatright v. Newlon, 77 Colo. 516, 238 P. 44 (1925).

Section 6. Appointment of officers - vacancy. (1) The governor shall nominate, and, by and with the consent of the senate, appoint all officers whose offices are established by this constitution, or which may be created by law, and whose appointment or election is not otherwise provided for, and may remove any such officer for incompetency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. If the vacancy occurs in any such office while the senate is not in session, the governor shall appoint some fit person to discharge the duties thereof until the next meeting of the senate when he shall nominate and, by and with the consent of the senate, appoint some fit person to fill such office.

(2) If the office of state treasurer, secretary of state, or attorney general shall be vacated by death, resignation, or otherwise, the governor shall nominate and, by and with the consent of the senate, appoint a successor. The appointee shall hold the office until his successor shall be elected and qualified in such manner as may be provided by law. If the vacancy occurs in any such office while the senate is not in session, the governor shall appoint some fit person to discharge the duties thereof until the next meeting of the senate, when he shall nominate and, by and with the consent of the senate, appoint some fit person to fill such office.

(3) The senate in deliberating upon executive nominations may sit with closed doors, but in acting upon nominations they shall sit with open doors, and the vote shall be taken by ayes and noes, which shall be entered upon the journal.

This section recognizes and provides for appointment of officers not enumerated in section 1 of this article. People ex rel. Foley v. Montez, 48 Colo. 436, 110 P. 639, 38 L.R.A. (n.s.) 1001 (1910).

Interim appointment power of governor must be exercised exclusively by him and by his express executive order. People ex rel. Lamm v. Banta, 189 Colo. 474, 542 P.2d 377 (1975).

Expiration of incumbent's term of office creates vacancy within the meaning of this section of the constitution. Murphy v. People ex rel. Lehman, 78 Colo. 276, 242 P. 57 (1925).

The term "vacancies" does not apply to the incumbent but to the term or the office, or both, depending generally on the context. People ex rel. Bentley v. Le Fevre, 21 Colo. 218, 40 P. 882 (1895); People ex rel. Callaway v. De Guelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); People ex rel. Griffith v. Scott, 52 Colo. 59, 120 P. 126 (1911).

And state officers may resign; the relinquishment of public office may be exercised at the pleasure of the holder thereof. People ex rel. Rosenberg v. Keating, 112 Colo. 26, 144 P.2d 992 (1944).

Section provides for discharge of duties of office. This section does not say that the officers shall hold their offices until their successors shall be appointed and qualified, but merely that the officer shall discharge the duties of the office, implying that he is a mere locum tenens. Walsh v. People ex rel. McClenahan, 72 Colo. 406, 211 P. 646 (1922). See People ex rel. Griffith v. Scott, 52 Colo. 59, 120 P. 126 (1911).

As ad interim appointments do not fill vacancies. This section providing for ad interim appointments, plainly refers to cases where the joint action of the governor and the senate is necessary to fill a vacancy. Its very language indicates that such appointments, by the governor, are not intended to fill vacancies. It does not say that he shall appoint some fit person to fill the vacancy or the office until the senate meets, but "to discharge the duties thereof until the next meeting of the senate, when he shall nominate some person to fill such office". "To fill such office" undoubtedly means for the unexpired term and the governor in making ad interim appointments does not fill a vacancy. People ex rel. Griffith v. Scott, 52 Colo. 59, 120 P. 126 (1911).

Appointment power where vacancy continues after senate session. Under the clear language of this section, the governor has no interim appointive power while the senate is in session, but if, however, such a vacancy continues until a time when the senate is not in session, the interim appointive power of the governor then comes into being. People ex rel. Lamm v. Banta, 189 Colo. 474, 542 P.2d 377 (1975).

Where vacancy occurs in office of public trustee, appointment to discharge the duties may be made by the governor, as provided by this section. Walsh v. People ex rel. McClenahan, 72 Colo. 406, 211 P. 646 (1922).

This provision does not apply to offices created by statute to be filled as therein otherwise provided. People v. Osborne, 7 Colo. 605, 4 P. 1074 (1884); Brown v. People, 11 Colo. 109, 17 P. 104 (1887); Trimble v. People ex rel. Phelps, 19 Colo. 187, 34 P. 981 (1893); Monash v. Rhodes, 27 Colo. 235, 60 P. 569 (1900).

Thus, appointment of warden of state reformatory is not committed to governor, being "otherwise provided for" within the meaning of this section. The constitution not conferring upon any officer the power to appoint to this office, it rested with the general assembly to confer the power, and take it away, at its pleasure. People ex rel. Walker v. Capp, 61 Colo. 396, 158 P. 143 (1916).

Although constitutional method may apply until statutory method effective. If a method is prescribed by statute for the filling of vacancies, requiring the joint action of the governor and senate, and time must expire between its occurrence in the recess of the senate and the time that the statutory method of filling it can be employed, the constitutional regulation for the appointment ad interim must be resorted to for the intervening time. People ex rel. Griffith v. Scott, 52 Colo. 59, 120 P. 126 (1911).

Power of removal includes only officers appointed with consent of senate. The governor lacks the power to remove a state personnel board member under this section. "Such officer" in this section refers only to officers appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate. It is the method of appointment, not the place of its provision, which governs. No other conclusion can be reached save by striking the word "such" and reading it "may remove any officer". Roberts v. People ex rel. Hicks, 77 Colo. 281, 235 P. 1069 (1925).

Applied in In re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 188, 21 P. 481 (1888); People ex rel. Smith v. Crissman, 41 Colo. 450, 92 P. 949 (1907).

Section 7. Governor may grant reprieves and pardons. The governor shall have power to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons after conviction, for all offenses except treason, and except in case of impeachment, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons, but he shall in every case where he may exercise this power, send to the general assembly at its first session thereafter, a transcript of the petition, all proceedings, and the reasons for his action.

Power of commutation is power to reduce punishment from a greater to a lesser sentence. People v. Herrera, 183 Colo. 155, 516 P.2d 626 (1973).

Governor may pardon public offense but he cannot deprive suitor of his remedy. Ex parte Browne, 2 Colo. 553 (1875).

Where governor has commuted defendant's sentence, supreme court lacks jurisdiction to reduce, or in any way alter or amend the sentence as commuted. People v. Simms, 186 Colo. 447, 528 P.2d 228 (1974).

Trial court may take "second look" at sentence before conviction final. A trial court retains jurisdiction to take a "second look" at a sentence previously imposed only before the judgment of conviction underlying such sentence has become final. People v. Lyons, 44 Colo. App. 126, 618 P.2d 673 (1980).

But executive has sole authority to modify sentence after final conviction. The executive branch of government, not the judiciary, has the sole authority to modify a legally imposed criminal sentence after the conviction upon which it is based has become final. People v. Lyons, 44 Colo. App. 126, 618 P.2d 673 (1980).

And district court cannot alter or amend commuted sentence imposed by governor, because the governor has exclusive power to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons after conviction. People ex rel. Dunbar v. District Court, 180 Colo. 107, 502 P.2d 420 (1972); Johnson v. Perko, 692 P.2d 1140, (Colo. App. 1984).

So motion filed after commutation to correct clerical errors denied. Since the courts lack jurisdiction to alter or amend a commuted sentence imposed by the executive, a motion under Rule 36, Crim. P., to correct clerical oversights in sentencing may not be granted after commutation. People v. Quintana, 42 Colo. App. 477, 601 P.2d 637 (1979).

Prisoner's remedy when conviction is final. Once the conviction has become final the court lacks further jurisdiction to modify a sentence validly imposed, as to do so would encroach upon the executive power of the governor to grant executive commutation. The prisoner's remedy when his conviction has become final is to seek relief through the executive department. McClure v. District Court, 187 Colo. 359, 532 P.2d 340 (1975).

After conviction and exhaustion of appellate remedies, relief from a criminal sentence validly imposed may not be obtained through the judiciary, but rather the remedy therefor lies in the executive department by way of commutation. People v. Arellano, 185 Colo. 280, 524 P.2d 305 (1974); People v. Chavez, 185 Colo. 310, 524 P.2d 307 (1974).

Pardon not issued in compliance with procedures required by § 16-17-102 is invalid. People ex rel. Garrison v. Lamm, 622 P.2d 87 (Colo. App. 1980).

Section 18-1-410 (1) (f) invades governor's exclusive power to grant commutation after conviction as provided in this section, and therefore violates the doctrine of separation of powers embodied in art. III, Colo. Const. People v. Herrera, 183 Colo. 155, 516 P.2d 626 (1973).

But Crim. P. 35(a) is valid procedural rule promulgated pursuant to the rule-making power of the supreme court under § 21 of art. VI, Colo. Const., and it does not encroach upon the governor's exclusive power of commutation under this section. People v. Smith, 189 Colo. 50, 536 P.2d 820 (1975).

Applied in Best v. People ex rel. Florom, 121 Colo. 100, 212 P.2d 1007 (1949); People ex rel. Metzger v. District Court, 121 Colo. 141, 215 P.2d 327 (1949); People v. Chavez, 185 Colo. 310, 524 P.2d 307 (1974); People v. Malacara, 199 Colo. 243, 606 P.2d 1300 (1980); McKnight v. People, 199 Colo. 313, 607 P.2d 1007 (1980).

Section 8. Governor may require information from officers - message. The governor may require information in writing from the officers of the executive department upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, which information shall be given upon oath whenever so required; he may also require information in writing at any time, under oath, from all officers and managers of state institutions, upon any subject relating to the condition, management and expenses of their respective offices and institutions. The governor shall, at the commencement of each session, and from time to time, by message, give to the general assembly information of the condition of the state, and shall recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient. He shall also send to the general assembly a statement, with vouchers, of the expenditures of all moneys belonging to the state and paid out by him. He shall, also, at the commencement of each session, present estimates of the amount of money required to be raised by taxation for all purposes of the state.

ANNOTATION

Applied in Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

Section 9. Governor may convene legislature or senate. The governor may, on extraordinary occasions convene the general assembly, by proclamation, stating therein the purpose for which it is to assemble; but at such special session no business shall be transacted other than that specially named in the proclamation. He may by proclamation, convene the senate in extraordinary session for the transaction of executive business.

ANNOTATION

This section is one of the exceptions referred to in art. III of this constitution. People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

Governor's authority not to offend separation of powers. The governor's authority to prescribe the matters for legislative action must be reasonably interpreted so as not to offend the separation of powers requirement. Empire Sav., Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Otero Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 640 P.2d 1151 (Colo. 1982).

Executive alone determines necessity of session. The necessity for the convention of the general assembly in special session, under this section, rests entirely with the executive. In re State Census, 9 Colo. 642, 21 P. 477 (1886).

Legislation not within items of governor's call prohibited. The general assembly was prohibited from attempting to repeal aid to needy disabled under § 26-1-109 (9)(a) and replace it with an aid to temporarily disabled program where the legislation was not within items of governor's call. (Decided under prior version of § 7 of article V.) Burciaga v. Shea, 187 Colo. 78, 530 P.2d 508 (1974).

Scope of sessions. The session in even-numbered years is a "limited one" in which only fiscal matters and bills pertaining to subjects designated by the governor in writing during the first 10 days of the session can be considered. (Decided under prior version of § 7 of article V.) In re Legislative Reapportionment, 150 Colo. 380, 374 P.2d 66 (1962).

Governor may not prescribe form of legislation. The governor may define the appropriate subject matter for legislative consideration, but he may not prescribe the specific form that the legislation will take. Empire Sav., Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Otero Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 640 P.2d 1151 (Colo. 1982).

He must specially name subject matter of legislation. This constitutional provision contemplates that there shall first exist in the executive's mind a definite conception of a public emergency, which demands an extraordinary session, and then he may convene the general assembly for action upon that particular subject matter, to be specially named. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Moss, 50 Colo. 282, 115 P. 696 (1911).

By this section, the governor is invested with extraordinary powers; he alone is to determine when there is an extraordinary occasion for convening the general assembly; and he alone is to designate the business which the general assembly is to transact when thus convened. In re Governor's Proclamation, 19 Colo. 333, 35 P. 530 (1894).

Extraordinary sessions of the general assembly can only be convened by the governor, and the business transacted therein is limited to that named in the proclamation. In re Interrogatories of Senate, 94 Colo. 215, 29 P.2d 705 (1934).

Otherwise no law at all can be enacted. The executive, in convening the general assembly in special session, has, under the constitution, the sole authority to designate the particular subject matter to which legislation shall be directed. If this duty is not performed by the executive, and if the proclamation calling the special session fails to name any particular subject matter to which the general assembly is to direct its attention, it can enact no law at all. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Moss, 50 Colo. 282, 115 P. 696 (1911).

As the general assembly cannot go beyond limits of business specially named in the proclamation; nor can it legislate upon business not named in the proclamation. In re Governor's Proclamation, 19 Colo. 333, 35 P. 530 (1894).

But within limits of such business it may act freely, in whole or in part, or not at all, as deemed expedient according to its own judgment. The general assembly must do this much, or the right of legislating by the representatives of a free people at a special session is destroyed, and all our ideas of such right are rendered obsolete. In re Governor's Proclamation, 19 Colo. 333, 35 P. 530 (1894).

The executive, in convening the general assembly in special session, has no power to direct what legislation shall be enacted. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Moss, 50 Colo. 282, 115 P. 696 (1911).

In designating in the proclamation convening the general assembly the law in relation to elections, the whole subject matter of such laws was before the general assembly, and specific instructions as to an amendment to such laws could be regarded only as advisory. People ex rel. McGaffey v. District Court, 23

Proclamation may include proposals for amendments to constitution. There is no express provision in this section, or elsewhere in the constitution which prohibits the governor from including in his proclamation, convening a special session of the general assembly, proposals for amendments to the constitution. Pearce v. People ex rel. Tate, 53 Colo. 399, 127 P. 224 (1912).

But where purpose of proclamation too broad. A proclamation convening the general assembly in special session, naming as the purpose for which it is to assemble, "To enact any and all legislation relating to, or in any wise affecting, corporations, both foreign and domestic, of a quasi-public nature", was too broad and indefinite to comply with the intent of the constitution, because it leaves to the general assembly itself, the choice of the subject matter or matters upon which legislation shall be undertaken. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Moss, 50 Colo. 282, 115 P. 696 (1911).

Legislation within purview of proclamation. A house bill concerning emergency relief legislation and employment on public works was within the purview of the governor's proclamation calling a second extraordinary session of the general assembly for the purpose of enacting legislation to allay public discontent and social unrest and to prevent disaster in the critical emergency. In re Senate Resolution No. 2, 94 Colo. 101, 31 P.2d 325 (1933).

Successful grounds for challenging legislation passed by general assembly. Challenges to legislation on the basis that the bill passed by the general assembly exceeded the limits of the governor's call for a special session have been successful on two grounds: (1) That the governor's call was too broad (Denver & R.G.R.R. v. Moss, 50 Colo. 282, 115 P. 696 (1911)); or (2) that the governor's call was too specific (People ex rel. McGaffey v. District Court, 23 Colo. 150, 46 P. 681 (1896); In re Governor's Proclamation, 19 Colo. 333, 35 P. 530 (1894)). People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

Section 10. Governor may adjourn legislature. The governor, in case of a disagreement between the two houses as to the time of adjournment, may upon the same being certified to him by the house last moving adjournment, adjourn the general assembly to a day not later than the first day of the next regular session.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 35.

Section 11. Bills presented to governor - veto - return. Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor. If he approve, he shall sign it, and thereupon it shall become a law; but if he do not approve, he shall return it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, which house shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. If then two-thirds of the members elected agree to pass the same, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of the members elected to that house, it shall become a law, notwithstanding the objections of the governor. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by ayes and noes, to be entered upon the journal. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly shall by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall be filed with his objections in the office of the secretary of state, within thirty days after such adjournment, or else become a law.

ANNOTATION

Purpose of returning vetoed bills to house of origin. The purpose behind the provision of this section requiring the executive to return a vetoed bill to the house of origin is to insure that the legislative branch shall have suitable opportunity to consider the governor's objections to bills and on such consideration to pass them over his veto, provided there are the requisite votes to do so. In re Interrogatories of Colo. Senate, 195 Colo. 220, 578 P.2d 216 (1978).

General rule of computation of time. In the computation of time prescribed by constitutional or statutory provisions for the performance of official acts, the general rule is that fractions of a day are not to be noticed, but each fraction is to be considered in the computation as a full day. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 632, 21 P. 475 (1886).

When the law requires an act to be performed within a given number of days from a day mentioned, the rule is to include one of the two days mentioned and to exclude the other. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 632, 21 P. 475 (1886).

This constitutional provision does not exclude Sunday from 10 days allowed the governor for consideration and return of bills presented to him by the general assembly. If Sunday intervenes between the day of presentation and the return day of the bill, it would legally constitute one of the 10 days. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 632, 21 P. 475 (1886).

But when return day Sunday, return may be made Monday. Where it happened that the return day fell upon Sunday, and, the general assembly not being in session upon that day, no opportunity was afforded to the governor to communicate with that body, having, by virtue of the constitutional provision, 10 days within which to return the bill, it follows from reason and principle that the return day was continued by operation of law until Monday. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 632, 21 P. 475 (1886); Elliott Co. v. Courtright Publishing Co., 67 Colo. 449, 182 P. 882 (1919).

Veto following adjournment ineffective unless bills and objections filed. Without required filing of bills and objections with secretary of state within the 30-day period following adjournment of the general assembly, a governor's veto, and public announcement thereof, has no effect and the bills become law. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

Where governor's signature is necessary for bill to become law, the date of passage for the statute was the date the governor signed the bill. People v. Wu, 894 P.2d 40 (Colo. App. 1995).

Effective date provision limited to when act "becomes law" prior to effective date. The language in § 19 of art. V of this constitution to the effect that a legislative act "shall take effect on the date stated in the act", is limited to the situation in which the act "becomes a law" pursuant to this section prior to the stated effective date. People v. Glenn, 200 Colo. 416, 615 P.2d 700 (1980).

No constitutional prohibition prevents different effective dates for different portions of same act. Because the effective date stated in an act and the date a bill becomes a law are not necessarily identical, nothing in the constitution prevents different portions of the same act from taking effect on different dates. Tacorante v. People, 624 P.2d 1324 (Colo. 1981).

Bill passed by general assembly held to violate "single subject" requirement of article V, section 21 of this constitution and to intrude on the governor's ability to exercise veto power under this section. In re House Bill No. 1353, 738 P.2d 371 (Colo. 1987).

Where governor asserted that the general assembly infringed on his power to veto a legislative act, an interest protected by the constitution, he alleged a wrong that constituted an injury in fact to the governor's legally protected interest in his constitutional power to veto provisions of an appropriations bill and, therefore, he had standing to bring action. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Writing the words "disapproved and vetoed" on a bill without a veto message is insufficient to comply with this section. This section requires that the governor return bills to be vetoed with his objections so that such objections may be considered by the legislative house of origin. Because the words "disapproved and vetoed" fail to set forth such objections, they are not adequate to effect a valid veto. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 840 P.2d 1081 (Colo. 1992).

Once the governor purported to veto the footnotes and headnotes on the appropriations bill, the legislature could respond in one of two ways: Either attempt an override by a two-thirds majority vote or bring an action in a court of competent jurisdiction contesting the validity of the governor's vetoes. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Since there was no proper override or challenge and because the legislature chose instead to simply ignore the vetoes and demand that the footnotes and headnotes be treated as duly enacted law, it acted outside the sphere of legitimate legislative activity, and the vetoes are presumed to be valid. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

The plain language of this section requires that reasons setting forth the basis for the governor's objection be stated in the governor's objections filed with the secretary of state. Thus, objections filed with the secretary of state with the language, "disapproved and vetoed" were insufficient and therefore, the governor's vetoes of bills containing such language were invalid. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 840 P.2d 1081 (Colo. 1992).

Applied in Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Section 12. Governor may veto items in appropriation bills - reconsideration. The governor shall have power to disapprove of any item or items of any bill making appropriations of money, embracing distinct items, and the part or parts of the bill approved shall be law, and the item or items disapproved shall be void, unless enacted in manner following: If the general assembly be in session, he shall transmit to the house in which the bill originated a copy of the item or items thereof disapproved, together with his objections thereto, and the items objected to shall be separately reconsidered, and each item shall then take the same course as is prescribed for the passage of bills over the executive veto.

ANNOTATION

Power of governor over legislation by exercise of veto is legislative power, and being in derogation of the general plan of the state government, the language conferring it must be strictly construed. Stong v. People ex rel. Curran, 74 Colo. 283, 220 P. 999 (1923).

And section vests him with discretionary power. This section shows a clear purpose to invest the executive with discretion to save such appropriations as are necessary to defray the expenses of the government, without the danger of incumbering or defeating them by excessive or improvident expenditures. In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

It grants power to veto item, but no power to veto part of item unless consideration of the purpose of the section and the evils at which it was aimed make such a construction indispensable to effectuate it. Stong v. People ex rel. Curran, 74 Colo. 283, 220 P. 999 (1923).

Under the provisions of this section the governor has no power to veto a portion of a separate, distinct and indivisible item in a general appropriation bill, such as the salary of a single employee. Stong v. People ex rel. Curran, 74 Colo. 283, 220 P. 999 (1923).

The veto power is merely a negative legislative power; it vests in the governor the authority to nullify but not to create statutes. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

The purposes of the item veto are to curtail abuses such as log rolling, riders, and omnibus appropriation bills and to have a balanced budget in place at the start of a fiscal year by avoiding a requirement that the governor make an all or nothing choice with respect to an appropriation bill. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

The purpose of limiting item vetoes to distinct items is to prevent the governor from modifying an item by accepting part and rejecting part. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

An "item" is an indivisible sum of money dedicated to a stated purpose. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Governor could not veto long bill headnotes because the headnotes were not items subject to the governor's line-item veto power. Headnotes defining full-time equivalent; health, life, and dental; personal services; short-term disability; lease purchase; leased space; legal services; operating expenses; vehicle lease payments; multiuse network payments; utilities; capital outlay; and purchase of services from computer center are void, however, because they violate the separation of powers by intruding on the authority of the executive branch to administer the laws. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Owens, 136 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2006).

The source of funds for an appropriation is as much a part of an item of appropriation as the amount of money appropriated and the purpose to which it is to be devoted, and it cannot be removed without affecting the legislature's intent. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

General assembly has standing to challenge the veto of an appropriation bill; its remedies are not limited to overriding the veto by a two-thirds vote. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

General assembly has power to enact legislation by majority vote, and to require that it summon a two-thirds majority to override an invalid veto would upset the delicate constitutional balance between the executive and legislative branches. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Inquiry into the validity of an item veto does not involve a political question, the resolution of which should be eschewed by the courts. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Ten-day limitation applicable to attempted veto of appropriations bill. This section contains no time limitations within which the governor must exercise his veto power, but since § 11 of art. IV, Colo. Const., applies to every bill passed by the general assembly, this section must be read in conjunction with it as to time limitations, so that a 10-day limitation applies to the governor's attempted veto of an appropriations bill while the general assembly is in session. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

Veto of unconstitutional appropriation provision unnecessary. Any footnote violating either art. III, or § 32 of art. V, Colo. Const., in the 1971 senate appropriation bill no. 436 was void and unenforceable and the governor's act in vetoing was an appropriate act calling attention to the invalid footnote but such veto was not necessary to invalidate any such footnote. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

Veto of appropriations provisions proper. The governor may properly veto any items of an appropriations bill which provide for a reversion of unexpended funds which is already provided for by existing law, contain substantive legislation contrary to § 32 of art. V, Colo. Const., violate the concept of separation of powers required by art. III, Colo. Const., conflict with existing duties and powers of individuals or departments, appear to be the result of erroneous draftsmanship, duplicate other items passed by the same session of the general assembly or attempt to control federal moneys received by an agency of the executive branch of the government. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

Veto of appropriations provisions improper. The governor may not properly veto any items of an appropriations bill which constitute valid limitations on an expenditure and are inseparably connected to the expenditure, which are not separate items subject to a veto, or which contain valid conditions, such as an appropriation conditioned upon the receipt of federal moneys. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

The governor cannot veto the source of an appropriation while leaving the amount intact, since the effect of such an action would be to prescribe that the money must come from otherwise-appropriated funds. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

The governor cannot veto the appropriation provision of a substantive bill without vetoing the entire bill. The presence of an appropriation in a substantive bill does not make the bill an appropriations bill subject to the item veto power. Colo.

Gen. Assembly v. Owens, 136 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2006).

The governor has no power apart from this section and § 11 of this article to veto parts of a bill deemed unconstitutional by the governor. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Where governor asserted that the general assembly infringed on his power to veto a legislative act, an interest protected by the constitution, he alleged a wrong that constituted an injury in fact to the governor's legally protected interest in his constitutional power to veto provisions of an appropriations bill and, therefore, he had standing to bring action. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Once the governor purported to veto the footnotes and headnotes on the appropriations bill, the legislature could respond in one of two ways: Either attempt an override by a two-thirds majority vote or bring an action in a court of competent jurisdiction contesting the validity of the governor's vetoes. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Since there was no proper override or challenge and because the legislature chose instead to simply ignore the vetoes and demand that the footnotes and headnotes be treated as duly enacted law, it acted outside the sphere of legitimate legislative activity, and the vetoes are presumed to be valid. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Section 13. Succession to the office of governor and lieutenant governor. (1) In the case of the death, impeachment, conviction of a felony, or resignation of the governor, the office of governor shall be vacant and the lieutenant governor shall take the oath of office and shall become governor.

(2) Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor, because of death, impeachment, conviction of a felony, or resignation, the governor shall nominate a lieutenant governor who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly. If the person nominated is a member of the general assembly, he may take the oath of office of lieutenant governor, and the legislative seat to which he was elected shall be vacant and filled in the manner prescribed by law pursuant to section 2 of article V of this constitution.

(3) In the event that the governor-elect fails to assume the office of governor because of death, resignation, or conviction of a felony, or refuses to take the oath of office, the lieutenant governor-elect shall take the oath of office and shall become governor on the second Tuesday in January in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of article IV of this constitution. In the event the lieutenant governor-elect fails to assume the office of lieutenant governor because of death, resignation, or conviction of a felony, or refuses to take the oath of office, the governor-elect upon taking office shall nominate a lieutenant governor who shall take the oath of office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly. If the person nominated is a member of the general assembly, he may take the oath of office of lieutenant governor, and the legislative seat to which he was elected shall be vacant and filled in the manner prescribed by law pursuant to section 2 of article V of this constitution.

(4) In the event the lieutenant governor or lieutenant governor-elect accedes to the office of governor because of a vacancy in said office for any of the causes enumerated in subsections (1) and (3) of this section, the office of lieutenant governor shall be vacant. Upon taking office, the new governor shall nominate a lieutenant governor who shall take the oath of office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly. If the person nominated is a member of the general assembly, he may take the oath of office of lieutenant governor, and the legislative seat to which he was elected shall be vacant and filled in the manner prescribed by law pursuant to section 2 of article V of this constitution.

(5) In the event the governor or lieutenant governor, or governor-elect or lieutenant governor-elect, at the time either of the latter is to take the oath of office, is absent from the state or is suffering from a physical or mental disability, the powers and duties of the office of governor and the office of lieutenant governor shall, until the absence or disability ceases, temporarily devolve upon the lieutenant governor, in the case of the governor, and, in the case of the lieutenant governor, upon the first named member of the general assembly listed in subsection (7) of this section who is affiliated with the same political party as the lieutenant governor; except that if the lieutenant governor and none of said members of the general assembly are affiliated with the same political party, the temporary vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be filled by the first named member in said subsection (7). In the event that the offices of both the governor and lieutenant governor are vacant at the same time for any of the reasons enumerated in this subsection (5), the successors to fill the vacancy in the office of governor and in the office of lieutenant governor shall be, respectively, the first and second named members of the general assembly listed in subsection (7) of this section who are affiliated with the same political party as the governor; except that if the governor and none of said members of the general assembly are affiliated with the same political party, the vacancy in the office of governor and the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, respectively, shall be filled by the first and second named members in said subsection (7). The pro rata salary of the governor or lieutenant governor shall be paid to his successor for as long as he serves in such capacity, during which time he shall receive no other salary from the state.

(6) The governor or governor-elect, lieutenant governor or lieutenant governor-elect, or person acting as governor or lieutenant governor may transmit to the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives his written declaration that he suffers from a physical or mental disability and he is unable to properly discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or lieutenant governor. In the event no such written declaration has been made, his physical or mental disability shall be determined by a majority of the supreme court after a hearing held pursuant to a joint request submitted by joint resolution adopted by two-thirds of all members of each house of the general assembly. Such determination shall be final and conclusive. The supreme court, upon its own initiative, shall determine if and when such disability ceases.

(7) In the event that the offices of both the governor and lieutenant governor are vacant at the same time for any of the reasons enumerated in subsections (1), (2), and (3) of this section, the successor to fill the vacancy in the office of governor shall be the first named of the following members of the general assembly who is affiliated with the same political party as the governor: President of the senate, speaker of the house of representatives, minority leader of the senate, or minority leader of the house of representatives; except that if the governor and none of said members of the general assembly are affiliated with the same political party, the vacancy shall be filled by one such member in the order of precedence listed in this subsection (7). The member filling the vacancy pursuant to this subsection (7) shall take the oath of office of governor and shall become governor. The office of lieutenant governor shall be filled in the same manner as prescribed in subsection (3) of this section when the lieutenant governor-elect fails to assume the office of lieutenant governor.

ARTICLE V
Legislative Department

Law reviews: For article, "The Colorado Constitution in the New Century", see 78 U. Colo. L. Rev. 1265 (2007).

Section 1. General assembly - initiative and referendum. (1) The legislative power of the state shall be vested in the general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives, both to be elected by the people, but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose laws and amendments to the constitution and to enact or reject the same at the polls independent of the general assembly and also reserve power at their own option to approve or reject at the polls any act or item, section, or part of any act of the general assembly.

(2) The first power hereby reserved by the people is the initiative, and signatures by registered electors in an amount equal to at least five percent of the total number of votes cast for all candidates for the office of secretary of state at the previous general election shall be required to propose any measure by petition, and every such petition shall include the full text of the measure so proposed. Initiative petitions for state legislation and amendments to the constitution, in such form as may be prescribed pursuant to law, shall be addressed to and filed with the secretary of state at least three months before the general election at which they are to be voted upon.

(3) The second power hereby reserved is the referendum, and it may be ordered, except as to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, and appropriations for the support and maintenance of the departments of state and state institutions, against any act or item, section, or part of any act of the general assembly, either by a petition signed by registered electors in an amount equal to at least five percent of the total number of votes cast for all candidates for the office of the secretary of state at the previous general election or by the general assembly. Referendum petitions, in such form as may be prescribed pursuant to law, shall be addressed to and filed with the secretary of state not more than ninety days after the final adjournment of the session of the general assembly that passed the bill on which the referendum is demanded. The filing of a referendum petition against any item, section, or part of any act shall not delay the remainder of the act from becoming operative.

(4) The veto power of the governor shall not extend to measures initiated by or referred to the people. All elections on measures initiated by or referred to the people of the state shall be held at the biennial regular general election, and all such measures shall become the law or a part of the constitution, when approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon, and not otherwise, and shall take effect from and after the date of the official declaration of the vote thereon by proclamation of the governor, but not later than thirty days after the vote has been canvassed. This section shall not be construed to deprive the general assembly of the power to enact any measure.

(5) The original draft of the text of proposed initiated constitutional amendments and initiated laws shall be submitted to the legislative research and drafting offices of the general assembly for review and comment. No later than two weeks after submission of the original draft, unless withdrawn by the proponents, the legislative research and drafting offices of the general assembly shall render their comments to the proponents of the proposed measure at a meeting open to the public, which shall be held only after full and timely notice to the public. Such meeting shall be held prior to the fixing of a ballot title. Neither the general assembly nor its committees or agencies shall have any power to require the amendment, modification, or other alteration of the text of any such proposed measure or to establish deadlines for the submission of the original draft of the text of any proposed measure.

(5.5) No measure shall be proposed by petition containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title; but if any subject shall be embraced in any measure which shall not be expressed in the title, such measure shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed. If a measure contains more than one subject, such that a ballot title cannot be fixed that clearly expresses a single subject, no title shall be set and the measure shall not be submitted to the people for adoption or rejection at the polls. In such circumstance, however, the measure may be revised and resubmitted for the fixing of a proper title without the necessity of review and comment on the revised measure in accordance with subsection (5) of this section, unless the revisions involve more than the elimination of provisions to achieve a single subject, or unless the official or officials responsible for the fixing of a title determine that the revisions are so substantial that such review and comment is in the public interest. The revision and resubmission of a measure in accordance with this subsection (5.5) shall not operate to alter or extend any filing deadline applicable to the measure.

(6) The petition shall consist of sheets having such general form printed or written at the top thereof as shall be designated or prescribed by the secretary of state; such petition shall be signed by registered electors in their own proper persons only, to which shall be attached the residence address of such person and the date of signing the same. To each of such petitions, which may consist of one or more sheets, shall be attached an affidavit of some registered elector that each signature thereon is the signature of the person whose name it purports to be and that, to the best of the knowledge and belief of the affiant, each of the persons signing said petition was, at the time of signing, a registered elector. Such petition so verified shall be prima facie evidence that the signatures thereon are genuine and true and that the persons signing the same are registered electors.

(7) The secretary of state shall submit all measures initiated by or referred to the people for adoption or rejection at the polls, in compliance with this section. In submitting the same and in all matters pertaining to the form of all petitions, the secretary of state and all other officers shall be guided by the general laws.

(7.3) Before any election at which the voters of the entire state will vote on any initiated or referred constitutional amendment or legislation, the nonpartisan research staff of the general assembly shall cause to be published the text and title of every such measure. Such publication shall be made at least one time in at least one legal publication of general circulation in each county of the state and shall be made at least fifteen days prior to the final date of voter registration for the election. The form and manner of publication shall be as prescribed by law and shall ensure a reasonable opportunity for the voters statewide to become informed about the text and title of each measure.

(7.5) (a) Before any election at which the voters of the entire state will vote on any initiated or referred constitutional amendment or legislation, the nonpartisan research staff of the general assembly shall prepare and make available to the public the following information in the form of a ballot information booklet:

(I) The text and title of each measure to be voted on;

(II) A fair and impartial analysis of each measure, which shall include a summary and the major arguments both for and against the measure, and which may include any other information that would assist understanding the purpose and effect of the measure. Any person may file written comments for consideration by the research staff during the preparation of such analysis.

(b) At least thirty days before the election, the research staff shall cause the ballot information booklet to be distributed to active registered voters statewide.

(c) If any measure to be voted on by the voters of the entire state includes matters arising under section 20 of article X of this constitution, the ballot information booklet shall include the information and the titled notice required by section 20 (3) (b) of article X, and the mailing of such information pursuant to section 20 (3) (b) of article X is not required.

(d) The general assembly shall provide sufficient appropriations for the preparation and distribution of the ballot information booklet pursuant to this subsection (7.5) at no charge to recipients.

(8) The style of all laws adopted by the people through the initiative shall be, "Be it Enacted by the People of the State of Colorado".

(9) The initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people by this section are hereby further reserved to the registered electors of every city, town, and municipality as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character in or for their respective municipalities. The manner of exercising said powers shall be prescribed by general laws; except that cities, towns, and municipalities may provide for the manner of exercising the initiative and referendum powers as to their municipal legislation. Not more than ten percent of the registered electors may be required to order the referendum, nor more than fifteen percent to propose any measure by the initiative in any city, town, or municipality.

(10) This section of the constitution shall be in all respects self-executing; except that the form of the initiative or referendum petition may be prescribed pursuant to law.

Amendment with most votes prevails. In order to carry out the meaning and purpose of this section, if inconsistent amendments are submitted to the voters, the one which received the most votes must prevail. That, in the view of the supreme court, is what the "republican" form of government means with respect to the right of the people to amend the constitution. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate Concerning House Bill 1078, 189 Colo. 1, 536 P.2d 308 (1975).

Right of state or city to exercise legislative authority for common good. One who owns, or who acquires property, must be ever mindful of the right of the state or city to exercise its legislative authority for the common good. Bird v. City of Colo. Springs, 176 Colo. 32, 489 P.2d 324 (1971).

Extent of legislative powers of general assembly. The language preserving the right of the general assembly to "enact any measure" is broad and comprehensive. Schwartz v. People, 46 Colo. 239, 104 P. 92 (1909); In re Senate Resolution No. 4, 54 Colo. 262, 130 P. 333 (1913).

The legislative power over appropriations granted the general assembly by this section is absolute. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

County and board of county commissioners have only such powers and authority as are granted by general assembly, and they must carry out the will of the state as expressed by the general assembly. Colo. State Bd. of Soc. Servs. v. Billings, 175 Colo. 380, 487 P.2d 1110 (1971).

General assembly may delegate power to promulgate rules and regulations. While the general assembly may not delegate the power to make or define a law, it may delegate the power to promulgate rules and regulations to executive agencies so long as sufficient standards are set forth for the proper exercise of the agency's rule-making function. Colo. Auto & Truck Wreckers Ass'n v. Dept. of Rev., 618 P.2d 646 (Colo. 1980).

Section 42-6-134 is not invalid as an improper delegation of legislative authority to the department of revenue. Colo. Auto & Truck Wreckers Ass'n v. Dept. of Rev., 618 P.2d 646 (Colo. 1980).

The provisions of the Land Use Act do not unconstitutionally delegate legislative power to local governments since the act contains procedural safeguards which protect against the uncontrolled exercise of power. Denver v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 782 P.2d 753 (Colo. 1989).

Colorado Constitution inhibits delegation of legislative power to body like railroad commission. Colo. & S. Ry. v. State Rd. Comm'n, 54 Colo. 64, 129 P. 506 (1912).

All power has been reserved by people through initiative and referendum. In re Legislative Reapportionment, 150 Colo. 380, 374 P.2d 66 (1962).

Under the Colorado Constitution, all political power is vested in the people and derives from them, and an aspect of that power is the initiative, which is the power reserved by the people to themselves to propose laws by petition and to enact or reject them at the polls independent of the legislative assembly. Colo. Project-Common Cause v. Anderson, 178 Colo. 1, 495 P.2d 220 (1972).

People's right to legislate reserved. By this section, the people have reserved for themselves the right to legislate. McKee v. City of Louisville, 200 Colo. 525, 616 P.2d 969 (1980).

Power of initiative is a fundamental right. McKee v. City of Louisville, 200 Colo. 525, 616 P.2d 969 (1980).

Purpose of initiative and referendum embodied in the constitution is to expeditiously permit the free exercise of legislative powers by the people, and the procedural statutes enacted in connection therewith were adopted to facilitate the execution of the law. Brownlow v. Wunsch, 103 Colo. 120, 83 P.2d 775 (1938).

The power to call referendum and initiative elections is a direct check on the exercise or nonexercise of legislative power by elected officials. Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981).

Provisions for initiative and referendum entitled to liberal construction. It has generally been held by the courts of all jurisdictions that a constitutional provision for the initiative and referendum, and statutes enacted in connection therewith, should be liberally construed. Brownlow v. Wunsch, 103 Colo. 120, 83 P.2d 775 (1938); Baker v. Bosworth, 122 Colo. 356, 222 P.2d 416 (1950).

Initiative and referendum are fundamental rights of a republican form of government which the people have reserved unto themselves and must be liberally construed in favor of the right of the people to exercise them. Conversely, limitations on the power of referendum must be strictly construed. Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981).

But there are no constitutional initiative powers reserved to the people over countywide legislation. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. County Road Users Ass'n, 11 P.3d 432 (Colo. 2000).

Right of initiative pertains to any measure, whether constitutional or legislative, and, in the case of municipalities, it encompasses legislation of every character. McKee v. City of Louisville, 200 Colo. 525, 616 P.2d 969 (1980).

This section, as well as the statutes which implement it, must be liberally construed so as not to unduly limit or curtail the exercise of the initiative and referendum rights constitutionally reserved to the people. Colo. Project-Common Cause v. Anderson, 178 Colo. 1, 495 P.2d 220 (1972); Billings v. Buchanan, 192 Colo. 32, 555 P.2d 176 (1976).

Initiated provisions shall be liberally construed in order to effectuate their purpose, to facilitate and not to hamper the exercise by the electors of rights granted thereby. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

The terms of this article, being a reservation to the people, are not to be narrowly construed. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

But grant of authority which would nullify referendum should be strictly construed. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960); City of Aurora v. Bogue, 176 Colo. 198, 489 P.2d 1295 (1971).

And restrictions not specified in constitution or home rule charter should not be implied or incorporated. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

The interpretative approach to the power of referendum gives broad effect to the reservation in the people and refrains from implying or incorporating restrictions not specified in the constitution or a charter, for a reservation to the people should not be narrowly construed. City of Fort Collins v. Dooney, 178 Colo. 25, 496 P.2d 316 (1972).

General assembly may repeal initiated law approved by people. An act repealing an act is a measure, and, as the general assembly is not deprived of the right to enact any measure, it clearly has the power to repeal any statute law, however adopted or passed, and thus may repeal even an initiated act, approved by the people. In re Senate Resolution No. 4, 54 Colo. 262, 130 P. 333 (1913); People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

Statutory cities and towns derive their sole powers from constitutional authority which must be defined by general law. City of Aurora v. Bogue, 176 Colo. 198, 489 P.2d 1295 (1971).

Home rule city may reserve or restrict referendum. Inasmuch as a home rule city has the power to adopt its own charter and can within its sphere exercise as much legislative power as the general assembly, such a city may either restrict the power of referendum by allowing its council to declare health and safety exceptions or it may validly reserve a full measure of referendum authority by not restricting it, and by providing that it shall be exercisable with respect to any measure, even measures already effective. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

A home rule city has unlimited authority to reserve to its electors the referendum power and the manner of exercising the same. Leach & Arnold Homes, Inc. v. City of Boulder, 32 Colo. App. 16, 507 P.2d 476 (1973).

City charter provisions held complete within themselves for filing of referendum petition. Leach & Arnold Homes, Inc. v. City of Boulder, 32 Colo. App. 16, 507 P.2d 476 (1973).

Reservations of power by constitution and city charter independent of one another. The declaration that this provision does not affect or limit the referendum power reserved to the people of any city by its charter does not limit the constitutional reservation, nor enlarge powers reserved by such charter. The two reservations are independent of each other. The constitutional reservation goes to the full extent expressed by its language. If the charter differs from the constitution in any respect, it does not thereby diminish the power reserved by the constitution, but may give the people affected additional powers there described. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

While city charter provisions may not limit the referendum and initiative powers reserved in the Colorado Constitution, the powers reserved by city charter may exceed those reserved by the Colorado Constitution. Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981); Witcher v. Canon City, 716 P.2d 445 (Colo. 1986).

This section is made self-executing. Cook v. City of Delta, 100 Colo. 7, 64 P.2d 1257 (1937); Baker v. Bosworth, 122 Colo. 356, 222 P.2d 416 (1950); Christensen v. Baker, 138 Colo. 27, 328 P.2d 951 (1958).

The initiative and referendum provision is in all respects self-executing. It is not a mere framework, but contains the necessary detailed provisions for carrying into immediate effect the enjoyment of the rights therein established without legislative action. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

The initiative provisions are expressly declared to be self-executing, and, as such, only legislation which will further the purpose of the constitutional provision or facilitate its operation, is permitted. Colo. Project-Common Cause v. Anderson, 178 Colo. 1, 495 P.2d 220 (1972).

And this section applies only to acts which are legislative in character. City of Aurora v. Zwerdlinger, 194 Colo. 192, 571 P.2d 1074 (1977); Vagneur v. City of Aspen, 2013 CO 13, __ P.3d __.

Legislative power is defined by the work product that it generates, laws of general applicability based on the weighing of broad competing policy considerations rather than the specific facts of individual cases. Executive acts are typically based on individualized case-specific considerations, and decisions that require specialized training and experience or intimate knowledge of the fiscal or other affairs of government to make a rational choice may be properly characterized as administrative. Vagneur v. City of Aspen, 2013 CO 13, __ P.3d __.

The constitution does not reserve to the people the right to exercise executive or administrative power through an initiative. As a result, an initiative may be subjected to pre-election judicial review to determine whether it seeks to exercise administrative power and, consequently, is not an exercise of the constitutional right to legislate by way of an initiative. City of Idaho Springs v. Blackwell, 731 P.2d 1250 (Colo. 1987); City of Colo. Springs v. Bull, 143 P.3d 1127 (Colo. App. 2006); Vagneur v. City of Aspen, 2013 CO 13, __ P.3d __.

A voter initiative must be a valid exercise of legislative power. And municipal initiatives that sought to overturn prior city, state executive agency, and federal executive agency decisions regarding the design and construction of a state highway entrance to the city of Aspen were administrative in character and outside the scope of the initiative power reserved to the people under this section. Vagneur v. City of Aspen, 2013 CO 13, __ P.3d __.

The formation of contracts by a city and amendments of contracts to which a city is a party to further its policies are administrative matters not suitable for an initiative. Vagneur v. City of Aspen, 232 P.3d 222 (Colo. App. 2009), aff'd, 2013 CO 13, ___ P.3d ___.

In determining whether a proposed ordinance should be classified as legislative or administrative, the central inquiry is whether the proposed legislation announces new public policy or is simply the implementation of a previously declared policy. City of Colo. Springs v. Bull, 143 P.3d 1127 (Colo. App. 2006).

Two tests have been developed to guide this inquiry. First, actions that relate to subjects of a permanent or general character are legislative, while those that are temporary in operation and effect are not. Second, acts that are necessary to carry out existing legislative policies and purposes or that are properly characterized as executive are deemed to be administrative, while acts constituting a declaration of public policy are deemed to be legislative. Charter provisions, ordinances, policies, and administrative practices all have some degree of permanence. City of Colo. Springs v. Bull, 143 P.3d 1127 (Colo. App. 2006).

Administrative matters may be severed from the balance of an initiative if the following conditions are met: (1) Standing alone, the remainder of the measure can be given legal effect; (2) deleting the impermissible portion would not substantially change the spirit of the measure; and (3) it is evident from the content of the measure and the circumstances surrounding its proposal that the sponsors and subscribers would prefer the measure to stand as altered, rather than to be invalidated in its entirety. City of Colo. Springs v. Bull, 143 P.3d 1127 (Colo. App. 2006).

Object of self-execution. A constitutional provision is a higher form of statutory law, which the people may provide shall be self-executing, the object being to put it beyond the power of the general assembly to render it nugatory by refusing to pass laws to carry it into effect. An equally important object of self-execution is to put it beyond the power of the general assembly to render it nugatory by passing restrictive laws. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

But it is clearly contemplated that legislation may be enacted to further operation of this section. Brownlow v. Wunsch, 103 Colo. 120, 83 P.2d 775 (1938); Baker v. Bosworth, 122 Colo. 356, 222 P.2d 416 (1950).

Such legislation must facilitate provision. The fact that a constitutional provision is self-executing does not necessarily preclude legislation on the same subject. Such provision may be supplemented by appropriate laws designed to make it more effective. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

All legislation must be subordinate to this section, and only such legislation is permissible as is in furtherance of the purpose, or as will facilitate the enforcement of such provision, and legislation which will impair, limit or destroy rights granted by the provision is not permissible. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

As general assembly may not reduce authority of voters to exercise referendum below that which is set forth in this section. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

Or initiative. But no statute can limit or curtail the constitutional provisions with regard to the initiative. Colo. Project-Common Cause v. Anderson, 178 Colo. 1, 495 P.2d 220 (1972).

General assembly may enact provisions regarding the exercise of the initiative and referendum, so long as it does not diminish those rights. Urevich v. Woodard, 667 P.2d 760 (Colo. 1983).

The general assembly may adopt measures to prevent abuse, mistake, or fraud in the initiative process, but such measures shall not unduly diminish the citizens' rights to the initiative process. Committee for Better Health Care v. Meyer, 830 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1992).

A legislative body may establish procedures relating to the proper exercise of the referendum. Although the right to refer a law enacted by a legislative body to the electorate for rejection or approval is fundamental, the legislative body may implement procedures to prevent abuse of the referendum process. Clark v. City of Aurora, 782 P.2d 771 (Colo. 1989).

Legislative adoption of statutes to prevent fraud, mistake, or abuse in the initiative process may not create an undue burden on the exercise of the initiative process. Committee For Better Health Care v. Meyer, 830 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1992).

Both legislative bills and initiated measures properly "referred to the people of the state". This section does not only refer to legislative bills referred to the people under the referendum provision. The words "referred to the people of the state" should not be given such a narrow construction. Both legislative bills and initiated measures are "referred to the people of the state" for their approval or rejection at the polls. It is in that sense that the words are used. Armstrong v. Mitten, 95 Colo. 425, 37 P.2d 757 (1934).

Under this section people have power to adopt initiated reapportionment bill. Armstrong v. Mitten, 95 Colo. 425, 37 P.2d 757 (1934).

Although proposed bill must meet constitutional requirements. The initiative device provides a practicable political remedy to obtain relief against alleged legislative malapportionment in Colorado, but an individual's constitutionally protected right to cast an equally weighted vote cannot be denied even by a vote of a majority of a state's electorate by initiative and referendum if the apportionment scheme adopted by the voters fails to measure up to the requirements of the equal protection clause. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

Ordinances pertaining to proprietary functions subject to referendum. Nowhere in the constitution, the charter, nor in Colorado case law is there any exception to the referendum right made for ordinances pertaining to proprietary functions. City of Aurora v. Zwerdlinger, 38 Colo. App. 106, 558 P.2d 998 (1976); rev'd on other grounds, 194 Colo. 192, 571 P.2d 1074 (1977).

Zoning and rezoning decisions, no matter what the size of the parcel of land involved, are legislative in character and subject to the referendum and initiative provisions of the Colorado Constitution. Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981); Citizens v. City of Steamboat Springs, 807 P.2d 1197 (Colo. App. 1990).

Submission of land use ordinances does not constitute referendum. Where an amendment of the soil conservation act provides for submission of land use ordinance to qualified voters of soil erosion district and requires 75 percent vote for adoption, the submission of an ordinance does not constitute a referendum under this section. People ex rel. Cheyenne Soil Erosion Dist. v. Parker, 118 Colo. 13, 192 P.2d 417 (1948).

Soil erosion district of Cheyenne was not a city, town, or municipality under this provision of the constitution. People ex rel. Cheyenne Soil Erosion Dist. v. Parker, 118 Colo. 13, 192 P.2d 417 (1948).

The presumption of prima facie validity established by this article applies only to properly verified petitions. Committee for Better Health Care v. Meyer, 830 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1992).

There is no constitutional right of initiative for electors at the county level. This section expressly authorizes initiatives at the state and municipal level but does not do so at the county level. The general assembly has authorized county-wide initiatives only with respect to home-rule counties or as to specific, defined subjects such as the adoption of sales tax ordinances. There is no statutory authority for initiatives at the county level concerning housing growth limits. Dellinger v. Bd. of County Comm'rs for County of Teller, 20 P.3d 1234 (Colo. App. 2000).

In general, counties in Colorado are simply political subdivisions of the state government that possess only those functions that are granted to them by the constitution or by statute, along with implied powers necessary to carry those functions out. Pennobscot, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 642 P.2d 915 (Colo. 1982); Dellinger v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 20 P.3d 1234 (Colo. App. 2000); Save Palisade FruitLands v. Todd, 279 F.3d 1204 (10th Cir. 2002).

The equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the U.S. Constitution does not command Colorado to grant the power of initiative to the electors of statutory counties simply because it has granted that power to the electors of home rule counties. Save Palisade FruitLands v. Todd, 279 F.3d 1204 (10th Cir. 2002).

Applied in Blitz v. Moran, 17 Colo. App. 253, 67 P. 1020 (1902); Jackson v. Colo., 294 F. Supp. 1065 (D. Colo. 1968); Cimarron Corp. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 193 Colo. 164, 563 P.2d 946 (1977); Mountain States Legal Found. v. Denver Sch. Dist. No. 1, 459 F. Supp. 357 (D. Colo. 1978); In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Sweepstakes Races Act, 196 Colo. 353, 585 P.2d 595 (1978); People v. Gallegos, 644 P.2d 920 (Colo. 1982); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982); Slack v. City of Colo. Springs, 655 P.2d 376 (Colo. 1982); Matter of Election Reform Amendment, 852 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

II. INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM PROCEDURE.

Law reviews. For comment, "Montero v. Meyer: Official English, Initiative Petitions and the Voting Rights Act", see 66 Den. U. L. Rev. 619 (1989). For comment, "Another View of Montero v. Meyer and the English-Only Movement: Giving Language Prejudice the Sanction of the Law", see 66 Den. U. L. Rev. 633 (1989). For article, "Colorado's Citizen Initiative Again Scrutinized by the U.S. Supreme Court", see 28 Colo. Law. 71 (June 1999).

This section grants initiative and referendum powers to legal voters and to municipality manner of exercising it. Francis v. Rogers, 182 Colo. 430, 514 P.2d 311 (1973).

Phrase "that it shall be in all respects self-executing" merely means that the power of initiative and referendum rests with the people whether or not the general assembly implements the power. It does not prevent the general assembly from enacting legislation which will strengthen that power. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate Concerning House Bill 1078, 189 Colo. 1, 536 P.2d 308 (1975).

Power of initiative liberally construed. The initiative power reserved by the people is to be liberally construed to allow the greatest possible exercise of this valuable right. City of Glendale v. Buchanan, 195 Colo. 267, 578 P.2d 221 (1978); Committee For Better Health Care v. Meyer, 830 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1992).

The provisions of article X, §20, of the state constitution supersede the general provisions of article V, §1, only with respect to issues of government financing, spending, and taxation governed by article X, §20; when the provisions of article X, §20, are not applicable, article V, §1, and implementing legislation controls. Zaner v. City of Brighton, 917 P.2d 280 (Colo. 1996).

Amendment may relate back. Although under subsection (4) an initiative or referendum takes effect up to 30 days after canvassing of the vote, once effective, its terms can relate back to conduct occurring the day after the election. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

The "full and timely" notice requirement of subsection (5) is not violated despite the short time between the public posting and the time when the meeting was held where petitioners had actual notice of the meeting and could not articulate how they were cognizably prejudiced by such short notice. Matter of Ballot Title 1997-98 No. 113, 962 P.2d 970 (Colo. 1998).

Duties of initiative title setting review board set forth in statutory provisions. The people have reserved to themselves the right of initiative in this section, and the duties of the initiative title setting review board with respect to initiatives are in §§ 1-40-101 et seq. In re Second Initiated Constitutional Amendment, 200 Colo. 141, 613 P.2d 867 (1980); Spelts v. Klausing, 649 P.2d 303 (Colo. 1982).

Title board is vested with considerable discretion in setting the title, ballot title and submission clause, and summary and, therefore, court must liberally construe the single subject and title requirements for initiatives. Matter of Title, Ballot Title, 917 P.2d 292 (Colo. 1996).

Plaintiff has a liberty right to challenge the decision of the title board. As to all initiatives and referanda hearings governed by § 1-40-101 et seq. occurring after April 27, 1992, defendants are ordered to publish pre-hearing and post-hearing notices to electors at least sufficient to meet the fair notice requirements of due process of law under the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution. Montero v. Meyer, 790 F. Supp. 1531 (D. Colo. 1992).

Standards for reviewing actions of initiative title setting review board. (1) Court must not in any way concern itself with the merit or lack of merit of the proposed initiative since, under our system of government, that resolution rests with the electorate; (2) all legitimate presumptions must be indulged in favor of the propriety of the board's action; and (3) only in a clear case should a title prepared by the board be held invalid. In re Proposed Initiative on Parental Notification of Abortions for Minors, 794 P.2d 238 (Colo. 1990).

Neither a court nor the board may go beyond ascertaining the intent of the initiative so as to interpret the meaning of the proposed language or suggest how it would be applied if adopted. Role of reviewing court is to determine whether the title and the ballot title and submission clause correctly and fairly reflect the purpose of the proposed amendment. In re Proposed Initiative on Parental Notification of Abortions for Minors, 794 P.2d 238 (Colo. 1990).

The board has considerable discretion in exercising its judgment on whether to include a fiscal impact statement in the summary of a proposed measure; however, this discretion is not unlimited and must have some support in the record. Matter of Title, Ballot Title et al., 831 P.2d 1301 (Colo. 1992).

Failure to raise an issue before the title board in a motion for rehearing or at the rehearing itself precludes the court from considering the issue in a matter to reverse the action of the title board. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 265, 3 P.3d 1210 (Colo. 2000).

In reviewing the board's title setting process, the court does not address the merits of the proposed initiative and should not interpret the meaning of proposed language or suggest how it will be applied if adopted by the electorate; should resolve all legitimate presumptions in favor of the board; will not interfere with the board's choice of language if the language is not clearly misleading; and must ensure that the title, ballot title, submission clause, and summary fairly reflect the proposed initiative so that petition signers and voters will not be misled into support for or against a proposition by reason of the words employed by the board. In re Proposed Initiated Constitutional Amendment Concerning Limited Gaming in the Town of Burlington, 830 P.2d 1023 (Colo. 1992); Matter of Election Reform Amendment, 852 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

There is no requirement that the board state the effect an initiative will have on other constitutional and statutory provisions or describe every feature of a proposed measure in the titles. In re Proposed Initiated Constitutional Amendment Concerning Limited Gaming in Manitou Springs, 826 P.2d 1241 (Colo. 1992); Initiated Constitutional Amendment Concerning Limited Gaming in the Town of Burlington, 830 P.2d 1023 (Colo. 1992); Matter of Election Reform Amendment, 852 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

However, where the title and summary fail to convey to voters the initiative's likely impact on state spending on state programs, the title and summary may not be presented to voters as currently written. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 37, 977 P.2d 845 (Colo. 1999).

The board is charged with the duty to act with utmost dedication to the goal of producing documents which will enable the electorate, whether familiar or unfamiliar with the subject matter of a particular proposal, to determine intelligently whether to support or oppose such a proposal. In re Proposed Initiative Concerning "State Personnel System", 691 P.2d 1121 (Colo. 1984); Matter of Election Reform Amendment, 852 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

Title board has considerable discretion in setting the titles for a ballot initiative, the supreme court will employ all legitimate presumptions in favor of the propriety of the board's actions, and the board's designation of a title will be reversed only if the title is insufficient, unfair, or misleading. In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 3, 2012 CO 25, 274 P.3d 562.

Title language employed by the title board will be rejected only if it is misleading, inaccurate, or fails to reflect the central features of the proposed measure. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 215 (Prohibiting Certain Open Pit Mining), 3 P.3d 11 (Colo. 2000).

In fixing titles and summaries, the board's duty is to capture, in short form, the proposal in plain, understandable, accurate language enabling informed voter choice. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 29, 972 P.2d 257 (Colo. 1999); Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 37, 977 P.2d 845 (Colo. 1999); Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 38, 977 P.2d 849 (Colo. 1999).

Failure of title, ballot title, and submission clause to include definition of abortion which would impose a new legal standard which is likely to be controversial made title, ballot title, and submission clause deficient in that they did not fully inform signers of initiative petitions and voters and did not fairly reflect the contents of the proposed initiative. In re Proposed Initiative on Parental Notification of Abortions for Minors, 794 P.2d 238 (Colo. 1990).

Absence of definitions was distinguishable from situation in In re Proposed Initiative on Parental Notification of Abortions for Minors, 794 P.2d 238 (Colo. 1990), since although the definitions may have been broader than common usage in some respects and narrower in others, they appeared to be included for sake of brevity and they would not adopt a new or controversial legal standard which would be of significance to all concerned with the issues surrounding election reform. Matter of Election Reform Amendment, 852 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

Title and summary of proposed initiative reflected central features of measure in a clear and concise manner by sufficiently indicating that conditions under which gaming could occur in Parachute might differ from conditions currently imposed for gaming in other towns. Matter of Title, Ballot Title et al., 831 P.2d 457 (Colo. 1992).

Title, ballot title and submission clause, and summary concerning a proposed tax increase on cigarettes and tobacco products correctly and fairly represented the true intent and meaning of the proposed initiative. The inclusion of rule-making authority would increase length of title and submission clause, while providing little information to voters. Language concerning an increase in taxes was not misleading and was sufficient to apprise voters that taxes on cigarettes and tobacco products would increase under the proposed measure. The designation of teacher training programs was not a central feature of the proposed initiative and it was within the board's discretion to omit such specificity. The summary was sufficient even though it did not include every detail of the proposed measure. An indeterminate fiscal impact statement was sufficient. In re Proposed Initiative Concerning a Tobacco Tax, 830 P.2d 984 (Colo. 1992).

Titles set by the board were insufficient in that they did not state that the proposal would impose mandatory fines for willful violations of the campaign contribution and election reforms, they did not state that the proposal would prohibit certain campaign contributions from certain sources, they did not state that the proposal would make both procedural and substantive changes to the petition process, and they did not specifically list the changes to the numbers of seats in the house of representatives and the senate. Matter of Election Reform Amendment, 852 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

Title set by the title board was misleading and inaccurate and would be modified where the intent of the proposed measure was to prohibit the modification of certain mining permits to allow the expansion of mining operations but the title could be construed as prohibiting the expansion of mining operations under an existing, unmodified mining permit. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 215 (Prohibiting Certain Open Pit Mining), 3 P.3d 11 (Colo. 2000).

Titles were not insufficient for failure to contain the general subject matter of the proposed constitutional amendment or because the provisions of the proposed amendment were listed chronologically rather than in order of significance. Matter of Election Reform Amendment, 852 P.2d 28 (Colo. 1993).

Title concerning a just cause requirement for discharging or suspending an employee fairly expresses the purpose of the proposed initiative. The title board is neither obligated nor authorized to construe the future legal effects of an initiative as part of the ballot title. In re Ballot Title 2007-2008 No. 62, 184 P.3d 52 (Colo. 2008).

Title setting board had proper jurisdiction to set title and summary of proposed initiative as advancing date of hearing conducted by legislative offices by one day did not defeat public purpose served by presentation of comments and review in a public meeting when notice of the date change was posted five days before new hearing date. Matter of Title, Ballot Title et al., 831 P.2d 457 (Colo. 1992).

General assembly may control procedure of submitting measures. The phrase "until legislation shall be especially provided therefor" was intended to, and does, refer merely to the submission of initiated and referendum measures and matters pertaining to the form of petitions, so the general assembly has authority to provide for these matters by statute. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

But may not avoid constitutional minimums. Legislation enacted to facilitate the carrying out of the provisions of the constitution as to time of filing or the necessary number of petitioners and to prevent fraud may not avoid or restrict the minimum requirements set out in the constitution. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

As certain procedures fixed by constitution. It was not the intent of the people, in making this constitutional provision self-executing, to leave the fixing of the time within which petitions must be filed either to the general assembly or to the courts. The people reserved to themselves the power of initiative enactment. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

This section fixes the time within which a petition must be filed with the secretary of state, and requires a certain number of signatures of legal voters to be affixed thereto before a matter can be submitted to the voters at an election. Christensen v. Baker, 138 Colo. 27, 328 P.2d 951 (1958).

And general assembly may not impose limitation other than that provided in this section. Where the general assembly is vested with power, subject to limitation, it has authority to make any restriction not less than that named in such limitation; but where, as here, the general assembly is divested of all discretionary authority and the constitution as part of a self-executing provision sets a limitation, the general assembly may not make any other limitation than that provided in the constitution. Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

The general assembly may not impose restrictions which limit in any way the right of the people to initiate proposed laws and amendments except as those limitations are provided in the constitution itself. Colo. Project-Common Cause v. Anderson, 177 Colo. 402, 495 P.2d 218 (1972).

The statutory requirement that the signing and circulating of petitions must be by registered electors rather than permitting qualified electors to carry on these functions is a limitation not authorized by the constitution and is impermissible. Colo. Project-Common Cause v. Anderson, 178 Colo. 1, 495 P.2d 220 (1972).

Governmental officials have no power to prohibit the exercise of the initiative by prematurely passing upon the substantive merits of an initiated measure. McKee v. City of Louisville, 200 Colo. 525, 616 P.2d 969 (1980).

Courts may not interfere with the exercise of the right of initiative by declaring unconstitutional or invalid a proposed measure before the process has run its course and the measure is actually adopted. McKee v. City of Louisville, 200 Colo. 525, 616 P.2d 969 (1980).

Legislation not to restrict right to vote on initiatives. Legislative acts which prescribe the procedure to be used in voting on initiatives may not restrict the free exercise of that voting right. City of Glendale v. Buchanan, 195 Colo. 267, 578 P.2d 221 (1978).

The 1989 amendments to §§ 1-40-106, 1-40-107, and 1-40-109 (now §§ 1-40-110, 1-40-111, 1-40-113, 1-40-116, 1-40-117, 1-40-118, and 1-40-120) are constitutional as tending to further the provisions of this section and are not unduly restrictive of the right of initiative. Committee for Better Health Care v. Meyer, 830 P.2d 884 (Colo. 1992).

"Read and understand" requirement of § 1-40-111 and § 1-40-113 is a formal requirement to which the court will not apply strict scrutiny in a constitutional challenge: Although requirements limit the power of initiative, the limitation is not substantive. Loonan v. Woodley, 882 P.2d 1380 (Colo. 1994).

"Read and understand" requirement of § 1-40-111 and § 1-40-113 enhances the integrity of the election process and does not unconstitutionally infringe on the right to petition. Loonan v. Woodley, 882 P.2d 1380 (Colo. 1994).

Substantial compliance is the standard the court must apply in assessing the effect of the deficiencies that caused the district court to hold petition signatures invalid. Fabec v. Beck, 922 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1996).

Discrepancies in the day or month of the circulator's date of signing and the date of notary acknowledgment render the relevant petitions invalid absent evidence that explains the differences in question. Petitions containing such discrepancies do not provide the necessary safeguards against abuse and fraud in the initiative process. Fabec v. Beck, 922 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1996).

Absent evidence that the change in signing was the product of the signing party, changes to a circulator's signing date do not represent substantial compliance with § 1-40-111 (2) and serve to invalidate the signatures within the affected petitions. The district court properly held invalid signatures that were tainted by a change in the circulator's date of signing, where the date of signing was not accompanied by the initials of the circulator or other evidence in the record establishing that the circulator made the change. Fabec v. Beck, 922 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1996).

The district court erred in invalidating petitions that did not contain a notary seal. The purpose of the notarized affidavit provision in § 1-40-111 (2) was substantially achieved despite the proponents' failure to secure a notary seal on petitions affecting 92 signatures. The record contains evidence that the affidavits with omitted seals were notarized by individuals with the same signature and commission expiration found on other affidavits with proper seals. Fabec v. Beck, 922 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1996).

The initiative proponents substantially complied with the requirements for a circulator's affidavit even though the circulator did not include a date of signing. When the circulator simply omits the date of signing, there is no reason to believe that the affidavit was not both subscribed and sworn to before the notary public on the date indicated in the jurat. Fabec v. Beck, 922 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1996).

People in exercise of their referendum powers, are bound by same rules as general assembly, and, as such, the power of referendum in approving lotteries is limited by § 2 of art. XVIII, Colo. Const. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Sweepstakes Races Act, 196 Colo. 353, 585 P.2d 595 (1978).

Stages of procedure are separate and consecutive. In the process of getting matters before the people for their action there are several consecutive stages. The preparation of petitions and securing the required signatures is one step, the publishing is one, and the subsequent submission to the vote of electors is another separate step in the full procedure. In re House Resolution No. 10, 50 Colo. 71, 114 P. 293 (1911).

Exception from rule proscribing premature judicial interference. A judicial declaration that an initiated or referred ordinance is administrative in character is an exception to such rule and does not infringe the fundamental right of the people to legislate. City of Idaho Springs v. Blackwell, 731 P.2d 1250 (Colo. 1987).

Determination of legislative or administrative character of initiated ordinance. The central inquiry is whether the proposed legislation announces new public policy or is the implementation of a previously declared policy. City of Idaho Springs v. Blackwell, 731 P.2d 1250 (Colo. 1987).

Two tests for determining character of initiated ordinance. First, actions that relate to subjects of a permanent or general character are legislative, while those that are temporary in operation and effect are not; second, acts that are necessary to carry out existing legislative policies and purposes or which are properly characterized as executive are deemed to be administrative, while acts constituting a declaration of public policy are deemed to be legislative. City of Idaho Springs v. Blackwell, 731

No geographical distribution of petition signers is required. A constitutional amendment may be initiated by petition of eight percent of the legal voters. Lisco v. Love, 219 F. Supp. 922 (D. Colo. 1963), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

No requirement that affidavit as to signatures should appear on each sheet of petition. There is no constitutional or statutory requirement that the affidavit as to signatures on a petition to initiate a measure should appear on each of the sheets making up the petition. Brownlow v. Wunsch, 103 Colo. 120, 83 P.2d 775 (1938).

Qualified electors rather than registered voters required. It is constitutionally impermissible under this section to require that persons signing and circulating petitions for a statewide initiative be registered voters, rather than qualified electors. Francis v. Rogers, 182 Colo. 430, 514 P.2d 311 (1973).

This section permits a city to require only that signer of a recall petition be a qualified elector, and a city charter provision requiring that person who signs a recall petition be a registered voter is unconstitutional. Valdez v. Election Comm'n, 184 Colo. 384, 521 P.2d 165 (1974).

All circulators of initiative petitions must be registered electors, as required in both this section and § 1-40-112. Although the secretary of state was at one time enjoined by federal action from enforcing this requirement, after the injunction was lifted, she properly disallowed petitions circulated by nonregistered voters. McClellan v. Meyer, 900 P.2d 24 (Colo. 1995).

Required signatures must be timely filed with petition. A petition timely filed but lacking the required number of signatures and supplemented by additional signatures filed too late, is not filed in compliance with this provision, and this section mandatorily forecloses the acceptance of tardy supplements to a petition for an initiated amendment to the constitution to supply the required signatures. Christensen v. Baker, 138 Colo. 27, 328 P.2d 951 (1958).

Deadline set forth in subsection (2) for filing original petition is not applicable to a petition cured and refiled in accordance with § 1-40-109 (2). Montero v. Meyer, 795 P.2d 242 (Colo. 1990) (decided under law in effect prior to 1989 amendment to § 1-40-109 (2)).

Court refused to allow certification of ballot measure to the ballot without a showing that the valid signature requirement specified in this section has been met. Allowing the certification would require voters to decide on an initiative that has not met a basic constitutional requirement for placement on the ballot and would fail to protect the integrity of the right of initiative contemplated by the constitution. Thus, the court would not allow certification of the measure prior to completion of the line-by-line verification, even though the date for certification of ballot issues for the next general election had passed. Buckley v. Chilcutt, 968 P.2d 112 (Colo. 1998).

Effect of failure of signers to insert streets and numbers of their residences in petition. There is nothing in the constitution, statutes, or decisions justifying the rejection of signatures solely by reason of the failure of signers, under the circumstances prevailing, to insert in the petition streets and numbers of their residences. Case v. Morrison, 118 Colo. 517, 197 P.2d 621 (1948).

And of newspaper pages cut and reassembled for inclusion in petition. Where newspaper pages, on which were printed petition forms in three parts which were used to secure signatures in support of a petition to place a proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot, were cut into the separate parts and then reassembled and bound together for inclusion in the petition presented to the secretary of state, this procedure did not invalidate the signatures since there was no showing or intimation that the separation of the forms involved any alteration, irregularity, or fraud. Billings v. Buchanan, 192 Colo. 32, 555 P.2d 176 (1976).

Minority language provisions of the federal Voting Rights Act not applicable to initiative petitions. With respect to initiative petitions, electoral process to which the minority language provisions of the Voting Rights Act would apply did not commerce under state law until the measure was certified as qualified for placement on the ballot. Furthermore, the signing of petitions did not constitute "voting" under the act. Montero v. Meyer, 861 F.2d 603 (10th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 492 U.S. 921, 109 S. Ct. 3249, 106 L. Ed. 2d 595 (1989) (decided prior to 1989 enactment of 1-40-107.5).

Heavy burden when challenging ballot title after election. The burden for invalidating an amendment, because of its title, after adoption by the people in a general election, is heavy because the general assembly has provided procedures for challenging a ballot title prior to elections. The expense and inconvenience of holding an election on a proposal is sufficiently burdensome to justify requiring that objections to ballot titles be made before the election--unless the challengers to the amendment can prove that so many voters were actually misled by the title that the result of the election might have been different. City of Glendale v. Buchanan, 195 Colo. 267, 578 P.2d 221 (1978).

Public officers are guided by "general laws" in submitting new measures. This section makes it the duty of public officers, in submitting new measures, to be guided by the "general laws", that is, the "general statutes", under which questions generally are submitted, until the general assembly itself may provide special legislation for forms of petitions, and for submitting initiative and referendum measures only. In re House Resolution No. 10, 50 Colo. 71, 114 P. 293 (1911).

III. POWER TO INITIATE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

This section reserves power to propose constitutional amendments to people independent of the general assembly, and there is nothing in the section that modifies this independence in any way, except that the section shall not be construed so as to deprive the general assembly of the right to enact any measure. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

The rights reserved by the people include that to enact constitutional amendments "independent of the general assembly". Yenter v. Baker, 126 Colo. 232, 248 P.2d 311 (1952).

But this reservation does not interfere with general assembly's right to propose constitutional amendments. This section does not affect what the general assembly may do, save that, with certain exceptions, any act or part of any act of the general assembly may be referred to the people and by them adopted or rejected at the polls. It was not intended that the general assembly should be interfered with in its right to propose constitutional amendments. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

The power of the general assembly to propose constitutional amendments is not subject to provisions of this article regulating the introduction and passage of ordinary legislative enactments. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894).

Bill that eliminated appropriations for health-related purposes in effect on January 1, 2005 did not conflict with this section despite plaintiffs' contention that it thwarted citizens' right to pass as intended by its proponents and understood by the voters an initiated amendment providing that revenues to be generated by new cigarette and tobacco taxes would be used to supplement and not to supplant such appropriations. Colo. Cmty. Health Network v. Colo. Gen. Assembly, 166 P.3d 280 (Colo. App. 2007).

There is no limitation as to number of amendments which may be proposed. This section does not, on its face, place upon the required percentage of voters any limitation as to the number of amendments that may be so proposed. It affirmatively appears that no limit was intended on the number that may be proposed from language that, "The secretary of state shall submit all measures initiated by the people". People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

And section, in positive terms, requires submission of all proposed. When the secretary of state was directed in positive terms to submit all amendments it cannot be said that he shall submit only a certain number, and if all must be submitted it cannot be said that those above a certain number that are submitted are on that account void. No one has any right to say that the people intended that all that are proposed shall be submitted to them, but that only a certain number of those that are submitted and perhaps adopted should be valid. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

Where conflicting amendments on same ballot. Amendment nos. 6 and 9, proposed constitutional amendments relating to reapportionment on the ballot at the general election held on November 5, 1975, are in conflict where the former, a housekeeping amendment, among many other things, provides that the general assembly is to establish district boundaries and that there is to be no more than a five percent population deviation from the mean in each district while the latter, dealing exclusively with reapportionment, provides for a commission to promulgate a plan of reapportionment which the supreme court either approves or, in effect, orders modified as required by the court and for a maximum five percent deviation between the most populous and the least populous district in each house. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate Concerning House Bill 1078, 189 Colo. 1, 536 P.2d 308 (1975).

Amendment with most votes prevails. In order to carry out the meaning and purpose of this section, the one of two inconsistent amendments which received the most votes must prevail. That, in the view of the supreme court, is what the "republican" form of government means with respect to the right of the people to amend the constitution. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate Concerning House Bill 1078, 189 Colo. 1, 536 P.2d 308 (1975).

Passage of initiated amendment does not determine validity. An amendment is not valid just because the people voted for it. The initiative gives the people of a state no power to adopt a constitutional amendment which violates the federal constitution. Lisco v. Love, 219 F. Supp. 922 (D. Colo. 1963), rev'd on grounds sub nom. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

The fact that an apportionment plan is adopted in a popular referendum is insufficient to sustain its constitutionality or to induce a court of equity to refuse to act. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

IV. LEGISLATION NOT SUBJECT TO REFERENDUM.

Referendum not granted to mere resolution. By the precise words of this section by which the referendum is extended to any act, or part of an act, the referendum is not granted to a mere resolution. Prior v. Noland, 68 Colo. 263, 188 P. 729 (1920).

So no referendum on resolution ratifying amendment to federal constitution. The people, having no power to ratify amendments to the federal constitution, cannot exercise the referendum upon such a resolution which ratifies such, adopted by the general assembly. Prior v. Noland, 68 Colo. 263, 188 P. 729 (1920).

Referendum power applies only to acts which are legislative in character. Wright v. City of Lakewood, 43 Colo. App. 480, 608 P.2d 361 (1979); Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981).

For criteria used in determining whether actions of a municipal governing body are administrative, legislative, or quasi-judicial in nature, see Margolis v. District Court, 638 P.2d 297 (Colo. 1981).

Neither adoption of rezoning ordinance nor approval of amendment to master plan constitutes legislative act which is subject to the referendum power contained in the Colorado Constitution. Wright v. City of Lakewood, 43 Colo. App. 480, 608 P.2d 361 (1979).

Utility rate ordinances are administrative in character and are not subject to referendum powers of this section. City of Aurora v. Zwerdlinger, 194 Colo. 192, 571 P.2d 1074 (1977); City of Colo. Springs v. Bull, 143 P.3d 1127 (Colo. App. 2006).

Three-part test employed to determine whether a specific municipal act is legislative or administrative. The court looks at whether the act is of a permanent or temporary character, whether the act is necessary to carry out existing policies, and whether the act is an amendment to an original legislative act. Finding that the lease amendment is of a temporary nature, that no new legislative policy is declared, and that the amendment of the lease agreement is the amendment of an administrative act, the court holds that the amendment is not subject to the referendum power in this section. Witcher v. Canon City, 716 P.2d 445 (Colo. 1986).

Statute containing "safety clause" cannot be referred to the people. An act declaring that every sentence and clause thereof is "necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety", cannot be referred to the people. The clause in question, commonly called the "safety clause", is part of the act and may be enacted by a mere majority vote. In re Senate Resolution No. 4, 54 Colo. 262, 130 P. 333 (1913); People ex rel. Keifer v. Ramer, 61 Colo. 422, 158 P. 146 (1916).

This section is specific in excepting from the referendum reservation laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety. This provision is applicable to the general assembly and to state laws. Shields v. City of Loveland, 74 Colo. 27, 218 P. 913 (1923); Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

Declaration of safety clause conclusive and nonreviewable. A declaration by the general assembly that an enactment is "necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety", is conclusive, and not subject to review by the courts. Van Kleeck v. Ramer, 62 Colo. 4, 156 P. 1108 (1916); Cavanaugh v. State, Dept. of Soc. Servs., 644 P.2d 1 (Colo.), appeal dismissed for want of substantial federal question, 459 U.S. 1011, 103 S. Ct. 367, 74 L. Ed. 2d 504 (1982), reh'g denied, 460 U.S. 1104, 103 S. Ct. 1806, 76 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1983).

A legislative declaration in a statute that it is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety is conclusive upon all departments of government and all parties, so far as it abridges the right to invoke the referendum. In re Senate Resolution No. 4, 54 Colo. 262, 130 P. 333 (1913); Van Kleeck v. Ramer, 62 Colo. 4, 156 P. 1108 (1916); In re Interrogatories by Governor, 66 Colo. 319, 181 P. 197 (1919).

In absence of safety clause, all laws subject to reference. In the absence of the so-called "safety clause", all acts of the general assembly, although they carry the emergency clause declaring that they shall take effect from and after their passage, are still subject to reference. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 66 Colo. 319, 181 P. 197, 7 A.L.R. 526 (1919).

If the general assembly were to decide that a measure should be subject to referendum it can omit the safety clause and by so doing subject the measure to referendum regardless of whether it in fact affects the health and safety. The discretionary authority to dispense with the safety clause, except from appropriation measures, supports the view that the power of referendum is not completely circumscribed by the authority of the general assembly or council to declare that a statute or ordinance is one governed by considerations of public health and safety. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

Right of initiative always available. There is nothing to deter those citizens who oppose an enacted law from pursuing the constitutional right of initiative. Thus, although invoking the emergency language in the enactment precludes citizen referendum on the law, the initiative power is available to redress the concerns of the citizens of the state. Cavanaugh v. State, Dept. of Soc. Servs., 644 P.2d 1 (Colo.), appeal dismissed for want of substantial federal question, 459 U.S. 1011, 103 S. Ct. 367, 74 L. Ed. 2d 504 (1982), reh'g denied, 460 U.S. 1104, 103 S. Ct. 1806, 76 L. Ed. 2d 369 (1983).

Safety exception may not be implied in home rule charter. A home rule city may adopt a charter which reserves to the voters authority to refer all measures, and which does withhold from the council power to thwart referendum by the expedient of declaring health and safety. Such a charter provision is valid and there is no reason for implied incorporation within it of the safety exception. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

V. SINGLE-SUBJECT REQUIREMENT.

A. In General.

Law reviews. For article, "The Single-Subject Requirement For Initiatives", see 29 Colo. Law. 65 (May 2000).

The single subject rule prevents two dangers associated with omnibus initiatives. First, combining subjects with no necessary or proper connection for the purposes of garnering support for an initiative from various factions that may have different or even conflicting interests could lead to the enactment of measures that would fail on their own merits. Second, the single subject rule helps avoid voter surprise and fraud occasioned by the inadvertent passage of a surreptitious provision coiled up in the folds of a complex initiative. In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 45, 2012 CO 26, 274 P.3d 576.

Flexible level of scrutiny applies to challenge of subsection (5.5) and the statutory title-setting procedures implementing it. Under this standard, courts must weigh the "character and magnitude of the asserted injury to the rights protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments that the plaintiff seeks to vindicate" against the "precise interests put forward by the State as justifications for the burden imposed by its rule", taking into consideration "the extent to which those interests make it necessary to burden the plaintiff's rights". Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 103 S. Ct. 1564, 75 L. Ed. 2d 547 (1983); Campbell v. Buckley, 11 F. Supp. 2d 1260 (D. Colo. 1998).

Single-subject requirement in subsection (5.5) and the statutory title-setting procedures implementing it do not violate initiative proponents' free speech or associational rights under the first amendment nor do they discriminate against proponents in violation of the fourteenth amendment's equal protection clause. Campbell v. Buckley, 11 F. Supp. 2d 1260 (D. Colo. 1998), aff'd, 203 F.3d 738 (10th Cir. 2000); In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 3, 2012 CO 25, 274 P.3d 562.

The summary, single subject and title requirements serve to prevent voter confusion and promote informed decisions by narrowing the initiative to a single matter and providing information on that single subject. Campbell v. Buckley, 203 F.3d 738 (10th Cir. 2000).

The requirements serve to prevent a provision that would not otherwise pass from becoming law by "piggybacking" it on a more popular proposal or concealing it in a long and complex initiative. Campbell v. Buckley, 203 F.3d 738 (10th Cir. 2000).

In determining whether a proposed measure contains more than one subject, the court may not interpret the language of the measure or predict its application if it is adopted. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 255, 4 P.3d 485 (Colo. 2000).

In conducting a single-subject review, the court may not address a proposed measure's merits or the possible manner of its application if enacted. In re Ballot Title 2001-02 No. 43, 46 P.3d 438 (Colo. 2002); In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 3, 2012 CO 25, 274 P.3d 562; In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 45, 2012 CO 26, 274 P.3d 576.

The court may not address the merit of a proposed initiative or construe its future legal effects. In re Ballot Title 2005-06 No. 55, 138 P.3d 273 (Colo. 2006).

In order to violate the single-subject requirement, the text of the measure must relate to more than one subject and have at least two distinct and separate purposes which are not dependent upon or connected with each other. The single-subject requirement is not violated if the matters included are necessarily or properly connected to each other. In re Proposed Ballot Initiative on Parental Rights, 913 P.2d 1127 (Colo. 1996).

An initiative violates the single subject requirement if it relates to more than one subject and has at least two distinct and separate purposes that are not dependent upon or connected with each other. While the inquiry into single subject compliance is case-specific, an initiative may not hide purposes unrelated to its central theme or group distinct purposes under a broad theme. An initiative may contain several purposes, but those purposes must be interrelated. In re Ballot Title 2005-06 No. 55, 138 P.3d 273 (Colo. 2006); In

Single-subject requirement in subsection (5.5) eliminates the practice of combining several unrelated subjects in a single measure for the purpose of enlisting support from advocates of each subject and thus securing the enactment of measures that might not otherwise be approved by voters on the basis of the merits of those discrete measures. In re Petitions, 907 P.2d 586 (Colo. 1995); In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996).

The single-subject requirement is not violated if a measure intends to have more than one beneficial effect. That does not mean that it embraces more than one subject. Matter of Ballot Title 1997-98 No. 113, 962 P.2d 970 (Colo. 1998).

A proposed measure impermissibly includes more than one subject if its text relates to more than one subject and if the measure has at least two distinct and separate purposes that are not dependent upon or connected with each other. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996).

A proposal that has at least two distinct and separate purposes which are not dependent upon or connected with each other violates the single-subject requirement of the state constitution. In re "Public Rights in Waters II", 898 P.2d 1076 (Colo. 1995); Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999); In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 235(a), 3 P.3d 1219 (Colo. 2000).

Grouping the provisions of a proposed initiative under a broad concept that potentially misleads voters will not satisfy the single-subject requirement. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996); In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 Nos. 245(b), 245(c), 245(d), and 245(e), 1 P.3d 720 (Colo. 2000); In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 Nos. 245(f) and 245(g), 1 P.3d 739 (Colo. 2000).

In order to pass constitutional muster, a proposed initiative must concern only one subject. In other words, it must effect or carry out only one general object or purpose. In re Ballot Title 2005-2006 No. 73, 135 P.3d 736 (Colo. 2006); In re Ballot Title 2005-2006 No. 74, 136 P.3d 237 (Colo. 2006).

An initiative that has separate and unconnected purposes will not be saved by a proponent's attempt to characterize the initiative under an overarching theme. In re Ballot Title 2001-02 No. 43, 46 P.3d 438 (Colo. 2002); In re Ballot Title 2005-06 No. 55, 138 P.3d 273 (Colo. 2006); In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 3, 2012 CO 25, 274 P.3d 562 ; In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 45, 2012 CO 26, 274 P.3d 576.

Where multiple provisions are directly connected and related to, and are intended to achieve, the initiative's central purpose, the provisions do not constitute separate subjects. In re Title, Ballot Title, Sub. Cl. for 2009-2010 No. 45, 234 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2010).

The intent of the single-subject requirement is to prevent voters from being confused or misled and to ensure that each proposal is considered on its own merits. Matter of Ballot Title 1997-98 No. 74, 962 P.2d 927 (Colo. 1998).

City's ordinance requiring a single subject to be expressed in ballot initiatives does not offend the Colorado constitution. Bruce v. City of Colo. Springs, 252 P.3d 30 (Colo. App. 2010).

The single-subject requirement must be liberally construed so as not to impose undue restrictions on the initiative process. Matter of Ballot Title 1997-98 No. 74, 962 P.2d 927 (Colo. 1998).

The single-subject requirement is not violated simply because an initiative with a single, distinct purpose spells out details relating to its implementation. As long as the procedures specified have a necessary and proper relationship to the substance of the initiative, they are not a separate subject. Matter of Ballot Title 1997-98 No. 74, 962 P.2d 927 (Colo. 1998); In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 255, 4 P.3d 485 (Colo. 2000).

A proposed measure that tends to effect or to carry out one general purpose presents only one subject. Consequently, minor provisions necessary to effectuate the purpose of the measure are properly included within its text. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 256, 12 P.3d 246 (Colo. 2000).

Just because a proposal may have different effects or makes policy choices that are not invariably interconnected does not mean that it necessarily violates the single-subject requirement. It is enough that the provisions of a proposal are connected. Here, the initiative addresses numerous issues in a detailed manner. However, all of these issues relate to the management of development. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 256, 12 P.3d 246 (Colo. 2000).

To evaluate whether or not an initiative effectuates or carries out only one general object or purpose, supreme court looks to the text of the proposed initiative. The single subject requirement is not violated if the "matters encompassed are necessarily or properly connected to each other rather than disconnected or incongruous". Stated another way, the single-subject requirement is not violated unless the text of the measure "relates to more than one subject and has at least two distinct and separate purposes that are not dependent upon or connected with each other". Mere implementation or enforcement details directly tied to the initiative's single subject will not, in and of themselves, constitute a separate subject. Finally, in order to pass the single-subject test, subject of the initiative should also be capable of being expressed in the initiative's title. In re Ballot Title 2005-2006 No. 73, 135 P.3d 736 (Colo. 2006); In re Ballot Title 2005-2006 No. 74, 136 P.3d 237 (Colo. 2006).

The fact that provisions of measure may affect more than one statutory provision does not itself mean that measure contains multiple subjects. Where initiative requiring background checks at gun shows also authorizes licensed gun dealers who conduct such background checks to charge a fee, the initiative contains a single subject. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 255, 4 P.3d 485 (Colo. 2000).

Neither subsection (5.5) of this section nor §1-40-106.5 creates any exemptions for initiatives that attempt to repeal constitutional provisions. Also, no special permission exists for initiatives that seek to address constitutional provisions adopted prior to the enactment of the single-subject requirement. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996).

The term "measure" includes initiatives that either enact or repeal. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996).

In cases of repeal, the underlying constitutional provision to be repealed must be examined in order to determine whether the repealing and reenacting initiative contains a single subject. If a provision contains multiple subjects and an initiative proposes to repeal the entire underlying provision, then the initiative contains multiple subjects. On the other hand, if an initiative proposes anything less than a total repeal, it may satisfy the single-subject requirement. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996).

A proposed initiative contains multiple subjects not only when it proposes new provisions constituting multiple subjects, but also when it proposes to repeal multiple subjects. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996); In re Proposed Initiative 1997-1998 No. 64, 960 P.2d 1192 (Colo. 1998); Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999).

The board may not set the title of a proposed initiative or submit it to the voters if it contains multiple subjects. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 Nos. 245(b), 245(c), 245(d), and 245(e), 1 P.3d 720 (Colo. 2000); In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 Nos. 245(f) and 245(g), 1 P.3d 739 (Colo. 2000).

Title-setting board has no duty to advise proponents concerning possible solutions to a single-subject violation. Comment by the board is within its sound discretion; requiring comment would unconstitutionally expand the board's authority and shift initiative-drafting responsibility from proponents to the board. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996).

If the title-setting board rejects an initiative for violating the single-subject requirement, then proponents may pursue one of two courses of action. They may either (1) commence a new review and comment process, or (2) present a revised title to the board. In re Proposed Initiative 1996-4, 916 P.2d 528 (Colo. 1996).

The title board is not required to spell out every detail of a proposed initiative in order to convey its meaning accurately and fairly. Only where the language chosen is clearly misleading will the court revise the title board's formulation. Matter of Ballot Title 1997-98 No. 74, 962 P.2d 927 (Colo. 1998).

Title and summary failed to clearly express the meaning of the initiative, perhaps because the original text of the proposed initiative is difficult to comprehend. In re Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 44, 977 P.2d 856 (Colo. 1999).

Single-subject requirement for ballot initiatives met where provisions in initiative make reference to the initiative's subject and the provisions are sufficiently connected to the subject. Matter of Title, Ballot Title, 917 P.2d 292 (Colo. 1996).

An election provision in a measure does not constitute a separate subject if there is a sufficient connection between the provision and the subject of the initiative. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 235(a), 3 P.3d 1219 (Colo. 2000).

The single-subject requirement does not apply to municipal initiatives. Bruce v. City of Colo. Springs, 200 P.3d 1140 (Colo. App. 2008).

B. Initiatives Found to Contain a Single Subject.

Proposed initiative does not contain more than one subject. Proposed initiative that establishes as inalienable the rights of parents to direct and control the upbringing, education, values, and discipline of their children relates to a single subject and does not encompass multiple, unrelated matters. In re Proposed Ballot Initiative on Parental Rights, 913 P.2d 1127 (Colo. 1996).

Proposed initiatives that concern an employee's right to a secret ballot in employee representation elections do not violate the single subject requirement. The first sentence of the initiative states a principle that is broad in scope, but the second sentence confines its reach by discussing the application of the first sentence, therefore the initiative does not violate the single-subject rule. In re Ballot Title 2009-2010 No. 24, 218 P.3d 350 (Colo. 2009).

Proposed initiative concerning the qualification of Colorado judicial officers which also addresses the qualifications of senior judges does not present a separate subject unrelated to the qualification of state judicial officers because senior judges are judicial officers, and provisions governing the qualifications of senior judges is within the single subject of the qualifications of state judicial personnel. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999).

Proposed initiative concerning the qualifications, appointment, and retention of judges which also addresses the dissemination of information about judges standing for removal or retention elections does not violate the constitutional prohibition against single subjects. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999).

The recall of judges is within the single subject of an initiative proposing to alter the manner in which judges are qualified, appointed, and retained. The recall of judges is necessarily connected with the purpose of altering how judges are retained. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999).

Proposed initiative that requires a woman to provide written certification that she has received certain information and to give her informed consent before a physician may perform an abortion, and that requires referring physicians or physicians who perform abortions to report certain statistics regarding women who have abortions to the health department on an annual basis does not violate the single-subject requirement. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 200A, 992 P.2d 27 (Colo. 2000).

Proposed initiative that employs a growth formula limiting the rate of future development, delineates a system of measurement to determine the "base developed" area of each jurisdiction, allows for alternative treatment of commenced but not completed projects, excludes low-income housing, public parks and open space, and historic landmarks, and establishes a procedure for exemptions does not violate the constitutional prohibition against single subjects. In re Ballot Title No. 235(a), 3 P.3d 1219 (Colo. 2000).

Proposed initiative that prohibits school districts from requiring schools to provide bilingual education programs while allowing parents to transfer children from an English immersion program to a bilingual program does not contain more than one subject. In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 258(A), 4 P.3d 1094 (Colo. 2000).

Enforcement provision under which election will be declared void and revenues that are collected pursuant to election will be refunded is directly tied to initiative's purpose of eliminating pay-to-play contributions and, therefore, is not a separate subject. Clause in question should be interpreted as nothing more than an enforcement or implementation clause that does nothing more than incorporate inherent right of taxpayers to challenge tax, spending, or bond measures when they have standing to do so. Thus, enforcement provision is not a separate subject but rather is tied directly to initiative's single subject. In re Ballot Title 2005-2006 No. 73, 135 P.3d 736 (Colo. 2006).

A proposed initiative that extends existing criminal liability of business entities to include its agents or high managerial agents that also contains a civil penalty and the enforcement of the penalty through a private right of action contains a single subject. Civil remedies are often attached to criminal statutes and enforced through private actions, and therefore do not create voter surprise.

Proposed initiative that creates a new legal regime, the Colorado public trust doctrine, to govern the public's rights in waters of natural streams contains a single subject. The proposed initiative does not contain an array of disconnected subjects joined together to garner support from various factions and does not contain surreptitious provisions that will surprise voters. In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 3, 2012 CO 25, 274 P.3d 562.

Proposed initiative that modifies only the existing rights and interests in water between private individuals and the public is a cohesive proposal to create a new water regime and contains a single subject of public control of waters. Its provisions are necessarily and properly connected to each other because they define the purpose of the initiative, describe the broadened scope of the public's control over the state's water resources, and outline how to implement and enforce a new dominant public water estate. In re Ballot Title 2011-2012 No. 45, 2012 CO 26, 274 P.3d 576.

Measure to recognize marriage between a man and a woman as valid does not contravene the single subject requirement of § 1(5.5). In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 227 and No. 228, 3 P.3d 1 (Colo. 2000).

Proposed initiative that establishes a just cause requirement for discharging or suspending an employee does not contain more than one subject. Because the petitioner's argument is comprised of speculation about the potential effects of the initiative and because the initiative relates in its entirety to the establishment of a just cause requirement, the court affirms the decision of the title board that it contains only one subject. In re Ballot Title 2007-2008 No. 62, 184 P.3d 52 (Colo. 2008).

Subjecting proposed initiative to a limitation imposed by the U.S. constitution, as interpreted by the U.S. supreme court, does not violate single subject requirement. All state statutory and constitutional measures are subject to implicit limitation that the U.S. constitution, as interpreted by the U.S. supreme court, may require otherwise; a finding that such limitation violates the single subject requirement would result in no measure satisfying the single subject requirement. In re Ballot Title 2007-2008 No. 61, 184 P.3d 747 (Colo. 2008).

Likewise, provision allowing state to act in accordance with the U.S. constitution, as interpreted by U.S. supreme court, does not violate single subject requirement. In re Ballot Title 2007-2008 No. 61, 184 P.3d 747 (Colo. 2008).

Measure is not deceptive or surreptitious merely because its content depends on the U.S. constitution, as interpreted by the U.S. supreme court. In re Ballot Title 2007-2008 No. 61, 184 P.3d 747 (Colo. 2008).

C. Initiatives Found to Contain More Than One Subject.

Proposed initiative contains more than one subject. Citizen initiative that retroactively creates "fundamental rights" in charter and constitutional amendments approved after 1990, requires the word "shall" in such amendments be mandatory regardless of the context, establishes standards for judicial review of filed petitions, provides that challenges to petitions can be upheld only if beyond a reasonable doubt by a unanimous supreme court, and contains other substantive and procedural provisions relating to recall, referendum, and initiative petitions. Amendment to Const. Sect. 2 to Art. VII, 900 P.2d 104 (Colo. 1995).

Proposed initiatives contained at least four separate and unrelated purposes in violation of the single-subject requirement. There was no necessary connection between the initiatives' central purpose of modifying the process by which initiative and referendum petitions are placed on the ballot and the additional purposes of modifying the content of initiative and referendum petitions that are placed on the ballot, preventing the repeal of the TABOR amendment in a single initiative, and protecting private property rights from the referendum process. In re Ballot Title 2001-02 No. 43, 46 P.3d 438 (Colo. 2002).

Proposed initiative contains at least two subjects in violation of subsection (5.5) by: (1) Creating and administering a beverage container tax, and (2) prohibiting the general assembly from exercising its legislative authority over the basin roundtables and interbasin compact committee until the year 2015, while embedding these entities within the water sections of the constitution and vesting them with significant new authority. Submission Clause for 2009-2010 No. 91, 235 P.3d 1071 (Colo. 2010).

There is no necessary and proper connection between the establishment and administration of a beverage container tax and a prolonged prohibition on the exercise of the general assembly's authority over the basin roundtables and the interbasin compact committee. Submission Clause for 2009-2010 No. 91, 235 P.3d 1071 (Colo. 2010).

Proposed initiative that creates a tax cut, imposes new criteria for voter approval of tax, spending, and debt increases, and imposes likely reductions in state spending on state programs contains at least three subjects. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 37, 977 P.2d 845 (Colo. 1999).

Proposed initiative that establishes a tax credit and sets forth procedural requirements for future ballot titles contains more than one subject. Matter of Title, Ballot Title & Sub. Cl., 900 P.2d 121 (Colo. 1995).

Proposed initiative that makes tax cuts and imposes new criteria for voter approval of revenue and spending increases under article X, section 20, of the constitution contains more than one subject. Matter of Title, Ballot Title, & Sub. Cl. for 1997-98 No. 45, 960 P.2d 648 (Colo. 1998).

Initiative that contains both tax cuts and mandatory reductions in state spending on state programs violates the single-subject requirement. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 88, 961 P.2d 1106 (Colo. 1998).

Proposed initiative violates the single-subject requirement because it (1) provides for tax cuts and (2) imposes mandatory reductions in state spending on state programs. Matter of Proposed Initiative 1997-98 No. 86, 962 P.2d 245 (Colo. 1998).

Initiatives that provide for tax cuts and impose mandatory reductions in state spending on state programs include two subjects that are distinct and have separate purposes. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 84, 961 P.2d 345 (Colo. 1998).

Proposed initiative that creates a tax cut and imposes new criteria for voter approval of tax, spending, and debt increases contains at least two subjects. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 38, 977 P.2d 849 (Colo. 1999).

Initiative contains multiple subjects where it creates a tax cut and, in addition, imposes new criteria for voter approval of tax, spending, and debt increases. In re Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 44, 977 P.2d 856 (Colo. 1999).

There is no difference legally between a reduction and a restriction in state spending. Both limit state spending, which is not necessarily and properly related to the subject of local tax cuts. In re Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 172, No. 173, No. 174, and No. 175, 987 P.2d 243 (Colo. 1999).

Provision requiring the state to enforce and audit each tax and spending limit for each political subdivision of the state is unrelated to the tax cuts proposed by initiatives. In re Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 172, No. 173, No. 174, and No. 175, 987 P.2d 243 (Colo. 1999).

Proposed initiative that would change the qualifications to serve as a state judge or justice, change the qualifications to serve as a member of the judicial discipline commission, and change the jurisdiction of county judges of the city and county of Denver contains three subjects that serve distinct and separate purposes and therefore, violates the single-subject requirement. In re Ballot Title 1990-2000 No. 29, 972 P.2d 257 (Colo. 1999); In re Ballot Title 1999-2000 No. 41, 975 P.2d 180 (Colo. 1999).

Proposed initiative that modifies provisions concerning the qualifications, removal, and retention of judges and reallocates the city and county of Denver's governmental authority and control over its county judges to the state contains more than one subject. The alteration of the city and county of Denver's constitutional power over its county court constitutes a discrete and independent subject from that of the qualifications, removal, and retention of judges. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999).

Proposed initiative concerning Colorado judicial officers and the powers of the judicial discipline commission includes two subjects because the commission is an independent constitutional body whose members are not judicial officers. Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999).

Proposed initiative has more than single subject and, therefore, is unconstitutional. Initiative presents multiple subjects: (1) Time limits for tax measures; (2) time limits for public debt authorizations; and (3) time limits for voter-authorized relief from spending limits. While voters may well be receptive to a broadly applicable 10-year limitation upon the duration of any tax increases, they may not realize that they will be simultaneously limiting their ability to incur multiple-fiscal year district debt obligation to fund public projects. Voters would also be limiting prospectively the duration of all future ballot issues designed to provide relief from TABOR's wholly independent spending caps. Voters are entitled to have each of these separate subjects considered upon its own merits. In re Ballot Title 2005-2006 No. 74, 136 P.3d 237 (Colo. 2006).

Initiative contains multiple subjects when its broad theme of prohibiting the provision of non-emergency government services to people not lawfully present in the United States includes two unrelated purposes: Decreasing taxpayer expenditures that benefit the welfare of those not lawfully present in the United States and denying them access to other unrelated administrative services. The theme of restricting non-emergency government services is too broad and general to make the purposes part of the same subject. In re Ballot Title 2005-06 No. 55, 138 P.3d 273 (Colo. 2006).

A tax cut and provisions impacting voter-approved revenue and spending increases resulted in there being two subject matters in voter initiative. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 30, 959 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1998).

contained multiple subjects because it proposed both the creation of a new Colorado department of environmental conservation and the creation of a mandatory public trust standard that would have required the department to resolve conflicts between economic interest and public ownership and public conservation values in lands, waters, public resources, and wildlife in favor of public ownerships and public values. In re Ballot Title 2007-2008 No. 17, 172 P.3d 871 (Colo. 2007).

Multiple subject matters were combined in a manner that could result in voter surprise or fraud. Voters could be enticed to vote for the tax cut while not realizing passage of the measure would achieve a purpose not necessarily related to a tax cut. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 30, 959 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1998).

Title board erred by fixing the titles and summary of an initiative that proposed substantial changes to the judicial branch where those parts of the initiative constituted separate and discrete subjects that: repealed the constitutional requirement that each judicial district have a minimum of one district court judge; deprived the city and county of Denver of control over Denver county court judgeships; immunized from liability persons who criticize a judicial officer regarding his or her qualifications; and altered the composition and powers of the commission on judicial discipline. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 64, 960 P.2d 1192 (Colo. 1998); Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 95, 960 P.2d 1204 (Colo. 1998).

Title board also erred where the initiative proposed to make all municipal court judges subject to its term of office and retention provisions; and expanded the jurisdiction of the commission on judicial discipline to include municipal court judges. Matter of Title, Ballot Title for 1997-98 No. 95, 960 P.2d 1204 (Colo. 1998).

A proposed initiative to liberalize the procedure for initiative and referendum petitions contained multiple subjects because it also included a substantive provision prohibiting attorneys from setting ballot titles. In re Title for 2003-2004 Nos. 32 and 33, 76 P.3d 460 (Colo. 2003); In re Title for 2003-2004 Nos. 53 and 54, 77 P.3d 747 (Colo. 2003).

Section 2. Election of members - oath - vacancies. (1) A general election for members of the general assembly shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in each even-numbered year, at such places in each county as now are or hereafter may be provided by law.

(2) Each member of the general assembly, before he enters upon his official duties, shall take an oath or affirmation to support the constitution of the United States and of the state of Colorado and to faithfully perform the duties of his office according to the best of his ability. This oath or affirmation shall be administered in the chamber of the house to which the member has been elected.

(3) Any vacancy occurring in either house by death, resignation, or otherwise shall be filled in the manner prescribed by law. The person appointed to fill the vacancy shall be a member of the same political party, if any, as the person whose termination of membership in the general assembly created the vacancy.

Section 3. Terms of senators and representatives. (1) Senators shall be elected for the term of four years and representatives for the term of two years.

(2) In order to broaden the opportunities for public service and to assure that the general assembly is representative of Colorado citizens, no senator shall serve more than two consecutive terms in the senate, and no representative shall serve more than four consecutive terms in the house of representatives. This limitation on the number of terms shall apply to terms of office beginning on or after January 1, 1991. Any person appointed or elected to fill a vacancy in the general assembly and who serves at least one-half of a term of office shall be considered to have served a term in that office for purposes of this subsection (2). Terms are considered consecutive unless they are at least four years apart.

ANNOTATION

Residence for 12 months within legislative district deemed requisite qualification. A requisite qualification of a person for election to the Colorado general assembly is residence for 12 months within the legislative district wherein he seeks to be elected. Anderson v. Gonzales, 155 Colo. 381, 395 P.2d 9 (1964).

Limitation on conditions of election to state office. The conditions of state employment, or election to state office, are to be limited to those either prescribed in the constitution, enumerated in applicable statutes, or implemented, where applicable, by the state civil service commission. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Imposition of tax upon state employees does not interfere with or add additional qualifications for state employment for payment of the tax is not a prerequisite to being appointed or elected, nor does continuation to the state position depend on payment of the tax. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Applied in Kallenberger v. Buchanan, 649 P.2d 314 (Colo. 1982).

Section 5. Classification of senators. The senate shall be divided so that one-half of the senators, as nearly as practicable, may be chosen biennially.

Section 6. Salary and expenses of members. Each member of the general assembly shall receive such salary and expenses as are prescribed by law. No general assembly shall fix its own salary. Members of the general assembly shall receive the same mileage rate permitted for travel as other state employees.

General assembly may determine traveling expenses. The general assembly has the right and the power to declare what constitutes necessary traveling expenses for its members. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 163 Colo. 113, 429 P.2d 304 (1967).

And compensate members for lodging. No provision in the constitution prevents lodging from being considered by the general assembly in determining what the compensation of each member shall include. It is within the province of the general assembly to compensate its members for expenses incurred for lodging. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 163 Colo. 113, 429 P.2d 304 (1967).

Statute under which general assembly would fix its own compensation invalid. A bill providing for payment of 10 dollars a day expenses to each member of the general assembly (for each day he is in attendance or for each day he is excused on account of sickness) violates this section insofar as it applies to members of the assembly which passed the bill, or to holdover senators who, by virtue of their former election, will also be members of the next assembly. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 116 Colo. 318, 180 P.2d 1018 (1947).

Insofar as a bill authorizing travel expenses attempts to apply its provisions to the general assembly which passed the bill, it is invalid. It is limited in application to those members of the next and subsequent general assemblies whose new terms begin upon the convening of the next or subsequent general assemblies. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 163 Colo. 113, 429 P.2d 304 (1967).

Provision for immediate effectiveness is severable. The emergency clause in a bill authorizing travel expenses which would require it to become effective immediately upon signing is severable from the remainder of the act. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 163 Colo. 113, 429 P.2d 304 (1967).

Applied in Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894); In re Interrogatories by Colo. State Senate, 168 Colo. 558, 452 P.2d 391 (1969).

Section 7. General assembly - shall meet when - term of members - committees. The general assembly shall meet in regular session at 10 a.m. no later than the second Wednesday of January of each year. The general assembly shall meet at other times when convened in special session by the governor pursuant to section 9 of article IV of this constitution or by written request by two-thirds of the members of each house to the presiding officer of each house to consider only those subjects specified in such request. The term of service of the members of the general assembly shall begin on the convening of the first regular session of the general assembly next after their election. The committees of the general assembly, unless otherwise provided by the general assembly, shall expire on the convening of the first regular session after a general election. Regular sessions of the general assembly shall not exceed one hundred twenty calendar days.

Revision and alteration of districts excepted from section. Where an amendment to a constitution is in conflict, or in any manner inconsistent, with a prior provision of the constitution, the amendment controls. Thus, section 48 of this article, providing for the mandatory revision and alteration of legislative districts, creates an exception to the provisions of this section. In re Interrogatories Concerning House Joint Resolution No. 1008, 171 Colo. 200, 467 P.2d 56 (1970).

Consideration of reapportionment prior to adoption of section 48 of this article. As it was not mandatory by any law or constitutional provision that the governor designate reapportionment legislation as one of the subjects which the general assembly might consider in an even-numbered session, if he failed or refused to designate it, the general assembly could not even discuss the subject, and the constitutional mandate to reapportion was not mandatory until an odd-numbered session convened. In re Legislative Reapportionment, 150 Colo. 380, 374 P.2d 66 (1962).

Without independent enabling act. The general assembly could not constitutionally repeal the aid to needy disabled program under § 26-1-109 (9)(a), and institute an aid to temporarily disabled program, without an independent enabling act, since the governor had not included the subject in his call. Burciaga v. Shea, 187 Colo. 78, 530 P.2d 508 (1974).

Section 8. Members precluded from holding office. No senator or representative shall, while serving as such, be appointed to any civil office under this state; and no member of congress, or other person holding any office (except of attorney-at-law, notary public, or in the militia) under the United States or this state, shall be a member of either house during his continuance in office.

Section does not prohibit election to civil office. The provision of the first clause of this section only prohibits a senator from being appointed to a civil office, not his election thereto. Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884).

Appointment as employee does not violate section. Legislators, while serving as such, may, during the term of their office, hold other positions as state employees, e.g., field deputies of the income tax department of the state treasurer's office, and their appointment and service as such employees is not in violation of this section. Hudson v. Annear, 101 Colo. 551, 75 P.2d 587 (1938).

Mode of electing speaker of house is not provided by constitution. This provision leaves the manner of election to the will of the body from which the speaker derives his office, according to common parliamentary law. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

He is officer of house rather than state officer. The words, "its other officers", in this section are quite significant; they show clearly that the speaker is classed as an officer of the house, rather than as a state officer. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

And may be removed by vote of majority of house members. The house of representatives has the power, by a vote of the majority of the whole number of members elected, to remove its speaker from office and to elect another in his stead. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Power vested and conferred in house to judge election and qualifications of members is exclusive. The courts cannot interfere with its exercise, or review the decision of either house, acting under and in pursuance of said power. Such decision is conclusive. Hughes v. Felton, 11 Colo. 489, 19 P. 444 (1888).

This section does not limit authority of courts to determine election controversies when no candidate declared duly elected. State constitutional provisions and statutes permitting general assembly to judge election of members does not limit subject matter jurisdiction of district court to hear controversies related to elections where no candidate is yet declared duly elected by secretary of state. Meyer v. Lamm, 846 P.2d 862 (Colo. 1993).

Section 12. Each house makes and enforces rules. Each house shall have power to determine the rules of its proceedings and adopt rules providing punishment of its members or other persons for contempt or disorderly behavior in its presence; to enforce obedience to its process; to protect its members against violence, or offers of bribes or private solicitation, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, to expel a member, but not a second time for the same cause, and shall have all other powers necessary for the legislature of a free state. A member expelled for corruption shall not thereafter be eligible to either house of the same general assembly, and punishment for contempt or disorderly behavior shall not bar a prosecution for the same offense.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Legislative Procedure in Colorado", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 386 (1954).

This grant of power is plenary, and, except as otherwise provided in the constitution itself, is exclusive, and, when exercised within legitimate limits, is conclusive upon every department of the government. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Court will not inquire into motive or cause which influenced action of legislative body and the court will not in any way interfere with the procedure or mode of trial by which the general assembly reaches its conclusions in expelling a member. The house must judge for itself in such matters, and its jurisdiction to so judge and decide is exclusive. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Power is granted to house, not to officers of house, and is to be exercised by majority of members. The exclusive nature of this power is in no way affected by the fact that the other departments of the government, the executive and judicial, are equally free and independent within their respective spheres of jurisdiction, nor by the further fact that the contingency may arise which will cast upon the executive or the judicial branch of the government the responsibility of determining which of two conflicting organizations of the legislative body is the legal one, for there can be but one such legitimate body. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Open meetings law does not conflict with this section, which provides in pertinent part: "Each house shall have power to determine the rules of its proceedings . . .". Cole v. State, 673 P.2d 345 (Colo. 1983).

Applied in Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 498 (1950).

Section 13. Journal - ayes and noes to be entered - when. Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings and publish the same, except such parts as require secrecy, and the ayes and noes on any question shall, at the desire of any two members, be entered on the journal.

"Journal" consists of what is done and passed in legislative assembly. The word "journal" was used by the framers of the constitution as if, by common knowledge, it was known what was meant. Its meaning is equally certain now. As applied to legislation, it is the official record of what is done and passed in a legislative assembly. It is called the journal because the proceedings are entered therein in chronological order as they occur from day to day, the business of each day forming the matter of a complete record by itself. Those acts and things which the senate transcribed as a record of its daily proceedings, constitute its journal. People ex rel. Manville v. Leddy, 53 Colo. 109, 123 P. 824 (1912).

Its function is to record proceedings of body and authenticate and preserve same. Rio Grande Sampling Co. v. Catlin, 40 Colo. 450, 94 P. 323 (1907).

It is proper evidence of action of body upon all matters before it. Rio Grande Sampling Co. v. Catlin, 40 Colo. 450, 94 P. 323 (1907).

And recordings not sufficient to impeach legislative journal entries. Because magnetic tape recordings are not certified, and there are no provisions providing for any certification, there is not sufficient basis for use of the tapes in attempted impeachment of legislative journal entries. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

Form and manner of keeping journal left wholly to legislative body. While the keeping of a journal or record of proceedings is an imperative constitutional requirement, nevertheless, as the form and manner of keeping it is left wholly to the legislative body, that which it makes and treats as its journal is essentially the journal of the constitution. People ex rel. Manville v. Leddy, 53 Colo. 109, 123 P. 824 (1912).

ANNOTATION

Open meetings law not in conflict. Although this section, expressly authorizes the general assembly to conduct certain business in secret, both the senate and the house of representatives have determined that the business of legislative caucuses is not such as ought to be kept secret. Therefore, the open meetings law does not conflict with this section. Cole v. State, 673 P.2d 345 (Colo. 1983).

ANNOTATION

General assembly's members and officers have absolute immunity from suit which alleges violation of their oath of office. Lucchesi v. State, 807 P.2d 1185 (Colo. App. 1990).

The issue of whether the Colorado constitution's speech-or-debate clause grants legislators absolute immunity from lawsuit was one traditionally within the role of the judiciary to resolve for it is peculiarly the province of the judiciary to interpret the constitution and say what the law is. Colo. Common Cause v. Bledsoe, 810 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1991).

The Colorado constitution's speech-or-debate clause should be construed liberally to prevent judicial and executive interference with legislators in the conduct of their official duties. Colo. Common Cause v. Bledsoe, 810 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1991).

The intent of the members of the constitutional convention and voters who adopted the clause by ratifying the constitution was to ensure that legislators could conduct the business of lawmaking without undue hindrance or fear caused by threatened or pending lawsuits related to their legislative duties. Colo. Common Cause v. Bledsoe, 810 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1991).

The speech-or-debate clause does not automatically require the dismissal of legislators from a lawsuit that does not impose upon the legislators the burden of defending themselves or that does not challenge legislative acts performed in the sphere of legitimate legislative activity. Colo. Common Cause v. Bledsoe, 810 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1991).

The speech-or-debate clause did not afford a ground to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint for declaratory relief from alleged violations of section 22a of article V of the state constitution since declaratory-judgment actions do not present the same kind or degree of affirmative interference with legislative activities, nor do such actions impose upon legislators the same burden to defend themselves. Colo. Common Cause v. Bledsoe, 810 P.2d 201 (Colo. 1991).

The conduct of a member of the legislature may not be the basis for a civil or criminal judgment against that member unless the challenged acts fall outside the sphere of legitimate legislative activity, in which case the clause does not apply, and member may be questioned or even convicted of violations of criminal statutes. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Because the act of passing legislation falls squarely within the ambit of legitimate legislative activity, legislators and the general assembly must be dismissed as defendants from that portion of the governor's action seeking a declaration that the headnotes and footnotes to the appropriations bill were unconstitutional. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Acts performed by legislators in their official capacity are not necessarily legislative in nature and an opinion letter to the governor, stating that the general assembly believed the governor's veto was not valid, does not fall within the sphere of legislative activity that is protected by the speech-or-debate clause. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

When the general assembly is engaged in legitimate legislative activity, the speech-or-debate clause protects individual legislators and the legislature as a whole from being named defendants in an action challenging the constitutionality of legislation; however, when an action challenges the constitutionality of the procedure employed to enact the legislation, it is incumbent on the judiciary to resolve whether the challenged actions fall within the sphere of legitimate legislative activity and, if not, the speech-or-debate clause does not apply. Romer v. Colo. General Assembly, 810 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1991).

Section 17. No law passed but by bill - amendments. No law shall be passed except by bill, and no bill shall be so altered or amended on its passage through either house as to change its original purpose.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, "What Is the Status of Colorado's Money Lenders Legislation?", see 7 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 69 (1934). For article, "Legislative Procedure in Colorado", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 386 (1954). For article, "The Lawyer and Legislation", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 359 (1954).

Purpose of section. The controlling reason for the limitation imposed by this section on amendments during passage is to prevent bills from being introduced dealing with a certain subject and afterwards being so amended as to relate to an entirely different subject. People v. Brown, 174 Colo. 513, 485 P.2d 500 (1971), appeal dismissed, 404 U.S. 1007, 92 S. Ct. 671, 30 L. Ed. 2d 656 (1972).

Sections 17-22 of this article mandatory. This section and sections 18 to 22 of this article of the constitution set forth mandatory provisions with which the legislative department must strictly comply in the enactment of bills. Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 498 (1950).

This section necessary for practical working of section 19 of this article. Section 19 of this article would be of little practical benefit if bills may be introduced dealing with a certain subject and afterwards amended so as to relate to an entirely different subject. This furnishes the controlling reason for the existence of this section. In re Amendments of Legislative Bills, 19 Colo. 356, 35 P. 917 (1894).

But this section is not applicable to amendments to constitution. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894); People ex rel. Moore, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55, 1914D Ann. Cas. 1154 (1913).

Origin of bill does not determine or limit right of amendment. The right of amendment of a bill may be exercised with equal freedom by either house irrespective of the question as to the particular body in which the bill originated. In re Amendments of Legislative Bills, 19 Colo. 356, 35 P. 917 (1894).

This section does not prohibit amendment which is merely extension of original purpose of bill. In re Amendments of Legislative Bills, 19 Colo. 356, 35 P. 917 (1894).

A bill does not violate this prohibition against altering or amending a bill on its passage through either house so as to change its original purpose if the change amounted to a change in the means of accomplishing the bill's original purpose. Parrish v. Lamm, 758 P.2d 1356 (Colo. 1988).

But bill to create new county cannot be amended to create a different new county. A bill which was introduced for the purpose of creating the new county of Logan, from territory embraced within the present county of Weld, cannot, under this section, be so amended so as to establish the new county of Montezuma from territory carved out of the present county of La Plata. In re House Bill No. 231, 9 Colo. 624, 21 P. 472 (1886).

Title of bill may be so amended as to cover original purpose of bill as extended by amendments. In re Amendments of Legislative Bills, 19 Colo. 356, 35 P. 917 (1894).

Mere joint resolution is in no sense a law within requirement of this section, and cannot empower the secretary of state to create a debt against the state for a contract of printing made thereunder. Henderson v. Collier & Cleveland Lithographing Co., 2 Colo. App. 251, 30 P. 40 (1892), aff'd, 18 Colo. 259, 32 P. 417 (1893).

And contract made under such joint resolution not authorized by law. A contract for printing made under a concurrent resolution adopted by the senate and the house, but not passed by "bill" under the style, "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Colorado", and not approved by the governor, nor passed, notwithstanding his disapproval, by a two-thirds vote, as required by the constitution, is not authorized by law. Collier & Cleveland Lithographing Co. v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 259, 32 P. 417 (1893).

Applied in Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Colo. Loan & Trust Co., 20 Colo. 1, 36 P. 793 (1894); Airy v. People, 21 Colo. 144, 40 P. 362 (1895); People ex rel. Moore v. ANNOTATION Sections 17-22 of this article mandatory. Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce; 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 498 (1950).

Contract made under joint authorization not authorized by law. A contract for printing made under a concurrent resolution adopted by the senate and the house, but not passed by "bill" under the style, "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Colorado", and not approved by the governor, nor passed, notwithstanding his disapproval, by a two-thirds vote, as required by the constitution, is not authorized by law. Collier & Cleveland Lithographing Co. v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 259, 32 P. 417 (1893); Henderson v. Collier & Cleveland Lithographing Co., 2 Colo. App. 251, 30 P. 40 (1892).

Enacting clause as published in session laws of Colorado satisfies requirements and policy of this section and omission of enacting clause from the Colorado revised statutes does not render statutes unconstitutional nor result in a constitutional deficiency in defendant's conviction. People v. Washington, 969 P.2d 788 (Colo. App. 1998).

Applied in Prior v. Noland, 68 Colo. 263, 188 P. 729 (1920).

Section 19. When laws take effect - introduction of bills. An act of the general assembly shall take effect on the date stated in the act, or, if no date is stated in the act, then on its passage. A bill may be introduced at any time during the session unless limited by action of the general assembly. No bill shall be introduced by title only.

Section limited to situation in which act "becomes law" prior to effective date. The language in this section to the effect that a legislative act "shall take effect on the date stated in the act" is limited to the situation in which the act "becomes a law" pursuant to § 11 of art. IV, Colo. Const., prior to the stated effective date. People v. Glenn, 200 Colo. 416, 615 P.2d 700 (1980).

And when executive approval necessary, approval date deemed passage date. When approval by the executive is necessary, his signature is the last act, and the date of passage is the date of his approval. Tacorante v. People, 624 P.2d 1324 (Colo. 1981).

No constitutional prohibition prevents different effective dates for different portions of same act. Because the effective date stated in an act and the date a bill becomes a law are not necessarily identical, nothing in the constitution prevents different portions of the same act from taking effect on different dates. Tacorante v. People, 624 P.2d 1324 (Colo. 1981).

Section 20. Bills referred to committee - printed. No bill shall be considered or become a law unless referred to a committee, returned therefrom, and printed for the use of the members. Every measure referred to a committee of reference of either house shall be considered by the committee upon its merits, and no rule of either house shall deny the opportunity for consideration and vote by a committee of reference upon such a measure within appropriate deadlines. A motion that the committee report the measure favorably to the committee of the whole, with or without amendments, shall always be in order within appropriate deadlines. Each measure reported to the committee of the whole shall appear on the appropriate house calendar in the order in which it was reported out of the committee of reference and within appropriate deadlines.

Sections 17-22 of this article mandatory. Watrous v. Golden

Requirement that each bill referred to a committee "be considered by the committee on its merits" requires, at a minimum, some interactive consideration, which normally includes some level of discussion, debate, or testimony by members of the committee, and further requires that each bill be so considered before being voted on by the committee on its merits. Therefore, the use of a supermotion to kill a bill without any discussion of the substance of the bill at all violates this section. However, no specific form of committee consideration is mandated in every situation, and the general assembly may determine, on a case-by-case basis, the level of discussion, debate or testimony that is required. Grossman v. Dean, 80 P.3d 952 (Colo. App. 2003).

This section creates a legally protected right for each legislator to have a committee of reference consider and vote on a bill on its merits. A plaintiff who was a legislator when he filed a complaint alleging deprivation of his right to have a bill he sponsored considered on its merits therefore had standing to seek a declaratory judgment that this section was violated. However, the mere status of the plaintiff as house minority leader did not confer standing to claim violations of this section with respect to the killing of bills sponsored by other house members of the minority party. Grossman v. Dean, 80 P.3d 952 (Colo. App. 2003).

Claim for a declaratory judgment based upon a legislator's claim of deprivation of his right to have a bill he sponsored considered on its merits did not constitute a political question and could be addressed by a court. Grossman v. Dean, 80 P.3d 952 (Colo. App. 2003).

Claim that use of supermotion to kill a bill violated this section was not moot. The claim fell within both exceptions to the mootness doctrine. It was capable of repetition, yet evading review, and it involved an issue of great importance or recurring constitutional violations. Grossman v. Dean, 80 P.3d 952 (Colo. App. 2003).

Bill to be printed before deliberation or debate. This provision is sufficiently complied with by printing the bill before it is taken up as a subject of deliberation for debate or amendment. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Colo. Loan & Trust Co., 20 Colo. 1, 36 P. 793 (1894).

This section only requires the printing to be done before the bill shall be considered or become a law. The consideration here contemplated means something more than the giving of attention to the reading of a bill. The primary meaning of the word "consider" is: "To fix the mind on with a view to a careful examination; to think on with care; to ponder; to study; to meditate on." It is in this sense that the word is used in the constitution. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Colo. Loan & Trust Co., 20 Colo. 1, 36 P. 793 (1894).

But bill need not be printed before it is read. A contention that, under this section, a bill cannot become a law unless it is printed before it is read is unsound and has no foundation in the terms of the constitutional provision. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Colo. Loan & Trust Co., 20 Colo. 1, 36 P. 793 (1894).

Sole purpose of printing, as the term is used in the consideration of a bill, is for the use and information of the individual legislator. In re Interrogatories of House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

Constitution does not place limitation upon general revision of statutes, or a codification thereof. In re Interrogatories of House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

Enactment of official code within discretion of commission. The usual constitutional limitation on the enactment of new laws, and the repeal or amendment of existing laws is not applicable to legislation enacting an official code, or compilation or revision of existing laws. The introduction and passage of legislation enacting a codification and revision of the general law is a distinct field. The constitution does not spell out a prohibition as to any expedient method adopted by the commission under legislative direction including collating, compiling, editing, correction of obvious errors, eliminating duplications, and clarification of existing laws, when such, in the opinion of the commission, is essential to carry out the intent of the act for the revision or codification of the laws of the state of Colorado. In re Interrogatories of House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

Applied in Glennon Heights, Inc. v. Central Bank & Trust, 658 P.2d 872 (Colo. 1983).

Section 21. Bill to contain but one subject - expressed in title. No bill, except general appropriation bills, shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title; but if any subject shall be embraced in any act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For comment on Armstrong v. Crissey & Fowler Lumber Co. appearing below, see 1 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 63 (1928). For article, "Adoption by Reference in Municipal Ordinances", see 22 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 69 (1949). For comment on Sullivan v. Siegal appearing below, see 29 Dicta 268 (1952). For article, "Legislative Procedure in Colorado", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 386 (1954).

Purpose of this provision is to prevent surprise and deception through legislation pertaining to one subject under a title relating to another. But it would be unreasonable as well as dangerous to require that each and every specific branch or subdivision of the general subject of an act be enumerated by its title. Edwards v. Denver R. G. R. R., 13 Colo. 59, 21 P. 1011 (1889); In re Breene, 14 Colo. 401, 24 P. 3 (1890); California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960); People ex rel. Dunbar v. Gilpin Inv. Co., 177 Colo. 132, 493 P.2d 359 (1972).

The object of this constitutional provision is twofold. It is to prevent surreptitious legislation, the insertion of enactments in bills which were not indicated by their titles, and to forbid the treatment of incongruous subjects in the same act. It never was intended to prevent the general assembly from treating all the various branches of the same general subject in one law, or from inserting in a single act all the legislation germane to its principal subject. People ex rel. Kellogg v. Fleming, 7 Colo. 230, 3 P. 70 (1883); Geer v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 97 F. 435 (8th Cir. 1899).

It is important to bear in mind the evils sought to be corrected by this provision, including the practice of putting together in one bill subjects having no necessary or proper connection, for the purpose of enlisting in support of such bill the advocates of each measure, and thus securing the enactment of measures that could not be carried upon their merits. Catron v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 18 Colo. 553, 33 P. 513 (1893).

One object is to prevent surprise and fraud from being practiced upon legislators, and to apprise the people of the subjects of legislation by the titles of the bills, so that they might have an opportunity to be heard by petition or otherwise. When each proposed act is confined to a single subject and that subject is clearly expressed in the title, those interested are put upon inquiry when legislation is proposed affecting such subject, without its being necessary for them to examine every bill for the purpose of seeing that nothing objectionable is coiled up within the folds of the measure. Catron v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 18 Colo. 553, 33 P. 513 (1893).

The requirement that a bill be limited to a single subject makes each legislative proposal depend upon its own merits for passage. It also enables the governor to consider each single subject of legislation separately in determining whether to exercise veto power. In re House Bill No. 1353, 738 P.2d 371 (Colo. 1987).

This section is mandatory. People ex rel. Kellogg v. Fleming, 7 Colo. 230, 3 P. 70 (1883); In re Breene, 14 Colo. 401, 24 P. 3 (1890); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Trowbridge, 42 Colo. 449, 95 P. 554 (1908); Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 498 (1950).

But section should be liberally construed, so as to avert the evils against which it is aimed, and at the same time avoid unnecessarily obstructing legislation. In re Breene, 14 Colo. 401, 24 P. 3 (1890).

This provision was not designed to hinder or obstruct legislation, but to prevent its having this effect it must have a reasonable and liberal construction. When so construed, it is neither unreasonable nor difficult to comply with it. Catron v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 18 Colo. 553, 33 P. 513 (1893); Colo. Crim. Justice Reform Coalition v. Ortiz, 121 P.3d 288 (Colo. App. 2005).

Section is not applicable to amendments to constitution. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55, 1914D Ann. Cas. 1154 (1913).

Or charter amendments. This section has no application to charter amendments made by municipalities pursuant to art. XX, Colo. Const. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

Or city ordinances. This provision of the constitution does not apply to city ordinances. Scanlon v. City of Denver, 38 Colo. 401, 88 P. 156 (1906).

This section does not apply to codification of statutes. The usual constitutional limitation on the enactment of new laws, and the repeal or amendment of existing laws, is not applicable and does not generally prevail in the matter of legislation enacting an official code or compilation or revision of the existing general law. The constitution does not place a limitation upon the matter of the general revision of statutes or a codification thereof. In re Interrogatories of House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

"Clearly" advisedly used in this section. The word "clearly" was not incorporated into this provision by mistake. That this word was advisedly used, and was intended to affect the manner of expressing the subject, cannot be doubted. The matter covered by legislation is to be "clearly", not dubiously or obscurely, indicated by the title. Its relation to the subject must not rest upon a merely possible or doubtful inference. The connection must be so obvious as that ingenious reasoning aided by superior rhetoric will not be necessary to reveal it. Such connection should be within the comprehension of the ordinary intellect as well as the trained legal mind. In re Breene, 14 Colo. 401, 24 P. 3 (1890).

Headnote in code not "title". This section refers to the title of a bill as it is presented to the general assembly and a code headnote has no relation to that title. Specht v. People, 156 Colo. 12, 396 P.2d 838 (1964).

A bill did not violate this single subject requirement since it encompassed the regular business practice of waiving patient obligations to pay health insurance deductibles and copayments and the health care providers' advertising of such practices and these matters were properly connected and the title was clearly germane to the subject of criminalizing the regular business practice of waiving patient obligations to pay health insurance deductibles and copayments. Parrish v. Lamm, 758 P.2d 1356 (Colo. 1988).

Bill had a single subject when it authorized the state to enter into lease-purchase agreements to finance both a correctional facility and a separate academic facility. The single subject was the use of lease-purchase agreements to fund capital construction of certain state facilities. Colo. Crim. Justice Reform Coalition v. Ortiz, 121 P.3d 288 (Colo. App. 2005).

The Colorado Clean Indoor Air Act, part 2 of article 14 of title 25, does not consist of more than one subject. On its face, the act addresses the health risks of indoor secondhand smoke. Even assuming the act's exemptions are based in part on economic concerns, it does not violate this section. Coal. for Equal Rights v. Owens, 458 F. Supp. 2d 1251 (D. Colo. 2006), aff'd sub nom. Coal. for Equal Rights, Inc. v. Ritter, 517 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. 2008).

Act amending void section by bringing it within general title validates same. Where an act of the general assembly containing a section obnoxious to this provision is amended by an act entitled an act to amend the act, repeating the title thereof, which amendatory act amends the void section by adding thereto a clause that brings it within the meaning of the subject matter of the title, the rule that a void section of a statute cannot be amended has no application since the title of the amendatory act makes it an amendment of the act and not an amendment of the section. Rice v. Colo. Smelting Co., 28 Colo. 519, 66 P. 894 (1901).

Reenactment of statute cures defective title. Even though the title to a bill is defective, the adoption and passage of the official report of the committee on statute revision by the general assembly creating the codification, Colorado revised statutes, and reenactment of such statute as a part of such revision, cures the defect. Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958); Specht v. People, 156 Colo. 12, 396 P.2d 838 (1964).

And becomes the law itself. A statute as reenacted is thereafter not only evidence of the law, but in fact, the law itself, as a reenactment thereof. Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958).

II. TITLE NEED NOT EXPRESS DETAILS.

Only requirement as to "title" is that it clearly expresses subject of act. The inhibition goes to "acts" containing more than one subject. Harding v. People, 10 Colo. 387, 15 P. 727 (1887).

This section provides that only the "subject" need be expressed in the title to a bill. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

Hence, details of provisions need not be expressed. This provision does not require the title to express the details of the provisions of the act, and the fact that the title does express some of the details which were not required to be expressed does not limit the act to such provisions and exclude all other provisions not so expressed when it does not appear from the title that it was intended to be so limited. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 32 Colo. 310, 76 P. 368 (1904); Roark v. People, 79 Colo. 181, 244 P. 909 (1926); Gordon v. Wheatridge Water Dist., 107 Colo. 128, 109 P.2d 899 (1941).

Appropriate general title, without enumeration, deemed best. In reciting several subordinate matters in the title, the hazard of violating that part of the provision which prohibits the treatment of more than one subject in an act and reciting that one subject in the title is incurred; as a rule, it is wiser and safer not to attempt such enumeration, but to select an appropriate general title, broad enough to include all the subordinate matters considered. Golden Canal Co. v. Bright, 8 Colo. 144, 6 P. 142 (1884); Edwards v. Denver & R. G. R. R., 13 Colo. 59, 21 P. 1011 (1889).

From the constitutional standpoint, a broad and general title is better than a title attempting to catalogue the constituent parts of an act. The act entitled "an act concerning dependent and neglected children" is ideal in that respect. Metzger v. People, 98 Colo. 133, 53 P.2d 1189 (1936).

It is evident that a title cannot include all of the details of a bill. The general assembly may, within reason, make the title of an act as comprehensive as it chooses and thus cover legislation relating to many minor but associated matters. Zeigler v. People, 109 Colo. 252, 124 P.2d 593 (1942); Goldberg v. Musim, 162 Colo. 461, 427 P.2d 698 (1967).

Thus generality commendable in title. If an act treats of but one general subject, and that subject is expressed in the title, the requirement of this section is met. Particularity is not essential and generality is commendable in the title. Roark v. People, 79 Colo. 181, 244 P. 909 (1926).

In the manner of legislative titles particularity is neither necessary nor desirable; generality is commendable. Corder v. Pond, 117 Colo. 463, 190 P.2d 582 (1948); Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958); California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

Since limiting title of necessity limits contents of legislation. The general assembly may within reason make the title of a bill as comprehensive as it chooses; but, when it elects to limit the title to a particular subdivision of some general subject, the right to embody in the bill matters pertaining to other subdivisions of such subject is relinquished. In re Breene, 14 Colo. 401, 24 P. 3 (1890); Gordon v. Wheatridge Water Dist., 107 Colo. 128, 109 P.2d 899 (1941).

Addition of subdivisions in title does not render statute void. Where the title of a statute contains but one general subject, the addition in the title of subdivisions under that subject does not render the act obnoxious to objection under this section. Clair v. People, 9 Colo. 122, 10 P. 799 (1886). See Hecht v. Wright, 31 Colo. 117, 72 P. 48 (1903).

Title of amendatory act may specify section, without more. It is sufficient for the title of an act to amend a code or revision to specify the section to be amended, without giving the title of the chapter or division to which it belongs, or in any way indicating the subject matter of the section. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 191 (1960).

Title referring to crime may include or omit penalties. The penalties prescribed for the violation of a statute are germane to so much of it as defines and denounces the crime, and need not be referred to in the title; but a title which by general words refers to the crime, and then to the punishment thereof, as by the phrase "and providing punishment", is not within the prohibition of this section. Trozzo v. People, 51 Colo. 323, 117 P. 150 (1911).

III. LEGISLATION MUST BE GERMANE TO SUBJECT EXPRESSED IN TITLE.

A. In General.

If act deals with one subject and subject is expressed in title, constitutional requirement is met. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

Where an act deals with a subject at large and the title clearly expresses the purpose of the enactment, it must be upheld. Anderson v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 67 Colo. 403, 186 P. 284 (1919).

Test being whether legislation relevant to subject. The mandate of the constitution is observed if the legislation in the body of a statute is germane to the general subject expressed in the title of the act, and the test in this respect is whether such legislation is relevant or appropriate to such subject. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 32 Colo. 310, 76 P. 368 (1904); Corder v. Pond, 117 Colo. 463, 190 P.2d 582 (1948); Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958).

And this to be determined by contents of statute. Whether the subject matter of a statute is clearly expressed in its title, in compliance with the mandatory provisions of this section, must be determined by the contents of the statute, without regard to the source of the power of which the act itself is an expression. Burcher v. People, 41 Colo. 495, 93 P. 14 (1907).

With section to receive reasonable interpretation. This section prescribing that a bill shall contain but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in the title, must receive a reasonable interpretation, and whenever a matter contained in the statute may fairly be considered germane to the subject expressed by the title it is sufficient. Dallas v. Redman, 10 Colo. 297, 15 P. 397 (1887); People ex rel. Thomas v. Goddard, 8 Colo. 432, 7 P. 301 (1885).

Matter is clearly indicated by title when provisions are clearly germane to subject mentioned in title. In re Breene, 14 Colo. 401, 24 P. 3 (1890).

It is a sufficient compliance if the provisions are germane to the general subject expressed in the title. Hecht v. Wright, 31 Colo. 117, 72 P. 48 (1903); People ex rel. Thomas v. Goddard, 8 Colo. 432, 7 P. 301 (1885).

No violation of the mandates of the constitution occurs if the subject matter of the bill is germane to the general subject expressed in the title, as where the title is a general statement of but one topic, i.e., that of promoting the public morals by the abolition and regulation of certain actions affecting domestic relations. Goldberg v. Musim, 162 Colo. 461, 427 P.2d 698 (1967).

Definition of "germane". The word "germane" means closely allied; appropriate; relevant. Roark v. People, 79 Colo. 181, 244 P. 909 (1926); Dahlin v. City & County of Denver, 97 Colo. 239, 48 P.2d 1013 (1935).

It is germane to title of act to define terms as used in act. Indus. Comm'n v. Cont'l Inv. Co., 78 Colo. 399, 242 P. 49 (1925); Metzger v. People, 98 Colo. 133, 53 P.2d 1189 (1936).

Statute is valid although penalty provided therein is not mentioned in its title, if the punishment or penalty is connected with, and germane to, the subject expressed in the title, and is a means of enforcing the statute or carrying out or giving effect to it, and is essential to the accomplishment of the object indicated in the title. People v. Agnew, 107 Colo. 399, 113 P.2d 424 (1941).

Amendment is valid if it is germane to title of original act. Colo. Farm & Live Stock Co. v. Beerbohm, 43 Colo. 464, 96 P. 443 (1908).

And subjects of amendatory act must be in title of original statute. It is elementary that the title to the act must include every subject covered in the statute, and every subject covered in an amendatory act must have been included within the title to the original statute. City & County of Denver v. McNichols, 129 Colo. 251, 268 P.2d 1026 (1954).

Or germane to section amended. The subject matter of an act specifically amendatory of a designated section must be germane to the section amended. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Aspen Mining & Smelting Co., 3 Colo. App. 223, 32 P. 717 (1893).

Under a title of an amendatory act which specifies the section to be amended, any legislation is proper which is germane to the section specified. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

So title limited to amendment of one section cannot include new sections. New and different sections cannot be interpolated into a statute by an act the title of which is specifically limited to an amendment of one section and a repeal of others. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Aspen Mining & Smelting Co., 3 Colo. App. 223, 32 P. 717 (1893).

What could be done directly by enactment of original law may be done by amendment, even to the extent of enlarging the definition of terms employed in the title, providing there is nothing inherently unreasonable in the amendment. Metzger v. People, 98 Colo. 133, 53 P.2d 1189 (1936).

Provisions in a bill to increase moneys available to the state by increasing income or reducing expenditures held to contain diverse and incongruous subjects which impermissibly impede achievement of the goal that each legislative proposal be considered on its own merits and to intrude on the governor's veto power. In re House Bill No. 1353, 738 P.2d 371 (Colo. 1987).

Section 17-27.5-104 does not violate the clear expression requirement. The subject of that section is clearly expressed in the title, and failure to remain within the extended limits of confinement is essential to the accomplishment of the title. People v. Sa'ra, 117 P.3d 51 (Colo. App. 2004).

B. Severability of Germane Provisions.

That part of act, not directly germane to subject expressed in title is without force. People ex rel. Kellogg v. Fleming, 7 Colo. 230, 3 P. 70 (1883); People ex rel. Thomas v. Goddard, 8 Colo. 432, 7 P. 301 (1885); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Trowbridge, 42 Colo. 449, 95 P. 554 (1908).

But complete, germane sections severable. So much of a legislative act as is not referred to in the title or germane to the subject therein mentioned is void. But if the part of the statute remaining, which is covered by the title, is complete in and of itself, and does not depend on the void portion, it may stand. People ex rel. Seeley v. Hull, 8 Colo. 485, 9 P. 34 (1885).

As unconstitutionality of part of act does not necessarily invalidate other portions thereof. Catron v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 18 Colo. 553, 33 P. 513 (1893).

IV. APPROPRIATION BILLS.

General appropriation bill may contain many subjects. So far as the limitations of this section are concerned, the general appropriation bill may contain as many subjects as are properly within the power of the general assembly to make provision for. In re House Bill No. 168, 21 Colo. 46, 39 P. 1096 (1895).

But others subject to limitation. Not only are all bills of a general character within the purview of this section, but also all appropriation bills other than the general appropriation bill. In re House Bill No. 168, 21 Colo. 46, 39 P. 1096 (1895).

Purpose of appropriation act is to take money out of state treasury. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

Thus allocation to reserve fund not appropriation. A statute which allocated a percentage of proceeds of state income tax to reserve for general fund is not an appropriation act within the meaning of the constitution. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

Action in appropriation bill unrelated to appropriation void. Attempted action of the general assembly to create a new office in an appropriation bill and to legislate one out of office, would be void under section 32 of this article relating to appropriation bills, the state personnel system amendment, and this section regarding titles of acts. People ex rel. Fulton v. O'Ryan, 71 Colo. 69, 204 P. 86 (1922).

Section 22. Reading and passage of bills. Every bill shall be read by title when introduced, and at length on two different days in each house; provided, however, any reading at length may be dispensed with upon unanimous consent of the members present. All substantial amendments made thereto shall be printed for the use of the members before the final vote is taken on the bill, and no bill shall become a law except by a vote of the majority of all members elected to each house taken on two separate days in each house, nor unless upon its final passage the vote be taken by ayes and noes and the names of those voting be entered on the journal.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, "Can American State Legislatures Keep Pace?", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 468 (1954). For article, "Legislative Procedure in Colorado", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 386 (1954).

This section is mandatory on the general assembly. In re House Bill No. 250, 26 Colo. 234, 57 P. 49 (1889); Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 498 (1950).

General assembly has power to enact legislation by majority vote, and to require that it summon a two-thirds majority to override an invalid veto would upset the delicate constitutional balance between the executive and legislative branches. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

The "ayes and noes" requirement is inherently ambiguous. This section does not specify in what manner the ayes and noes are to be taken. When the constitutional requirement can be complied with in a number of ways, the court's task is to determine whether the method actually chosen is in conformity. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

Opportunity to approve or disapprove pending bill critical. The critical inquiry pertinent to this section and § 23 of art. V, Colo. Const., is whether, during final passage of a bill, the members of the legislative body were afforded the opportunity to approve or disapprove the pending bill and whether this individual approval or disapproval was recorded in the official journal as mandated. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

The method of voting -- by use of the "present roll call" and "previous roll call" -- in adopting bills under consideration afforded members the opportunity of approval or disapproval. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

Reading of bill in committee of whole is one reading. The reading of a bill at length in committee of the whole, together with the reporting and recording of the fact upon the journal, may be treated as one reading of the bill. In re Senate Rule, 9 Colo. 641, 21 P. 477 (1886).

Section does not apply to amendments by committee of both houses. This section, providing that all substantial amendments to bills shall be printed for the use of members before the final vote is taken on the bill, does not apply to amendments recommended by a conference committee of the two houses. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Strait, 36 Colo. 137, 85 P. 178 (1906).

Nor to revision of general statutes. The usual constitutional limitation on the enactment of new laws, and the repeal or amendment of existing laws is not applicable, and does not generally prevail in the matter of legislation enacting an official code, or compilation or revision of existing general laws. In re Interrogatories of House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

Compliance deemed question of fact. Whether in the enactment of a statute the requirements of the constitution as to legislation have been observed is one of fact, and can only be litigated upon appropriate pleadings. Colo. & S. Ry. v. Davis, 21 Colo. App. 1, 120 P. 1048 (1912).

While status of amendment question of law. Whether or not an amendment to a bill is a substantial one, within the meaning of this section such as is required to be printed before final vote on the bill, is a judicial question to be determined by the courts, and not a legislative one to be determined by the general assembly. In re House Bill No. 250, 26 Colo. 234, 57 P. 49 (1899).

Where amendment held substantial. Where the house passed a bill to create a state board of assessors to consist of all the county assessors of the state, and the senate amended the bill, dividing the counties into five classes and providing that all the assessors should choose from their number one assessor from each class who, with certain state officers who compose the state board of equalization, should constitute the state board of assessors, it was held that the amendment was a substantial one within the meaning of this section requiring all substantial amendments to be printed before final vote on the bill. In re House Bill No. 250, 26 Colo. 234, 57 P. 49 (1899).

Requirement that vote must be taken by ayes and nays, does not apply to motion to reconsider action taken on passage of bill. Andrews v. People, 33 Colo. 193, 79 P. 1031, 108 Am. St. R. 76 (1905).

So procedures used in passage of Colorado Revised Statutes 1953 did not contravene the provision of this section. In re Interrogatories from House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

Applied in Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894); Adams v. Clark, 36 Colo. 65, 85 P. 642 (1906); People ex rel. Cheyenne Soil Erosion Dist. v. Parker, 118 Colo. 13, 192 P.2d 417 (1948); Glennon Heights, Inc. v. Central Bank & Trust, 658 P.2d 872 (Colo. 1983).

II. JOURNALS AS EVIDENCE OF CONFORMITY WITH REQUIREMENTS.

Conformity with constitutional requirements in legislation may be determined by reference to journals. Andrews v. People, 33 Colo. 193, 79 P. 1031 (1905); City of Denver v. Rubidge, 51 Colo. 224, 116 P. 1130 (1911).

If from journals it appears that requirements of constitution were not observed, attempted enactment is without effect. But where the complaint is that in one house the provisions of this section were not complied with, mere excerpts from the journal of that house, not assuming to state in what manner the bill passed on final reading, will not suffice. City of Denver v. Rubidge, 51 Colo. 224, 116 P. 1130 (1911).

If it affirmatively appears from the legislative journals, either expressly or be necessary implication, that the provisions of the constitution were not observed, then a bill is not valid. Andrews v. People, 33 Colo. 193, 79 P. 1031 (1905). See In re Roberts, 5 Colo. 525 (1881); Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Colo. Loan & Trust Co., 20 Colo. 1, 36 P. 793 (1894).

Where question of constitutional requirement being observed in passage of bill is at issue in cause, the introduction of the journal, printed in accordance with § 2-2-310, which fails to show the entry of such votes, makes a prima facie case, and raises the presumption that there was no final passage of the bill and entry on the journal of the names of those voting aye and no. Rio Grande Sampling Co. v. Catlin, 40 Colo. 450, 94 P. 323 (1907).

Court will not examine journals to determine validity of statute. The court will not on the mere assertion of counsel that a statute is invalid because of noncompliance with some constitutional requirement in its passage, proceed to make an examination of the journals of the respective houses to ascertain how that fact may be. Counsel may, if the journals are not published, present as evidence of their contents bearing on the point in issue, a proper certificate of the secretary of state, in whose legal custody they are, or, if published by proper authority, such portions of the published journals themselves may be brought directly, and in that form, to the attention of the court. The court, however, will not make such investigation for itself. Anderson v. Grand Valley Irrigation Dist., 35 Colo. 525, 85 P. 313 (1906).

Nor consider admissions of parties or stipulations of counsel as to contents of journals. One who questions the constitutionality of a statute on the ground that the general assembly did not observe the constitutional requirements in its passage must, by competent evidence, prove the fact or facts relied upon to defeat the law. The court will not consider admissions of parties or stipulations of counsel as to the contents of legislative journals, for the purpose of impeaching the validity of a statute. Anderson v. Grand Valley Irrigation Dist., 35 Colo. 525, 85 P. 313 (1906).

Nor report of special investigating committee of general assembly. In attacking a law on the ground that the requirements of this section were not complied with, as shown by the journal introduced in evidence for that purpose, the report of a special committee contained in the journal of a subsequent general assembly appointed to investigate the cause of such missing roll call is not competent evidence to rebut the prima facie case made by the introduction of the former journal, since to so hold would be referring the question in issue to some other tribunal than the trial court, i.e., an investigating committee of the general assembly. Rio Grande Sampling Co. v. Catlin, 40 Colo. 450, 94 P. 323 (1907).

Effect of failure of journal to show compliance. Where the journal does not show affirmatively that the bill was read at length upon three different days in the senate but does show that it was read a first and third time, it was held that it could not have been read a third time unless there had been a second reading. Merely negative evidence is not sufficient to impeach the enrolled act duly signed and authenticated by the proper officers and lodged in the office of the secretary of state. Mass. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Colo. Loan & Trust Co., 20 Colo. 1, 36 P. 793 (1894).

Where journals are merely silent on question whether requirements have been met, it is presumed that the fundamental law was properly followed. Andrews v. People, 33 Colo. 193, 79 P. 1031 (1905).

Section 22a. Caucus positions prohibited - penalties. (1) No member or members of the general assembly shall require or commit themselves or any other member or members, through a vote in a party caucus or any other similar procedure, to vote in favor of or against any bill, appointment, veto, or other measure or issue pending or proposed to be introduced in the general assembly.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, a member or members of the general assembly may vote in party caucus on matters directly relating to the selection of officers of a party caucus and the selection of the leadership of the general assembly.

Section 23. Vote on amendments and report of committee. ANNOTATION Law reviews. For article, "The Lawyer and Legislation", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 359 (1954). For article, "Can American State Legislatures Keep Pace?", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 468 (1954).

This section mandatory. This section is mandatory insofar as it requires the vote to be taken by the ayes and noes. There is an express prohibition of the enactment of a law in any other mode, and hence compliance is a condition precedent to the validity of a legislative act coming within the provisions of the section. In re Roberts, 5 Colo. 525 (1881).

The "ayes and noes" requirement is inherently ambiguous. This section does not specify in what manner the ayes and noes are to be taken. When the constitutional requirement can be complied with in a number of ways, the court's task is to determine whether the method actually chosen is in conformity. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

Opportunity to approve or disapprove pending bill. The critical inquiry pertinent to § 22 of art. V, Colo. Const., and this section is whether, during final passage of a bill, the members of the legislative body were afforded the opportunity to approve or disapprove the pending bill and whether this individual approval or disapproval was recorded in the official journal as mandated. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

The method of voting -- by use of the "present roll call" and "previous roll call" -- in adopting bills under consideration afforded members the opportunity of approval or disapproval. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Certain Bills, 195 Colo. 198, 578 P.2d 200 (1978).

This section applies to any amendment made to bills and to committee reports thereon. People ex rel. Rogers v. Barksdale, 104 Colo. 1, 87 P.2d 755 (1939).

Adoption of report of committee refers to final vote. The provision relating to "the report of any conference committee" undoubtedly refers to the final vote upon bills reported from conference committees, because all the solemnity attendant upon the passage of bills is required to be observed in the vote upon such report. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Strait, 36 Colo. 137, 85 P. 178 (1906).

Adoption by house of report sufficient concurrence in senate amendments. Where a bill was passed by the house and then amended and passed by the senate, in which amendments the house refused to concur, the subsequent adoption by the house of a report of the conference committee, including some of the amendments adopted by the senate, was a sufficient concurrence in such amendments. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Strait, 36 Colo. 137, 85 P. 178 (1906).

Section 24. Revival, amendment or extension of laws. No law shall be revived, or amended, or the provisions thereof extended or conferred by reference to its title only, but so much thereof as is revived, amended, extended or conferred, shall be re-enacted and published at length.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Adoption by Reference in Municipal Ordinances", see 22 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 69 (1949). For article, "Legislative Bill Drafting", see 23 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 127 (1950). For article, "Legislative Bill Drafting", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 368 (1954). For article, "Legislative Procedure in Colorado", see 26 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 386 (1954).

Purpose of section. This section was framed for the purpose of avoiding confusion, ambiguity and uncertainty in the statutory law through the existence of separate and disconnected legislative provisions, original and amendatory, scattered through different volumes or different portions of the same volume. Callahan v. Jennings, 16 Colo. 471, 27 P. 1055 (1891); City & County of Denver v. People, 103 Colo. 565, 88 P.2d 89, appeal dismissed, 307 U.S. 615, 59 S. Ct. 1044, 83 L. Ed. 1496, reh'g denied, 308 U.S. 633, 60 S. Ct. 69, 84 L. Ed. 527 (1939).

This section was designed to defeat attempted impositions in the enactment of laws. It forbids, among other things, amending a statute simply and solely by striking out or inserting certain words, phrases or clauses; a proceeding formerly common, through which laws became complicated, and their real meaning often difficult of ascertainment even by the legal profession. Edwards v. Denver & R. G. R. R., 13 Colo. 59, 21 P. 1011 (1889).

This section was designed to remedy and prevent well-known abuses of legislation existing at the time of the framing of this instrument. These were the evils of special legislation, and the vicious practice of amending statutes by referring to the title, and then declaring that certain words and phrases appearing in certain lines and sections be stricken out, and certain other words and phrases inserted therein. Denver Circle R. R. v. Nestor, 10 Colo. 403, 15 P. 714 (1887).

The purpose of provisions that ordinances must be published and shall not be revised or amended by title only, is to prevent the confusion which results from amending ordinances by reference to the title, or by interpolating words without restating the part amended. Thiele v. City & County of Denver, 135 Colo. 442, 312 P.2d 786 (1957).

Provisions of this section are mandatory, not directory, and are to be classed among limitations of legislative power, rather than among those regulations of legislative conduct, a disobedience of which is held not necessarily fatal. Edwards v. Denver & R. G. R. R., 13 Colo. 59, 21 P. 1011 (1889).

Hence, statute can only be amended by reenacting and publishing at length portions affected by amendment. Callahan v. Jennings, 16 Colo. 471, 27 P. 1055 (1891).

This section does not apply to acts which are only remedial or precedural. Terminal Drilling Co. v. Jones, 84 Colo. 279, 269 P. 894 (1928).

Nor does this section apply to enactments wherein reference to general laws becomes necessary for the means of enforcing and carrying their provisions into effect. Such an unrestricted interpretation is not admissible, because it would be an unreasonable construction, and one that would impose upon the people more serious evils than those sought to be cured or avoided. Denver Circle R. R. v. Nestor, 10 Colo. 403, 15 P. 714 (1887).

It was not the purpose or effect of this provision to require a reenactment or republication of the provisions of the general laws of the state when reference is made to them in later statutes for a definition of rights, or for a specification of the lawful method of procedure under the subsequent laws. Geer v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 97 F. 435 (8th Cir. 1899).

Nor to revision of general laws. The usual constitutional limitation on the enactment of new laws, and the repeal or amendment of existing laws is not applicable, and does not generally prevail in the matter of legislation enacting an official code, or compilation or revision of existing laws. In re Interrogatories of House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

Statute need not be reenacted where new section complete in itself. An additional section introducing a wholly new but germane requirement, complete in itself, and changing no existing provision of the act to which it is added, is not void on the ground that such act is not reenacted and published at length. Edwards v. Denver & R. G. R. R., 13 Colo. 59, 21 P. 1011 (1889).

And amendment by implication not abolished. This section was not intended to abolish the power of the general assembly to enact measures which amend preexisting legislation by implication only. City & County of Denver v. People, 103 Colo. 565, 88 P.2d 89, appeal dismissed, 307 U.S. 615, 59 S. Ct. 1044, 83 L. Ed. 1496, reh'g denied, 308 U.S. 633, 60 S. Ct. 69, 84 L. Ed. 527 (1939).

But amendment does not necessarily effect repeal. When an act amends a law with the introductory phrase, "so as to read as follows", or any other language showing clearly the intent only to amend, a repeal does not take place. Such a repeal was not contemplated by the framers of the constitution. Callahan v. Jennings, 16 Colo. 471, 27 P. 1055 (1891); Kendall v. People ex rel. Hoag, 53 Colo. 100, 125 P. 586 (1912).

When only amendment is intended, no repeal of the portions retained takes place. The original provisions appearing in the amended act are regarded as having been the law since they were first enacted, and the new provisions are understood as enacted at the time the amended act took effect. Callahan v. Jennings, 16 Colo. 471, 27 P. 1055 (1891).

Application of similar charter provision to city ordinance. The amendment of one section of an ordinance under a charter provision similar to that contained in this section was held not to require that the residue of the ordinance shall be reprinted. Post Printing & Publishing Co. v. City &

County of Denver, 68 Colo. 50, 189 P. 39 (1920).

Under a charter provision similar to this section, where the ordinance is complete in itself, the fact that new sections have been added to the code does not require the city to reenact the entire measure referred to in the new ordinance. Thiele v. City & County of Denver, 135 Colo. 442, 312 P.2d 786 (1957).

Applied in Bd. of Comm'rs v. Aspen Mining & Smelting Co., 3 Colo. App. 223, 32 P. 717 (1893); Long v. Sullivan, 21 Colo. 109, 40 P. 359 (1895); Lamb v. Powder River Live Stock Co., 132 F. 434 (8th Cir. 1904); In re Opinions of Justices, 55 Colo. 17, 123 P. 660 (1912); People v. Friederich, 67 Colo. 69, 185 P. 657 (1919); Gallovich v. People, 68 Colo. 299, 189 P. 34 (1920); Gavin v. People, 79 Colo. 189, 244 P. 912 (1926); Johnson v. People, 79 Colo. 439, 246 P. 202 (1926); Armstrong v. Johnson Storage & Moving Co., 84 Colo. 142, 268 P. 978 (1928); In re Hunter's Estate, 97 Colo. 279, 49 P.2d 1009 (1935); District Landowners Trust v. Adams County, 104 Colo. 146, 89 P.2d 251 (1939); Brannaman v. Richlow Mfg. Co., 106 Colo. 317, 104 P.2d 897 (1940).

Section 25. Special legislation prohibited. The general assembly shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say; for granting divorces; laying out, opening, altering or working roads or highways; vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys and public grounds; locating or changing county seats; regulating county or township affairs; regulating the practice in courts of justice; regulating the jurisdiction and duties of police magistrates; changing the rules of evidence in any trial or inquiry; providing for changes of venue in civil or criminal cases; declaring any person of age; for limitation of civil actions or giving effect to informal or invalid deeds; summoning or impaneling grand or petit juries; providing for the management of common schools; regulating the rate of interest on money; the opening or conducting of any election, or designating the place of voting; the sale or mortgage of real estate belonging to minors or others under disability; the protection of game or fish; chartering or licensing ferries or toll bridges; remitting fines, penalties or forfeitures; creating, increasing or decreasing fees, percentage or allowances of public officers; changing the law of descent; granting to any corporation, association or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks; granting to any corporation, association or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity or franchise whatever. In all other cases, where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted.

Equal treatment under law is right constitutionally afforded citizens. Vanderhoof v. People, 152 Colo. 147, 380 P.2d 903 (1963).

The provision against special legislation was intended to curb favoritism on the part of the general assembly, prevent state government from interfering with local affairs, and preclude the legislature from passing unnecessary laws to fit limited circumstances. People v. Canister, 110 P.3d 380 (Colo. 2005); People v. Hagos, 110 P. 3d 1290 (Colo. 2005).

Purpose of section to prevent class legislation. It was for the purpose of preventing class legislation that the people of this state, by this section, declared that the general assembly shall not pass local or special laws in particular enumerated cases and in no case where a general law can be made applicable. City of Denver v. Bach, 26 Colo. 530, 58 P. 1089 (1899).

But not to prohibit all special legislation. While the prevailing spirit of the constitution is opposed to special legislation, it is not, however, prohibitory of all special legislation, but only such as relates to certain specified subjects, and to such other cases where general laws are applicable. Brown v. City of Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 P. 455 (1884).

Constitutional prohibition against special legislation does not require that the legislature include within a law every item that could be made the subject of legislation, but, rather, prohibits the legislature from exempting classes or members of a class from coverage of a particular statute without a reasonable basis. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987); Bloomer v. Boulder County Bd. of Comm'rs, 799 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1990).

General assembly cannot grant power to pass special legislation to any other body. The charter of the city and the powers which it may exercise thereunder are derived from the general assembly; and as the latter cannot pass a special or local law, where a general one may be made applicable, it cannot grant such power to any other body. City of Denver v. Bach, 26 Colo. 530, 58 P. 1089 (1899).

Need for special act legislative question. The question whether a general law can be made applicable, or whether a special law is authorized for a purpose not falling within the enumerated or prohibited cases, is peculiarly a legislative question. Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884); Coulter v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 9 Colo. 258, 11 P. 199 (1886); McClain v. People, 111 Colo. 271, 141 P.2d 685 (1943); Morgan County Junior Coll.

This section imposes upon the general assembly the duty of looking into the facts of every case for which a special act is proposed; and it is only when the legislative mind becomes convinced, from a due investigation, and mature consideration of the facts and circumstances that a necessity exists for a special law, that such a law is authorized. Brown v. City of Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 P. 455 (1884); Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884).

If the new conditions affect the members of a class, the correcting statute must apply to all alike. If the new conditions affect one only or a few, the correcting statute may be as narrow as the mischief. The problem is one of legislative policy, with a wide margin of discretion conceded to the lawmakers. Morgan County Junior Coll. Dist. v. Jolly, 168 Colo. 466, 452 P.2d 34, appeal dismissed, 396 U.S. 24, 90 S. Ct. 198, 24 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1969).

And if general law applicable, special legislation prohibited. Where the general assembly has determined that a general law can be made applicable to the organization and classification of cities and towns, special legislation upon the subject is prohibited. In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill No. 293, 21 Colo. 38, 39 P. 522 (1895).

General assembly may reasonably classify, but there must be some distinguishing peculiarity which makes reasonable the exception of the designated class from the general law. The reason for such exception existing, the classification adopted is a matter to be determined by the general assembly. People v. Maxwell, 162 Colo. 495, 427 P.2d 310 (1967).

Equal protection in its guaranty of like treatment to all similarly situated permits classification which is reasonable and not arbitrary and which is based upon substantial differences having a reasonable relation to the objects or persons dealt with and to the public purpose sought to be achieved by the legislation involved. McCarty v. Goldstein, 151 Colo. 154, 376 P.2d 691 (1962); Hale v. City & County of Denver, 159 Colo. 341, 411 P.2d 332 (1966); People v. Sprengel, 176 Colo. 277, 490 P.2d 65 (1971); People v. Trujillo, 178 Colo. 147, 497 P.2d 1 (1972).

The general rule is that, although the general assembly may classify and enact statutes, there must be a reasonable basis to support the classification. If there is a distinguishing factor, then the general assembly may properly adopt the classification, even if some inequality may result. Yarbro v. Hilton Hotels Corp., 655 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1982); Norsby v. Jensen, 916 P.2d 555 (Colo. App. 1995).

But mathematical precision not required. A classification having some reasonable basis does not offend against the constitutional provisions supra merely because it is not made with mathematical nicety or because in practice it may result in some inequality. Vogts v. Guerrette, 142 Colo. 527, 351 P.2d 851 (1960).

The prohibition in this section against special legislation is more than a redundant equal protection clause. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Test of special legislation when an enumerated prohibition is implicated is: (1) Is the legislative classification a real or potential class or is it logically or factually limited to a "class of one" and therefore special legislation per se; and (2)(a) is the class based on some distinguishing peculiarity and (b) does the classification reasonably relate to the purposes of the statute? In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991); People v. Canister, 110 P.3d 380 (Colo. 2005); People v. Hagos, 110 P.

Test of special legislation when law is challenged on basis that general law could be made applicable is: Was the general assembly arbitrary and capricious in its decision that a special law was required? In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Under "general law" test, size of class is irrelevant if legislature has not abused discretion. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

The special legislation provision prohibits an illusionary class. The general assembly creates an illusionary class when it defines the class so that it will never have any other members other than those targeted by the legislation. The provision in § 18-1.4-102 (1) (e) was "conceived, cut, and tailored" to apply to only two defendants, and the time limitation in the provision ensured it would only apply to two defendants. The legislation, therefore, is unconstitutional special legislation. People v. Canister, 110 P.3d 380 (Colo. 2005); People v. Hagos, 110 P. 3d 1290 (Colo. 2005).

Statute, on its face, does not violate this section when statute created several classes of potential beneficiaries and more than one entity could be so classified over an extended period of time; when statute made reasonable distinctions on the basis of size of the economic impact of a business and on the basis of the source of funds when the constitution required that funds be used for distinct purpose; and when classifications were reasonably related to continued expansion of private sector employment in the state. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Sections 31-12-118.5 and 31-12-118 (2)(b), which provide for abeyance of annexation proceedings upon the filing of a petition for incorporation when specified criteria are met, do not violate this section. While act enacting § 31-12-118.5 and amending § 31-12-118 (2)(b) was intended to address a specific pending dispute, it also has general applicability and is likely to be applied again in the future. Greenwood Vill. v. Petitioners for Proposed City of Centennial, 3 P.3d 427 (Colo. 2000).

The fact that impetus for statute was to provide incentives for airline to locate facility in Colorado does not vitiate statute as special legislation; instead, question is whether statute creates true classes and whether classifications are rationally related to a legitimate public purpose. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Legislation is not prohibited as special legislation if there is a genuine class and if the classification is reasonable. The public highway authority law was not special legislation because it applied to all highway authorities, whether existing or to be created, and the provisions of the act were reasonably related to its stated purpose of ensuring adequate transportation for the state's citizens. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

Court ordinarily determines whether statutory classification bears rational relationship to legitimate state purpose. Where no suspect classification or fundamental right is involved, the court's role is to determine whether a statutory classification bears a rational relationship to a legitimate state purpose. McClanahan v. Am. Gilsonite Co., 494 F. Supp. 1334 (D. Colo. 1980).

When class legislation prohibited. The inhibition against class legislation contained in this section arises when the effect of the law is to prohibit the carrying on of a legitimate business or occupation while allowing other businesses or occupations, not reasonably distinguished from those prohibited, to be carried on freely. Mosko v. Dunbar, 135 Colo. 172, 309 P.2d 581 (1957); Dunbar v. Hoffman, 171 Colo. 481, 468 P.2d 742 (1970).

Burden of showing arbitrariness of classification. One who assails the classification in a law must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis but is essentially arbitrary. Vogts v. Guerrette, 142 Colo. 527, 351 P.2d 851 (1960); Snook v. Joyce Homes, Inc., 215 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

One who attacks the constitutionality of a legislative enactment has the burden of showing beyond a reasonable doubt that the law is unconstitutional. Kinterknecht v. Indus. Comm'n, 175 Colo. 60, 485 P.2d 721 (1971); People v. Sprengel, 176 Colo. 277, 490 P.2d 65 (1971); Snook v. Joyce Homes, Inc., 215 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

As special legislation presumed valid. It is to be presumed, upon the passage of a special statute, that, in the judgment of the lawmakers, after full and fair investigation, a general law would not effect the purpose designed to be accomplished. Brown v. City of Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 P. 455 (1884); Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884); Coulter v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 9 Colo. 258, 11 P. 199 (1886).

But courts to interfere where improper legislation passed. It is not to be presumed that the general assembly would act in bad faith, or without due investigation and the exercise of sound judgment, in the passage of special acts; yet, in the event of such wrongful action clearly appearing, it would become the duty of the courts to interfere. Every question of doubt would, however, be resolved in favor of the validity of the act challenged. Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884).

Courts may not interfere with legislative classifications, provided there is the required equality and uniformity between the persons in the separate classes, and provided further, that the classification is not unreasonable or arbitrary and in fact has sanction in reason and logic. People ex rel. Dunbar v. Schaefer, 129 Colo. 215, 268 P.2d 420 (1954); Vogts v. Guerrette, 142 Colo. 527, 351 P.2d 851 (1960); McCarty v. Goldstein, 151 Colo. 154, 376 P.2d 691 (1962); People v. Sprengel, 176 Colo. 277, 490 P.2d 65 (1971).

All reasonable intendments must be indulged to support the constitutionality of legislative acts, including classifications adopted by lawmakers, and their groupings will not be disturbed unless the classification is clearly arbitrary and without any reasonable basis. People v. Trujillo, 178 Colo. 147, 497 P.2d 1 (1972).

Whether a general law can be made applicable is a question of legislative discretion, and courts can interfere only when there is a clear abuse of that discretion. McClain v. People, 111 Colo. 271, 141 P.2d 685 (1943); Morgan County Junior Coll. Dist. v. Jolly, 168 Colo. 466, 452 P.2d 34, appeal dismissed, 396 U.S. 24, 90 S. Ct. 198, 24 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1969).

Courts have jurisdiction to review acts of the general assembly passed under the assumption of discretionary powers. While the presumptions of good faith and sound judgment attach to the acts of legislative assemblies, to hold that the enactment of a provision involving a palpable abuse of discretion, or that the assumption of discretionary power, in a case clearly inapplicable to the rule, cannot be judicially reviewed and annulled, would subject the courts to criticism for inefficiency in the performance of their judicial functions. Coulter v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 9 Colo. 258, 11 P. 199 (1886).

If a Sunday closing ordinance promulgated by a city is discriminatory or amounts to class or special legislation, irrespective of the purpose for which it is passed, it is the duty of a court to relieve from its illegal effect. Allen v. City of Colo. Springs, 101 Colo. 498, 75 P.2d 141 (1937).

In general, a legislative amendment of a city charter would not be reviewed by the supreme court for the purpose of determining whether, under the concluding sentence of this constitutional provision, the changes incorporated could have been made by general law. Brown v. City of Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 P. 455 (1884); Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884); Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 426, 8 P. 924 (1885); Rogers v. People, 9 Colo. 450, 12 P. 843, 59 Am. R. 146 (1886).

Administrative agency cannot pass on constitutionality of statute. Where the constitutionality of a statute, under which an administrative agency acts, is challenged, the administrative agency cannot pass upon its constitutionality. That function may be exercised only by the judicial branch of government. Kinterknecht v. Indus. Comm'n, 175 Colo. 60, 485 P.2d 721 (1971).

Law is not local nor special when it is general and uniform in its operation upon all in like situation. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908); Cavanaugh v. People, 61 Colo. 292, 157 P. 200 (1916); Rifle Potato Growers Coop. Ass'n v. Smith, 78 Colo. 171, 240 P. 937 (1925); Allen v. Bailey, 91 Colo. 260, 14 P.2d 1087 (1932); Driverless Car Co. v. Armstrong, 91 Colo. 334, 14 P.2d 1098 (1932); McCarty v. Goldstein, 151 Colo. 154, 376 P.2d 691 (1962); People v. Maxwell, 162 Colo. 495, 427 P.2d 310 (1967); People ex rel. Dunbar v. Gilpin Inv. Co., 177 Colo. 132, 493 P.2d 359 (1972); O'Quinn v. Walt Disney Prods., Inc., 177 Colo. 190, 493 P.2d 344 (1972); City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987); Estate of Stevenson v. Hollywood Bar, 832 P.2d 718 (Colo. 1992).

A law does not violate the constitutional prohibition against special legislation if it is general and uniform in its operation upon all in like situation. Am. Water Dev., Inc. v. City of Alamosa, 874 P.2d 352 (Colo. 1994).

A legislative act which makes a reasonable classification of counties and is equally applicable to all of a common class is general legislation, and not special within the prohibition of this section. Young v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 102 Colo. 342, 79 P.2d 654 (1938).

The statutory employer provisions of the Worker's Compensation Act do not violate the special legislative prohibition when it is "general and uniform in its operation upon all in like situation". Curtiss v. GSX Corp. of Colo., 774 P.2d 873 (Colo. 1989).

Section 8-41-401 (3), limiting damages available to one who waives workers' compensation insurance, is not unconstitutional under this section. It is not special legislation nor does it deprive claimants of property without due process. Snook v. Joyce Homes, Inc., 215 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

Although general law may have limited application. A general law unlimited as to time in its operation is not obnoxious to a constitutional inhibition against local legislation because it happens that but one city in the state has the population necessary to come within its purview. Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 417, 8 P. 661, reh'g denied, 8 Colo. 426, 8 P. 919 (1885).

The number of class members known to be affected by the statutory criteria at the time of enactment is not determinative in deciding whether the legislation amounts to unconstitutional special legislation. Am. Water Dev., Inc. v. City of Alamosa, 874 P.2d 352 (Colo. 1994).

As classification by population is not inhibited by this section, where it appears that such legislation is not an attempt to circumvent the constitution. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908).

Special, nonprospective application is void. In re Senate Bill No. 95 of Forty-Third Gen. Ass'y, 146 Colo. 233, 361 P.2d 350 (1961).

Police regulation need not benefit entire public. Otherwise valid police power legislation is not invalid because it benefits only a special class, for example, the purchasers and lessees of subdivided real estate, and not the whole public; the police power may be, and usually is, exercised for the purpose of protecting particular classes of the public in need of such protection, and it is rare indeed that a single law includes everyone in the scope of its regulations. People v. Maxwell, 162 Colo. 495, 427 P.2d 310 (1967).

Ordinance allowing exceptions for nonconforming uses is constitutional. Republican form of government allows legislature to evaluate competing interests and determine best course of action. Landmark Land v. City & County of Denver, 728 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1986), appeal dismissed for want of a substantial federal question, 482 U.S. 1001, 107 S. Ct. 3222, 97 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1987).

Amendatory or revisory provision in charter not special legislation. A provision in a city charter which is merely revisory or amendatory of the original charter does not violate the inhibition of the constitution against special legislation. Cunningham v. City of Denver, 23 Colo. 18, 45 P. 356 (1896); In re Extension of Boundaries, 18 Colo. 288, 32 P. 615 (1893).

Nor special charter adopted prior to constitution. Where, before the adoption of the state constitution, a city was incorporated under a special charter, and no abandonment of this charter and reincorporation under the general laws relating to towns and cities has taken place, the original charter, and amendments thereto, are not unconstitutional on the ground of special or local legislation; and, unless inconsistent with the constitution, they may stand. Huer v. City of Central, 14 Colo. 71, 23 P. 323 (1890).

Special legislation not forbidden in respect to incorporated towns or cities. The term township refers to an involuntary corporation, or quasi-corporation, and not to a voluntary municipal corporation such as an incorporated town. Special legislation is not forbidden in respect to incorporated towns or cities, except in cases where a general law can be made applicable. Mayor of Valverde v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 104, 34 P. 947 (1893).

As general assembly has plenary power in respect to municipal corporations. Reichelt v. Town of Julesburg, 90 Colo. 258, 8 P.2d 708 (1932).

Laying out and vacating streets and highways. There is nothing in the Colorado constitution prohibiting the exercise of powers to lay out and vacate streets except by special legislation. Whitsett v. Union Depot & R. R., 10 Colo. 243, 15 P. 339 (1887).

Such power may be delegated to municipal corporations. This section contains no prohibition against the delegation of power to vacate roads, etc. to municipal corporations. On the contrary, the restriction against the vacating of streets and highways by local or special legislative acts is an implication of the power of the general assembly to authorize such acts to be done. Whitsett v. Union Depot & R. R., 10 Colo. 243, 15 P. 339 (1887).

But cannot be exercised arbitrarily. Although the constitution inhibits the general assembly from passing laws vacating streets, the power to vacate streets may be delegated to municipal corporations, but this power cannot be exercised arbitrarily, and without regard to the rights and necessities of the public. City of Goldfield v. Golden Cycle Mining Co., 60 Colo. 220, 152 P. 896 (1915); Landmark Land v. City & County of Denver, 728 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1986), appeal dismissed for want of a substantial federal question, 482 U.S. 1001, 107 S. Ct. 3222, 97 L. Ed. 2d 729 (1987).

Regulating county affairs. One of the most important constitutional guaranties secured to each and all counties of the state is freedom from the evils of special legislation, whereby county affairs and county government are likely to be continually disturbed by useless and unwholesome enactments. Bills for legislation of this character are often introduced to satisfy individual interests, and when they pass, it is by reason of a lack of interest of members whose constituents are not affected by the proposed measures. Coulter v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 9 Colo. 258, 11 P. 199 (1886).

Regulating practice in courts. Under the constitution, criminal courts may be created by "local or special" acts, but their organization, jurisdiction and practice must be provided for by general laws, of uniform operation throughout the state. Ex parte Stout, 5 Colo. 509 (1881); Ex parte White, 5 Colo. 521 (1881).

Providing for management of common schools. "Management" is defined as the act or art of managing; the manner of treating, directing, carrying on or using for a purpose; conduct; administration; guidance; control; as in the management of a farm or the management of state affairs. The word is one of comprehensive meaning, and when the general assembly undertakes to provide by special law the manner in which supplies shall be furnished, the compensation and place of education of teachers to be employed, it is certainly legislating by a special act with reference to the management of certain of the common schools of the state, which legislation is inhibited by the express language of the constitution. In re Senate Bill No. 23, 23 Colo. 499, 48 P. 647 (1897).

Statutes granting to certain types of corporations right to exercise powers of eminent domain, and charter provisions of such corporations to enable them to take advantage of this privilege, grant no power in addition to that accorded by the specific provisions of the general law covering that subject are designed only to give to those particular corporations the same rights under the eminent domain provisions as might be exercised by an individual under the same circumstances, and such statutes are not unconstitutional class legislation. Miller v. Pub. Serv. Co., 129 Colo. 513, 272 P.2d 283 (1954), appeal dismissed, 348 U.S. 923, 75 S. Ct. 338, 99 L. Ed. 724 (1955).

Statutes which prescribe different punishments for same violations committed under the same circumstances by persons in like situations are void as violative of the equal protection of the laws. Vanderhoof v. People, 152 Colo. 147, 380 P.2d 903 (1963).

To sanction two sets of penalties in a traffic ordinance, one applying to those who plead guilty and waive their right to appear and defend in court, the other in the nature of punitive action applicable to those who refuse to plead guilty, amounts to a double standard where a citizen is assured of a definite penalty if he admits his guilt and pays promptly, but faces an uncertain fate if he dares invoke his right to trial. This is an unconstitutional deprivation of equal protection of law. Berger v. City & County of Denver, 142 Colo. 72, 350 P.2d 192 (1960).

Five-year residency requirement in city charter for eligibility for offices of mayor or councilman is unconstitutional as a denial of equal protection. Bird v. City of Colo. Springs, 181 Colo. 141, 507 P.2d 1099 (1973).

Section granting immunity from suit to certain defendants without reasonable basis unconstitutional. Section 13-80-127, which deals with limitations of actions, is unconstitutional because it grants immunity from suit to certain classes of defendants without any reasonable basis for the classification. McClanahan v. Am. Gilsonite Co., 494 F. Supp. 1334 (D. Colo. 1980).

Dram shop liability statute is not special legislation since it is applied uniformly to all alcohol consumers and vendors. Sigman v. Seafood Ltd. P'ship I, 817 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1991); Estate of Stevenson v. Hollywood Bar, 832 P.2d 718 (Colo. 1992).

General assembly's identification and treatment of liquor licensees as a group or class is rationally related to a legitimate state interest since such licensees constitute a readily identifiable group or class because of the nature of the product with which they deal and because members of such class voluntarily join and pay fees to retain the authority commensurate with membership in the class. Estate of Stevenson v. Hollywood Bar, 832 P.2d 718 (Colo. 1992).

Statute that permits relocation of district courts in Arapahoe county outside of county seat is not unconstitutional special legislation. City of Littleton v. County Comm'rs, 787 P.2d 158 (Colo. 1990).

Failure to include county roads in waiver of sovereign immunity under § 24-10-106 (1)(d) does not violate this section. Bloomer v. Boulder County Bd. of Comm'rs, 799 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1990).

Three-year statute of limitations in § 33-44-111 of the Ski Safety Act based on reasonable grounds and therefore does not violate this section. Schafer v. Aspen Skiing Corp., 742 F.2d 580 (10th Cir. 1984).

One year statute of limitations in §§ 12-46-112.5 and 12-47-128.5 for claims arising against liquor licensees from the improper sale, service, or provision of fermented malt and alcoholic beverages to minors or intoxicated persons would not create special or local legislation in violation of this section unless basic classification of liquor license itself is itself constitutionally impermissible. Estate of Stevenson v. Hollywood Bar, 832 P.2d 718 (Colo. 1992).

Urban renewal law not local or special legislation. The urban renewal law, §§ 31-25-101 et seq., is a general law uniform in its operation and applies to all similarly situated and therefore is not local or special legislation. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

The Colorado Clean Indoor Air Act, part 2 of article 14 of title 25, exemptions for licensed casinos, bars and restaurants within licensed casinos, and cigar-tobacco bars do not violate this section. Coal. for Equal Rights v. Owens, 458 F. Supp. 2d 1251 (D. Colo. 2006), aff'd sub nom. Coal. for Equal Rights, Inc. v. Ritter, 517 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. 2008).

Section 40-3-106 (4) does not violate the provisions of this section prohibiting special legislation even though the statute exempts municipally-owned fixed public utilities and privately-owned nonfixed public utilities from its coverage. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n,

Application of §§ 40-9.5-201 to 40-9.5-207 which set forth a statutory scheme for compensating a cooperative electric association whose service territory is taken by a municipality does not violate this section. Such sections do not violate this section even though the statutes include a scheme for compensating a publicly-owned utility annexed by a municipality but does not provide a method for compensating an investor-owned utility so annexed. Municipality challenging the constitutionality of such sections failed to show that the classification has no rational basis. In addition, § 40-9.5-204 applies uniformly to any cooperative annexed by a municipality. Poudre Valley Rural Elec. v. Loveland, 807 P.2d 547 (Colo. 1991).

Natural surface stream legislation statutes are of general and uniform applicability and do not constitute special legislation. Am. Water Dev., Inc. v. City of Alamosa, 874 P.2d 352 (Colo. 1994).

Act requiring sand and gravel pit owners and operators who excavate pits after 1980 to obtain well permits and augmentation plans while exempting other owners and operators of sand and gravel pits does not constitute special legislation. The classes established by the general assembly are reasonable, are rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest, and reflect appropriate accommodation of various interests in the administration of the state's appropriation system. Central Colo. Water v. Simpson, 877 P.2d 335 (Colo. 1994).

This provision was taken from constitutions of other states, where it had previously received a settled and uniform interpretation. The presumption obtains that this interpretation was known and adopted by the convention at the time this provision was engrafted upon our fundamental law. People v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 6 Colo. 202 (1882).

Section 25a. Eight-hour employment. (1) The general assembly shall provide by law, and shall prescribe suitable penalties for the violation thereof, for a period of employment not to exceed eight (8) hours within any twenty-four (24) hours (except in cases of emergency where life or property is in imminent danger) for persons employed in underground mines or other underground workings, blast furnaces, smelters; and any ore reduction works or other branch of industry or labor that the general assembly may consider injurious or dangerous to health, life or limb.

(2) The provisions of subsection (1) of this section to the contrary notwithstanding, the general assembly may establish whatever exceptions it deems appropriate to the eight-hour workday.

Power to regulate hours of labor nondelegable. Under this provision, as well as under the police power, the general assembly itself must regulate the hours of labor, and cannot delegate such power to either of the other great coordinate departments of government. Burcher v. People, 41 Colo. 495, 93 P. 14 (1907).

Occupation must be declared injurious. In attempting to regulate any of the unnamed branches of industry or labor, the general assembly must first declare that the same is injurious to health; a mere general prohibition of employment in a harmless occupation beyond specified hours is not the equivalent of a declaration that such occupation is injurious. Burcher v. People, 41 Colo. 495, 93 P. 14 (1907).

This section, affecting public rights and essential to public's due protection, is mandatory. People ex rel. Clement v. Spruance, 8 Colo. 307, 6 P. 831 (1885).

And subsequent general assemblies cannot ignore conforming statute. When a law has been duly enacted by one legislative assembly, in conformity with a mandate of the constitution fixing the number and compensation of legislative employees, a subsequent general assembly may not legally ignore such law without modifying or repealing it. People ex rel. Clement v. Spruance, 8 Colo. 307, 6 P. 831 (1885).

Construction of this and following section. This section requires the passage of a law which shall prescribe the "number, duties and compensation of the officers and employees of each house". This provision having been complied with, § 28 of this article, referring to the same classes of employees, prohibits further legislation which will interfere with that enacted under this section. People ex rel. Clement v. Spruance, 8 Colo. 307, 6 P. 831 (1885).

Section 28. Extra compensation to officers, employees, or contractors forbidden. No bill shall be passed giving any extra compensation to any public officer or employee, agent, or contractor after services have been rendered or contract made nor providing for the payment of any claim made against the state without previous authority of law.

ANNOTATION

Appropriation of allowance to official void. The inclusion in the general appropriation bill of a provision for an allowance to the lieutenant-governor for "official or semi-official purposes" is not provided for by law. The effect of it is to increase the allowance, salary or compensation of the lieutenant-governor in violation of law, and the appropriation is void. Leckenby v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 65 Colo. 443, 176 P. 490 (1918).

This section does not apply to one who has ceased to be public official. Bedford v. White, 106 Colo. 439, 106 P.2d 469 (1940).

This section is comprehensive and includes all claims against state, whether the rate of compensation has been prescribed by law or whether in obedience to law it has been fixed by contract. In either case a subsequent promise or agreement to pay a higher rate is void. People ex rel. Clement v. Spruance, 8 Colo. 307, 6 P. 831 (1885); Bedford v. White, 106 Colo. 439, 106 P.2d 469 (1940).

Section 29. Contracts for facilities and supplies. All stationery, printing, paper, and fuel used in the legislative and other departments of government shall be furnished; and the printing and binding and distributing of the laws, journals, department reports, and other printing and binding; and the repairing and furnishing the halls and rooms used for the meeting of the general assembly and its committees, shall be performed under contract, to be given to the lowest responsible bidder, below such maximum price and under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. No member or officer of any department of the government shall be in any way interested in any such contract; and all such contracts shall be subject to the approval of the governor or his designee.

ANNOTATION

This section not merely directory. The provisions of the constitution manifestly intended as salutary checks upon improvident conduct of governmental affairs should not be held as merely directory. Mulnix v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 23 Colo. 71, 46 P. 123 (1896).

Opinions of supreme court not included in "department reports". The publication of the opinions of the supreme court and court of appeals is not the publication of "department reports", within the meaning of this section. Gillette v. Peabody, 19 Colo. App. 356, 75 P. 18 (1904).

And not "other printing and binding". The phrase "and other printing and binding", which follows the provision for the printing of department reports, must be construed to mean other printing and binding of the same kind and character as that enumerated in the section and would not include the reports of the opinions of the appellate courts. All other appropriations shall be made by separate bills, each embracing but one subject.

Purpose of section to guard against improper appropriations of public revenue. This section was adopted not merely to make emphatic the exception found in section 21 of this article. Its special office is to guard against improper appropriations of the public revenue and to impose restrictions upon the manner of making the same, in addition to those found in section 21 of this article. In re House Bill No. 168, 21 Colo. 46, 39 P. 1096 (1895).

"Subject", as employed in this section, is substantially equivalent to "purpose". In re House Bill No. 168, 21 Colo. 46, 39 P. 1096 (1895).

Purpose of appropriation bills is to take money out of state treasury. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

Sole purpose of the general appropriations bill is to meet charges already created against the public funds by affirmative acts of the general assembly. Dodge v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 657 P.2d 969 (Colo. App. 1982).

Scope of general appropriation bill is to provide appropriations such as can be constitutionally included therein for the period of two years only. In re House Bill No. 168, 21 Colo. 46, 39 P. 1096 (1895).

The general appropriation bill can only provide for meeting charges already created against the public funds by affirmative acts of the general assembly. The compensation of lieutenant-governor should first be prescribed by affirmative legislation before it can be included in the general appropriation bill, and there must be a law permitting expenses to be incurred before they can lawfully be paid out from the state treasury. A law must be enacted providing for its allowance before the compensation or expenses of state officials can be included in the general appropriation bill. Leckenby v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 65 Colo. 443, 176 P. 490 (1918).

And not within province of general appropriation bill to enact affirmative laws. The framers of the constitution never contemplated that this bill would be used for the twofold purpose of creating laws and then appropriating money to carry them into effect. Affirmative legislation, as well as special appropriations, are otherwise provided for in the constitution. People ex rel. Clement v. Spruance, 8 Colo. 307, 6 P. 831 (1885); In re House Bill No. 168, 21 Colo. 46, 39 P. 1096 (1895); Anderson v. Lamm, 195 Colo. 437, 579 P.2d 620 (1978).

Hence substantive legislation in appropriation bill is properly vetoed. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

Appropriation is the legislative designation of a certain amount of money as being set apart, allotted, or assigned for a specific purpose. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Legislature has appropriative authority over federal block grants when matching state funds are required and when federal legislation authorizes transfers between block grants. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 738 P.2d 1156 (Colo. 1987).

Federal funds for which the state has broad flexibility in determining how they should be used are subject to the general assembly's plenary power of appropriation. In re Interrogatories on House Bill 04-1098, 88 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2004).

It is essential to the legislative power to raise revenue and appropriate funds that it be able to designate the source of funds to satisfy an appropriation. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Designation of the source of cash fund appropriation does not constitute prohibited substantive legislation in the general appropriation bill. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Long bill headnotes are unconstitutional substantive legislation when they define full-time equivalent; health, life, and dental; personal services; short-term disability; lease purchase; leased space; legal services; operating expenses; vehicle lease payments; multiuse network payments; utilities; capital outlay; and purchase of services from computer center in a manner that supervises the executive's allocation and administration of resources appropriated to it and thereby intrudes on the authority of the executive branch to administer the laws. Colo. Gen. Assembly v. Owens, 136 P.3d 262 (Colo. 2006).

An attempt to create a new office in an appropriation bill, would be void under this section relating to appropriation bills, and section 21 of this article, regarding titles of acts. People ex rel. Fulton v. O'Ryan, 71 Colo. 69, 204 P. 86 (1922).

The general assembly could not constitutionally repeal the aid to needy disabled program under section 26-1-109 (9) (a), and institute an aid to temporarily disabled program, by an appropriations bill and without an independent enabling act. Burciaga v. Shea, 187 Colo. 78, 530 P.2d 508 (1974).

And veto of provisions in appropriations bill which violate separation of powers is proper. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

And veto of appropriation provisions purporting to control expenditure of federal funds is proper where the federal funds were received by an executive department agency for distribution to local governments. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

And veto of appropriation provisions impaired by drafting errors is proper. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

But veto of valid limitations on appropriations is improper. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

Effect of veto of unconstitutional appropriation provisions. Any footnote violating either art. III, Colo. Const., or this section in the 1971 senate appropriation bill no. 436 was void and unenforceable and the governor's act in vetoing was an appropriate act calling attention to the invalid footnote, but such veto was not necessary to invalidate any such footnote. MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

included in general bill. An appropriation for printing, other that than necessary for the ordinary use of the state government, cannot properly be included in the general appropriation bill. Collier & Cleveland Lithographing Co. v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 259, 32 P. 417 (1893).

Section recognizes power of general assembly to make appropriation for public schools. In the sentence structure of this article "for public schools" is a prepositional phrase joined by the correlative conjunction "and" to other similar phrases that set forth various independent purposes for which appropriations may be made. This clearly is a constitutional recognition of power in the general assembly to make an appropriation for the public schools of the state. Wilmore v. Annear, 100 Colo. 106, 65 P.2d 1433 (1937).

Appropriation bill in relation to vocational education, is not vulnerable to objection that more than one subject is included within its title; neither does it transgress the constitutional direction that appropriation bills shall embrace but one subject. Bedford v. People ex rel. Tiemann, 105 Colo. 312, 98 P.2d 474 (1939).

Trial court's order to controller to issue warrant directing treasurer to pay judgment against state for attorney fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988 after general assembly had not appropriated funds was "otherwise authorized by law" for purposes of this section. Duran v. Lamm, 701 P.2d 609 (Colo. App. 1984).

Statute providing for special levy is limited to one subject. In re House Bill 168, 21 Colo. 46, 39 P. 1096 (1895).

Appropriation of other than state money was not contemplated by framers of constitution. In re House, 23 Colo. 87, 46 P. 117 (1896).

Applied in People ex rel. Richardson v. Spruance, 8 Colo. 530, 9 P. 628 (1885); In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896); MacManus v. Love, 179 Colo. 218, 499 P.2d 609 (1972).

Section 33. Disbursement of public money. No moneys in the state treasury shall be disbursed therefrom by the treasurer except upon appropriations made by law, or otherwise authorized by law, and any amount disbursed shall be substantiated by vouchers signed and approved in the manner prescribed by law.

ANNOTATION

The object of this provision is to prohibit the expenditure of public funds at the mere will or caprice of the crown or those having the funds in custody, without direct legislative sanction. People ex rel. Hegwer v. Goodykoontz, 22 Colo. 507, 45 P. 414 (1896).

Purpose of this section is protection of public funds. This section is to prevent the extravagant and improvident payment of moneys belonging to the state and to furnish a ready check on the state treasurer. Institute for Educ. of Mute & Blind v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 98, 31 P. 714

Payment other than by appropriation and warrant void. Under this section, a statute providing for the payment of money out of the state treasury other than by appropriation and warrant is void, and the inhibition applies as well to statutes providing for the disposition and disbursement of state funds before they are covered into the treasury. Institute for Educ. of Mute & Blind v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 98, 31 P. 714 (1892).

No duty devolves on auditor to issue warrant until appropriation made. No matter how just or equitable a claim against the state may be, no duty devolves upon the auditor to issue his warrant for the payment thereof, until an appropriation be made by law for that purpose. Collier & Cleveland Lithographing Co. v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 259, 32 P. 417 (1893).

Standing to sue for violation of section. Where the complaint alleged that the plaintiffs were taxpayers and citizens of the state of Colorado, that public funds were being used to finance nontherapeutic abortions, and that such expenditures were in contravention of this section, plaintiffs had standing to sue. Dodge v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 198 Colo. 379, 600 P.2d 70 (1979).

The plenary power of the legislature over appropriations is the power to set aside a certain sum of money for a specified object. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

"Or otherwise authorized by law" in this section does not accomplish a delegation of fiscal authority to the executive branch that encompasses the power to transfer moneys between appropriations. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

Where the salary of an officer is fixed by statute, together with the time and method of payment, a continuous appropriation has been made, and no further legislative action is necessary to authorize payment. People ex rel. Hegwer v. Goodykoontz, 22 Colo. 507, 45 P. 414 (1896).

Funds received from private corporation were essentially custodial, in that they were required to be used for a purpose approved ultimately by non-state authorities and to be administered in a trusteeship capacity, and were not subject to the legislative appropriation power. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

Federal funds for which the state has broad flexibility in determining how they should be used are subject to the general assembly's plenary power of appropriation. In re Interrogatories on House Bill 04-1098, 88 P.3d 1196 (Colo. 2004).

Budget describing each particular expenditure not required. Colorado's constitution requires neither the general assembly nor the department of social services to prepare or adopt a budget describing each or any particular medical procedure eligible for reimbursement under the Colorado Medical Assistance Act (article 4 of title 26). Dodge v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 657 P.2d 969 (Colo. App. 1982).

Applied in Leckenby v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 65 Colo. 443, 176 P. 490 (1918); Mulnix v. City & County of Denver, 65 Colo. 462, 176 P. 475 (1918); Stong v. Indus. Comm'n, 71 Colo. 133, 204 P. 892 (1922); Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935); Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d (1950).

Section 34. Appropriations to private institutions forbidden. No appropriation shall be made for charitable, industrial, educational or benevolent purposes to any person, corporation or community not under the absolute control of the state, nor to any denominational or sectarian institution or association.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 42.

ANNOTATION

Purpose of phrase "not under the absolute control of the state". The phrase "not under the absolute control of the state" was added specifically to ensure that public entities would not be covered by the provision. In re Colorado State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

"Not under the absolute control of the state", refers only to "corporation or community", for the reason that under the ordinary and usual rule of construction the qualifying words should be held to refer to the first preceding subject to which they can be consistently applied and no sufficient reason appears for requiring the appropriation to be under the absolute control of the state, while there are strong arguments in favor of limiting the beneficiaries to those institutions and associations under state control. In re Relief Bills, 21 Colo. 62, 39 P. 1089 (1895).

This section concerned only with state money. That this article in defining and limiting the powers of the general assembly in the matter of appropriations, had in contemplation the disbursement of state funds only, and their disposition by the state in its corporate capacity, is apparent from an examination of other provisions herein contained, which relate to the subject of revenue. They are concerned strictly with state matters, and the payment of money out of the state treasury. The manner prescribed by section 32 of this article in which appropriations must be made in itself precludes the idea that the appropriation of other than state money was contemplated by the framers of the constitution. In re House, 23 Colo. 87, 46 P. 117 (1896).

And aid extended to institutions only if under absolute control of state. The state cannot, in its sovereign capacity, extend aid for charitable, industrial, educational or benevolent purposes to any person, corporation or community, unless such person, corporation or community is under the absolute control of the state. Hence the appropriation attempted to be authorized by a bill for the agricultural development and relief of settlers in certain counties is forbidden by this section. In re Relief Bills, 21 Colo. 62, 39 P. 1089 (1895).

Although it does not prevent appropriation to pay for property taken by state without compensation. Where private property has been taken by the state without compensation, it is competent for the general assembly to agree with the owner upon the amount which the state shall pay and to make an appropriation for that purpose. The mere fact that the association or institution, for whose benefit the appropriation is made, is or may be sectarian does not make an appropriation for the payment of property, which belonged to the association and which was taken by the state for a public use, one which the constitution inhibits. In re Substitute for Senate Bill No. 83, 21 Colo. 69, 39 P. 1088 (1895).

As payment for public purposes not prohibited. Payments to private persons for a charitable or benevolent purpose are not violative of this section if such payments are for public purpose. Bedford v. White, 106 Colo. 439, 106 P.2d 469 (1940).

This section is subject to a "public purpose" exception which is in some respects similar to the "public purpose" exception to section 2 of article XI, but will not be presumed from the mere passage of a legislative enactment. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Legislation must evince a discrete and particularized public purpose which, when measured against the proscription in this section, preponderates over any individual interests incidentally served by the statutory program. Americans United for Separation of Church & State Fund, Inc. v. State, 648 P.2d 1072 (Colo. 1982); In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Development of new businesses and expansion of existing businesses resulting in substantial and long-term expansion of new employment and provision of direct and indirect benefits to the state aviation system are public purposes which are no less legitimate or particularized than public purposes approved in prior cases. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Statute, on its face, does not violate this section when general assembly's determination of predominantly public purpose is not in bad faith or erroneous. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Proposed appropriation did not violate section. A proposed house bill appropriation to be deposited in a capital reserve fund which secures obligations of the housing finance authority did not violate this section. In re Colorado State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

Educational grant program not appropriation to institution not under state control. An educational grant program, available to students at both public and private institutions, is not an appropriation to an institution not under the absolute control of the state. Americans United for Separation of Church & State Fund, Inc. v. State, 648 P.2d 1072 (Colo. 1982).

Nor to person not under state control. An educational grant program, available to students at both public and private institutions, is not unconstitutional as being aid to a person not under the absolute control of the state. Americans United for Separation of Church & State Fund, Inc. v. State, 648 P.2d 1072 (Colo. 1982).

Applied in People ex rel. Richardson v. Spruance, 8 Colo. 530, 9 P. 628 (1885); Leckenby v. Post Printing & Publishing Co., 65 Colo. 443, 176 P. 490 (1918); Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935); Bedford v. White, 106 Colo. 439, 106 P.2d 469 (1940).

Section 35. Delegation of power. The general assembly shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation or association, any power to make, supervise or interfere with any municipal improvement, money, property or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or perform any municipal function whatever.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Extraterritorial Service of Municipally Owned Water Works in Colorado", see 21 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 56 (1948). For comment, "Water: Statewide or Local Concern? City of Thornton v. Farmers Reservoir & Irrigation Co., 194 Colo. 526, 575 P.2d 382 (1978)", see 56 Den. L.J. 625 (1979).

Design and purpose of this section is to prohibit the delegation to private corporations of the exercise of powers strictly governmental. In re House, 23 Colo. 87, 46 P. 117, 33 L.R.A. 832 (1896).

The purpose of this provision was to prevent any organization being authorized by law to control or interfere with municipal matters. Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924).

The purpose of this constitutional provision is to prevent the intrusion upon a municipality's domain of local self-government. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980); Reg'l Transp. Dist. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

And section to be given broad meaning. In applying this provision, it should be given a broad and reasonable, rather than a technical meaning, so as to accomplish its evident purpose. Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924).

"Municipal", for purposes of this section, refers to counties and therefore the PUC may not regulate counties which are performing the "municipal function" of providing mass transit within county boundaries. City of Durango v. Durango Transp., 807 P.2d 1152 (Colo. 1991).

"Municipal", for purposes of this section, is not limited to cities and towns. Reg'l Transp. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Section protects local self-government functions. The subjects to which the protection of this section extends are such as properly fall within the domain of local self-government. If they are entitled to protection from an agency of the state exercising delegated powers of the kind enumerated, the right thus proposed to be protected would be violated as much by a general commission's doing the mentioned acts as by a special commission's doing the same things. Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924).

The purpose of this provision is to protect the right to local self-government over local services. City of Durango v. Durango Transp., 807 P.2d 1152 (Colo. 1991); Reg'l Transp. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

"Functional approach" is used to determine whether a unit of government is a municipality and a particular service is a municipal service. City of Durango v. Durango Transp., 807 P.2d 1152 (Colo. 1991); Reg'l Transp. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Functional approach to nondelegation issues examines whether the function in question is truly local in the sense that, principally if not exclusively, it affects only those persons residing within the boundaries of the governmental unit in question and whether the political processes make those who perform the function responsive to the electorate within the affected area. Reg'l Transp. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

The distinction between functions implicating the right to local self-goverment over local services and functions affecting matters of concern to citizens beyond the boundaries of the government engaged in the function cannot be made by any bright line rule, it is a matter of degree. Reg'l Transp. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Arbitration provisions in Labor Peace Act, as applied to the Regional Transportation District, do not violate this section. The RTD, though similar to a municipality in structure, was created pursuant to special enabling legislation to solve a single problem transcending the concerns of persons residing within its boundaries. Therefore it does not perform a "municipal function" within the meaning of this section and an exercise of control by officials of state government is appropriate. Reg'l Transp. Dist. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Section 40-3-106 (4) limits only the discretion of the public utilities commission in determining how a privately-owned fixed public utility will be allowed to recover the cost of franchise fees, which is a matter not within the domain of local self-government, and therefore does not fall within the scope of this section. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Where municipal utility refuses to provide a necessary service, private utility may be certificated to provide service within municipal boundaries. This section and article XXV grant the public utilities commission authority to regulate public utilities throughout Colorado, including those that are located within home rule cities, but not municipally owned utilities operating within municipal boundaries. City of Fort Morgan v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 159 P.3d 87 (Colo. 2007).

Delegable vs. nondelegable powers. The general assembly may not delegate the power to make a law, but may delegate power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law as prescribed depends. Olinger v. People, 140 Colo. 397, 344 P.2d 689 (1959).

The general assembly cannot delegate to any other person or body authority to declare what acts shall constitute crimes. Olinger v. People, 140 Colo. 397, 344 P.2d 689 (1959).

The delegations which are proscribed by this section are only those which can be properly classified as the performance of "any municipal function whatever". Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made. Olinger v. People, 140 Colo. 397, 344 P.2d 689 (1959); Bettcher v. State ex rel. Colo. Gen. Hosp., 140 Colo. 428, 344 P.2d 969 (1959).

Power delegated to city cannot be relinquished to private person or corporation. Where the power to license ticket brokers has been conferred by the general assembly upon the city council of a city, that body may not relinquish the delegated power, or any essential part of it, to a private person or corporation or a purely voluntary private association or confer upon any such association power to perform any municipal function whatever. Munson v. City of Colo. Springs, 35 Colo. 506, 84 P. 683 (1906).

Power to set and collect development fees delegated by the general assembly to a special district may not be assigned by the special district to a private party. Such an assignment is an unconstitutional delegation of a legislative function. SDI, Inc. v. Pivotal Parker Commercial, LLC, 2012 COA 168, 292 P.3d 1165.

Public purpose does not render function "municipal". The fact that project financed by revenue bonds is for a "public purpose" does not necessarily make its existence, or its function, municipal in nature. It is the effect of, or the benefits flowing from, the completed project and its operation by private enterprise that fulfills the "public purpose" requirement and not, per se, a county's participation therein. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

RTD is not a municipality and is not performing a municipal function within the meaning of this section and therefore, the nondelegation requirement does not prevent the general assembly from requiring binding interest arbitration. Reg'l Transp. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Section does not prohibit creation of commissions. This section does not deprive the general assembly of power to create special commissions for any purpose deemed necessary, and to delegate to them powers other than those mentioned in this section. The prohibition is not upon the creation of a special commission, private corporation, or association, but upon the delegation thereto of certain enumerated powers. Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924).

"Special commission" refers to some body or association of individuals separate and distinct from the city government; that is, created for different purposes, or else created for some individual or limited object not connected with the general administration of municipal affairs. In re Senate Bill Providing for Bd. of Pub. Works, 12 Colo. 188, 21 P. 481 (1888); Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924); City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982).

Moffat tunnel commission is not "special commission" within the meaning of the prohibition contained in this section. Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922), aff'd, 262 U.S. 710, 43 S. Ct. 694, 67 L. Ed. 1194 (1923).

Nor board of directors of water conservancy district. The board of directors of a water conservancy district is not a "special commission" within the meaning of the appellation of this provision. People ex rel. Setters v. Lee, 72 Colo. 598, 213 P. 583 (1923); People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938).

Nor sanitary district entirely within city. Sanitation district entirely within city for purpose of sewage disposal only and given power to collect ad valorem taxes on property is not a "special commission". City of Aurora v. Aurora San. Dist., 112 Colo. 406, 149 P.2d 662 (1944).

Board of county commissioners is not a "special commission" under this section. City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982).

And special commission may regulate activities outside municipal boundaries. This section does not prohibit a special commission from regulating municipal activities outside the territorial boundaries of the municipality. City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982).

Statutory tax-allocation scheme in urban renewal law not improper delegation of power. The statutory tax-allocation financing scheme provided in the urban renewal law is not an improper delegation of power to the Denver urban renewal authority to supervise or interfere with the levying and collection of taxes. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

Public utilities commission's exercise of powers under § 40-4-106 not prohibited. The construction of and apportionment of costs for viaducts is not such a subject as was intended to fall within the domain of local self-government, and therefore this section (delegation of powers) does not prohibit the public utilities commission's exercise of powers granted it under § 40-4-106. Denver & R. G. W. R. R. v. City & County of Denver, 673 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1983).

Public utilities commission is "special commission" as that term is used in this section. City of Lamar v.

The public utilities commission is a body separate and distinct from the "city government", created for an object "not connected with the general administration of municipal affairs". The framers of the constitution had in mind the possibility that the general assembly might attempt to create some special body to interfere with the management of municipal affairs, and wisely made provision to prevent such action. Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924).

And so lacks jurisdiction over municipal utility. The public utilities commission is without jurisdiction to interfere with the erection and operation of a light and power plant by a municipal corporation. People ex rel. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Loveland, 76 Colo. 188, 230 P. 399 (1924).

The public utilities commission does not have the right to fix rates of a municipally owned utility, and an act conferring such right would be to that extent invalid, as violating this section. Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924); City of Loveland v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 195 Colo. 298, 580 P.2d 381 (1978).

This section expressly forbids control of municipally owned utility rates by a public utility commission. Dalby v. City of Longmont, 81 Colo. 271, 256 P. 310 (1927); City of Loveland v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 195 Colo. 298, 580 P.2d 381 (1978).

By force of this article the general assembly could not, by any law, vest in the public utilities commission or any agency with like powers and duties jurisdiction to interfere with the municipal improvements such as water and sewage facilities acquired by a city. The general assembly, in enacting laws authorizing cities to acquire water works and pertinent facilities, effectively avoided conferring upon the commission any jurisdiction over such acquisition. City of Thornton v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 157 Colo. 188, 402 P.2d 194 (1965); City of Loveland v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 195 Colo. 298, 580 P.2d 381 (1978).

The acquisition by the city of the utility's facilities could not be prevented or interfered with by any agency once the people of the city determined by their vote that the system was to be acquired. City of Thornton v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 157 Colo. 188, 402 P.2d 194 (1965).

But may regulate service outside city boundaries. The public utilities commission's regulation of municipally-owned facilities, in its service to customers outside the city boundaries, is not prohibited by this section. City of Loveland v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 195 Colo. 298, 580 P.2d 381 (1978).

When a municipality in the operation of its own public utility acts in its municipal or governmental, or in its proprietary or quasi-public capacity, or partly in one and partly in the other, and as such furnishes public service to its own citizens and in connection supplies its products to consumers outside of its territorial boundaries, the function it thereby performs in supplying outside consumers is and should be attended with the same conditions and be subject to the same control and supervision that apply to a private public utility owner who furnishes like service. City of Lamar v. Town of Wiley, 80 Colo. 18, 248 P. 1009 (1926).

While this section prohibits state regulation or interference with municipal property of home-rule cities, it does not restrict regulation of facilities outside the home-rule city's territory. City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 517 F. Supp. 155 (D. Colo. 1981), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 695 F. 2d 465 (10th Cir.

1982); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Denver Bd. of Water Comm'rs, 718 P.2d 235 (Colo. 1986).

Municipality's extension of electric service to new customers within annexed area does not constitute a taking without due process of law of a public utility's preexisting right to service a certificated area. Union Rural Elec. Ass'n v. Town of Frederick, 670 P.2d 4 (Colo. 1983).

Municipally owned utilities, not within the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission, are not precluded from providing electric service to new customers within their municipal limits. Union Rural Elec. Ass'n v. Town of Frederick, 670 P.2d 4 (Colo. 1983).

Statutory scheme set forth in §§ 40-9.5-201 to 40-9.5-207 does not violate this section since such sections do not mandate that a public utility transfer all its customers and facilities to a municipality upon a notice of annexation by the municipality. Thus, there may not be a taking under the statutory scheme which would otherwise preclude regulation by the P.U.C. in such area. Section 40-9.5-204, which provides for situations where the municipality can compete with the public utility, does not conflict with this section. Poudre Valley Rural Elec. v. Loveland, 807 P.2d 547 (Colo. 1991).

Authority of public utilities commission over home rule cities. The public utilities commission does not have the authority to direct a home rule city to purchase its wholesale electric power requirements from one rather than another public utility company. K. C. Elec. Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 191 Colo. 96, 550 P.2d 871 (1976).

Denver public works. Charter provisions creating the board of public works of the city and county of Denver did not violate this section. City of Denver v. Iliff, 38 Colo. 357, 89 P. 823 (1906).

For earlier cases holding board of public works created by the general assembly was not a "special commission", but a department of the city government, see In re Senate Bill Providing for Bd. of Pub. Works, 12 Colo. 188, 21 P. 481 (1888); City of Denver v. Londoner, 33 Colo. 104, 80 P. 117 (1905), rev'd on other grounds, 210 U.S. 373, 28 S. Ct. 708, 52 L. Ed. 1103 (1908).

Denver water system. Where the city of Denver acquired a water system for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants with water, the city held such water as was not needed by it for immediate use in its proprietary capacity, and had in it a well-defined property right, and this section withholds from the general assembly all power to dedicate to any commission any supervision of this property right, thus precluding any jurisdiction of the public utilities commission, notwithstanding that the city of Denver supplied its surplus water to the citizens of the city of Englewood. City of Englewood v. City & County of Denver, 123 Colo. 290, 229 P.2d 667 (1951).

Cooperation of governmental bodies in joint undertaking does not constitute an improper delegation of power. Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

Provision of city charter amendment providing for compulsory, binding arbitration of all unresolved municipal-police union labor disputes arising from collective bargaining agreement was unlawful as removing governmental decision-making from aegis of elected representatives, and placing it in the hands of an outside person who had no accountability to the public. Greeley Police Union v. City Council, 191 Colo. 419, 553 P.2d 790 (1976).

Decision to operate a public school is not a "municipal function" that the general assembly may not delegate to the charter school institute.

The functioning of the public schools does not primarily affect only those within the geographic boundaries of a school district. Boulder Valley Sch. Dist. RE-2 v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 217 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2009).

Applied in Donahue v. Morgan, 24 Colo. 389, 50 P. 1038 (1897); Tallon v. Vindicator Consol. Gold Mining Co., 59 Colo. 316, 149 P. 108 (1915); Olinger v. People, 140 Colo. 397, 344 P.2d 689 (1959); Nordstrom v. Hansford, 164 Colo. 398, 435 P.2d 397 (1967).

Section 36. Laws on investment of trust funds. The general assembly shall, from time to time, enact laws prescribing types or classes of investments for the investment of funds held by executors, administrators, guardians, conservators and other trustees, whose power of investment is not set out in the instrument creating the trust.

No obligation or liability of any person, association, or corporation, held or owned by the state, or any municipal corporation therein, shall ever be exchanged, transferred, remitted, released, or postponed or in any way diminished by the general assembly, nor shall such liability or obligation be extinguished except by payment thereof into the proper treasury. This section shall not prohibit the write-off or release of uncollectible accounts as provided by general law.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For comment on Burton v. City & County of Denver appearing below, see 9 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 289 (1937).

Purpose of provision. It is the purpose of this constitutional provision to protect obligations and liabilities owned by municipal corporations against diminution by the general assembly. Authority to create indebtedness is not proscribed. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

General assembly can regulate municipal power to contract. The general assembly can regulate the manner in which a municipal corporation shall exercise its power to contract. Dalby v. City of Longmont, 81 Colo. 271, 256 P. 310 (1927).

No mention is made of taxes in this section, therefore, it is possible the subject is not included. Burton v. City & County of Denver, 99 Colo. 207, 61 P.2d 856, 107 A.L.R. 564 (1936).

But lien for taxes is included. Where the state has acquired a lien for gift taxes upon donor's property, the donor's obligations or liabilities become vested in the state, and cannot be relinquished or released except upon payment of the tax. People ex rel. Hinkley v. Maytag, 121 Colo. 446, 218 P.2d 512 (1950); People ex rel. Dunbar v. Maytag, 129 Colo. 316, 270 P.2d 782 (1954).

The provisions of this section are not violated by § 40-3-106 (4) as this statute does not alter a public utility's obligation to pay franchise fees to a municipality which has granted the public utility a franchise. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

The public highway authority law does not violate this section, because it does not affect any monetary obligations owed by a county involved with a public highway authority. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

Government is not included in general statute of limitation unless it is expressly or by necessary implication included. As a matter of public policy it is necessary to preserve public rights, revenues, and property from injury and loss by the negligence of public officers. Hinshaw v. Dept. of Welfare, 157 Colo. 447, 403 P.2d 206 (1965).

Applied in People ex rel. Seeley v. Hull, 8 Colo. 485, 9 P. 34 (1885); City & County of Denver v. Tax Research Bureau, 101 Colo. 140, 71 P.2d 809 (1937); City & County of Denver v. Armstrong, 105 Colo. 290, 97 P.2d 448 (1939).

Section 39. Orders and resolutions presented to governor. Every order, resolution or vote to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on the question of adjournment, or relating solely to the transaction of business of the two houses, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect, be approved by him, or being disapproved, shall be re-passed by two-thirds of both houses, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a bill.

ANNOTATION

This section and § 1 of art. XIX, Colo. Const., are not in pari materia. The first relates to ordinary legislation, and the last to the calling of a convention for the amendment of the constitution. They are of equal dignity, and neither can be invoked to interfere with the operation of the other. People ex rel. Stewart v. Ramer, 62 Colo. 128, 160 P. 1032 (1916).

Unapproved resolution void. A joint resolution purporting to authorize the publication of the state engineer's report for distribution at the state's expense, not having been presented to the governor for his approval, is not included within any of the exceptions contained in this section, dispensing with the concurrence of the executive, and is inoperative. Henderson v. Collier & Cleveland Lithographing Co., 2 Colo. App. 251, 30 P. 40 (1892), aff'd, 18 Colo. 259, 32 P. 417 (1893).

A legislative resolution authorizing litigation by the general assembly need not be presented to the governor, since it is neither legislation nor legislative in nature. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985); Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 704 P.2d 1371 (Colo. 1985).

Section 40. Bribery and influence in general assembly. If any person elected to either house of the general assembly shall offer or promise to give his vote or influence in favor of or against any measure or proposition pending or proposed to be introduced in the general assembly in consideration or upon condition that any other person elected to the same general assembly will give or will promise or assent to give his vote or influence in favor of or against any other measure or proposition pending or proposed to be introduced in such general assembly, the person making such offer or promise, shall be deemed guilty of solicitation of bribery. If any member of the general assembly shall give his vote or influence for or against any measure or proposition pending in such general assembly, or offer, promise or assent so to do, upon condition that any other member will give or will promise or assent to give his vote or influence in favor of or against any other measure or proposition pending or proposed to be introduced in such general assembly, or in consideration that any other member hath given his vote or influence for or against any other measure or proposition in such general assembly, he shall be deemed guilty of bribery; and any member of the general assembly, or person elected thereto, who shall be guilty of either of such offenses shall be expelled, and shall not be thereafter eligible to the same general assembly; and, on conviction thereof in the civil courts, shall be liable to such further penalty as may be prescribed by law.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Reapportionment, The Courts, and the Voting Rights Act: A Resegregation of the Political Process?", see 56 U. Colo. L. Rev. 1 (1984).

General assembly determines congressional districts. The general assembly retains the power to change congressional districts merely by changing the basis of division. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Goal of redistricting is fair and effective representation. The primary goal of an acceptable congressional redistricting plan should be fair and effective representation of all citizens. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982); Hall v. Moreno, 2012 CO 14, 270 P.3d 961.

Population equality standard is the pre-eminent, if not the sole, criterion on which to adjudge the constitutionality of congressional redistricting plans. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Absence of racial discrimination. The second constitutional criterion used in analyzing redistricting plans is the absence of racial discrimination. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Nonconstitutional criteria for evaluating redistricting plans.

Additional nonconstitutional criteria may be used in evaluating congressional redistricting plans. These criteria can be grouped into three categories: (1) Compactness and contiguity; (2) preservation of county and municipal boundaries; and (3) preservation of communities of interest. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Compactness and contiguity, as criteria for redistricting, were originally designed to represent a restraint on partisan gerrymandering. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

County and municipal boundaries should remain undivided whenever possible, because the sense of community derived from established governmental units tends to foster effective representation. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Concept of "community of interest" applies to congressional redistricting, since formulating a plan without any such consideration would constitute a wholly arbitrary and capricious exercise. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

"Communities of interest" represent distinctive units which share common concerns with respect to one or more identifiable features such as geography, demography, ethnicity, culture, socio-economic status, or trade. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

And community of interest requirements must yield to equality of population. In re Colorado General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

Redistricting plan unconstitutional. The congressional redistricting plan set forth in § 2-1-101 is unconstitutional. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Section 2-1-101 is unconstitutional because it provides for only five congressional districts instead of the six districts mandated by the 1980 apportionment of the House of Representatives. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

For judicially-fashioned redistricting plan, see Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

District court properly exercised jurisdiction over congressional redistricting. Because the general assembly and governor were unable to enact a plan for congressional redistricting, the district court was forced to adopt a plan. Beauprez v. Avalos, 42 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2002).

In an action to adopt a congressional redistricting plan, the secretary of state was the proper defendant because she was required to implement the court-ordered redistricting plan. Beauprez v. Avalos, 42 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2002).

A redistricting controversy is ripe when a court lacks assurance that a redistricting plan will be enacted in time for an upcoming election. District court waited to announce its decision until after the general assembly had another chance to enact its own plan. Beauprez v. Avalos, 42 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2002); Hall v. Moreno, 2012 CO 14, 270 P.3d 961.

Objection to court-adopted congressional redistricting plan must be denied when objector cannot establish first prong of the Thornburg v. Gingles test that the minority group is sufficiently large and geographically compact to constitute a numerical majority in the district. Beauprez v. Avalos, 42 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2002).

The satisfaction of the factors enumerated in article V, § 47, is not required in the adoption of a congressional redistricting plan. Beauprez v. Avalos, 42 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2002).

Court was not required to adopt a plan that the governor would have approved. When no redistricting plan is enacted through the legislative process, the district court may accord the testimony of the governor whatever evidentiary weight it saw fit. Beauprez v. Avalos, 42 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2002).

Once a general election to elect representatives to congress has already been conducted pursuant to a valid redistricting plan, the general assembly has no authority to enact a congressional redistricting bill, because the plain language of the constitution must be construed to require the general assembly to act, if at all, after the federal census but before the ensuing general election, and a valid judicially adopted redistricting plan is not an interim measure but rather the fulfillment of Colorado's federal redistricting obligations. If the second sentence in this section did not place a time constraint upon the general assembly's authority to redistrict, then all that would remain of this sentence would be a directive for the general assembly to divide the state into single-member districts, exactly what the first sentence already requires. Hence, Senate Bill 03-352 is unconstitutional, and subsequent congressional elections must be held pursuant to the judicial plan whose adoption was affirmed in Beauprez v. Avalos, 42 P.3d 642 (Colo. 2002). People ex rel. Salazar v. Davidson, 79 P.3d 1221 (Colo. 2003), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 1093, 124 S. Ct. 2228, 159 L. Ed. 2d 260 (2004).

Section 45. General assembly. The general assembly shall consist of not more than thirty-five members of the senate and of not more than sixty-five members of the house of representatives, one to be elected from each senatorial and each representative district, respectively.

Historical background of and cases construing "Amendment No. 7"

"Amendment No. 7" consists of the constitutional provisions of sections 45 to 48 of article V, as amended, November 6, 1962. Prior to this date sections 45 to 47 of article V read as follows:

> Section 45. Census. The general assembly shall provide by law for an enumeration of the inhabitants of the state, in the year of our Lord 1885, and every tenth year thereafter; and at the session next following such enumeration, and also at the session next following an enumeration made by the authority of the United States, shall revise and adjust the apportionment for senators and representatives, on the basis of such enumeration according to ratios to be fixed by law.

Section 46. Number of members of general assembly. The senate shall consist of not more than thirty-five and the house of not more than sixty-five members. (As amended November 7, 1950).

Section 47. Senatorial and representative districts. Senatorial and representative districts may be altered from time to time, as public convenience may require. When a senatorial or representative district shall be composed of two or more counties, they shall be contiguous, and the district as compact as may be. No county shall be divided in the formation of a senatorial or representative district.

Cases construing "Amendment No. 7"

The case of Lisco v. McNichols, 208 F. Supp. 471 (D. Colo. 1962) was the forerunner of apportionment cases. While "Amendment No. 7" was not involved, the constitutionality of apportionment statutes (sections 63-1-2, 63-1-3 and 63-1-6, CRS 53, since repealed), providing for the number of senators and representatives and fixing for their apportionment, was questioned on the basis such apportionment was disproportionate and give unequal voting rights. The court decided that because of the imminence of the 1962 elections and because two proposed constitutional amendments (no. 7 and no. 8) concerning apportionment were on the ballot to be voted on in the 1962 election they would refrain from acting and the case was continued.

The question next arose in the case of Lisco v. Love, 219 F. Supp. 922 (D. Colo. 1963). In the 1962 election "Amendment No. 8" was rejected and "Amendment No. 7", amending sections 45, 46, 47 and 48 of article V of the constitution was approved. The question before the court under this case was whether apportionment of the senate under "Amendment No. 7" was valid. The court held the apportionment comported with the equal protection clause of the U.S. Constitution and dismissed the case.

This decision was appealed in Lucas v. Forty-fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 13 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964), wherein the U.S. supreme court reversed the district court and held such apportionment did not comport to the equal protection clause and remanded the case for further proceedings.

Further proceedings were had in the case of Lucas v. Forty-fourth Gen. Ass'y, 232 F. Supp. 797 (D. Colo. 1964). At this hearing the district court held that "Amendment No. 7" was not severable and therefore failed in toto and subdistricting was not prohibited by section 47 of article V. Furthermore, the imminence of the 1964 election did not require utilization of the apportionment provisions of the invalid "Amendment No. 7" as there was sufficient time for the state to take action to effectuate the U.S. supreme court decision. The matter was set over pending such state action.

Following this hearing the Governor called a special session and as a result an apportionment bill (Senate Bill No. 1, L. 64, 2nd Ex. Sess., pp. 27-37) was enacted. This Senate Bill No. 1 was submitted to the district court which approved it but retained jurisdiction.

The decision was appealed to the U.S. supreme court in the case of Forty-fourth Gen. Ass'y v. Lucas, 379 U.S. 693, 85 S. Ct. 715, 13 L. Ed. 2d 699 (1964). The supreme court affirmed all decisions of the federal court relating to federal questions but vacated the decision as to all other questions and remanded the case, leaving open to the district court the question of severability of "Amendment No. 7".

Before the decision on this appeal was handed down there was a supervening case in the state court, White v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 291, 394 P.2d 333 (1964), wherein the constitutionality of that portion of section 47 of article V dealing with subdistricting was questioned. The supreme court held the subdistricting provision was a state question in spite of retained jurisdiction of the federal district court and determined the subdistricting provision was invalid but in view of the imminence of the 1964 election, stayed effect of its judgment until the convening of the 1965 session of the legislature.

The Forty-fifth General Assembly introduced an apportionment bill (House Bill No. 1438, later postponed). During its progress through the House interrogatories were submitted to the state supreme court requesting an opinion on the severability of "Amendment No. 7". The court held in In re Interrogatories, 157 Colo. 76, 400 P.2d 931 (1965), that such amendment was not severable and the whole "Amendment No. 7" was invalid and void.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "The Lucas Case and the Reapportionment of State Legislatures", see 37 U. Colo. L. Rev. 433 (1965).

This section is constitutional mandate on general assembly to divide state into senatorial and representative districts. In re Interrogatory of House of Representatives, 177 Colo. 215, 493 P.2d 346 (1972).

Both legislative houses must be apportioned by population. The equal protection clause requires that seats in both houses of the Colorado general assembly must be apportioned substantially on a population basis in order to comport with federal constitutional requisites. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

Paramount criterion is equality of population. The paramount criterion for testing the constitutional sufficiency of a reapportionment plan is substantial equality of population among the senate districts and among the house districts as required by this section. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

Five percent deviation test means that the sum of (a) the percent by which the largest district's population exceeds that of the ideal district and (b) the percent by which the smallest district's population falls short of the population of the ideal district, must be less than five percent. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

But some discretion must be allowed general assembly in carrying out its constitutional duty of reapportionment. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972).

And addition to or deletion from particular district is legislative decision to be upheld provided a constitutional violation is not shown. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972).

Even apportionment plan approved by referendum subject to constitutional requirements. The fact that an apportionment plan was approved by the electorate by a popular referendum is without federal constitutional significance, if the scheme adopted fails to statisfy the basic requirements of the equal protection clause, and passage by popular referendum is insufficient to sustain its constitutionality or to induce a court of equity to refuse to act. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

strict population basis, so long as rationally justifiable, may be utilized to balance a slight overrepresentation of a particular area in one house with a minor underrepresentation of that area in the other house. But, on the other hand, disparities from population-based representation, though minor, may be cumulative instead of offsetting where the same areas are disadvantaged in both houses of a state general assembly, and may therefore render the apportionment scheme at least constitutionally suspect. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

Prima facie discrimination rebuts presumption of constitutionality of apportionment statute. Where unchallenged population statistics presented by plaintiffs showed disparities in representation of sufficient magnitude to make out a prima facie case of invidious discrimination, which rebuts the presumption of statutory constitutionality, the defendants were obliged to show that there exists some rational basis for these disparities. Lisco v. McNichols, 208 F. Supp. 471 (D. Colo. 1962).

County annexation prohibited except when necessary to meet equal population requirement. The constitution expressly prohibits a part of one county being added to all or part of another county except when necessary to meet the equal population requirements of this section. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972). See Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Amendment with most votes prevails. In order to carry out the meaning and purpose of section 1 of this article, if inconsistent amendments are submitted to the voters, the one which received the most votes must prevail. That, in the view of the supreme court, is what the "republican" form of government means with respect to the right of the people to amend the constitution. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate Concerning House Bill 1078, 189 Colo. 1, 536 P.2d 308 (1975).

For history of reapportionment in Colorado, see Lisco v. Love, 219 F. Supp. 922 (D. Colo. 1963), rev'd sub nom. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1472, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

Section 47. Composition of districts. (1) Each district shall be as compact in area as possible and the aggregate linear distance of all district boundaries shall be as short as possible. Each district shall consist of contiguous whole general election precincts. Districts of the same house shall not overlap.

(2) Except when necessary to meet the equal population requirements of section 46, no part of one county shall be added to all or part of another county in forming districts. Within counties whose territory is contained in more than one district of the same house, the number of cities and towns whose territory is contained in more than one district of the same house shall be as small as possible. When county, city, or town boundaries are changed, adjustments, if any, in legislative districts shall be as prescribed by law.

(3) Consistent with the provisions of this section and section 46 of this article, communities of interest, including ethnic, cultural, economic, trade area, geographic, and demographic factors, shall be preserved within a single district wherever possible.

This section is constitutional mandate on general assembly requiring that periodic reapportionment be accomplished in accordance with definite, clear cut, and fully understandable standards. In re Interrogatory of House of Representatives, 177 Colo. 215, 493 P.2d 346 (1972).

This section provides means by which general assembly may achieve equal population requirements of section 46 of this article. In re Interrogatory of House of Representatives, 177 Colo. 215, 493 P.2d 346 (1972).

Prime requisites in establishing district boundaries are compactness and contiguity. In re Interrogatory of House of Representatives, 177 Colo. 215, 493 P.2d 346 (1972).

"Compactness", as used in the constitutional sense relating to reapportionment, concerns a geographic area whose boundaries are as nearly equidistant as possible from the geographic center of the area being considered, allowing for variances caused by population density and distribution, census enumeration districts, and reasonable variations necessitated by natural boundaries and by county lines. Acker v. Love, 178 Colo. 175, 496 P.2d 75 (1972); In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Compactness concerns a geographic area whose boundaries are as nearly equidistant as possible from the geographic center. Allen v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 178 Colo. 354, 497 P.2d 1026 (1972).

Plan not meeting compactness requirement unconstitutional. Where a reapportionment plan's districts are not as compact as possible, nor does the plan preserve communities of interest wherever possible, it violates the clear constitutional criteria of subsections (1) and (3). In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Purpose of compactness and contiguity. Compactness and contiguity, as criteria for redistricting, were originally designed to represent a restraint on gerrymandering. Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Term "compact" in section not distinguished from same term in § 30-10-306. There is no reason to distinguish between "compact" in this section and the same term in § 30-10-306, concerning commissioner districts. Allen v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 178 Colo. 354, 497 P.2d 1026 (1972).

No constitutional requirement of compactness for precincts for selecting delegates to party conventions. Although the constitution mandates that senatorial and representative districts be as compact in area as possible, there is no similar constitutional requirement which prevents precincts recently completed by the county commissioners and election commissioners from being used for the purpose of selecting delegates to the party convention processes, for neither the delegates nor the time of their selection for such conventions need be the same as in the assembly processes for the selection of senators and representatives. Acker v. Love, 178 Colo. 175, 496 P.2d 75 (1972).

However, restrictions against the splitting of cities take precedence over the "compactness" concerns of paragraph (1) of this section. In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

And community of interest requirements set forth in paragraph (3) are subordinate to the compactness requirements of paragraph (1) of this section. In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

And community of interest requirements must yield to equality of population. In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

One method of measurement of compactness involves comparing each district's perimeter to its area. A smaller perimeter/area ratio indicates compactness. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Political considerations not to outweigh constitutional criteria. Although reapportionment is not without political considerations, these considerations are not among the constitutional criteria, and the commission may not allow them to outweigh the constitutional criteria. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

While it is not improper for the reapportionment commission to attempt to resolve political conflicts engendered by the supreme court's disapproval of the original plan, problems created by partisan politics cannot justify an apportionment which does not otherwise pass constitutional muster. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Function of supreme court to test constitutionality of reapportionment acts. Although the constitution of Colorado delegates to the general assembly the power and authority to create legislative districts, subject only to state and federal constitutional limitations, the supreme court's function is to test the constitutionality of proposed reapportionment acts before it by the applicable provisions of the constitution. Acker v. Love, 178 Colo. 175, 496 P.2d 75 (1972).

But some discretion must be allowed general assembly in carrying out its constitutional duty of reapportionment. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972).

And addition to or deletion from particular district is legislative decision to be upheld provided a constitutional violation is not shown. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972).

Preservation of county lines is necessary consideration in the determination of variations from the ideal in compactness. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972).

Subsection (2) criteria of preserving county lines and avoiding splitting of municipalities takes precedence over criteria of compactness and preservation of communities of interest. In re Reapportionment of Gen. Assembly, __ P.3d __ (Colo. 2011).

In redistricting the general assembly, the reapportionment commission's actions include: (1) Determining the ideal population for senate and house districts; (2) identifying those counties that qualify for whole senate or house districts based upon their population; and (3) preserving to those counties their number of whole districts throughout the process unless this is not possible. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 45 P.3d 1237 (Colo. 2002).

Plan adopted by the reapportionment commission does not comply with constitutional criteria because: (1) The plan denies whole senate districts to Boulder, Douglas, Jefferson, and Pueblo counties to which they qualify based upon the 2000 census population data and the population of an ideal district; and (2) the commission has not advanced an adequate explanation for the division of Adams, Arapahoe, and Mesa counties and the cities of Boulder and Pueblo between senate districts. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 45 P.3d 1237 (Colo. 2002).

The readopted plan satisfies the six constitutional criteria. The commission has provided an adequate factual showing that less drastic alternatives could not have satisfied the equal population requirement. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 46 P.3d 1083 (Colo. 2002).

When county annexation allowed. The constitution expressly prohibits a part of one county being added to all or part of another county except when necessary to meet the equal population requirements of section 46 of this article. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972). See Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

To include enclaves in district gives the appearance of defiance to the requirement of compactness, and more important is in direct violation of the constitutional requirement that the districts shall be contiguous whole precincts. In re Interrogatory of House of Representatives, 177 Colo. 215, 493 P.2d 346 (1972).

Senate redistricting plan held constitutionally compact. In re Interrogatories by Gen. Ass'y, 178 Colo. 311, 497 P.2d 1024 (1972).

Reapportionment bills held unconstitutional for failure to meet constitutional conciseness mandate. Acker v. Love, 178 Colo. 175, 496 P.2d 75 (1972).

Amendment to this section providing that apportionment of senators be same as provided by statute held inseparable and invalid. In re Interrogatories from House of Representatives, 157 Colo. 76, 400 P.2d 931 (1965).

For history of section, see White v. Anderson, 155 Colo. 291, 394 P.2d 333 (1964).

Section 48. Revision and alteration of districts - reapportionment commission. (1) (a) After each federal census of the United States, the senatorial districts and representative districts shall be established, revised, or altered, and the members of the senate and the house of representatives apportioned among them, by a Colorado reapportionment commission consisting of eleven members, to be appointed and having the qualifications as prescribed in this section. Of such members, four shall be appointed by the legislative department, three by the executive department, and four by the judicial department of the state.

(b) The four legislative members shall be the speaker of the house of representatives, the minority leader of the house of representatives, and the majority and minority leaders of the senate, or the designee of any such officer to serve in his or her stead, which acceptance of service or designation shall be made no later than April 15 of the year following that in which the federal census is taken. The three executive members shall be appointed by the governor between April 15 and April 25 of such year, and the four judicial members shall be appointed by the chief justice of the Colorado supreme court between April 25 and May 5 of such year.

(c) Commission members shall be qualified electors of the state of Colorado. No more than four commission members shall be members of the general assembly. No more than six commission members shall be affiliated with the same political party. No more than four commission members shall be residents of the same congressional district, and each congressional district shall have at least one resident as a commission member. At least one commission member shall reside west of the continental divide.

(d) Any vacancy created by the death or resignation of a member, or otherwise, shall be filled by the respective appointing authority. Members of the commission shall hold office until their reapportionment and redistricting plan is implemented. No later than May 15 of the year of their appointment, the governor shall convene the commission and appoint a temporary chairman who shall preside until the commission elects its own officers.

(e) Within one hundred thirteen days after the commission has been convened or the necessary census data are available, whichever is later, the commission shall publish a preliminary plan for reapportionment of the members of the general assembly and shall hold public hearings thereon in several places throughout the state within forty-five days after the date of such publication. No later than one hundred twenty-three days prior to the date established in statute for precinct caucuses in the second year following the year in which the census was taken or, if the election laws do not provide for precinct caucuses, no later than one hundred twenty-three days prior to the date established in statute for the event commencing the candidate selection process in such year, the commission shall finalize its plan and submit the same to the Colorado supreme court for review and determination as to compliance with sections 46 and 47 of this article. Such review and determination shall take precedence over other matters before the court. The supreme court shall adopt rules for such proceedings and for the production and presentation of supportive evidence for such plan. Any legal arguments or evidence concerning such plan shall be submitted to the supreme court pursuant to the schedule established by the court; except that the final submission must be made no later than ninety days prior to the date established in statute for precinct caucuses in the second year following the year in which the census was taken or, if the election laws do not provide for precinct caucuses, no later than ninety days prior to the date established in statute for the event commencing the candidate selection process in such year. The supreme court shall either approve the plan or return the plan and the court's reasons for disapproval to the commission. If the plan is returned, the commission shall revise and modify it to conform to the court's requirements and resubmit the plan to the court within the time period specified by the court. The supreme court shall approve a plan for the redrawing of the districts of the members of the general assembly by a date that will allow sufficient time for such plan to be filed with the secretary of state no later than fifty-five days prior to the date established in statute for precinct caucuses in the second year following the year in which the census was taken or, if the election laws do not provide for precinct caucuses, no later than fifty-five days prior to the date established in statute for the event commencing the candidate selection process in such year. The court shall order that such plan be filed with the secretary of state no later than such date. The commission shall keep a public record of all the proceedings of the commission and shall be responsible for the publication and distribution of copies of each plan.

(f) The general assembly shall appropriate sufficient funds for the compensation and payment of the expenses of the commission members and any staff employed by it. The commission shall have access to statistical information compiled by the state or its political subdivisions and necessary for its reapportionment duties.

Supreme court's review rule limited. The role of the supreme court in the review proceeding is a narrow one: To measure the proposed reapportionment plan against the constitutional standards. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982); In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

Accordingly, request for technical changes in boundaries contained in the final plan fall outside the scope of court's review. In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

And choice among plans is for commission. The choice among alternative plans, each consistent with constitutional requirements, is for the reapportionment commission and not the supreme court. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982); In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

In redistricting the general assembly, the reapportionment commission's actions include: (1) Determining the ideal population for senate and house districts; (2) identifying those counties that qualify for whole senate or house districts based upon their population; and (3) preserving to those counties their number of whole districts throughout the process unless this is not possible. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 45 P.3d 1237 (Colo. 2002).

Plan adopted by the reapportionment commission does not comply with constitutional criteria because: (1) It is not sufficiently attentive to county boundaries to meet the requirement of section 47 (2); and (2) it is not accompanied by an adequate factual showing that less drastic alternatives could not have satisfied the equal population requirement of the Colorado Constitution. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 45 P.3d 1237 (Colo. 2002); In re Reapportionment of Gen. Assembly, __ P.3d __ (Colo. 2011).

Division of counties on claimed basis of need to comply with section 2 of the Voting Rights Act was not justified where the reapportionment commission lacked information from which its expert could opine on any potential section 2 violation in the counties. In re Reapportionment of Gen. Assembly, __ P.3d __ (Colo. 2011).

Voting Rights Act applicable to state reapportionment and redistricting plans. Accordingly, review of final plan for conformity with section 2 of the Voting Rights Act proper under this section. Such review is strictly circumscribed by the narrow scope of the proceedings, the presumption of good faith and validity accorded to the reapportionment commission, the nature of the evidentiary record, and the restricted ability of the court to act as a fact finder when material facts are genuinely disputed. In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

Final plan for reapportionment must be consistent with six parameters in the following hierarchy from most to least important: (1) The fourteenth amendment equal protection clause and the fifteenth amendment; (2) section 2 of the Voting Rights Act; (3) article V, section 46 of the Colorado Constitution (equality of population of districts in each house); (4) article V, section 47 (2) of the Colorado Constitution (districts not to cross county lines except to meet section 46 requirements and the number of cities and towns contained in more than one district minimized); (5) article V, section 47 (1) of the Colorado Constitution (each district to be as compact as possible and to consist of contiguous whole general election precincts); and (6) article V, section 47 (3) of the Colorado Constitution (preservation of communities of interest within a district). In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 45 P.3d 1237 (Colo. 2002); In re Reapportionment of Gen. Assembly, __ P.3d __ (Colo. 2011).

The commission may not apply the lesser criteria over the greater criteria, but it may use the lesser criteria after satisfying the greater criteria. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 45 P.3d 1237 (Colo. 2002).

The readopted plan satisfies the six constitutional criteria. The commission has provided an adequate factual showing that less drastic alternatives could not have satisfied the equal population requirement. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 46 P.3d 1083 (Colo. 2002).

Final reapportionment plan would not be rejected based on claim that plan is in violation of section 2 of the Voting Rights Act where facts material to such claim are in genuine dispute, where it appears from the record that reapportionment commission made a good faith effort to resolve the disputed facts, and where the correct legal standard has been applied by the commission. In re Colo. General Assembly, 828 P.2d 185 (Colo. 1992).

Reapportionment leaving district without resident senator until 1985 unconstitutional. Drawing boundaries of two senatorial districts so that one district encompasses the residences of two incumbent state senators while no state senator resides in the other, and setting the senatorial election for the first district for 1982 and for the other district for 1984, with the result that no senator will reside in the latter district until 1985, is a violation of constitutional guarantees of legislative representation. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

And reapportionment nullifying recall power unconstitutional. A reapportionment plan which virtually nullifies the power of recall cannot be constitutionally sanctioned. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

But six-year delay in senatorial election not unconstitutional. Although reapportionment and election scheduling should preserve wherever possible the opportunity of all citizens to vote for a state senator every four years, the complexities of the reapportionment process may result occasionally in a six-year delay of the opportunity of some persons to vote for a senator. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

Procedure upon disapproval of revised plan. Subsection (1)(e) does not provide the supreme court with direction if the court disapproves the commission's revised plan. Because the constitution does not require the court to return the plan at this stage in the proceedings for the commission to consider various remedies, and because the constitution requires that the reapportionment plan be filed with the secretary of state for implementation no later than March 15, 1982, the court now mandates what it had earlier described as the preferable solution. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 209 (Colo. 1982).

Original jurisdiction of supreme court. Failure of the general assembly to reapportion following the 1960 federal census, allegedly to the injury of petitioners and other citizens, are matters which the parties are entitled to call to the attention of the supreme court and of which the supreme court has original jurisdiction. In re Legislative Reapportionment, 150 Colo. 380, 374 P.2d 66 (1962) (decided under §45 of this article as it stood prior to the 1966 amendment).

Purpose of publication of the preliminary plan is to make the public aware of the plan and to encourage comment to the reapportionment commission about it. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

No method of publication specified. Subsection (1)(e) does not specify any particular method of publication of the preliminary plan. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

"Publish" construed. The word "publish" in subsection (1)(e) has its commonly understood meaning, i.e., "to declare", "to make generally known", "to make public announcement of", "to place before the public", "to make public; to circulate; to make known to people in general". In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

Section 49. Appointment of state auditor - term - qualifications - duties. (1) The general assembly, by a majority vote of the members elected to and serving in each house, shall appoint, without regard to political affiliation, a state auditor, who shall be a certified public accountant licensed to practice in this state, to serve for a term of five years and until his successor is appointed and qualified. Except as provided by law, he shall be ineligible for appointment to any other public office in this state from which compensation is derived while serving as state auditor. He may be removed for cause at any time by a two-thirds vote of the members elected to and serving in each house.

(2) It shall be the duty of the state auditor to conduct post audits of all financial transactions and accounts kept by or for all departments, offices, agencies, and institutions of the state government, including educational institutions notwithstanding the provisions of section 14 of article IX of this constitution, and to perform similar or related duties with respect to such political subdivisions of the state as shall from time to time be required of him by law.

(3) Not more than three members of the staff of the state auditor shall be exempt from the personnel system of this state.

Section 50. Public funding of abortion forbidden. No public funds shall be used by the State of Colorado, its agencies or political subdivisions to pay or otherwise reimburse, either directly or indirectly, any person, agency or facility for the performance of any induced abortion, PROVIDED HOWEVER, that the General Assembly, by specific bill, may authorize and appropriate funds to be used for those medical services necessary to prevent the death of either a pregnant woman or her unborn child under circumstances where every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each.

Law reviews. For article, "Abortion in Colorado: If Roe v. Wade is Reversed", see 19 Colo. Law. 807 (1990). For a discussion of Tenth Circuit decisions dealing with questions of health law, see 73 Den. U. L. Rev. 767 (1996).

Scope of the prohibition of the use of public funds to pay for abortions. This section expresses the intention of the people that no induced abortion shall be paid for by public funds unless necessary to prevent the death of the pregnant woman and unless every reasonable effort also has been made to preserve the life of the unborn child. This section also makes clear, however, that medical services other than abortions may be publicly funded when necessary to prevent the death of either the pregnant woman or the unborn child under circumstances where every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each. Urbish v. Lamm, 761 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1988).

Rule promulgated by department of social services which provided that when a pregnant woman's life is endangered, public funds may be used for an abortion of a viable unborn child before term only in circumstances where every reasonable effort has been made to preserve the lives of both the mother and the unborn child is within the scope of the exception to the prohibition on the use of public funds to pay for abortions. In contrast, a rule which allowed the public funding of abortions of unborn children who would die of natural causes at or before birth even if the mother's life was not threatened by carrying the unborn child for a longer period was beyond the scope of the exception. Urbish v. Lamm, 761 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1988).

Where the only evidence presented was that which indicated that an ectopic pregnancy inherently involved life-endangering risks to the mother, a rule which provided that "treatment for" an ectopic pregnancy was not included within definition of abortion is not inconsistent with the provisions of this section. Urbish v. Lamm, 761 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1988).

Statutory authority for rules interpreting the exception to the expenditure of public funds for abortions exists where legislation, found at § 26-4-104.5 (2) and § 26-15-104.5 (2) specifically states that "if every reasonable effort has been made to preserve the lives of a pregnant woman and her unborn child, then public funds may be used pursuant to this section to pay or reimburse for necessary medical services, not otherwise provided by law". Urbish v. Lamm, 761 P.2d 756 (Colo. 1988).

Colorado's limit on medicaid abortion funding to those instances when the expectant mother's life is at stake violates the requirements of federal law - requirements that Colorado is compelled to follow as a condition of its participation in medicaid. Hern v. Beye, 57 F.3d 906 (10th Cir. 1995).

Colorado's medicaid program as amended by the abortion funding restriction to those instances when the expectant mother's life is at stake impermissibly discriminates in its coverage of abortions on the basis of a patient's diagnosis and condition. Hern v. Beye, 57 F.3d 906 (10th Cir. 1995).

Colorado's restriction on medicaid funding for abortions to those instances when the expectant mother's life is at stake violates title XIX of the Social Security Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(17) because it is inconsistent with the basic objective of title XIX, that is, to provide qualified individuals with medically necessary care. A state law that categorically denies coverage for a specific, medically necessary procedure except in those rare instances when the patient's life is at stake is not a "reasonable standard[] . . . consistent with the objectives of [the Act]", 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(17), but instead contravenes the purposes of title XIX. Hern v. Beye, 57 F.3d 906 (10th Cir. 1995).

Colorado's abortion funding restriction violates federal medicaid law insofar as it denies funding to medicaid-eligible women seeking abortions to end pregnancies that are the result of rape or incest. So long as Colorado continues to participate in medicaid, the state is enjoined from denying medicaid funding for abortions to qualified women whose pregnancies are the result of rape or incest. Hern v. Beye, 57 F.3d 906 (10th Cir. 1995).

Plaintiff lacked taxpayer standing to sue to enforce this section when it was undisputed that the only funds at issue were federal funds that the state held as custodial funds. There was no nexus between a plaintiff's status as a state taxpayer and the challenged government action when the action involved the expenditure of federal funds only. Hotaling v. Hickenlooper, __ P.3d __ (Colo. App. 2011).

This article establishes judicial department of state, designates sundry courts in which the judicial power shall be vested, and gives to them certain jurisdiction and diverse powers. Union Pac. Ry. v. Bowler, 4 Colo. App. 25, 34 P. 940 (1893).

And fixes territorial limits in which courts shall transact business. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

The supremacy of supreme court "is to be found, not in the extent of its jurisdiction, or the amount of its business, but in the paramount force and authority of its adjudications,--a force acting directly in controlling, without being controlled by, other tribunals,--an authority operating indirectly, from the respect and deference due to the highest tribunal known to the constitution and the laws". People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

"Courts", in the constitutional sense, are the tribunals established for the purpose of administering justice. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

This section clearly recognizes two kinds of courts, viz.: First, those established by and expressly enumerated in the constitution itself; and second, such other courts as the general assembly may at its pleasure from time to time create. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

This section does not interfere with statutes prescribing mode and manner for performing judicial acts. This section is a usual provision of state constitutions, and has not been held to interfere with statutory regulations prescribing the mode, manner and time for the performance of judicial acts, and the entry of judgments. Terpening v. Holton, 9 Colo. 306, 12 P. 189 (1886).

A citizen has no natural or inalienable right to hearing in supreme court. If the right to such a hearing exists, it must be deduced from some constitutional guaranty. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

Control of practice of law is judicial function. Questions as to issuing and revoking of licenses to practice law and the terms and conditions thereof, determining what acts do or do not constitute the practice of law, punishments for unlicensed practices, methods to prevent the unlawful practices of law and all other matters pertaining thereto are judicial functions and fall within the powers and duties of the judicial branch of the government made up of our constitutionally created courts, the supreme court, district courts and county courts. Conway-Bogue Realty Inv. Co. v. Denver Bar Ass'n, 135 Colo. 398, 312 P.2d 998 (1957).

This article grants the Colorado supreme court jurisdiction to regulate and control the practice of law in Colorado. Unauthorized Practice of Law Comm. v. Grimes, 654 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1982).

Nothing in this article signifies that officers therein named, or for which provision is therein made, are county officers. The article covers the subject of the judicial power of the state, creates its courts, or makes provision therefor, and does not purport to relate to either counties or county officers. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

Although judiciary has exclusive authority to impose sentences, such sentences must be within the limits determined by the General Assembly which has the exclusive authority to define crimes and impose punishment. People v. Schwartz, 823 P.2d 1386 (Colo. App. 1991).

Section as basis for jurisdiction. People ex rel. Cruz v. Morley, 77 Colo. 25, 234 P. 178 (1925).

Applied in Ross v. Ross, 89 Colo. 536, 5 P.2d 246 (1931); United States Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. McClelland, 95 Colo. 292, 36 P.2d 164 (1934); State v. La Plata River & Cherry Creek Ditch Co., 101 Colo. 368, 73 P.2d 997 (1937); People v. Buckles, 167 Colo. 64, 453 P.2d 404 (1968); People v. McKnight, 41 Colo. App. 372, 588 P.2d 886 (1978).

II. ESTABLISHMENT OF OTHER COURTS.

General assembly is specifically empowered to establish other courts. The general assembly is specifically empowered by the constitution to establish other courts or judicial officers, as long as such other courts or judicial officers are jurisdictionally inferior to the supreme court. Sanders v. District Court, 166 Colo. 455, 444 P.2d 645 (1968).

Subject to certain constitutional limitations. The constitutionally granted power to the general assembly to establish other courts or judicial officers is subject to certain limitations which are themselves embedded in the Colorado constitution. Sanders v. District Court, 166 Colo. 455, 444 P.2d 645 (1968).

An intermediate court, having appellate and final jurisdiction, can be legally created. Such a court may, by legislative enactment, be clothed with appellate jurisdiction in cases remaining within the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court, provided its judgments in such cases are made subject to review by the latter court. In re Constitutionality of Court of Appeals, 15 Colo. 578, 26 P. 214 (1890).

The supreme court is not at liberty to transpose the adverb "only" in section 2 of this article and make the constitution read: "The supreme court only shall have appellate jurisdiction"; while the language as it is written, "shall have appellate jurisdiction only", falls far short of declaring that it shall have such jurisdiction in all cases. This expression operates both as a grant and a limitation; it confers appellate authority, and at the same time forbids the exercise of original jurisdiction, save in the excepted cases; it specifies the kind, not the quantum, of jurisdiction, and is not inconsistent with the lodgment of power in some other court to review finally enumerated classes of cases. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

Thus general assembly had power to create court of appeals. By this section, the general assembly is authorized to create a court of review, and as there is no express constitutional limitation of the jurisdiction that may be conferred upon such a court thus created, if the act is unconstitutional it must be because the jurisdiction sought to be conferred is by implication prohibited in some degree by other constitutional provisions. People ex rel. Griffith v. Scott, 52 Colo. 59, 120 P. 126 (1911).

And to confer upon such court power to try controversies. Since the constitution authorizes the general assembly to create "other courts", such power necessarily carries with it authority to give the courts created a share in the trial of controversies that would otherwise be disposed of by the tribunals expressly named; moreover, the very words of this section lodge "the judicial power of the state" in the courts that may afterwards be provided by law, as well as in those enumerated by name. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

However, any court established must be inferior to supreme court. Every tribunal established by statute, whether clothed with original or appellate powers, must, like the trial courts expressly named in the constitution, be inferior to the supreme court, subject to its "superintending control", and guided by its decisions upon questions determined in the exercise of its appellate authority. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

No other court can, under the constitution, be given final appellate jurisdiction in cases left by law within the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court. In re Constitutionality of Court of Appeals, 15 Colo. 578, 26 P. 214 (1890).

The judicial power, both appellate and original, lodged by the constitution in the supreme court, cannot be transferred to another court created by the general assembly in any manner so as to make its decisions and opinions final. This jurisdiction is lodged in "a supreme court". Two such courts with like jurisdiction and powers are not contemplated by the constitution. In re Constitutionality of House Bill No. 8, 9 Colo. 623, 21 P. 471 (1886).

If it were within the legislative power to create another court with equal appellate and original power as the supreme court, the bill would still be obnoxious to section 19 of this article, which provides that all laws relating to courts shall be general and uniform. In re Constitutionality of House Bill No. 8, 9 Colo. 623, 21 P. 471 (1886).

General assembly cannot interfere with existence or supremacy of supreme court; nor can that body alter the nature of its jurisdiction and duties. And it follows of course that, without change in the fundamental law, the general assembly cannot create a court of coordinate final jurisdiction. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

This section of constitution authorizes creation of superior court of Denver. Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 417, 8 P. 661 (1885).

Statute creating superior court not repealed by enactment of new section. The statute which established the superior court was never inconsistent with the constitutional provisions that judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, and others. Therefore, the statute was not automatically repealed by enactment of new constitutional provision. People ex rel. Union Trust Co. v. Superior Court, 175 Colo. 391, 488 P.2d 66 (1971).

Office of police judge, with jurisdiction to enforce town ordinances, is authorized by this section. People v. Curley, 5 Colo. 412 (1880); People v. Jobs, 7 Colo. 475, 4 P. 798, reh'g denied, 7 Colo. 589, 4 P. 1124 (1884).

County court judges as judges of municipal and police courts created by home rule cities. The 1962 judicial amendments envisioned that the county court judges could serve not only as judges of the county court but also as judges of municipal and police courts created under powers of home rule cities. Blackman v. County Court, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969).

Justice courts are not constitutional courts and exist under authority and by permission of the legislative branch of the government. United Sec. Corp. v. Pantex Pressing Mach., Inc., 98 Colo. 79, 53 P.2d 653 (1935).

Elimination of words "justices of the peace" did not repeal statute establishing justices of the peace. The elimination of the words "justices of the peace" from the 1912 amendment to this section can in no sense be construed as a repeal, a limitation or restriction of the early statute establishing justices of the peace. Indeed, the amendment may well be said to have had the prior statute in view, as it specifically provides for "such other courts as may be provided by law", after enumerating certain judicial tribunals as constitutional courts. W.H. Courtright Publishing Co. v. Bray, 67 Colo. 588, 189 P. 30 (1920).

Public utilities commission is not a court. It is charged with the performance of certain executive and administrative duties in the performance of which it acts in a quasi-judicial capacity but has no judicial powers within the meaning of that term as used in the constitution. People v. Swena, 88 Colo. 337, 296 P. 271 (1931).

Applied in People ex rel. Heyer v. Juvenile Court, 75 Colo. 493, 226 P. 866 (1924); Abbott v. People, 91 Colo. 510, 16 P.2d 435 (1932).

III. JURISDICTION OF COURTS.

Allocation of jurisdiction is matter for legislative determination. The jurisdiction allocated to the courts created by the general assembly pursuant to constitutional authority is a matter for the general assembly to determine. Denver County Court v. Lee, 165 Colo. 455, 439 P.2d 737 (1968); Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970); South Washington Associates v. Flanagan, 859 P.2d 217 (Colo. 1992).

The constitutional policy seems to have been, not to specify absolutely the extent and boundaries of the jurisdiction of all the courts, but to allow a large legislative discretion, so that the varying demands and the ever-changing necessities of the people may from time to time be adequately provided for. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

General assembly's authority under this section is exclusive. Where parties to an arbitration agreement purported to allow the court of appeals or the supreme court to conduct a substantive review of the arbitration panel's award, contrary to the controlling statutes, clause was void and unenforceable. South Washington Associates v. Flanagan, 859 P.2d 217 (Colo. 1992).

Trial courts have jurisdiction to determine federal constitutional questions, and it is their duty to do so by virtue of par. 2 of art. VI, U.S. Const., which provides that the constitution of the United States and all laws made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land and the judges of every state shall be bound thereby and by § 8 of art. XII, Colo. Const., requiring officers to take an oath to support the constitution of the United States and of the state of Colorado, notwithstanding the provisions of the 1913 amendment to this section which provided that the supreme court should have exclusive jurisdiction to determine such matters. People v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Colo. 90, 198 P. 146 (1921).

And any attempt to take away this jurisdiction is null and void. When a federal constitutional question is raised in any of the trial courts of Colorado the right is given, and the duty is imposed upon those courts, by that instrument itself, to adjudicate and determine it. That right so given can neither be taken away nor that duty abrogated by the state of Colorado, by constitutional provision or otherwise, and any attempt to do so is null and void. Such pretended constitutional inhibition is no part of the constitution of the state of Colorado, and the judge's oath binding him to the support and enforcement of that instrument has no relation to such void provisions. People v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Colo. 90, 198 P. 146 (1921).

A state constitutional provision prohibiting trial courts from passing on constitutional questions takes from a defendant the right of interposing the defense that the act under which he is prosecuted is unconstitutional, and is invalid as violating the "due process of law" clause. People v. Max, 70 Colo. 100, 198 P. 150 (1921).

Provisions providing for review of decisions of supreme court by people are null and void. Decisions of the supreme court upon constitutional questions cannot be reviewed by popular vote of the citizens of Colorado or one of its municipalities, and any pretended constitutional provision of this state assuming to provide such method of review is null and void. Hence, that part of a 1913 amendment to this section providing for the review of decisions of the supreme court by the people is null and void. People v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Colo. 90, 198 P. 146 (1921); People v. Max, 70 Colo. 100, 198 P. 150 (1921).

District courts deprived of plenary power by creation of juvenile courts. By constitutional authority conferred upon the general assembly by this section, district courts were permitted to be deprived of their otherwise plenary power to determine causes of the constitutionally specified character by the creation of juvenile courts in certain counties and the vesting of that jurisdiction in them. People ex rel. Lucke v. County Court, 109 Colo. 447, 126 P.2d 334 (1942).

Exercise of jurisdiction not precluded by absence of statutory or constitutional provision. The absence of a statutory or constitutional provision which specifically designates a forum or spells out standards for decision will not preclude exercise of a court's jurisdiction, even where the subject matter would not have been subject to judicial authority at common law. In re A.W., 637 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1981).

Actual controversy between adverse parties must exist if a court is to sua sponte address the constitutionality of a statute. Juvenile court's ruling that statute was unconstitutional was impermissible exercise of judicial authority since the issue was raised on behalf of unidentified parties that were not before the court on court's own motion in order to create a controversy that it then proceeded to decide. In re Tomlinson, 851 P.2d 170 (Colo. 1993).

IV. DELEGATION OF JUDICIAL POWER.

Judicial power cannot be conferred by consent upon one not clothed therewith in manner designated by law; nor can suitors by consent legalize the effort of such a person to act in place of a judge and perform his official duties. Haverly Invincible Mining Co. v. Howcutt, 6 Colo. 574 (1883).

No authority is given in the constitution, and none could be given by statute, for parties litigant to choose whom they will for the purpose of sitting as a court in the trial of a given cause, and the judge himself cannot cast his "judicial robe upon the shoulders of any man" who might be acceptable to the parties in a particular suit. Haverly Invincible Mining Co. v. Howcutt, 6 Colo. 574 (1883).

And proceedings are not rendered judicial because duties imposed require exercise of discretion. The mere fact that duties are imposed upon officers which require the exercise of judgment and discretion, does not, of itself, render their proceedings conducted in pursuance of their authority, judicial in the sense in which the term is used in the constitution. Am. Sulphur & Mining Co. v. Brennan, 20 Colo. App. 439, 79 P. 750 (1905).

Power to make rules of procedure is right of supreme court. Aside from any common law right, or statutory grant, the power to make rules of procedure is the constitutional right of the Colorado supreme court. Kolkman v. People, 89 Colo. 8, 300 P. 575 (1931).

Under constitution as originally adopted, no part of judicial power of state could be vested in coroner. It is true that this constitution was amended in 1885 so as to permit the general assembly to create new courts, conferring upon that body a large discretion with reference to the jurisdiction that might be given to such courts, but no attempt has since been made to confer judicial power upon coroners in this state. Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Ross-Lewin, 24 Colo. 43, 51 P. 488 (1897).

Applied in Bd. of Comm'rs v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 9 Colo. App. 368, 48 P. 675 (1897); Mervin v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 29 Colo. 169, 67 P. 285 (1901); Ontario Mining Co. v. Indus. Comm'n, 86 Colo. 206, 280 P. 483 (1929); Allen v. Bailey, 91 Colo. 260, 14 P.2d 1087 (1932); Dill v. People, 94 Colo. 230, 29 P.2d 1035 (1934); Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Manley, 99 Colo. 153, 60 P.2d 913 (1936); Local 13, Teamsters v. Perry Truck Lines, 106 Colo. 25, 101 P.2d 436 (1940); In re Water Rights, 181 Colo. 395, 510 P.2d 323 (1973).

SUPREME COURT

Section 2. Appellate jurisdiction. (1) The supreme court, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be coextensive with the state, and shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts, under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law.

(2) Appellate review by the supreme court of every final judgment of the district courts, the probate court of the city and county of Denver, and the juvenile court of the city and county of Denver shall be allowed, and the supreme court shall have such other appellate review as may be provided by law. There shall be no appellate review by the district court of any final judgment of the probate court of the city and county of Denver or of the juvenile court of the city and county of Denver.

"Appellate jurisdiction", as used in this section, relates to the review, by a superior court, of the final judgment, order, or decree of some inferior court. Clark v. Denver & I. R. R., 78 Colo. 48, 239 P. 20 (1925).

"Superintending control" given by this section refers primarily to courts, not to parties or cases; its purpose is to keep the courts themselves "within bounds", and to insure the harmonious working of our judicial system; it was not designed to secure the review of judgments in connection with ordinary appellate jurisdiction; and insofar as the rights of suitors in particular causes may be affected, the effect is incidental purely. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

As a statutory court, the court of appeals does not possess general powers of supervision over lower courts or attorneys appearing therein. Rather, such powers are vested in the supreme court by this section. People v. Bergen, 883 P.2d 532 (Colo. App. 1994).

"Inferior courts", as used in this section, indicate the relative rank and authority of courts. Laizure v. Baker, 91 Colo. 48, 11 P.2d 560 (1932).

Supreme court possesses only jurisdiction that is expressly mentioned or necessarily implied. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by private agreement. Where parties to an arbitration agreement purported to allow the court of appeals or the supreme court to conduct a substantive review of the arbitration panel's award, clause was void and unenforceable. South Washington Assocs. v. Flanagan, 859 P.2d 217 (Colo. 1992).

It cannot expand its own jurisdiction by rule of court. Jurisdiction, as initially spelled out in the constitution, may be expanded by statute, but such is no authority for the supreme court to expand its own jurisdiction by rule of court. People ex rel. City of Aurora v. Smith, 162 Colo. 72, 424 P.2d 772 (1967); Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

The supreme court has authority to adopt rules for the regulation of the business of the courts and the procedure to be followed by litigants in doing that business. Nonetheless, absent constitutional authority, it is equally clear that this court cannot adopt a rule which changes jurisdiction of a court contrary to a provision of a statute. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Original jurisdiction of supreme court cannot be expanded by general assembly beyond the limits expressly set forth in the constitution. People v. Carter, 186 Colo. 391, 527 P.2d 875 (1974).

Supreme court is constituted to be primarily and essentially court of appellate jurisdiction. In re Garvey, 7 Colo. 502, 4 P. 758 (1884); Leppel v. District Court, 33 Colo. 24, 78 P. 682 (1904).

This section undoubtedly defines the principal power and authority which the framers of the constitution intended this tribunal to exercise. As the head of the judicial system of the state, it was eminently appropriate to confine its jurisdiction to a review of causes and proceedings determined by inferior courts, and to a superintending control over such courts. The general intention clearly was to leave with the subordinate courts of the state the first or original jurisdiction of controversies, whether relating to purely private rights or whether involving the consideration of questions pertaining to the public welfare. But, for excellent reasons, it was deemed necessary that this court should, nevertheless, possess a certain limited original jurisdiction. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

By this section and the following, the jurisdiction of this court is limited to appellate, and a general supervisory control over inferior courts, except such original jurisdiction as is thereby specially conferred. Whipple v. Stevenson, 25 Colo. 447, 55 P. 188 (1898).

Under the constitution the principal jurisdiction of the supreme court is first appellate, and second superintending. But there is also conferred upon it a limited original jurisdiction. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

But not exclusively. While this section clothes the supreme court with appellate jurisdiction, such jurisdiction is not exclusive. True, the intent is clear to make this court essentially a court of review; the word "only", coupled with the other words employed, plainly indicates a purpose to render its primary and principal powers appellate; its superintending control over other courts and its limited original jurisdiction, together with its anomalous duty of answering executive and legislative questions, while functions of great importance and value, must be regarded as secondary. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

Appellate review of county court judgments by superior court is subject to ultimate review by supreme court, since any party has the right to petition for a writ of certiorari. People v. Superior Court, 175 Colo. 391, 488 P.2d 66 (1971).

The legislative plan authorizing the superior court to review county court judgments is not in conflict with this section, which provides that the supreme court shall have ultimate appellate review jurisdiction, or § 17 of this article, which specifies that appellate review of county court judgments shall be by the supreme court or the district courts. People v. Superior Court, 175 Colo. 391, 488 P.2d 66 (1971).

Mode of granting review by supreme court has not been prescribed. It can encompass any form of appellate review, including certiorari. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

When it is said that an appellate court is to review the action of a court of original jurisdiction, this refers to the action of any appellate court concerning a case that is before it either on appeal, writ of error, or certiorari. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Certiorari is now, and always has been, a recognized form of appellate review. Indeed, under the common law, the only comparable types of review available were by writ of error, writ of false judgment, or writ of certiorari. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

To the extent that it involves the review of the proceedings of an inferior court, certiorari is an appellate proceeding. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970); Menefee v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 163, 544 P.2d 382 (1976).

Necessity for final judgment for review on writ of error. This section does not secure such review on writ of error as would disregard the rule that writ of error does not lie other than to a final judgment. Julius Hyman & Co. v. Velsicol Corp., 119 Colo. 121, 201 P.2d 380 (1948).

Necessity for superintending control. If the supreme court did not have a general superintending control over all inferior courts, its labors would be speedily ended; litigants would be deprived of their right of review by the higher court, and its opinions and orders would be wholly unenforceable. Greeley & Loveland Irrigation Co. v. Handy Ditch Co., 77 Colo. 487, 240 P. 270 (1925).

Where there was a dispute between two courts, both of which were inferior in jurisdiction to the supreme court, and a judge of one court had in effect "abolished" a judicial office created by the general assembly by declaring unconstitutional the legislation which brought this particular judicial office into being, thus posing a controversy which should be speedily resolved in order that there be as little disruption as possible of the orderly judicial process of the state, the supreme court elected to exercise its power of general superintending control over inferior courts, by resolving the controversy in an original proceeding. Sanders v. District Court, 166 Colo. 455, 444 P.2d 645 (1968).

Duty to keep inferior tribunals within their jurisdiction. In the interest of justice, it is as much the duty of the supreme court, when its superintending control of inferior tribunals is invoked, to keep the tribunals within their jurisdiction, as it is to correct errors of such tribunals exercising proper jurisdiction. Kellner v. District Court, 127 Colo. 320, 256 P.2d 887 (1953).

Trial judges may exercise judicial discretion only according to law, and a trial judge's exercise of discretion is subject to this court's supervisory authority granted by subsection (1) of this section. Spann v. People, 193 Colo. 53, 561 P.2d 1268 (1977).

The trial court has an affirmative obligation to exercise judicial discretion, and that obligation is subject to the state supreme court's supervisory authority granted by subsection (1) of this section. Overturf v. District Court, 198 Colo. 516, 602 P.2d 850 (1979).

Courts to be open to all citizens. One of the duties imposed by subsection (1) of this section is to see that the courts are open to all citizens. People v. Spencer, 185 Colo. 377, 524 P.2d 1084 (1974).

District court cannot transfer cause while it is pending in supreme court. By virtue of this section giving the supreme court a general superintending control over all inferior courts a district court is without jurisdiction to transfer a cause to another judge for hearing while the case is pending in the supreme court. George N. Sparling Coal Co. v. Colo. Pulp & Paper Co., 88 Colo. 523, 299 P. 41 (1931).

Supreme court's rule-making powers include manner of exercising subject matter jurisdiction. The manner in which subject matter jurisdiction is exercised is properly within the scope of the supreme court's rule-making powers vested by subsection (1) of this section. This procedure has been established and is set forth in C.A.R. 50-57. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Statutes pertaining to creation of appellate remedies take precedence over judicial rules of procedure. Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

A litigant cannot, as a matter of right, assert that he will come to supreme court by appeal, for such appeals remain creatures of statute, and, in the absence thereof, do not exist. He cannot claim a vested right to bring his case to this court by writ of error; for while this writ is in most cases a writ of right at the common law, it may by statute, unless the constitution forbids, be limited or abolished altogether. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

Defendant had constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel in filing of petition for rehearing in court of appeals as prerequisite for application for writ of certiorari because, while there is no right to effective assistance of counsel to pursue strictly discretionary appeal, review by petition for writ of certiorari to supreme court is application of right, not discretion. People v. Williams, 736 P.2d 1229 (Colo. App. 1986).

Criminal defendant filing application for certiorari has a constitutional right to effective assistance of counsel for the purpose of preparing and filing such application, since it is an application of right. People v. Valdez, 725 P.2d 29 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 789 P.2d 406 (Colo. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 193, 112 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1990).

Two-pronged test enunciated in Strickland v. Washington (466 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984)) is appropriate to assess adequacy of legal representation in appellate as well as trial settings. Initial inquiry must be whether conduct of the attorney was in fact deficient in light of prevailing standards of appellate practice. If conduct was deficient, the next inquiry must be whether, in view of all the circumstances, the deficient conduct so prejudiced the defendant as to substantially undermine the integrity of the appellate process. People v. Valdez, 725 P.2d 29 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 789 P.2d 406 (Colo. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 193, 112 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1990).

There is not, however, a constitutionally mandated standard that appellate counsel must advise the defendant regarding opportunities for statutory postconviction relief or federal habeas corpus, especially absent evidence that counsel had reason to believe such relief would succeed or that defendant indicated an interest in such efforts. People v. Alexander, 129 P.3d 1051 (Colo. App. 2005).

Attorney's performance found to be patently deficient in a Crim. P. 35 (c) proceeding alleging ineffective assistance of counsel where such attorney failed to file a petition for writ of certiorari in a timely fashion after receiving three extensions of time from supreme court. People v. Valdez, 725 P.2d 29 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 789 P.2d 406 (Colo. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 193, 112 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1990).

Motion for postconviction relief under Crim. P. 35(c) denied where defendant failed to establish that he had suffered prejudice due to patently deficient performance of attorney in handling criminal appeal. People v. Valdez, 725 P.2d 29 (Colo. App. 1986), aff'd, 789 P.2d 406 (Colo. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 871, 111 S. Ct. 193, 112 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1990).

Jenkins, 659 P.2d 690 (Colo. 1983).

Section 3. Original jurisdiction - opinions. The supreme court shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, injunction, and such other original and remedial writs as may be provided by rule of court with authority to hear and determine the same; and each judge of the supreme court shall have like power and authority as to writs of habeas corpus. The supreme court shall give its opinion upon important questions upon solemn occasions when required by the governor, the senate, or the house of representatives; and all such opinions shall be published in connection with the reported decision of said court.

Annotator's note. For other annotations concerning original jurisdiction of supreme court, see C.A.R. 21.

Supreme court is constitutional court with common-law powers. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. News-Times Publishing Co., 35 Colo. 253, 84 P. 912 (1906), writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 205 U.S. 454, 27 S. Ct. 556, 51 L. Ed. 879 (1907).

Constitution confers and defines jurisdiction of supreme court, but it does not "forbid the general assembly from regulating, to some extent, the quantity of its business by reasonably contracting or enlarging the limits of the exercise of such jurisdiction as the exigencies of the public welfare may require". People ex rel. Griffith v. Scott, 52 Colo. 59, 120 P. 126 (1911).

Power of supreme court to issue original writs comes from the constitution. People ex rel. Barnum v. District Court, 74 Colo. 48, 218 P. 912 (1923).

And is not dependent on statute or rules of civil procedure. The supreme court's authority to entertain remedial writs is conferred by the constitution, and is not dependent upon, or governed by the statute or rules of civil procedure on the subject. Leonhart v. District Court, 138 Colo. 1, 329 P.2d 781 (1958); Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

The original jurisdiction conferred upon the supreme court by this section is not dependent upon or governed by either the statutes or the code; but the district courts are governed by the code insofar as it relates to civil actions. People ex rel. Graves v. District Court, 37 Colo. 443, 86 P. 87, 92 P. 958 (1906).

No procedure being prescribed, supreme court may conform to code, or common-law practice in such cases. It is the practice in applications for original writs to permit respondent to set forth his objections either by motion, demurrer or answer, or all of them. People ex rel. Barnum v. District Court, 74 Colo. 48, 218 P. 912 (1923).

This section refers to common-law writs. The remedial writs which the supreme court is authorized to entertain are the common-law writs. Leppel v. District Court, 33 Colo. 24, 78 P. 682 (1904); Lucas v. District Court, 140 Colo. 510, 345 P.2d 1064 (1959).

The writs mentioned in this section, which the supreme court is authorized to issue in the first instance, are the high prerogative writs of the common law. The supreme court alone is authorized to issue them, because it is the highest judicial tribunal in the state, and is vested with exclusive authority to exercise supervisory control over all others. These writs can only be employed in proceedings which involve the sovereignty of the state, its prerogatives of franchises, or the liberty of its citizens. People ex rel. Graves v. District Court, 37 Colo. 443, 86 P. 87, 92 P. 958 (1906).

And may not be abridged or enlarged. It is beyond the power of the general assembly to abridge or enlarge the same. Leppel v. District Court, 33 Colo. 24, 78 P. 682 (1904).

Such writs are to be used for purpose of instituting original causes and not in aid of appellate jurisdiction. It is true that the writ of error is an original writ; and it may possibly be true that it is fairly included within the "other original and remedial writs" which the supreme court is authorized to issue by this section. But the jurisdiction conferred by this section is original, in contradistinction to the appellate authority given by the preceding section; the original writs mentioned are not to be used in connection with or in aid of ordinary appellate jurisdiction, but for the purpose of instituting original causes or proceedings. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

This section confers upon the supreme court the power to issue the writs therein mentioned for jurisdiction, and not in aid of jurisdiction previously specified. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

Writs should be put only to prerogative uses. Some of these writs, including mandamus, have been, in this country, largely shorn of their prerogative character, so far as their general use is concerned; yet in this section they are intended to furnish the supreme court with an equipment powerful for the protection of the sovereign rights and interests of the state at large, and hence possess a leading prerogative feature. The supreme court is clearly of the opinion that original jurisdiction should be here entertained only in cases involving questions publici juris, and that the writs from the supreme court should, in general, be put only to prerogative uses. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

It was clearly intent of framers of constitution to limit original jurisdiction of supreme court to those cases in which the writs thereby contemplated might issue; and unless a given case is of that character that one of such writs may issue, this court is without power to entertain it in the first instance. Whipple v. Stevenson, 25 Colo. 447, 55 P. 188 (1898).

Original jurisdiction conferred by this section is discretionary. Clark v. Denver & I. R. R., 78 Colo. 48, 239 P. 20 (1925); Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Supreme court will not exercise its discretion to take original jurisdiction in a case, merely because the parties do not object thereto. Clark v. Denver & I. R. R., 78 Colo. 48, 239 P. 20 (1925).

It may neither be enlarged nor abridged by general assembly. Clark v. Denver & I. R. R., 78 Colo. 48, 239 P. 20 (1925); Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Hence the attempt to force the supreme court to take original jurisdiction in suits involving the validity of decisions and orders of the public utilities commission is null and void, to say nothing of the further attempt to prescribe for the court rules concerning the hearing and decision of such question. Clark v. Denver & I. R. R., 78 Colo. 48, 239 P. 20 (1925).

Original jurisdiction of supreme court cannot be expanded by the general assembly beyond the limits expressly set forth in the constitution. People v. Carter, 186 Colo. 391, 527 P.2d 875 (1974).

It was conferred to protect sovereignty of state and liberties of its citizens. Original jurisdiction was, by this section conferred upon the supreme court by virtue of the authority to issue the writs mentioned, for the purpose of protecting the sovereignty of the state, its prerogatives and the liberties of its citizens. People ex rel. Miller v. Tool, 35 Colo. 225, 86 P. 224, 86 P. 229 86 P. 231 (1905).

Conditions for exercise of original jurisdiction. Supreme court will exercise such jurisdiction only in case of emergency, or where the questions involved are clearly of public interest, and then only when satisfied that the rights of the parties are not likely to be protected and enforced in the lower courts. People ex rel. Foley v. Montez, 48 Colo. 436, 110 P. 639 (1910).

It is the settled practice of this court not to exercise its original jurisdiction except in cases publici juris, or in cases where it is shown that a refusal to take jurisdiction would practically amount to a denial of justice. In re Rogers, 14 Colo. 18, 22 P. 1053 (1890).

Original jurisdiction of the writs mentioned, except in cases presenting some special or peculiar exigency, should not be here assumed, save where the interest of the state at large is directly involved; where its sovereignty is violated, or the liberty of its citizens menaced; where the usurpation or the illegal use of its prerogatives or franchises is the principal, and not a collateral, question. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

No question of greater "public importance" can arise than one in which a court is proceeding without jurisdiction of the person or subject matter. Kellner v. District Court, 127 Colo. 320, 256 P.2d 887 (1953).

The court's original jurisdiction may be exercised when a pre-trial ruling will place a party at a significant disadvantage in litigating the merits of the controversy and conventional appellate remedies are inadequate. Mitchell v. Wilmore, 981 P.2d 172 (Colo. 1999).

Sole determination of "great public importance" is within province of supreme court. As to the question of what is of "great public importance", sole determination in all cases, according to the peculiar features of each, is within the province of the supreme court. Kellner v. District Court, 127 Colo. 320, 256 P.2d 887 (1953).

Original jurisdiction may be exercised to entertain an interlocutory appeal that was improperly brought pursuant to appellate rules. People v. Braunthal, 31 P.3d 167 (Colo. 2001).

Supreme court will decline jurisdiction where issues can be determined in district court. The supreme court will decline to take original jurisdiction in cases where the issues can be fully determined and the rights of all parties preserved and enforced in the district court. Clark v. Denver & I. R. R., 78 Colo. 48, 239 P. 20 (1925).

Function of supreme court is not to preempt trial court by directing the course of judicial proceedings before it. Stapleton v. District Court, 179 Colo. 187, 499 P.2d 310 (1972).

Jurisdiction of supreme court and district court exclude each other. It is clear from this provision that the jurisdiction of both the district court and the supreme court being created by the constitution, the jurisdiction of each was necessarily excluded from the other. Friesen v. People ex rel. Fletcher, 118 Colo. 1, 192 P.2d 430 (1948).

Effect of C.R.C.P. 106 and 116 on original jurisdiction. By C.R.C.P. 106 and 116 supreme court jurisdiction in original matters is curtailed, but, according to supreme court discretion and determination, the limitations are removed. Kellner v. District Court, 127 Colo. 320, 256 P.2d 887 (1953).

The phrase, "and other original and remedial writs", in this section, includes writs belonging to the same class as those specifically named. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

Court's duty and power to protect parties from deleterious pro se litigation. The supreme court has both the duty and the power to protect courts, citizens, and opposing parties from the deleterious impact of repetitive, unfounded pro se litigation. People v. Dunlap, 623 P.2d 408 (Colo. 1981).

Colorado supreme court's original jurisdiction has its source in this section; its exercise is discretionary and governed by the circumstances of the case. Sanchez v. District Court, 624 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1981).

Original jurisdiction exercised to address issues of significant public importance. Although the exercise of original jurisdiction is discretionary and is not a substitute for an appeal, court will exercise such jurisdiction for the purpose of addressing issues of significant public importance. Florey v. District Court, 713 P.2d 840 (Colo. 1985).

Where adverse procedural ruling has a significant effect on a party's ability to litigate the merits of the controversy, original jurisdiction of supreme court is appropriate. Lutz v. District Court, 716 P.2d 129 (Colo. 1986); Jones v. District Court, 780 P.2d 526 (Colo. 1989); Walcott v. District Ct., 2nd Jud. Dist., 924 P.2d 163 (Colo. 1996).

Where court's failure to contemporaneously record bench conferences may interfere with supreme court's appellate jurisdiction, original jurisdiction of supreme court is appropriate. Jones v. District Court, 780 P.2d 526 (Colo. 1989).

Supreme court original jurisdiction is properly invoked when trial court has seriously abused its discretion and appellate remedy would not be adequate. Roldan Corp. v. District Court, 716 P.2d 120 (Colo. 1986).

Pretrial discovery matters not exempted from extraordinary relief under appropriate circumstances. Although matters of pretrial discovery are ordinarily within the discretion of the trial court, they are not exempted from extraordinary relief under appropriate circumstances. Sanchez v. District Court, 624 P.2d 1314 (Colo. 1981).

Review of pretrial discovery order is proper if the petitioner is wrongly compelled to produce financial information for use by its competitor, and the damage will be done regardless of an appeal. Direct Sales Tire Co. v. District Court, 686 P.2d 1316 (Colo. 1984).

Review of pretrial discovery order is proper when such order will cause unwarranted damage through discovery of privileged medical records and such damage cannot be cured on appeal. People v. District Court, 719 P.2d 722 (Colo. 1986).

Supreme court has jurisdiction to review trial court's order on attorney fees for a court-appointed attorney as an independent original proceeding, but, if there is an appeal on some aspect of the underlying action, the attorney fees issue may be raised in such appeal without the necessity of bringing the independent original proceeding. Bye v. District Court, 701 P.2d 56 (Colo. 1985).

Applied in Orman v. People, 18 Colo. App. 302, 71 P. 430 (1903); Del Monte Live Stock Co. v. Ryan, 24 Colo. App. 340, 133 P. 1048 (1913); In re Interrogatories of House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953); People v. Enlow, 135 Colo. 249, 310 P.2d 539 (1957).

B. Prohibition and Certiorari.

Jurisdiction in matters involving original and remedial writs is expressly conferred by constitutional provision. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Supreme court may issue writs in its discretion. Within the sound discretion of the supreme court such writs, including writs of prohibition, may be issued or denied, without legislative interference, in the furtherance of justice and in the preventing of delay and expense of a retrial which necessarily would follow in the event of a reversal on writ of error. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Function of certiorari. It is the function of the common-law writ of certiorari to correct substantial errors of law committed by an inferior tribunal which are not otherwise reviewable. Sutterfield v. District Court ex rel. County of Arapahoe, 165 Colo. 225, 438 P.2d 236 (1968).

Writ of certiorari under this section distinguished from statutory writ. The writ of certiorari mentioned in this section is to be distinguished from, and not to be confused with, the statutory writ of certiorari provided for in § 13-6-310. People ex rel. City of Aurora v. Smith, 162 Colo. 72, 424 P.2d 772 (1967); Bill Dreiling Motor Co. v. Court of Appeals, 171 Colo. 448, 468 P.2d 37 (1970).

Writ of certiorari is limited solely to the question of the jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal. Bulger v. People, 61 Colo. 187, 156 P. 800 (1916).

Certiorari may be issued to review interlocutory orders. While the issuance of a writ of certiorari is always discretionary, the supreme court has the power under this section, to issue such writs to review interlocutory orders of lower courts; such power has been exercised where the usual review by writ of error would not afford adequate protection to substantive rights of the petitioners. Sutterfield v. District Court, 165 Colo. 225, 438 P.2d 236 (1968).

Authority of supreme court to entertain proceedings in prohibition is conferred by this section. People ex rel. Lindsley v. District Court, 30 Colo. 488, 71 P. 388 (1903).

And is not dependent upon or governed by statute or code. People ex rel. Lindsley v. District Court, 30 Colo. 488, 71 P. 388 (1903).

General function of writ of prohibition is to enjoin an excessive or improper assumption of jurisdiction. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977).

The writs authorized by this section are directed to respondent district court to determine whether the court is proceeding without or in excess of its jurisdiction. Clinic Masters, Inc. v. District Court, 192 Colo. 120, 556 P.2d 473 (1976).

Writ of prohibition is designed to restrain rather than remedy an abuse of jurisdiction. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977).

A writ of prohibition is a discretionary writ. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977).

Issuance of prohibition is governed by circumstances of each case. The supreme court is to be governed, in the issuance of the extraordinary writ in the nature of prohibition, by the circumstances and conditions of each particular case. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

No inflexible rule can be made to fit every emergency. Each case must rest upon its own peculiar facts, and the court should be guided, in the exercise of its discretion, by the needs and deserts of the case in hand. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

It is not believed that anyone ever thought or intended, that the authority given the supreme court by the constitution to exercise such discretion, had been permanently assigned away, because of a certain conclusion reached by it in a particular case, or by some mere rule of practice. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Showing required to invoke intervention of supreme court is that the court is proceeding without or in excess of jurisdiction. Colo. & S. Ry. v. District Court, 177 Colo. 162, 493 P.2d 657 (1972).

Prohibition does not lie if trial court has jurisdiction. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Prohibition is a discretionary writ with the supreme court and is not granted, unless, in connection with other matters, an inferior court has no jurisdiction to act. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

The traditional radius of the writ of prohibition, within which supreme court operates, is the inquiry whether the inferior court is exercising a jurisdiction which it does not possess, or, having jurisdiction, has exceeded its legitimate powers. City of Aurora v. Congregation Beth Medrosh Hagodol, 140 Colo. 462, 345 P.2d 385 (1959).

When a writ of prohibition is presented to the supreme court, its only inquiry is whether the inferior judicial tribunal is exercising jurisdiction it does not possess, or, having jurisdiction over parties and subject matter, has exceeded its powers. City of Aurora v. Congregation Beth Medrosh Hagodol, 140 Colo. 462, 345 P.2d 385 (1959).

Supreme court cannot by writ of prohibition stay hands of inferior tribunal because of alleged abuse of discretion in a matter of which it has jurisdiction. People ex rel. Lindsley v. District Court, 30 Colo. 488, 71 P. 388 (1903).

Prohibition should be granted only where no adequate remedy by writ of error. A writ in the nature of prohibition is an extraordinary remedy and should be granted only in cases where the party seeking the writ does not have an adequate remedy by writ of error. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Ordinarily, prohibition only lies to prevent the lower court from proceeding further with the cause, but where this would not give the relator the relief to which he is entitled, the writ may direct that all proceedings had in excess of jurisdiction be quashed and the order entered which should have been. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

Prohibition may not take place of writ of error. Shore v. District Court, 127 Colo. 487, 258 P.2d 485 (1953).

The extraordinary writ of prohibition does not include the correction of error made by the trial court. Alspaugh v. District Court, 190 Colo. 282, 545 P.2d 1362 (1976).

A writ of prohibition does not correct mere error or provide a substitute for appeal. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977).

Judges cannot entertain application for prohibition in vacation. The judges of the supreme court have no authority by virtue of this section, in vacation to entertain an application for a writ of prohibition or to enter and order to show cause in such proceeding. People ex rel. Adams v. District Court, 28 Colo. 485, 69 P. 1066 (1901).

Writ of prohibition not appropriate. Vaughn v. District Court, 192 Colo. 348, 559 P.2d 222 (1977).

Applied in Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. District Court, 180 Colo. 389, 506 P.2d 371 (1973); Clinic Masters, Inc. v. District Court, 192 Colo. 120, 556 P.2d 473 (1976).

C. Mandamus and Quo Warranto.

Law reviews. For article, "The Misuse of Judicial Flexibility in Quo Warranto Cases", see 10 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 239 (1938).

This section confers upon supreme court jurisdiction to grant writs of mandamus, and such jurisdiction is in no sense dependent upon statute. Keady v. Owers, 30 Colo. 1, 69 P. 509 (1902).

Authority to grant mandamus carries with it power to adjudicate questions brought before court. The authority of the supreme court, under the constitution, to issue writs of mandamus, carries with it the power to adjudicate such questions as may be brought before it in any proceeding for a mandamus, without further legislation. Greathouse v. Jameson, 3 Colo. 397 (1877).

Issuance of writ to mandate vacation of reference order to master is necessary to protect the rights of the petitioner where the court is proceeding in excess of its power, for to await the final judgment, based on the master's report, would be too late and any appeal at that point a futile act and the expenditure of both time and money would already have occurred and there would then be no way to undo what had already been erroneously done. Gelfond v. District Court, 180 Colo. 95, 504 P.2d 673 (1972).

The supreme court cannot exercise original jurisdiction under this section to decide whether a legislative referendum complies with the single-subject requirement where it has not been asked to respond to interrogatories regarding pending legislation. Prior to adoption by the electorate, a legislative referendum constitutes pending legislation, and the supreme court can only address the constitutionality of such pending legislation if requested by interrogatory submitted by either the governor or the general assembly. Polhill v. Buckley, 923 P.2d 119 (Colo. 1996).

Supreme court jurisdiction to review sentences. The supreme court has jurisdiction to review a defendant's sentence if the trial court's sentence is illegal. People v. District Court, 673 P.2d 991 (Colo. 1983).

Three-part test for mandamus: (1) A plaintiff must have a clear right to the relief sought; (2) a defendant must have a clear duty to perform the act requested; (3) there must be no other available remedy. State v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, Mesa County, 897 P.2d 788 (Colo. 1995).

Mandamus was appropriate remedy where county refused to honor its continuing statutory obligations to provide courthouses and court services, including security. State v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, Mesa County, 897 P.2d 788 (Colo. 1995).

This section confers upon supreme court power to issue writ of quo warranto. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Sloan, 4 Colo. 128 (1878).

Under the provisions of this section the supreme court has power to issue writs of quo warranto and to hear and determine issues raised thereon. People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938).

This power is not limited by the code provisions concerning actions for usurpation of office or franchise. People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938).

Function of quo warranto at common law. The writ of quo warranto at common law served the function of testing title to public and corporate offices. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

The writ of quo warranto was originally a prerogative writ of the crown against one who usurped any office, franchise or liberty of the crown and was also used in the case of nonuse or long neglect of a franchise or misuse or abuse thereof. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

Quo warranto is one of the most ancient and important writs known to the common law; the modern proceeding by information, which has almost entirely superseded the ancient writ, being itself nearly two hundred years old. This jurisdiction is expressly given to the supreme court by our constitution. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

Substance of relief sought determines character of action as quo warranto. The name given an extraordinary writ such as quo warranto is unimportant; it is the substance of the relief sought which determines the character of the action. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

Availability of quo warranto. Under § 32-2-107 quo warranto is available only to the people on relation of the attorney general. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

General assembly may limit period within which quo warranto is available. The general assembly may validly limit the period within which the constitutionally guaranteed remedy of quo warranto is available unless the period is so unreasonably short as to destroy the substance of the remedy. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

Quo warranto is recognized as proper proceeding for attacking legal existence of quasi-municipal corporation. Burns v. District Court, 144 Colo. 259, 356 P.2d 245 (1960).

Quo warranto denied. Where a proceeding is primarily between individual citizens or groups entirely local in character, and it cannot injuriously affect the people of the state at large, the writ in the nature of quo warranto issued in such a case is not one within the intent of this provision of the constitution, and the district court has full jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues herein. Friesen v. People ex rel. Fletcher, 118 Colo. 1, 192 P.2d 430 (1948).

D. Habeas Corpus.

Justices of supreme court, acting singly out of term, are without jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus, or to hear and determine matters arising thereon, notwithstanding the authority attempted to be conferred by the statute on habeas corpus. In re Garvey, 7 Colo. 502, 4 P. 758 (1884).

E. Injunctions.

Writ of injunction is extraordinary writ. The connection in which the word "injunction" is used in this section indicates that the writ of injunction thus authorized to be issued by this court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction is an extraordinary writ -- a jurisdictional writ as contradistinguished from the ordinary writ of injunction issued in aid of jurisdiction otherwise acquired -- a quasi prerogative writ. People ex rel. Bentley v. McClees, 20 Colo. 403, 38 P. 468 (1894).

All of the writs referred to in this section, save the writ of injunction, were prerogative writs of the common law, and the writ of injunction as therein provided for is made a quasi prerogative writ. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 248, 11 P. 103 (1886).

To warrant supreme court in taking jurisdiction, case must disclose question publici juris. To warrant the supreme court in taking jurisdiction in an original proceeding by injunction, the case made by the complaint must not only show equitable ground for relief, but must disclose a question publici juris; the case must be one involving the rights or franchises of the state in its sovereign capacity, that is, public rights or interests as contradistinguished from matters of private or individual concern. People ex rel. Bentley v. McClees, 20 Colo. 403, 38 P. 468 (1894).

Hence, it will not take jurisdiction of ordinary suits in equity. The language of this section is sufficient to confer original jurisdiction by writ of injunction in a proper case, but it certainly was not designed to authorize this court to take original jurisdiction of ordinary suits in equity by granting writs of injunction. People ex rel. Bentley v. McClees, 20 Colo. 403, 38 P. 468 (1894).

Or in cases where title to public office is involved. Where the supreme court was asked in the exercise of its original jurisdiction to issue a writ of injunction to restrain the secretary of state from delivering certificates of election to certain persons elected as district judges, the injunction being asked on the ground that the terms of the incumbents of such judicial offices were not about to expire; held, that the real question in controversy was the question of title to public offices between the individual claimants; that the controversy did not involve the rights or franchises of the people; nor the rights of the state in its sovereign capacity; and so the writ was denied. People ex rel. Bentley v. McClees, 20 Colo. 403, 38 P. 468, 26 L.R.A. 646 (1894).

Injunction appropriate when private litigants' procedure conflicts with important public rights. An injunction issued from the supreme court is appropriate when the procedure followed by private litigants conflicts with important public rights and interests and when it resists other means of control. People v. Dunlap, 623 P.2d 408 (Colo. 1981).

An original petition for an injunction is proper when the attorney general has grave doubts about the constitutionality of a congressional redistricting plan. People ex rel. Salazar v. Davidson, 79 P.3d 1221 (Colo. 2003), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 1093, 124 S. Ct. 2228, 159 L. Ed. 2d 260 (2004).

III. OPINIONS.

A. General Consideration.

Law reviews. For article, "Limitations Upon Legislative Inquiries Under Colorado Advisory Opinion Clause", see 4 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 237 (1932).

Original jurisdiction of supreme court enlarged. The constitutional amendment requiring the supreme court to answer questions propounded by the governor or by either branch of the general assembly is an enlargement of the original jurisdiction previously conferred upon that court by the constitution. In re House Bill No. 122, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889).

Supreme court is not authorized to give advisory opinions other than pursuant to section. No provision of the law authorizes the supreme court to give advisory opinions to state agencies other than to the general assembly or to the governor when requested upon solemn occasions pursuant to this section. Cameron v. Carroll & Co., 138 Colo. 432, 334 P.2d 748 (1959).

Provision is only exception to rule that no court may construe legislation until it has been adopted. The only exception to the rule that neither the supreme court, nor any other court, may be called upon to construe or pass upon a legislative act until it has been adopted is the constitutional provision authorizing the general assembly to propound interrogatories to the supreme court upon important questions upon solemn occasions. City of Rocky Ford v. Brown, 133 Colo. 262, 293 P.2d 974 (1956).

But no jurisdiction to pass on constitutionality of proposed law. The courts do not have jurisdiction to pass upon the constitutionality of the substance of legislation prior to enactment or adoption. CF & I Steel Corp. v. Buchanan, 191 Colo. 570, 554 P.2d 1354 (1976).

Courts should not take jurisdiction to pass upon the constitutionality of a proposed law prior to its enactment or adoption. Billings v. Buchanan, 192 Colo. 32, 555 P.2d 176 (1976).

Judicial response to ex parte inquiry from executive department is inconsistent with separation of governmental powers. It must be admitted that the promulgation of a judicial opinion in response to an ex parte inquiry from the executive department of the government, concerning the affairs of the legislative department, is anomalous and peculiar, and, apparently at least, inconsistent with the prevalent American system of separating the governmental powers into distinct departments. But it must be borne in mind that the same instrument which divides the powers of the government into distinct departments has been so amended by the voice of the people as to require the supreme court to "give its opinion upon important questions, upon solemn occasions, when required by the governor, the senate or the house of representatives". In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Where there is no majority of supreme court as to either validity or invalidity of a statute which is the subject of interrogatories, no opinion respecting the interrogatories can be rendered under this section. In re Interrogatories Propounded By McNichols, 142 Colo. 188, 350 P.2d 811 (1960).

Answers by supreme court have effect of judicial precedents. The answers by the supreme court to questions are reported as are other opinions, and have the force and effect of judicial precedents; differing in this respect from the few analogous provisions elsewhere adopted. In re House Bill No. 122, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889).

This section does not require wholesale exposition of all constitutional provisions relating to a given general subject. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 620, 21 P. 470 (1886); In re Senate Resolution No. 2, 94 Colo. 101, 31 P.2d 325 (1933).

There is no constitutional requirement that reasons be given in answering questions upon the governor's request. In re Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 10 of Forty-First Gen. Ass'y, 137 Colo. 491, 328 P.2d 103 (1958).

Rule that every statute duly passed must be held constitutional unless contrary appears beyond reasonable doubt is not applicable to pending legislation when submitted to the supreme court for its opinion under this section. In re Senate Resolution No. 2, 94 Colo. 101, 31 P.2d 325 (1933).

Presumption of constitutionality for state statutes is not applicable to interrogatories presented under this section because the bill in question has not been passed and because the general assembly has certified that it is not certain of the bill's constitutionality. Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999).

875 (Colo. 1991).

B. Questions Submitted.

1. In General.

Question must relate to purely public rights, be propounded upon solemn occasion, and possess a peculiar or inherent importance not belonging to all questions of the kind; that executive questions must be exclusively publici juris, and legislative ones be connected with pending legislation, and relate either to the constitutionality thereof or to matters connected therewith of purely public right. In re Lieutenant Governorship, 54 Colo. 166, 129 P. 811 (1913).

This section has been construed by the supreme court as applying only to cases where questions publici juris are raised, thus excluding from this branch of its jurisdiction all controversies wherein private rights alone are involved. In re Senate Resolution, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889).

Question submitted must be specific. As a necessary condition precedent to the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction, under this section, the question submitted must be specific. In re House Bill No. 165, 15 Colo. 593, 26 P. 141 (1890); In re Loan of Sch. Fund, 18 Colo. 195, 32 P. 273 (1893); In re University Fund, 18 Colo. 398, 33 P. 415 (1893); In re House Bill No. 107, 21 Colo. 32, 39 P. 431 (1895).

And particular section of constitution to be considered must be pointed out. One prerequisite required in such matters is that it must appear that the bill which is the subject of inquiry will likely pass the branch of the general assembly submitting the question, and the particular section of the constitution to be considered in connection therewith must be pointed out. In re House Bill No. 165, 15 Colo. 593, 26 P. 141 (1890); In re Loan of Sch. Fund, 18 Colo. 195, 32 P. 273 (1893); In re Senate Resolution No. 10, 33 Colo. 307, 79 P. 1009 (1905); In re Lieutenant Governorship, 54 Colo. 166, 129 P. 811 (1913).

Thus, a resolution asking the supreme court for its opinion under this section, that points out numerous particulars in which the bill may conflict with provisions of the constitution, and involves a wholesale exposition of constitutional provisions relating to a general subject, will for that reason be refused consideration by the court. In re House Bill No. 99, 26 Colo. 140, 56 P. 181 (1899).

Questions, when propounded by executive, must relate to matters exclusively juris publici. In re Senate Resolution, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889); In re University Fund, 18 Colo. 398, 33 P. 415 (1893).

And when propounded by branch of general assembly, must be connected with pending legislation and relate either to the constitutionality thereof or to matters connected therewith of purely public right. In re Senate Resolution, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889); In re University Fund, 18 Colo. 398, 33 P. 415 (1893); In re Interrogatories of House, 62 Colo. 188, 162 P. 1144 (1916); Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

The question whether a bill proposing to increase the fees of district attorneys throughout the state will apply to district attorneys now in office does not come within the rule announced. In re Senate Resolution, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889).

Department propounding question in first instance determines whether occasion exists which justifies its submission. In re Senate Resolution, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889); In re Senate Resolution No. 10, 33 Colo. 307, 79 P. 1009 (1905).

But what are "important questions upon solemn occasions" must be ultimately determined by the supreme court itself. In re Senate Resolution, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889); In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); In re Penitentiary Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 409, 35 P. 915 (1894); In re Senate Bill No. 416, 45 Colo. 394, 101 P. 410 (1909); In re Lieutenant Governorship, 54 Colo. 166, 129 P. 811 (1913); In re Interrogatories of House, 62 Colo. 188, 162 P. 1144 (1916); In re Senate Resolution No. 2, 94 Colo. 101, 31 P.2d 325 (1933).

Questions propounded to the supreme court by the senate are limited to those specifically enumerated in this section of the constitution, and the court must determine whether or not questions so propounded are within the specifications. In re Interrogatories of Senate, 94 Colo. 215, 29 P.2d 705 (1934).

While the supreme court concedes to the governor full liberty to submit such questions as he may deem consistent with his executive powers, it reserves for itself the right to express its opinion freely, in whole or in part, or not at all, as it shall deem consistent with its judicial powers and constitutional obligation. In re Fire & Excise Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 482, 36 P. 234 (1894).

While the governor is first to judge the relative importance and solemnity which justifies submitting questions, the supreme court must decide whether or not it should exercise jurisdiction and answer questions propounded to it under the provisions of this section. In re Interrogatories by the Governor, 126 Colo. 48, 245 P.2d 1173 (1952).

Mere fact that suits by actual parties in interest may be imminent, does not constitute "solemn occasion", in the constitutional sense, calling for the exercise of a jurisdiction to be properly assumed only under the extraordinary circumstances set forth in the constitution. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 111 Colo. 406, 141 P.2d 899 (1943).

Supreme court declined to give opinion where hasty consideration would have been required. The supreme court declined to give an opinion on a house bill authorizing counties and municipalities to issue revenue bonds where hasty consideration would have been required in order to serve the purposes of the governor. In re House Bill No. 1503 of Forty-Sixth Gen. Ass'y, 163 Colo. 45, 428 P.2d 75 (1967).

Section does not authorize ex parte adjudication of individual or corporate rights. It could not have been the intention of the provision in this section authorizing the supreme court to give opinions upon important questions to authorize an ex parte adjudication of individual or corporate rights by means of a legislative or executive question; parties must still adjudicate their rights in the ordinary and regular course of judicial proceeding. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 620, 21 P. 470 (1886).

This section was amended in 1886 so as to authorize the governor to request the opinion of the supreme court "upon important questions upon solemn occasions". It was not the intention of the amendment to authorize an ex parte adjudication by means of executive questions; and parties must still have their rights determined in the regular course of judicial proceedings. In re Interrogatories by the Governor, 126 Colo. 48, 245 P.2d 1173 (1952).

Applied in In re Interrogatories from House of Representatives, 127 Colo. 160, 254 P.2d 853 (1953).

2. Proper Questions.

Questions by governor on constitutionality of bill before him for his signature may be submitted. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 116 Colo.

318, 180 P.2d 1018 (1947).

Question regarding pending legislation. There were upon the statute books two acts relating to the hours of service of men employed in mines, smelting furnaces, and other like places, one adopted by the general assembly (L. 11, ch. 149), and which being referred to the people, had received their approval. The other, initiated pursuant to § 1 of art. V, Colo. Const. (L. 10, ch. 3), assuming to repeal the former. This act also received the popular sanction. A bill was pending in the general assembly upon the same subject, substantially identical with the earlier act, repealing both the former acts and declaring that the enactment therein proposed was "necessary for the immediate preservation of the public health and safety". Upon an interrogatory from the senate as to its duty in the premises, it being fairly inferable from the communication that it was a desire of that body to pass an act which should remove the embarrassments attending the situation so presented, held, that the question was within the provisions of this section. In re Senate Resolution No. 4, 54 Colo. 262, 130 P. 333 (1913).

Constitutional right of counties to fund valid debts incurred subsequent to a given date is a matter of sufficient "importance" and "solemnity" to require an answer by the court to an executive interrogatory propounded in connection therewith. In re Funding of County Indebtedness, 15 Colo. 421, 24 P. 877 (1890).

Enforcement of provisions of art. XXIV, Colo. Const. Where the governor was in doubt as to how to go about enforcing the provisions of art. XXIV, Colo. Const., and submitted certain inquiries to the justices of the supreme court regarding this article, it was regarded as a solemn occasion, within the meaning and intention of this section. In re Interrogatories of Governor, 99 Colo. 591, 65 P.2d 7 (1937).

Question as to resolution declaring vacancy in office of governor. In a contest before the general assembly for the office of governor, where a resolution was introduced declaring that, as it was impossible to separate the fraudulent from the legal votes, it was impossible to tell whether the contestor or contestee was elected, and declaring that no person was elected governor, an interrogatory from the senate to the supreme court, asking whether the general assembly could legally adopt said resolution and declare a vacancy in the office of governor, presents a question which it is the duty of the court to answer under this section. In re Senate Resolution No. 10, 33 Colo. 307, 79 P. 1009 (1905).

Question concerning entitlement to hold offices of fire commissioner and excise commissioner. While the practice of the supreme court has been to decline to give an opinion in response to executive or legislative questions, which might affect or prejudice private rights or interests, the gravity of the situation with respect to the pending question as to what persons were legally entitled to hold the offices of fire commissioner and excise commissioner of the city of Denver at the present time required a departure from the rule and an opinion upon the facts as submitted, without prejudice to the right to show other or different facts. In re Fire & Excise Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 482, 36 P. 234 (1894).

Questions by the general assembly on constitutional issues regarding legislation implementing section 20 of article X of the Colorado Constitution, properly submitted since the interrogatories related to either the constitutionality of the legislation or to matters connected therewith pertaining to purely public rights. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

3. Improper Questions.

Constitutionality of proposed legislation. Questions propounded by the governor as to the constitutionality of a proposed legislative bill not introduced and which may never be passed, are premature. In re Proposed Amendments to Constitution & Initiative & Referendum Measures, 50 Colo. 84, 114 P. 298 (1911); In re Interrogatories by Governor, 71 Colo. 331, 206 P. 383 (1922).

Under the provisions of this section, questions of the executive concerning the constitutionality of proposed legislation are only to be answered when doubt as to the constitutionality is expressed. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 71 Colo. 331, 206 P. 383 (1922).

Constitutionality of legislation no longer pending. When both houses of the general assembly have taken a final vote on a bill, it is no longer pending legislation, and the court will decline to respond to a question as to its constitutionality; nor will the court consider such a question when presented at so short a time before the termination of the legislative session as to afford no opportunity for such investigation as the question requires. In re Senate Bill No 416, 45 Colo. 394, 101 P. 410 (1909).

This section does not authorize the supreme court to answer questions propounded by the house of representatives concerning the constitutionality of a measure passed by that body and which is no longer before it for consideration. In re House Resolution No. 12, 88 Colo. 569, 298 P. 960 (1931).

Supreme court is not at liberty in response to legislative inquiry to pass upon the constitutionality of statutes. In re University Fund, 18 Colo. 398, 33 P. 415 (1893).

Questions of executive regarding legislation no longer pending. The jurisdiction conferred by the constitution upon this court to answer executive and legislative questions, is extraordinary; the construction of statutes is within the ordinary jurisdiction of the courts. One of the most common subjects of judicial consideration is the construction of legislative acts as they arise in due course of litigation. If we were to extend the extraordinary ex parte jurisdiction of this court to executive questions involving the construction of legislative acts, it would be a most serious innovation, and the tendency would be to transfer in a great measure the management of our state institutions from the executive to the judicial department of the government. In re Penitentiary Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 409, 35 P. 915 (1894).

Questions referring to statutes of long standing, and requiring the determination of the right and duty of certain officials, are not to be determined ex parte. In re Interrogatories of House, 62 Colo. 188, 162 P. 1144 (1916).

The duty of the court in responding to legislative questions is limited to those which relate to proposed legislation. Completed legislation is not a subject of legislative inquiry. It is not within the province of the court to advise the general assembly as to whether existing legislation upon any subject satisfies the requirements of the constitution. All departments of government are of equal dignity. Neither can declare that another has not performed a duty imposed by the constitution. In re Senate Resolution No. 4, 54 Colo. 262, 130 P. 333 (1913).

Questions relating to desirability or policy of proposed legislation cannot be propounded. In re Senate Resolution, 12 Colo. 466, 21 P. 478 (1889).

Complex question of constitutional and statutory construction. In order to answer questions propounded by the governor the court would be obliged to construe at least three sections of the constitution and at least four sections of statutes. It appeared that there was a conflict between the specified constitutional provisions themselves as well as between the constitutional and statutory provisions, and a possible conflict between the statutory provisions, presenting a most difficult problem of constitutional and statutory construction requiring exhaustive research and most careful consideration. The questions propounded by the governor might all be the subject of litigation in which the parties to be affected will be afforded ample opportunity of presenting their causes, and then, and not until then, would it be the court's duty, on requested review, to give these important constitutional and statutory questions its exhaustive research and study. In re Interrogatories by the Governor, 126 Colo. 48, 245 P.2d 1173 (1952).

The supreme court should not prejudge involved legal problems and fundamental constitutional interpretations in ex parte proceedings, it being the policy of the supreme court to accommodate the general assembly only in such cases as are clear and where no prejudice will result to anyone in the future. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate, 131 Colo. 389, 281 P.2d 1013 (1955).

As a general proposition the supreme court seriously doubts the wisdom of prejudging involved and complex legal problems and fundamental constitutional questions in proceedings under this section, although the state constitution seems to provide that it shall so do; however, the constitutional directive cannot be taken to mean that the supreme court should so act when possible prejudice may well result later to citizens whose rights are protected by both the state and federal constitutions. In re Interrogatories of Governor Concerning Senate Bill No. 34, 142 Colo. 188, 350 P.2d 811 (1960).

Were the supreme court, in an ex parte proceeding, to respond to interrogatories propounded by the general assembly with respect to the validity of a proposed statute, to the effect that such legislation is in all respects constitutional, such holding would be prejudicial to any citizen who at a future date might question its validity in the supreme court. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate, 131 Colo. 389, 281 P.2d 1013 (1955).

This court should not give ex parte opinion in relation to controversy that has already arisen, especially if actual litigation involving private rights is likely to arise from such controversy. In re Penitentiary Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 409, 35 P. 915 (1894).

Ordinance proposed by people. An ordinance proposed by the people under the laws of initiative and referendum is clothed with the presumption of validity and its constitutionality will not be considered by the courts by means of a hypothetical question, but only after enactment. City of Rocky Ford v. Brown, 133 Colo. 262, 293 P.2d 974 (1956).

The supreme court may not intrude upon the legislative powers of the people through an advisory opinion since the separation of governmental powers must be held inviolate. City of Rocky Ford v. Brown, 133 Colo. 262, 293 P.2d 974 (1956).

Bill requiring corporations to pay their employees semimonthly in lawful money of the United States, prohibiting contracts in violation thereof and providing penalties for its violation involves private rights and a question from the senate as to the constitutionality of such bill does not invoke the jurisdiction of the supreme court so as to require an opinion thereon under this section. In re Senate

A bill for an act to secure to laborers and others the payment of their wages in lawful money of the United States, and prescribing penalties for its violation, involves private rights of individuals and corporations, and is not a bill concerning matters publici juris such as will invoke the jurisdiction of the supreme court upon a question from the house of representatives as to its constitutionality under this section, authorizing the submission of questions to the court for its opinion. In re House Bill No. 99, 26 Colo. 140, 56 P. 181 (1899).

Rank of appropriation for administrative body not yet appointed. Under this section the court is not required to respond to a question as to the effect and rank of an appropriation for an administrative body not yet appointed. But to end doubt and controversy the court declared that an appropriation for the salary and expenses of the state tax commission was of the first class. In re Opinion of Justices, 55 Colo. 17, 123 P. 660 (1912).

Right of police commissioner to retain office after removal. The court will not, in a ex parte proceeding in response to an executive question, inquire into or determine the right of a police commissioner of Denver to retain his office after the governor has attempted to remove him. In re Fire & Excise Comm'rs, 19 Colo. 482, 36 P. 234 (1894).

C. Judicial Notice of Facts When Interrogatories Submitted.

In a proceeding on interrogatories propounded by the governor with respect to the constitutionality of a bill passed by the general assembly, court may take judicial notice of matters of public record and common knowledge. In re Senate Bill No. 95, 146 Colo. 233, 361 P.2d 350 (1961).

The court may take judicial notice of the history of a statute when the history is a matter of public record in the office of the legislative reference service. Indus. Comm'n v. Milkva, 159 Colo. 114, 410 P.2d 181 (1966).

And of that which is of common knowledge to an interested public. Four-County Metro. Capital Improvement Dist. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

And of the primary purpose of a governor's special session call. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

In the case of interrogatories submitted by the senate, the court has taken judicial notice of a governor's special session call. In re Opinion of the Justices, 94 Colo. 215, 29 P.2d 705 (1934).

Court has declined to take judicial notice of the existence and terms of a proposed intergovernmental agreement when the existence and terms of said agreement were not relevant to the specific questions submitted, when judicial notice would require the court to exceed the scope of its limited jurisdiction under this section of the constitution, and when judicial notice would not be proper under the Colorado rules of evidence. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Section 4. Terms. At least two terms of the supreme court shall be held each year, at the seat of government.

Section 5. Personnel of court - departments - chief justice. (1) The supreme court shall consist of not less than seven justices, who may sit en banc or in departments. In case said court shall sit in departments, each of said departments shall have full power and authority of said court in the determination of causes, the issuing of writs and the exercise of all powers authorized by this constitution, or provided by law, subject to the general control of the court sitting en banc, and such rules and regulations as the court may make, but no decision of any department shall become judgment of the court unless concurred in by at least three justices, and no case involving construction of the constitution of this state or of the United States shall be decided except by the court en banc. Upon request of the supreme court, the number of justices may be increased to no more than nine members whenever two-thirds of the members of each house of the general assembly concur therein.

(2) The supreme court shall select a chief justice from its own membership to serve at the pleasure of a majority of the court, who shall be the executive head of the judicial system.

(3) The supreme court shall appoint a court administrator and such other personnel as the court may deem necessary to aid the administration of the courts. Whenever the chief justice deems assignment of a judge necessary to the prompt disposition of judicial business, he may: (a) Assign any county judge, or retired county judge who consents, temporarily to perform judicial duties in any county court if otherwise qualified under section 18 of this article, or assign, as hereafter may be authorized by law, said judge to any other court; or (b) assign any district, probate, or juvenile judge, or retired justice or district, probate, or juvenile judge who consents, temporarily to perform judicial duties in any court. For each day of such temporary service a retired justice or judge shall receive compensation in an amount equal to 1/20 of the monthly salary then currently applicable to the judicial position in which the temporary service is rendered.

(4) The chief justice shall appoint from the district judges of each judicial district a chief judge to serve at the pleasure of the chief justice. A chief judge shall receive no additional salary by reason of holding such position. Each chief judge shall have and exercise such administrative powers over all judges of all courts within his district as may be delegated to him by the chief justice.

Justices sitting in department may render decision where no constitutional question is involved. Scott v. Shook, 80 Colo. 40, 249 P. 259 (1926).

But there must be concurrence of at least three judges. Whatever the number of departments, or the number of judges constituting a department, there must be a concurrence of at least three judges for a department decision. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. People ex rel. Wilson, 68 Colo. 487, 190 P. 513 (1920).

There may be two departments, each composed of the chief justice and three other justices, or, according to the present arrangements, there may be three departments, each composed of the chief justice and two other justices. In either case three judges must concur in order to render a decision. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. People ex rel. Wilson, 68 Colo. 487, 190 P. 513 (1920).

Minimum number of judges constituting court en banc is not expressly stated. The constitution is silent insofar as any express statement of the minimum number of judges constituting the court en banc is concerned. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. People ex rel. Wilson, 68 Colo. 487, 190 P. 513 (1920).

But it has been held that majority of members of court constitutes court en banc. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. People ex rel. Wilson, 68 Colo. 487, 190 P. 513 (1920).

And that majority of court as thus constituted might decide case. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. People ex rel. Wilson, 68 Colo. 487, 190 P. 513 (1920).

When supreme court formerly consisted of three judges, two judges could "pronounce a decision" and no more than two were necessary to "form a quorum". Snider v. Rinehart, 18 Colo. 18, 31 P. 716 (1892).

Appointment of state public defender under subsection (3). General assembly's determination that the state public defender be appointed by the Colorado supreme court is within the ambit of subsection (3). People v. Mullins, 188 Colo. 29, 532 P.2d 736 (1975).

No authority to decide case as trial judge. A trial judge has no authority to decide a case after he has taken office as a judge of the Colorado court of appeals. Merchants Mtg. & Trust Corp. v. Jenkins, 659 P.2d 690 (Colo. 1983).

And any such orders entered are void. Absent constitutional or statutory authorization, a former district court judge does not have authority to act in a judicial capacity, and orders entered by such a person after he ceases to be a district court judge are void. Merchants Mtg. & Trust

Neither this section nor § 24-51-1105 (1)(a) prohibits a senior judge assigned to a case from consolidating other cases with the case where it is appropriate to do so under C.R.C.P. 42(a). Without an express prohibition, there is no reason to preclude a senior judge from performing the tasks required of a district court judge. Mortgage Inv. Corp. v. Battle Mountain Corp., 56 P.3d 1104 (Colo. App. 2001), rev'd on other grounds, 70 P.3d 1176 (Colo. 2003).

Chief justice of supreme court can properly delegate appointment powers to another judicial officer, and appointments by chief district judges are not limited to specific cases. There is no statutory basis for requiring the chief justice of the supreme court to personally make each temporary appointment. Furthermore, reading § 13-6-218 to preclude delegation would bring it into conflict with subsection (4) of this section, which expressly allows the chief justice to delegate administrative powers. People v. McCulloch, 198 P.3d 1264 (Colo. App. 2008).

Under subsection (4), a county court judge may act as a district court judge in a case in district court only if the chief judge or the chief judge's designee assigns the county court judge to the case in accordance with the proper procedures for such an assignment. People v. Torkelson, 971 P.2d 660 (Colo. App. 1998).

The proper appointment of a county court judge to act as a district court judge presents a jurisdictional question; therefore, the de facto judge doctrine does not apply. The appointment of the county court judge to act as a district court judge was not in accordance with statutory, constitutional, or chief justice directive provisions. Even though some may regard the error in making the appointment as a technical defect, it concerns the fundamental interest of litigants in ensuring that qualified county court judges are called upon to serve as acting district court judges. People v. Torkelson, 22 P.3d 560 (Colo. App. 2000).

Although § 17 of this article states that county courts cannot hear felonies, subsection (3) of this section limits such prohibition and allows a county court judge to sit as a district court judge and exercise the jurisdiction of the district court when assigned by the chief justice. Moreover, the chief justice may delegate this authority to the chief judges under subsection (4). People v. Johnson, 77 P.3d 845 (Colo. App. 2003).

Absent a valid appointment order, a county court judge lacks jurisdiction to act as a district court judge and preside over any stage of a felony trial; thus, a verdict reached under such circumstances is void. People v. Jachnik, 116 P.3d 1278 (Colo. App. 2005).

Applied in Bacher v. District Court, 186 Colo. 314, 527 P.2d 56 (1974); People v. Hedrick, 192 Colo. 37, 557 P.2d 378 (1976); In re Southwest Adams County Fire Prot. DISTRICT COURTS

Section 9. District courts - jurisdiction. (1) The district courts shall be trial courts of record with general jurisdiction, and shall have original jurisdiction in all civil, probate, and criminal cases, except as otherwise provided herein, and shall have such appellate jurisdiction as may be prescribed by law.

(2) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2002, p. 3094, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 2003, p. 3611, December 20, 2002.)

(3) In the city and county of Denver, exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters of probate, settlements of estates of deceased persons, appointment of guardians, conservators and administrators, and settlement of their accounts, the adjudication of the mentally ill, and such other jurisdiction as may be provided by law shall be vested in a probate court, created by section 1 of this article.

Annotator's note. Since this section is substantially the same as former § 11 of this article, relevant cases construing § 11 have been included in the annotations to this section.

This section fixes jurisdiction of district court. Weiss-Chapman Drug Co. v. People, 39 Colo. 374, 89 P. 778 (1907).

This is the only provision of the constitution which fixes the jurisdiction of the district court. Patterson v. People ex rel. Parr, 23 Colo. App. 479, 130 P. 618 (1913).

But it does not prescribe procedure. The constitution simply invests the court with the jurisdiction; it nowhere prescribes the procedure to be resorted to for the purpose of securing the desired relief, or provides the machinery by means of which the court's decree may be enforced. Blitz v. Moran, 17 Colo. App. 253, 67 P. 1020 (1902).

Jurisdiction conferred is all-embracing. The jurisdiction conferred on the district courts by this section should be construed as all-embracing, as its terms are unrestricted. Patterson v. People ex rel.

Parr, 23 Colo. App. 479, 130 P. 618 (1913).

And is to be received in broadest sense. The equitable powers of the district court extend to all cases where the law affords no adequate relief, even where there is no statutory provision, and even where the subject matter of the controversy was not known to be of equitable cognizance at the time of the adoption of the constitution. Patterson v. People ex rel. Parr, 23 Colo. App. 479, 130 P. 618 (1913).

District courts are constitutional courts of general jurisdiction. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Constitutional jurisdiction may not be limited by statute. The constitutional jurisdiction of district courts is unlimited. It should not be limited without circumspection, and no statute should be held to limit it unless it says so plainly. People ex rel. Cruz v. Morley, 77 Colo. 25, 234 P. 178 (1925); In re A.W., 637 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1981).

No territorial limit to civil jurisdiction. No territorial limit is fixed by the constitution to the civil jurisdiction either of the district courts or of the county courts. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891).

District courts of this state have statewide jurisdiction. Bacher v. District Court, 186 Colo. 314, 527 P.2d 56 (1974).

As will federal courts. In a diversity case the federal court inherits the jurisdictional scope that is enjoyed by the state court within the district. Hackbart v. Cincinnati Bengals, Inc., 601 F.2d 516 (10th Cir. 1979).

District courts are courts of general jurisdiction regardless of amount in controversy. Williams v. Speedster, Inc., 175 Colo. 73, 485 P.2d 728 (1971).

Jurisdiction of district and county courts is concurrent with respect to matters which fall within the jurisdiction of both. Ohmie v. Martinez, 141 Colo. 480, 349 P.2d 131 (1960).

Jurisdiction of district court and supreme court is not concurrent. People ex rel. Graves v. District Court, 37 Colo. 443, 86 P. 87, 92 P. 958 (1906).

But exclude each other. It is clear from this provision that the jurisdiction of both the district court and the supreme court being created by the constitution, the jurisdiction of each was necessarily excluded from the other. Friesen v. People ex rel. Fletcher, 118 Colo. 1, 192 P.2d 430 (1948).

Jurisdiction includes extraordinary and remedial writs. The jurisdiction conferred by this section is broad enough to include writs of certiorari, as well as the other extraordinary and remedial writs of which the supreme court is invested with jurisdiction by § 3 of this article. In re Rogers, 14 Colo. 18, 22 P. 1053 (1890); Turner v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 336, 361 P.2d 631 (1961).

District court may not reject supreme court's holdings on common-law rule. It was not within discretion of the district court to reject the holdings of the supreme court of Colorado on a firmly entrenched common-law rule, even though the district court disagreed with the law as established. Heafer v. Denver-Boulder Bus Co., 176 Colo. 157, 489 P.2d 315 (1971).

Jurisdiction in equity cases. In cases of equitable cognizance, the district court may adjudicate and determine the claims of parties before it, and decree the proper relief; and, in doing so, it exercises the jurisdiction which the constitution confers. Blitz v. Moran, 17 Colo. App. 253, 67 P. 1020 (1902).

District court may decide when one may sue by his next friend. The district court is a tribunal of general jurisdiction with the broadest equity powers, and has the right, unless prohibited by valid statute, to decide under what circumstances one may sue by his next friend. Ellis v. Colo. Nat'l Bank, 86 Colo. 391, 282 P. 255 (1929).

Presumptions of jurisdiction. The district court is a superior court, a court of record, and the presumptions of jurisdiction are all in its favor. Weiss-Chapman Drug Co. v. People, 39 Colo. 374, 89 P. 778 (1907).

This section confers general jurisdiction upon district courts, with original jurisdiction in all civil, probate, and criminal cases. This jurisdiction extends to cases involving federal rights, even when there is no governing Colorado authority. Telluride Co. v. Varley, 934 P.2d 888 (Colo. App. 1997).

The district court's jurisdiction clearly extends to action for breach of the child support provisions set forth in parties' agreement, as well as actions under the Uniform Dissolution of Marriage Act. Williamson v. Williamson, 39 P.3d 1199 (Colo. App. 2001).

District court has jurisdiction to review decision of public utilities commission. Fleming v. McFerson, 94 Colo. 1, 28 P.2d 1013 (1933).

And in habeas corpus proceedings. District courts have jurisdiction in habeas corpus proceedings under this section as well as under the provisions of § 13-45-101 et seq. People ex rel. Metzger v. District Court, 121 Colo. 141, 215 P.2d 327 (1949); Stilley v. Tinsley, 153 Colo. 66, 385 P.2d 677 (1963).

And to issue orders to exhume dead body. The district court wherein the estate of a dead person is filed has statewide jurisdiction to issue orders for the body to be exhumed. Beere v. Miller, 157 Colo. 502, 403 P.2d 862 (1965).

And over professional football games. This section provides no obstacles to a trial court asserting jurisdiction over a case arising out of a professional football game. Hackbart v. Cincinnati Bengals, Inc., 601 F.2d 516 (10th Cir. 1979).

And where proceeding is local in character. Where a proceeding is primarily between individual citizens or groups entirely local in character, and it cannot injuriously affect the people of the state at large, the writ in the nature of quo warranto issued in such a case is not one within the intent of § 3 of this article, and the district court has full jurisdiction to hear and determine the issues herein. Friesen v. People ex rel. Fletcher, 118 Colo. 1, 192 P.2d 430 (1948).

And over water matters. Where a hearing before a district court does not involve beneficial application of water nor matters of priorities of appropriation but with the manner in which water was allowed to run off the land after irrigation, that court as a court of general jurisdiction has power to prevent negligent or deliberate damage--by whatever means--to property and to enforce court orders designed to prevent irreparable injury. Baumgartner v. Stremel, 178 Colo. 209, 496 P.2d 705 (1972).

The fact that the Colorado statutes do not provide for the adjudication of the rights of the United States with priorities prior to the dates of later decrees does not mean that the district courts in a water adjudication cannot determine the rights of the United States in relation to decreed water rights. On the contrary, the district courts have that jurisdiction which is plenary. The Colorado Constitution, without the need of any statute, grants jurisdiction of the subject matter under consideration. United States v. District Court, 169 Colo. 555, 458 P.2d 760 (1969), aff'd, 401 U.S. 520, 91 S. Ct. 998, 28 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1971).

And to determine validity of school bond election. District court has jurisdiction to determine validity of school bond election. Nicholson v. Stewart, 142 Colo. 566, 351 P.2d 461 (1960).

And to review election under local option act. The district court may review an election under the local option act, where fraud on the part of the election officers, the denial of the franchise to legal voters, and the receipt of the ballots of those not voters, in numbers sufficient to change the result, are charged; and it may enjoin the issuance of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, pursuant to such fraudulent election. Patterson v. People ex rel. Parr, 23 Colo. App. 479, 130 P. 618 (1913).

But not to control and supervise an election. This section does not authorize the district courts to control and supervise an election merely because the supreme court has assumed a similar jurisdiction, since to so hold would render the original jurisdiction of the supreme court and the district courts the same, and thereby the supreme court would be entirely without authority to review on appeal or error any judgment in such causes, as conferred by § 2 of this article. People ex rel. Graves v. District Court, 37 Colo. 443, 86 P. 87, 92 P. 958 (1906).

Nor to restrain agency's statutory functions. A district court does not have jurisdiction to restrain an administrative agency from performing its statutory functions. State Bd. of Cosmetology v. District Court, 187 Colo. 175, 530 P.2d 1278 (1974).

Nor to interfere with executive branch's statutory duties. District courts do not have jurisdiction to interfere with the executive branch of the government in the performance of its statutory duties. Moore v. District Court, 184 Colo. 63, 518 P.2d 948 (1974).

District court has general subject matter jurisdiction over probate matters in all jurisdictions other than the city and county of Denver, though probate cases are typically assigned to the court's probate division for reasons of efficiency, administration, and convenience. Pierce v. Francis, 194 P.3d 505 (Colo. App. 2008).

In determining proper jurisdiction as between district court and probate court, the court must look at the facts alleged, claims asserted, and the relief requested. Here, where the complaints were premised upon defendant's alleged legal malpractice in the drafting of the estate instruments, the estate planning, and the implementation of the estate plan, the complaints were not considered probate claims, and, therefore, jurisdiction lay with the district court not the probate court. Levine v. Katz, 192 P.3d 1008 (Colo. App. 2006).

Probate court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over claims of legal malpractice where plaintiff does not seek to recover assets of the estate. Levine v. Katz, 167 P.3d 141 (Colo. App. 2006).

Provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act establishing that administrative law judges employed by the division of administrative hearings have original jurisdiction over matters arising under the act do not violate the constitutional conferment of jurisdiction on district courts, as the parties in workers' compensation proceedings have expressly surrendered common law rights, remedies, and proceedings in exchange for the benefits of the act. MGM Supply Co. v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 62 P.3d 1001 (Colo. App. 2002).

Article V, § 10, allowing general assembly to judge qualifications of members, does not limit authority of courts under this section to determine election controversies when no candidate declared duly elected. State constitutional provisions and statutes permitting general assembly to judge election of members does not limit subject matter jurisdiction of district court to hear controversies related to elections where no candidate is yet declared duly elected by secretary of state. Meyer v. Lamm, 846 P.2d 862 (Colo. 1993).

"Criminal cases" not defined in constitution. The constitution itself does not define the phrase "criminal cases" nor does it create or define crimes, except as to treason. Hence, it is the general assembly which has the power to create and define crimes. People ex rel. Terrell v. District Court, 164 Colo. 437, 435 P.2d 763 (1967).

Although district courts have general jurisdiction over criminal cases pursuant to this section, it is the constitutional prerogative of the legislature to define crimes and to establish affirmative defenses for acts that might otherwise be criminal. People v. Gilliland, 769 P.2d 477 (Colo. 1989).

In any criminal case in which the court's jurisdiction is put at issue, the burden is on the prosecution to show that the court, whether district or county, has jurisdiction to hear the criminal case. People v. Jachnik, 116 P.3d 1278 (Colo. App. 2005).

Criminal trial court has ancillary jurisdiction to entertain defendant's post-sentence motion for return of property and enter orders resolving the matter. People v. Hargrave, 179 P.3d 226 (Colo. App. 2007).

Delinquency proceeding is not criminal case even though the adjudication of delinquency in a given case may rest upon the commission of acts by a juvenile that, if committed by an adult, would be deemed felonious. People ex rel. Rodello v. District Court, 164 Colo. 530, 436 P.2d 672 (1968).

There is a very fundamental difference between a criminal proceeding and a delinquency proceeding, and the clear legislative intent is that the handling of juvenile delinquents should be oriented towards rehabilitation and reformation, and not punishment as such, even though the actions of the child if committed by an adult would justify a criminal proceeding. People ex rel. Terrell v. District Court, 164 Colo. 437, 435 P.2d 763(1967).

Strictly speaking, proceedings concerning delinquent, dependent or neglected children or adoptions or relinquishment proceedings and the like are neither " a civil or criminal case". Garcia v. District Court, 157 Colo. 432, 403 P.2d 215 (1965).

Thus, district court retains jurisdiction in criminal cases. The district court still has its original jurisdiction in all criminal cases, the children's code simply limiting and restricting the institution of felony charges against children under 18 years of age. People ex rel. Terrell v. District Court, 164 Colo. 437, 435 P.2d 763 (1967).

And attempt to vest exclusive jurisdiction of certain criminal cases in juvenile court conflicts with section. A legislative effort to vest in the juvenile court of the city and county of Denver exclusive jurisdiction of those cases where a person under 16 years of age is charged with a crime punishable by death or life imprisonment is in direct conflict with this constitutional mandate that the district courts shall have original jurisdiction in all criminal cases. Garcia v. District Court, 157 Colo. 432, 403 P.2d 215 (1965).

Probate court cannot entertain collateral attack on district court judgment affecting will. Constitutional and statutory provisions vest in the probate court the authority to decide, inter alia, matters relating to the probate of wills. They do not, however, confer authority upon the probate court to disregard the rules relating to collateral attacks on judgments and to set aside a divorce decree of a district court which has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter. In re Estate of Bonfils, 190 Colo. 70, 543 P.2d 701 (1975).

Implied jurisdiction of water judge. It is inconceivable that the general assembly intended to grant water judge, who is a district judge, jurisdiction with respect to priorities but to bar him from determining the effect of a prior contract upon the priorities awarded. This jurisdiction is implied in the constitution and the statute. In re Application for Water Rights of Fort Lyon Canal Co., 184 Colo. 219, 519 P.2d 954 (1974); Oliver v. District Court, 190 Colo. 524, 549 P.2d 770 (1976).

Where a covenant in a deed required the grantee to maintain a certain reservoir level; the covenant was the subject of a suit for injunctive relief in the district court; and the covenant would affect the outcome of a suit pending in the water court, the district court suit was ancillary to that in the water court and could be transferred to the water court for determination. Oliver v. District Court, 190 Colo. 524, 549 P.2d 770 (1976).

District court had jurisdiction to find that certain records used in grand jury proceedings were subject to statutory provisions of secrecy. People v. Tynan, 701 P.2d 80 (Colo. App. 1984).

Actual controversy between adverse parties must exist if a court is to sua sponte address the constitutionality of a statute. Juvenile court's ruling that statute was unconstitutional was impermissible exercise of judicial authority since the issue was raised on behalf of unidentified parties that were not before the court on court's own motion in order to create a controversy that it then proceeded to decide. In re Tomlinson, 851 P.2d 170 (Colo. 1993).

Exercise of jurisdiction not precluded by absence of statute. The absence of a statute or constitutional provision which specifically designates a forum or spells out standards for decision will not preclude exercise of a court's jurisdiction, even where the subject matter would not have been subject to judicial authority at common law. In re A.W., 637 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1981).

Determination of subject matter jurisdiction. To determine whether the district court has subject matter jurisdiction, the court of appeals will rely on the nature and the substance of the proceeding, rather than its name. State ex rel. Colo. Dept. of Health v. I.D.I., Inc., 642 P.2d 14 (Colo. App. 1981).

Courts of general jurisdiction may issue common-law writs, including those in the nature of mandamus to inferior tribunals, boards, agencies, and officers of the state. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Jurisdiction to hear matters dealing with injunctions against abuse of judicial process by pro se litigants. A district court may enjoin a litigant from filing suits pro se within any county in the district upon a finding of a serious abuse of judicial process. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Winslow, 706 P.2d 792 (Colo. 1985).

Jurisdiction over incompetents. A court's inherent parens patriae jurisdiction over incompetents may extend to decisions involving irrevocable consequences for the incompetent individual. In re A.W., 637 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1981).

Jurisdiction to consider petition for sterilization of mentally retarded minor. Since the provisions of the Colorado revised statutes concerning sterilization of mentally retarded persons do not address the issue of sterilization of a minor, it is within the district court's inherent authority to consider a petition for sterilization of a minor and, in the absence of legislative pronouncement, it is proper and necessary for the supreme court to promulgate standards for determining the circumstances under which such a procedure may be performed. In re A.W., 637 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1981).

A district court acting in its probate capacity has the power in the absence of statutory authorization to act on a petition for sterilization of a mentally retarded minor. In re A.W., 637 P.2d 366 (Colo. 1981).

Jurisdiction to appoint conservator for nursing home. The district court has subject matter jurisdiction to appoint a "conservator" to manage a nursing home. State ex rel. Colo. Dept. of Health v. I.D.I., Inc., 642 P.2d 14 (Colo. App. 1981).

Decision of board of parole to grant or deny parole is clearly discretionary since parole is a privilege, and no prisoner is entitled to it as a matter of right. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Person denied parole can seek judicial review only as provided by C.R.C.P. 106(a)(2). In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

When board of parole fails to exercise duties, courts have power to review. It is only when the Colorado state board of parole has failed to exercise its statutory duties that the courts of Colorado have the power to review the board's actions. In re Question Concerning State Judicial Review, 199 Colo. 463, 610 P.2d 1340 (1980).

Right of plaintiff to select forum for claim less than $5,000 is not conditioned by constitution or by statute; rather, the general assembly has seen fit to permit a claimant to file such actions in district court unconstrained by considerations of whether the county court is an adequate forum for just resolution of the complaint and of any increased costs to the public incident to the district court adjudicative process. Cook v. District Court ex rel. County of Weld, 670 P.2d 758 (Colo. 1983).

Dismissal of plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief on grounds of lack of jurisdiction was proper. State courts do not possess any power to restrain or enjoin federal court proceedings even though they may share concurrent jurisdiction in in personam actions. President's Co. v. Whistle, 812 P.2d 1194 (Colo. App. 1991).

District court has no jurisdiction to decide constitutionality of disciplinary rule as such jurisdiction lies exclusively with the supreme court. Colo. Supreme Ct. v. District Court, 850 P.2d 150 (Colo. 1993).

Dismissal of plaintiff's request for declaratory judgment was proper. State shared concurrent jurisdiction with federal court on in personam action for declaratory judgment, but issues it would settle would necessarily be settled by the pending federal action and the federal court's final determination of the issues would be dispositive of all issues before the state court, precluding the necessity of a duplicative state court determination. President's Co. v. Whistle, 812 P.2d 1194 (Colo. App. 1991).

District courts do not have subject matter jurisdiction to compel the commission on judicial discipline, created in § 23 of art. VI, Colo. Const., or its executive director to investigate a complaint alleging judicial misconduct. The trial court properly dismissed plaintiff's motion brought under C.R.C.P. 106 (a). Higgins v. Owens, 13 P.3d 837 (Colo. App. 2000).

Section 12 of art. VII, Colo. Const., does not limit exercise of equity powers granted to the district court by this section. Nicholson v. Stewart, 142 Colo. 566, 351 P.2d 461 (1960).

Section 15 of this article does not override this section. Garcia v. District Court, 157 Colo. 432, 403 P.2d 215 (1965).

Temporary assignment of judges. Both district and county court judges, active and retired, are subject to temporary assignment by the chief justice from one county or district to another in order to expedite the business of the courts. Bacher v. District Court, 186 Colo. 314, 527 P.2d 56 (1974).

Question of whether county court judge may hear a felony case is a matter of authority not jurisdiction. The hearings and trial are still held in district court since that is where the case was filed, thus jurisdiction is not a question. People v. Sherrod, 204 P.3d 466 (Colo. 2009).

Nunc pro tunc order giving county court judge authority to hear a district court case is a legitimate means to correct irregularities in the record. The judge was otherwise qualified to act as a district court judge, so the lack of an appointment order was an irregularity in the record. Thus, the nunc pro tunc order properly documents the legality of the judge's action. People v. Sherrod, 204 P.3d 466 (Colo. 2009).

Section 10. Judicial districts - district judges. (1) The state shall be divided into judicial districts. Such districts shall be formed of compact territory and be bounded by county lines. The judicial districts as provided by law on the effective date of this amendment shall constitute the judicial districts of the state until changed. The general assembly may by law, whenever two-thirds of the members of each house concur therein, change the boundaries of any district or increase or diminish the number of judicial districts.

(2) In each judicial district there shall be one or more judges of the district court. The full term of office of a district judge shall be six years.

(3) The number of district judges provided by law for each district on the effective date of this amendment shall constitute the number of judges for the district until changed. The general assembly may by law, whenever two-thirds of the members of each house concur therein, increase or diminish the number of district judges, except that the office of a district judge may not be abolished until completion of the term for which he was elected or appointed, but he may be required to serve in a judicial district other than the one for which elected, as long as such district encompasses his county of residence.

(4) Separate divisions of district courts may be established in districts by law, or in the absence of any such law, by rule of court.

Annotator's note. Since this section in substantially similar to former §§ 12 and 14 of this article, relevant cases construing §§ 12 and 14 have been included in the annotations to this section.

Each judge authorized to exercise powers of court. By the provisions of this section, providing for an increase in the number of judges of a district, each of the judges therein provided for is authorized to exercise the powers of a district court. Jordan v. People, 19 Colo. 417, 36 P. 218 (1894).

"Term of office" as used in this section meant the period or limit of time during which the incumbent was permitted to hold. People ex rel. Bentley v. Le Fevre, 21 Colo. 218, 40 P. 882 (1895).

Prior law as to terms of judges. Under a similar provision in effect prior to the adoption of the present section, judges of the district court who were elected at the regular sexennial election held their offices for the term of six years, and those elected to fill a vacancy held only for the unexpired term. People ex rel. Bentley v. Le Fevre, 21 Colo. 218, 40 P. 882 (1895).

Section has no relation to legislation changing county from one district to another. The increase, diminution, or change of boundaries in the judicial districts, or in the number of judges in any district, referred to in this section is such as is brought about by the formation of a new district or the abolition of an existing one. The section has no relation to legislation changing a county from one district to another, so as not to abolish any district. In re Senate Resolution No. 9, 54 Colo. 429, 131 P. 257 (1913).

Change of county from one district to another does not effect removal of judges. Where a county is changed from one district to another, the judge of the latter district will thereafter preside in the district court of such county; neither of the judges of the district from which the county is taken is thereby removed from office. In re Senate Resolution No. 9, 54 Colo. 429, 131 P. 257 (1913).

Boundary restriction placed on this section by section 24(3) of this article. As the amendatory provision of section 24(3) of this article provides that there will be seven members of each judicial nominating commission, the provision placed a restriction upon this section in that the boundaries of any district may not be increased so that any district embraces more than seven counties. In re Interrogatories by Senate, 168 Colo. 563, 452 P.2d 382 (1969).

Section 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., does not improperly delegate power to alter judicial district boundaries. In view of this section, providing that the general assembly may increase or diminish the number of judicial districts, the provisions of § 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., do not amount to an improper delegation of legislative power to Denver even though annexations to Denver result in changing the boundaries of judicial districts, since there remains with the general assembly the power to increase or diminish the number of judicial districts. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed for want of substantial federal question, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Section 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., does not delegate to the city council of Denver the power to alter at will the congressional, legislative, judicial, and school district boundaries. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed for want of substantial federal question, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

No authority to decide case after elevation to court of appeals. A trial judge has no authority to decide a case after he has taken office as a judge of the Colorado court of appeals. Merchants Mtg. & Trust Corp. v. Jenkins, 659 P.2d 690 (Colo. 1983).

And any such order entered is void. Absent constitutional or statutory authorization, a former district court judge does not have authority to act in a judicial capacity, and orders entered by such a person after he ceases to be a district court judge are void. Merchants Mtg. & Trust Corp. v. Jenkins, 659 P.2d 690 (Colo. 1983).

Applied in Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 417, 8 P. 661 (1885); In re Election of Dist. Judges, 11 Colo. 373, 18 P. 282 (1888); Jordan v. People, 19 Colo. 417, 36 P. 218 (1894); Bigcraft v. People, 30 Colo. 298, 70 P. 417 (1902).

Section 11. Qualifications of district judges. No person shall be eligible to the office of district judge unless he shall be a qualified elector of the judicial district at the time of his election or selection and shall have been licensed to practice law in this state for five years. Each judge of the district court shall be a resident of his district during his term of office.

Annotator's note. Since this section is substantially similar to former §§ 16 and 29, relevant cases construing §§ 16 and 29 have been included in the annotations to this section.

"Residence" here means an actual, as distinguished from a legal or constructive, residence, or, its equivalent, domicile. People ex rel.

Post v. Owers, 29 Colo. 535, 69 P. 515 (1902).

The word "reside" may, and sometimes does, have different meanings in the same or different articles or sections of a constitution or statute, but the direction that a district judge shall reside within his district, manifestly was not intended for his convenience, but for the benefit of the people, whose servant he is. People ex rel. Post v. Owers, 29 Colo. 535, 69 P. 515 (1902).

Person is elector within judicial district where his domicile is within such district. The requirement of this section that a person to be eligible to the office of district judge, shall at the time of his election be an elector within the judicial district is met by showing that at the time of election a district judge had his domicile or legal or constructive residence, as distinguished from his actual abiding place, within the district. People ex rel. Post v. Owers, 29 Colo. 535, 69 P. 515 (1902).

It is not necessary for a district judge actually to reside and be physically present in his judicial district every hour, or day, or week, or month or continuously every year during his term of office. If, however, he has removed his actual residence from his district, and does not purpose to return, or intends to maintain his actual residence outside his district indefinitely, or for any considerable portion of his term, the section would be ignored. People ex rel. Post v. Owers, 29 Colo. 535, 69 P. 515 (1902).

But naked declaration of intention to maintain actual residence in district is not conclusive. The naked declaration of a district judge of his intention to maintain his actual residence in his district would not be conclusive of the question. People ex rel. Post v. Owers, 29 Colo. 535, 69 P. 515 (1902).

Absence of eight months from district because of health held not to work forfeiture of office. See People ex rel. Post v. Owers, 29 Colo. 535, 69 P. 515 (1902).

A properly appointed judge, despite even a concealed violation of the constitutional residency requirement, does not lose his or her authority to act as a judge merely because of the violation, and that authority may not be collaterally attacked. Relative Value Studies, Inc. v. McGraw-Hill Cos., 981 P.2d 687 (Colo. App. 1999).

Section 12. Terms of court. The time of holding courts within the judicial districts shall be as provided by rule of court, but at least one term of the district court shall be held annually in each county.

At least one term of court must be held each year, even though C.R.C.P. 121(a) has been repealed. People v. Gould, 844 P.2d 1273 (Colo. App. 1992).

DISTRICT ATTORNEYS

Section 13. District attorneys - election - term - salary - qualifications. In each judicial district there shall be a district attorney elected by the electors thereof, whose term of office shall be four years. District attorneys shall receive such salaries and perform such duties as provided by law. No person shall be eligible to the office of district attorney who shall not, at the time of his election possess all the qualifications of district court judges as provided in this article. All district attorneys holding office on the effective date of this amendment shall continue in office for the remainder of the respective terms for which they were elected or appointed.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since this section is substantially the same as former § 21 of this article, relevant cases construing § 21 have been included in the annotations to this section.

District attorney is by law a dignified and important officer of the state, ordained and provided for by the constitution. Stainer v. San Luis Valley Land & Mining Co., 166 F. 220 (1908).

And is member of executive rather than judicial branch. While a district attorney is an officer of the court as any other attorney, a district attorney is not a judicial officer nor a part of the judicial branch of the government. A district attorney belongs to the executive branch. People v. District Court, 186 Colo. 335, 527 P.2d 50 (1974).

The district attorney, although elected from a judicial district as provided in this section, is not a member of the judiciary. Rather, the district attorney is an executive officer of the state. Beacom v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 657 P.2d 440 (Colo. 1983).

And is not county or precinct officer. The district attorney is an elected officer in a judicial district which may include one or more counties; he is not a county or precinct officer. People ex rel. Losavio v. Gentry, 199 Colo. 153, 606 P.2d 856 (1980).

Prosecutor has constitutional power to exercise his discretion in deciding which of several possible charges to press in a prosecution. Myers v. District Court, 184 Colo. 81, 518 P.2d 836 (1974).

Where reasonable distinctions can be drawn between a specific statute and a general statute, it is a matter of prosecutorial discretion for the district attorney to choose under which statute he will prosecute. People v. Trigg, 184 Colo. 78, 518 P.2d 841 (1974).

In determining whom to prosecute for criminal activity and on what charge, a prosecutor has wide discretion. People v. MacFarland, 189 Colo. 363, 540 P.2d 1073 (1975); Dresner v. County Court, 189 Colo.

374, 540 P.2d 1085 (1975); Gansz v. People, 888 P.2d 256 (Colo. 1995).

Ultimate discretionary charging authority is vested in the district attorney and, unless such authority is delegated, a defendant may not assert that some other person exercised authority to make a binding governmental promise. Lucero v. Goldberger, 804 P.2d 206 (Colo. App. 1990).

Test to determine whether prosecutor absolutely or only qualifiedly immune from suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for certain acts. Factors to be considered in determining whether acts of prosecutor are "advocatory" in nature and absolutely immune or "investigative" or "administrative" functions and only qualifiedly immune: (1) Whether the challenged conduct occurred prior to or subsequent to the filing of formal criminal charges against the person seeking redress; (2) whether there existed safeguards that could deter or mitigate prosecutorial abuse and thus reduce the need for a civil action to redress the violation of constitutional rights; and (3) whether the challenged conduct more closely resembled traditional police conduct than prosecutorial conduct. Florey v. District Court, 713 P.2d 840 (Colo. 1985).

Prosecutors absolutely immune from suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for "advocatory" functions closely related to the judicial process, but only qualifiedly immune from suit for "investigative" or "administrative" functions, which have a more attenuated connection with the judicial process. Florey v. District Court, 713 P.2d 840 (Colo. 1985).

ANNOTATION

This section does not override section 9 of this article. Garcia v. District Court, 157 Colo. 432, 403 P.2d 215 (1965).

A legislative effort to vest in the juvenile court of the city and county of Denver exclusive jurisdiction of those cases where a person under 16 years of age is charged with a crime punishable by death or life imprisonment is in direct conflict with the constitutional mandate that the district courts shall have original jurisdiction in all criminal cases. Garcia v. District Court, 157 Colo. 432, 403 P.2d 215 (1965).

Jurisdiction over controversies arising outside areas encompassed in § 13-8-103. The Denver juvenile court has no general jurisdiction to litigate controversies arising outside the jurisdictional areas encompassed within section 13-8-103. City & County of Denver v. Brockhurst Boys Ranch, Inc., 195 Colo. 22, 575 P.2d 843 (1978).

Juvenile courts are creatures of statute and their jurisdiction does not extend beyond that established by the General Assembly. In re De La Cruz, 791 P.2d 1254 (Colo. App. 1990).

Actual controversy between adverse parties must exist if a court is to sua sponte address the constitutionality of a statute. Juvenile court's ruling that statute was unconstitutional was impermissible exercise of judicial authority since the issue was raised on behalf of unidentified parties that were not before the court on court's own motion in order to create a controversy that it then proceeded to decide. In re Tomlinson, 851 P.2d 170 (Colo. 1993).

Applied in People in Interest of an Unborn Child v. Estergard, 169 Colo. 445, 457 P.2d 698 (1969).

COUNTY COURTS

Section 16. County judges - terms - qualifications. In each county there shall be one or more judges of the county court as may be provided by law, whose full term of office shall be four years, and whose qualifications shall be prescribed by law. County judges shall be qualified electors of their counties at the time of their election or appointment.

County judge is state and not county officer. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

County judge is county officer within the meaning of the constitution. In re Compensation of County Judges, 18 Colo. 272, 32 P. 549 (1893).

Charter of city and county of Denver changing provisions relating to county judges held unconstitutional. People ex rel. Miller v. Johnson, 34 Colo. 143, 86 P. 233 (1905).

But acts of judge elected thereunder held valid. Although such provisions were unconstitutional, a county judge elected and discharging the duties of such office thereunder was discharging the duties of a legally existing office by virtue of an election under a charter provision declared invalid by this court, and that all of his acts in the discharge of the duties of such office must be upheld as the acts of a de facto officer. Butler v. Phillips, 38 Colo. 378, 88 P. 480 (1906).

Section 17. County courts - jurisdiction - appeals. County courts shall have such civil, criminal, and appellate jurisdiction as may be provided by law, provided such courts shall not have jurisdiction of felonies or in civil cases where the boundaries or title to real property shall be in question. Appellate review by the supreme court or the district courts of every final judgment of the county courts shall be as provided by law.

II. JURISDICTION.

A. In General.

County court is court of record. Herren v. People, 147 Colo. 442, 363 P.2d 1044 (1961).

And inferior tribunal of limited jurisdiction. A county court is an inferior tribunal and is thereby of limited jurisdiction. Swanson v. Prout, 127 Colo. 550, 259 P.2d 280 (1953).

It is the duty of the supreme court to rule strictly with regard to matters of jurisdiction of inferior courts to the end that such courts are kept within the limits of their jurisdiction. Swanson v. Prout, 127 Colo. 550, 259 P.2d 280 (1953).

This section makes of the county court a tribunal of limited jurisdiction. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906).

Jurisdiction of county court in civil cases not fixed by constitution; but it is expressly declared that such jurisdiction may, within certain definite limits, be prescribed by law, and also that appeals may be taken from the county to the district court in such cases as may be provided by law. In re Rogers, 14 Colo. 18, 22 P. 1053 (1890).

Nor is territorial limit to civil jurisdiction. No territorial limit is fixed by the constitution to the civil jurisdiction either of the district courts or of the county courts. Fletcher v. Stowell, 17 Colo. 94, 28 P. 326 (1891).

Wide discretion given general assembly to determine county courts' jurisdiction. As shown by this section, a wide discretion was given to the general assembly to determine the jurisdiction of the newly created county courts. Rowland v. Theobald, 159 Colo. 1, 409 P.2d 272 (1965).

Such jurisdiction as may be provided by "law", as that word is used in this section, obviously means "law" which is enacted by the legislative department of the state government which the constitution has created. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906).

Municipality cannot legislate with respect to jurisdiction and procedure of state courts. The charter convention by its charter, or the city council by its ordinance, though each instrument is a law local and municipal in its nature and controlling in local matters, cannot legislate with respect to the jurisdiction and procedure of the state courts, which necessarily are matters of governmental nature and state importance, and reserved exclusively for action by the general assembly. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906).

The jurisdiction of district and county courts is concurrent with respect to matters which fall within the jurisdiction of both. Ohmie v. Martinez, 141 Colo. 480, 349 P.2d 131 (1960).

But county courts are, in point of jurisdiction, inferior to district courts. The original jurisdiction of the district courts is, by the constitution, general and unlimited, subject only to reasonable statutory regulation, and the lawful supervision of the supreme court; while the jurisdiction of the county courts is limited, and, with certain exceptions, purely statutory. Hence, as compared with the district courts, county courts are in point of jurisdiction inferior. In re Rogers, 14 Colo. 18, 22 P. 1053 (1890).

Service of county court judges as judges of municipal and police courts. The 1962 judicial amendments envisioned that the county court judges could serve not only as judges of the county court but also as judges of municipal and police courts created under powers of home rule cities. Blackman v. County Court ex rel. City & County of Denver, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969).

By the 1962 judicial amendment the justice of the peace courts were eliminated from the Colorado judicial system and the jurisdiction therefore vested in such courts was transferred to the county courts. This plan envisioned that the county court judges could serve not only as judges of the county court but also as judges of municipal and police courts. Francis v. County Court, 175 Colo. 308, 487 P.2d 375 (1971).

Service of county court judges as district court judges. A county court judge may be appointed to serve as a district court judge in accordance with statutory, constitutional, or chief justice directive provisions. The question of whether such appointment is valid is jurisdictional, therefore the de facto judge doctrine does not apply. Even though some may regard the error in making the appointment as a technical defect, it concerns the fundamental interest of litigants in ensuring that qualified county court judges are called upon to serve as acting district court judges. People v. Torkelson, 22 P.3d 560 (Colo. App. 2000).

Although this section states that county courts cannot hear felonies, § 5 (3) of this article limits such prohibition and allows a county court judge to sit as a district court judge and exercise the jurisdiction of the district court when assigned by the chief justice. Moreover, the chief justice may delegate this authority to the chief judges of the districts under § 5 (4) of this article. People v. Johnson, 77 P.3d 845 (Colo. App. 2003).

Absent a valid appointment order, a county court judge lacks jurisdiction to act as a district court judge and preside over any stage of a felony trial; thus, a verdict reached under such circumstances is void. People v. Jachnik, 116 P.3d 1278 (Colo. App. 2005).

In any criminal case in which the court's jurisdiction is put at issue, the burden is on the prosecution to show that the court, whether district or county, has jurisdiction to hear the criminal case. People v. Jachnik, 116 P.3d 1278 (Colo. App. 2005).

Forcible entry and detainer action in county court is limited to question of possession. Aasgaard v. Spar Consol. Mining & Dev. Co., 185 Colo. 157, 522 P.2d 726 (1974).

And title to land involved may not be an issue for resolution in a county court. Aasgaard v. Spar Consol. Mining & Dev. Co., 185 Colo. 157, 522 P.2d 726 (1974).

Applied in Currier v. Johnson, 31 Colo. 126, 72 P. 55 (1903); Kingdom of Yugo-Slavia v. Jovanovich, 100 Colo. 406, 69 P.2d 311 (1937); Latham v. People, 136 Colo. 252, 317 P.2d 894 (1957); People v. Superior Court, 175 Colo. 391, 488 P.2d 66 (1971).

B. Jurisdictional Amount.

Determination of jurisdictional amount. In proceedings to recover a tax illegally imposed, the jurisdiction of the county court is determined by the amount demanded, and not by the value of the property alleged to have been improperly assessed. Foster v. Hart Consol. Mining Co., 52 Colo. 429, 122 P. 54 (1912).

Case removed to federal court. A case removed from a county court to a federal court is subject to the limitations and restrictions which would have been applicable in the county court if it had not been removed into the federal court. Thus where the amount demanded exceeds the jurisdiction of the county court, the federal court is also without jurisdiction. Hummel v. Moore, 25 F. 380 (D. Colo. 1885).

Claimants may file claims less than $5,000 in district court. The right of a plaintiff to select the forum for a claim less than $5,000 is not conditioned by constitution or by statute; rather, the general assembly has seen fit to permit a claimant to file such actions in district court unconstrained by considerations of whether the county court is an adequate forum for just resolution of the complaint and of any increased costs to the public incident to the district court adjudicative process. Cook v. District Court ex rel. County of Weld, 670 P.2d 758 (Colo. 1983).

III. REVIEW.

The right of appeal from county court to district court is statutory and not constitutional. Andrews v. Lull, 139 Colo. 536, 341 P.2d 475 (1959).

Appellate jurisdiction of district court applies only to judgments rendered in ordinary civil actions. Appellate jurisdiction of a district court in appeals from final judgments of a county court, applies only to judgments rendered in ordinary civil actions; no such jurisdiction exists in special statutory proceedings where the right of appeal is statutory and not constitutional. Andrews v. Lull, 139 Colo. 536, 341 P.2d 475 (1959).

From decisions of county court, appeals and writs of certiorari lie to district court. There is no other way in which the district court can acquire jurisdiction of any matter pertaining to the administration of an estate, except where the county judge is himself interested in the estate. McKinnon v. Hall, 10 Colo. App. 291, 50 P. 1052 (1897).

Applied in Swenson v. Girard Ins. Co., 4 Colo. 475 (1878); Jeffries v. Harrington, 11 Colo. 191, 17 P. 505 (1887); Fletcher v. Smith, 18 Colo. App. 201, 70 P. 697 (1893); Unzicker v. Unzicker, 74 Colo. 211, 220 P. 495 (1923).

MISCELLANEOUS

Section 18. Compensation and services. Justices and judges of courts of record shall receive such compensation as may be provided by law, which may be increased but may not be decreased during their term of office and shall receive such pension or retirement benefits as may be provided by law. No justice or judge of a court of record shall accept designation or nomination for any public office other than judicial without first resigning from his judicial office, nor shall he hold at any other time any other public office during his term of office, nor hold office in any political party organization, nor contribute to or campaign for any political party or candidate for political office. No supreme court justice, judge of any intermediate appellate court, district court judge, probate judge, or juvenile judge shall engage in the practice of law. Justices, district judges, probate judges, and juvenile judges when called upon to do so, may serve in any state court with full authority as provided by law. Any county judge may serve in any other county court, or serve, as hereinafter may be authorized by law, in any other court, if possessing the qualifications prescribed by law for a judge of such county court, or other court, or as a municipal judge or police magistrate as provided by law, or in the case of home rule cities as provided by charter and ordinances.

1997 amendment to § 13-30-103 does not violate this section where the amended statute specifically provides that the adoption of the new formula for calculating county court judges' salaries will not have the effect of reducing any judge's salary. Alderton v. State of Colo., 17 P.3d 817 (Colo. App. 2000).

This section does not prohibit pensioning of judges. Bedford v. White, 106 Colo. 439, 106 P.2d 469 (1940).

County judges exercise municipal as well as state jurisdiction. Pursuant to the express authority of § 2 of art. XX, Colo. Const., county judges may exercise not only state jurisdiction but also municipal jurisdiction, if provided by charter and ordinance. Blackman v. County Court, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969).

When acting pursuant to this article the court functions as a state court, and the judge as a state judge; whereas, acting pursuant to § 6 of art. XX, Colo. Const., the court functions as a municipal or police court, and the judge as a municipal or police judge. Blackman v. County Court, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969).

Judge cannot decide case after elevation to court of appeals. A trial judge has no authority to decide a case after he has taken office as a judge of the Colorado court of appeals. Merchants Mtg. & Trust Corp. v. Jenkins, 659 P.2d 690 (Colo. 1983).

And any such order entered is void. Absent constitutional or statutory authorization, a former district court judge does not have authority to act in a judicial capacity, and orders entered by such a person after he ceases to be a district court judge are void. Merchants Mtg. & Trust Corp. v. Jenkins, 659 P.2d 690 (Colo. 1983).

Section 19. Laws relating to courts - uniform. All laws relating to state courts shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state, and except as hereafter in this section specified the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all courts of the same class, and the force and effect of the proceedings, judgments and decrees of such courts severally shall be uniform. County courts may be classified or graded as may be provided by law, and the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of county courts within the same class or grade, and the force and effect of the proceedings, judgments and decrees of county courts in the same class or grade shall be uniform; provided, however, that the organization and administration of the county court of the city and county of Denver shall be as provided in the charter and ordinances of the city and county of Denver.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For comment on Holland v. McAuliffe appearing below, see 28 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 437 (1956).

Annotator's note. Since this section is substantially the same as former § 28 of this article, relevant cases construing § 28 have been included in the annotations to this section.

Purpose of section. The purpose in framing this section was to have all laws thereafter adopted in relation to courts general and of uniform operation throughout the state; also to require that statutes providing for the organization and defining the jurisdiction, practice or procedure of courts of the same class or grade, be so drawn as to secure to such courts an organization, jurisdiction, practice and procedure in all respects similar. Rogers v. People, 9 Colo. 450, 12 P. 843 (1886).

This section was not intended to inhibit the passage of statutes entirely upon other subjects, and sanctioned by other constitutional provisions, which, however, might incidentally and remotely operate to disturb, for the time being, the territorial uniformity of jurisdiction possessed by courts of the same class or grade. Rogers v. People, 9 Colo. 450, 12 P. 843 (1886); People v. Johnson, 987 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1998).

The restrictive language of this section does not require uniformity in all laws, but, rather, requires uniformity only in laws relating to the "organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all courts of the same class". Thus, this section has been applied only in situations dealing with the uniformity of burdens and rights in courts of the same class. People v. Johnson, 987 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1998).

Even though the direct-file statute permits a prosecutor to treat similarly situated juveniles differently, the plain language of the statute indicates that its mandates are to be applied uniformly across the state, and no more is required under this section of the constitution. People v. Johnson, 987 P.2d 855 (Colo. App. 1998).

Both mandatory and prohibitory. This section expressly requires the enactment of a general law which shall have a uniform operation throughout the state for the above mentioned purposes. The case is enumerated in the constitution, and its provisions are both mandatory and prohibitory. Ex parte Stout, 5 Colo. 509 (1881).

No discretion is invested in the general assembly concerning the character of the law by which the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings and practice of these courts shall be prescribed and regulated. The direction is peremptory that it shall be a general law of uniform operation throughout the state. Ex parte Stout, 5 Colo. 509 (1881).

And not expected to insure uniformity in judicial decisions. This provision deals with legislation. It is the laws pertaining to the organization, jurisdiction, etc., of courts, also the legal force and effect of the judgments, not the judgments themselves, that are to be uniform. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 26 P. 929 (1891).

Statute that permits relocation of Arapahoe district courts outside of county seat does not violate requirement that laws relating to the state courts be uniform. City of Littleton v. County Comm'rs, 787 P.2d 158 (Colo. 1990).

This section limits power of general assembly to establish other courts. The power of the general assembly is to establish other courts or judicial officers, as long as such other courts or judicial officers are inferior, jurisdictionally speaking, that is, to the supreme court subject to certain limitations, such as this section, which are themselves in the Colorado constitution. Sanders v. District Court, 166 Colo. 455, 444 P.2d 645 (1968).

"Law", as that word is used in this section, obviously means "law" which is enacted by the legislative department of the state government which the constitution has created. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906).

It is not within power of municipality to prescribe by ordinance manner and details of appeal. Holland v. McAuliffe, 132 Colo. 170, 286 P.2d 1107 (1955).

A municipality cannot, by ordinance, legally provide the right of appeal to a state court, because such extramural power can be exercised only when authorized by the general assembly or granted by the people, and an ordinance attempting to define such right is wholly invalid. Holland v. McAuliffe, 132 Colo. 170, 286 P.2d 1107 (1955).

And right to jury trials for petty offenses may not be changed by municipal court. It is consistent with the philosophy of this section to hold that the legislative grant of the right to jury trials for petty offenses is a substantive matter of statewide concern which cannot be changed by a municipal court. Hardamon v. Municipal Court, 178 Colo. 271, 497 P.2d 1000 (1972).

Applied in People v. Curley, 5 Colo. 412 (1880); Ex parte White, 5 Colo. 521 (1881); Ex parte Stout, 5 Colo. 509 (1881); Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 417, 8 P. 661 (1885); In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill No. 76, 9 Colo. 623, 21 P. 471 (1886); Parker v. People, 13 Colo. 155, 21 P. 1120, 4 L.R.A. 803 (1889); Heinssen v. State, 14 Colo. 228, 23 P. 995 (1890); In re Dolph, 17 Colo. 35, 28 P. 470 (1891); McInerney v. City of Denver, 17 Colo. 302, 29 P. 516 (1892); Johnson v. People, 6 Colo. App. 163, 40 P. 576 (1895); Bd. of Comm'rs v. First Nat'l Bank, 24 Colo. 124, 48 P. 1043 (1897), aff'g 6 Colo. App. 423, 40 P. 894 (1895); Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906); Selk v. Ramsey, 110 Colo. 223, 132 P.2d 454 (1942); City of Central v. Axton, 159 Colo. 69, 410 P.2d 173 (1966); Sanders v. District Court, 166 Colo. 455, 444 P.2d 645 (1968); Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982); Sky Chefs v. City & County of Denver, 653 P.2d 402 (Colo. 1982); R. Lloyd Co. v. District Court, 732 P.2d 612 (Colo. 1987).

Section 20. Vacancies. (1) A vacancy in any judicial office in any court of record shall be filled by appointment of the governor, from a list of three nominees for the supreme court and any intermediate appellate court, and from a list of two or three nominees for all other courts of record, such list to be certified to him by the supreme court nominating commission for a vacancy in the supreme court or a vacancy in any intermediate appellate court, and by the judicial district nominating commission for a vacancy in any other court in that district. In case of more than one vacancy in any such court, the list shall contain not less than two more nominees than there are vacancies to be filled. The list shall be submitted by the nominating commission not later than thirty days after the death, retirement, tender of resignation, removal under section 23, failure of an incumbent to file a declaration under section 25, or certification of a negative majority vote on the question of retention in office under section 25 hereof. If the governor shall fail to make the appointment (or all of the appointments in case of multiple vacancies) from such list within fifteen days from the day it is submitted to him, the appointment (or the remaining appointments in case of multiple vacancies) shall be made by the chief justice of the supreme court from the same list within the next fifteen days. A justice or judge appointed under the provisions of this section shall hold office for a provisional term of two years and then until the second Tuesday in January following the next general election. A nominee shall be under the age of seventy-two years at the time his name is submitted to the governor.

(2) Repealed.

(3) Other vacancies occurring in judicial offices shall be filled as now or hereafter provided by law.

(4) Vacancies occurring in the office of district attorney shall be filled by appointment of the governor. District attorneys appointed under the provisions of this section shall hold office until the next general election and until their successors elected thereat shall be duly qualified. Such successors shall be elected for the remainder of the unexpired term in which the vacancy was created.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since this section is substantially similar to former § 29 of this article, relevant cases construing § 29 have been included in the annotations to this section.

"Vacancy". The word vacancy as used in this section means empty, unoccupied, as applied to an office without an incumbent. There is no basis for the distinction urged, that it applies only to offices vacated by death, resignation, or otherwise. An existing office without an incumbent is vacant, whether it be a new or an old one. People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455 (1880).

"Vacancy" applies not to incumbent, but to term, or office, or both, depending generally upon the context. People ex rel. Bentley v. Le Fevre, 21 Colo. 218, 40 P. 882 (1895).

"Vacancy" applies to an existing office without an incumbent, although the office has never before been filled. In re Election of Dist. Judges, 11 Colo. 373, 18 P. 282 (1888).

An existing office without an incumbent may be vacant, whether it be a new or an old one. People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455 (1880).

Death of officer before commencement of term creates vacancy. The death of the judge-elect after having qualified, but before the commencement of his term, had the effect of creating a vacancy on the expiration of the antecedent term. People v. Boughton, 5 Colo. 487 (1880).

Filling office of district judge in new district. It is entirely competent for the general assembly, under the provisions of this section to provide that the office of district judge in a new district should first be filled, as in case of vacancy, by appointment by the governor, and thereafter by election. In re Election of Dist. Judges, 11 Colo. 373, 18 P. 282 (1888).

Section 21. Rule-making power. The supreme court shall make and promulgate rules governing the administration of all courts and shall make and promulgate rules governing practice and procedure in civil and criminal cases, except that the general assembly shall have the power to provide simplified procedures in county courts for the trial of misdemeanors.

Supreme court's rule-making authority is described in this section. People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

Section 24-4-106 (4) constitutional. Section 24-4-106 (4), relating to judicial review of agency action, is not violative of this section. Warren Vill., Inc. v. Bd. of Assmt. Appeals, 619 P.2d 60 (Colo. 1980).

As is § 24-4-107. Section 24-4-107, which deals with the application of article 4 of title 24, does not impinge on the supreme court's rule-making power. Warren Vill., Inc. v. Bd. of Assmt. Appeals, 619 P.2d 60 (Colo. 1980).

This section confers upon supreme court power to make rules governing practice in civil cases. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. Rocky Mt. Power Co., 174 Colo. 309, 486 P.2d 438 (1971).

This rule-making power includes power to make procedural rules of evidence and such power lies with the supreme court. Page v. Clark, 197 Colo. 306, 592 P.2d 792 (1979).

Constitution grants to supreme court the power to promulgate rules governing court procedure, but the question remains whether a particular rule or statute is procedural or substantive. People v. McKenna, 199 Colo. 452, 611 P.2d 574 (1980).

Exclusive power to adopt rules of procedure. The Colorado Constitution grants to the supreme court exclusive power to adopt rules of procedure for the courts. Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982).

Promulgation of substantive and procedural rules. The supreme court may promulgate procedural rules. The general assembly is free to fashion substantive rules which reflect policy judgments that may affect procedures in the judicial system. The line that separates a substantive rule from a procedural rule is amorphous; no legal test has been uniformly adopted. J.T. v. O'Rourke ex rel. Tenth Judicial Dist., 651 P.2d 407 (Colo. 1982).

When a statute and rule conflict, the conflict is resolved by determining whether the matter affected is "substantive" or "procedural". The test for distinguishing procedural from substantive matters requires an examination of the purpose of the statute: if the purpose is to permit the court to function and function efficiently, the statute must yield to the rule; whereas, if the statute embodies a matter of public policy, the statute controls. People v. Hollis, 670 P.2d 441 (Colo. App. 1983); People v. Prophet, 42 P.3d 61 (Colo. App. 2001).

General assembly has the power to promulgate substantive rules of evidence. People v. Bobian, 626 P.2d 1132 (Colo. 1981).

Section 18-3-408, dealing with jury instructions, does not violate constitutional requirement of separation of powers (art. III of this constitution) by interfering with the rule-making power of the court established in this section. People v. Estorga, 200 Colo. 78, 612 P.2d 520 (1980).

Section 24-4-103 creates a rule of substantive evidence. People v. Bobian, 626 P.2d 1132 (Colo. 1981).

Supreme court has not exercised its power to prescribe procedure for challenging annexation. There is no specific constitutional limitation that bears upon the question of the form or type of procedure which must be employed to challenge an annexation, and the supreme court has not yet exercised its rule-making power under this section. Fort Collins-Loveland Water Dist. v. City of Fort Collins, 174 Colo. 79, 482 P.2d 986 (1971).

The supreme court has exclusive jurisdiction to define the practice of law and prohibit the unauthorized practice of law. Unauthorized Practice of Law Comm. v. Grimes, 654 P.2d 822 (Colo. 1982); People v. Adams, 243 P.3d 256 (Colo. 2010).

Section 22. Process - prosecution - in name of people. In all prosecutions for violations of the laws of Colorado, process shall run in the name of "The People of the State of Colorado"; all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of "The People of the State of Colorado", and conclude, "against the peace and dignity of the same".

(2) This section is similar to § 30 as it existed prior to 1961.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since this section is similar to former § 30 of this article, relevant cases construing § 30 have been included in the annotations to this section.

"The state" means the whole people united in one body politic, and "the state", and "the people of the state", are equivalent expressions. A complaint brought in the name of "the state of Colorado", is in effect a suit in the name of "the people of the state", and is good on demurrer. Brown v. State, 5 Colo. 496 (1881).

"Same". The word "same" as used in this section means "the people of the state of Colorado", and these words are mere surplusage and may be disregarded. Holt v. People, 23 Colo. 1, 45 P. 374 (1896).

Effect of omission of phrase "against the peace and dignity of same". The omission from a criminal information, otherwise above exception, of the concluding phrase "and against the peace and dignity of the same", goes to matter of form, and in no degree impairs the jurisdiction of the court. Chemgas v. Tynan, 51 Colo. 35, 116 P. 1045 (1911); People v. Hunter, 666 P.2d 570 (Colo. 1983).

Information concluding "against the peace and dignity of the same people of the state of Colorado", is in substantial conformity with requirement of constitution that "all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the people of the state of Colorado, and conclude against the peace and dignity of the same". Holt v. People, 23 Colo. 1, 45 P. 374 (1896).

In habeas corpus proceeding state is not party, does not appear and is not represented. Stilley v. Tinsley, 153 Colo. 66, 385 P.2d 677 (1963).

An application for a writ of habeas corpus is a civil action, independent of the criminal charge and is not part of the inquiry based on the information. Stilley v. Tinsley, 153 Colo. 66, 385 P.2d 677 (1963).

Applied in Carnahan v. Pell, 4 Colo. 190 (1878); People ex rel. Setters v. Lee, 72 Colo. 598, 213 P. 583 (1923); Wright v. People, 116 Colo. 306, 181 P.2d 447 (1947).

Section 23. Retirement and removal of justices and judges. (1) On attaining the age of seventy-two a justice or judge of a court of record shall retire and his judicial office shall be vacant, except as otherwise provided in section 20 (2).

(2) Whenever a justice or judge of any court of this state has been convicted in any court of this state or of the United States or of any state, of a felony or other offense involving moral turpitude, the supreme court shall, of its own motion or upon petition filed by any person, and upon finding that such a conviction was had, enter its order suspending said justice or judge from office until such time as said judgment of conviction becomes final, and the payment of salary of said justice or judge shall also be suspended from the date of such order. If said judgment of conviction becomes final, the supreme court shall enter its order removing said justice or judge from office and declaring his office vacant and his right to salary shall cease from the date of the order of suspension. If said judgment of conviction is reversed with directions to enter a judgment of acquittal or if reversed for a new trial which subsequently results in a judgment of dismissal or acquittal, the supreme court shall enter its order terminating the suspension of said justice or judge and said justice or judge shall be entitled to his salary for the period of suspension. A plea of guilty or nolo contendere to such a charge shall be equivalent to a final conviction for the purpose of this section.

(3) (a) There shall be a commission on judicial discipline. It shall consist of: Two judges of district courts and two judges of county courts, each selected by the supreme court; two citizens admitted to practice law in the courts of this state, neither of whom shall be a justice or judge, who shall have practiced in this state for at least ten years and who shall be appointed by the governor, with the consent of the senate; and four citizens, none of whom shall be a justice or judge, active or retired, nor admitted to practice law in the courts of this state, who shall be appointed by the governor, with the consent of the senate.

(b) Each member shall be appointed to a four-year term; except that one-half of the initial membership in each category shall be appointed to two-year terms, for the purpose of staggering terms. Whenever a commission membership prematurely terminates or a member no longer possesses the specific qualifications for the category from which he was selected, his position shall be deemed vacant, and his successor shall be appointed in the same manner as the original appointment for the remainder of his term. A member shall be deemed to have resigned if that member is absent from three consecutive commission meetings without the commission having entered an approval for additional absences upon its minutes. If any member of the commission is disqualified to act in any matter pending before the commission, the commission may appoint a special member to sit on the commission solely for the purpose of deciding that matter.

(c) No member of the commission shall receive any compensation for his services but shall be allowed his necessary expenses for travel, board, and lodging and any other expenses incurred in the performance of his duties, to be paid by the supreme court from its budget to be appropriated by the general assembly.

(d) A justice or judge of any court of record of this state, in accordance with the procedure set forth in this subsection (3), may be removed or disciplined for willful misconduct in office, willful or persistent failure to perform his duties, intemperance, or violation of any canon of the Colorado code of judicial conduct, or he may be retired for disability interfering with the performance of his duties which is, or is likely to become, of a permanent character.

(e) The commission may, after such investigation as it deems necessary, order informal remedial action; order a formal hearing to be held before it concerning the removal, retirement, suspension, censure, reprimand, or other discipline of a justice or a judge; or request the supreme court to appoint three special masters, who shall be justices or judges of courts of record, to hear and take evidence in any such matter and to report thereon to the commission. After a formal hearing or after considering the record and report of the masters, if the commission finds good cause therefor, it may take informal remedial action, or it may recommend to the supreme court the removal, retirement, suspension, censure, reprimand, or discipline, as the case may be, of the justice or judge. The commission may also recommend that the costs of its investigation and hearing be assessed against such justice or judge.

(f) Following receipt of a recommendation from the commission, the supreme court shall review the record of the proceedings on the law and facts and in its discretion may permit the introduction of additional evidence and shall order removal, retirement, suspension, censure, reprimand, or discipline, as it finds just and proper, or wholly reject the recommendation. Upon an order for retirement, the justice or judge shall thereby be retired with the same rights and privileges as if he retired pursuant to statute. Upon an order for removal, the justice or judge shall thereby be removed from office, and his salary shall cease from the date of such order. On the entry of an order for retirement or for removal of a judge, his office shall be deemed vacant.

(g) Prior to the filing of a recommendation to the supreme court by the commission against any justice or judge, all papers filed with and proceedings before the commission on judicial discipline or masters appointed by the supreme court, pursuant to this subsection (3), shall be confidential, and the filing of papers with and the giving of testimony before the commission or the masters shall be privileged; but no other publication of such papers or proceedings shall be privileged in any action for defamation; except that the record filed by the commission in the supreme court continues privileged and a writing which was privileged prior to its filing with the commission or the masters does not lose such privilege by such filing.

(h) The supreme court shall by rule provide for procedures before the commission on judicial discipline, the masters, and the supreme court. The rules shall also provide the standards and degree of proof to be applied by the commission in its proceedings. A justice or judge who is a member of the commission or supreme court shall not participate in any proceedings involving his own removal or retirement.

(i) Nothing contained in this subsection (3) shall be construed to have any effect on article XIII of this constitution.

(j) Repealed.

Section 24. Judicial nominating commissions. (1) There shall be one judicial nominating commission for the supreme court and any intermediate appellate court to be called the supreme court nominating commission and one judicial nominating commission for each judicial district in the state.

(2) The supreme court nominating commission shall consist of the chief justice or acting chief justice of the supreme court, ex officio, who shall act as chairman and shall have no vote, one citizen admitted to practice law before the courts of this state and one other citizen not admitted to practice law in the courts of this state residing in each congressional district in the state, and one additional citizen not admitted to practice law in the courts of this state. No more than one-half of the commission members plus one, exclusive of the chief justice, shall be members of the same political party. Three voting members shall serve until December 31, 1967, three until December 31, 1969, and three until December 31, 1971. Thereafter each voting member appointed shall serve until the 31st of December of the 6th year following the date of his appointment.

(3) Each judicial district nominating commission shall consist of a justice of the supreme court designated by the chief justice, to serve at the will of the chief justice who shall act as chairman ex officio, and shall have no vote, and seven citizens residing in that judicial district, no more than four of whom shall be members of the same political party and there shall be at least one voting member from each county in the district. In all judicial districts having a population of more than 35,000 inhabitants as determined by the last preceding census taken under the authority of the United States, the voting members shall consist of three persons admitted to practice law in the courts of this state and four persons not admitted to practice law in the courts of this state. In judicial districts having a population of 35,000 inhabitants or less as determined above, at least four voting members shall be persons not admitted to practice law in the courts of this state; and it shall be determined by majority vote of the governor, the attorney general and the chief justice, how many, if any, of the remaining three members shall be persons admitted to practice law in the courts of this state. Two voting members shall serve until December 31, 1967, two until December 31, 1969, and three until December 31, 1971. Thereafter each voting member appointed shall serve until the 31st of December of the 6th year following the date of his appointment.

(4) Members of each judicial nominating commission selected by reason of their being citizens admitted to practice law in the courts of this state shall be appointed by majority action of the governor, the attorney general and the chief justice. All other members shall be appointed by the governor. No voting member of a judicial nominating commission shall hold any elective and salaried United States or state public office or any elective political party office and he shall not be eligible for reappointment to succeed himself on a commission. No voting member of the supreme court nominating commission shall be eligible for appointment as a justice of the supreme court or any intermediate appellate court so long as he is a member of that commission and for a period of three years thereafter; and no voting member of a judicial district nominating commission shall be eligible for appointment to judicial office in that district while a member of that commission and for a period of one year thereafter.

ANNOTATION

A judicial district is limited to seven counties by subsection (3) of this section. In re Interrogatories by Senate, 168 Colo. 563, 452 P.2d 382 (1969).

At least one voting member should be a resident of each county. When the people of this state adopted the amendatory provision providing that there should be at least one voting member from each county it was meant that at least one voting member should be a resident of each county. In re Interrogatories by Senate, 168 Colo. 563, 452 P.2d 382 (1969).

And no member may represent more than one county in a judicial district. The requirement that there shall be at least one voting member from each county in the district, prohibits a member of a nominating commission from representing more than one county in a judicial district. In re Interrogatories by Senate, 168 Colo. 563, 452 P.2d 382 (1969).

Section 25. Election of justices and judges. A justice of the supreme court or a judge of any other court of record, who shall desire to retain his judicial office for another term after the expiration of his then term of office shall file with the secretary of state, not more than six months nor less than three months prior to the general election next prior to the expiration of his then term of office, a declaration of his intent to run for another term. Failure to file such a declaration within the time specified shall create a vacancy in that office at the end of his then term of office. Upon the filing of such a declaration, a question shall be placed on the appropriate ballot at such general election, as follows:

"Shall Justice (Judge) .... of the Supreme (or other) Court be retained in office? YES/..../NO/..../." If a majority of those voting on the question vote "Yes", the justice or judge is thereupon elected to a succeeding full term. If a majority of those voting on the question vote "No", this will cause a vacancy to exist in that office at the end of his then present term of office.

In the case of a justice of the supreme court or any intermediate appellate court, the electors of the state at large; in the case of a judge of a district court, the electors of that judicial district; and in the case of a judge of the county court or other court of record, the electors of that county; shall vote on the question of retention in office of the justice or judge.

ANNOTATION

County court judges of city and county of Denver may be appointed by mayor. Under this section, it is constitutional for judges of the county court of the city and county of Denver to be appointed by the mayor of Denver rather than being either elected by the people or appointed by the governor. Francis v. County Court, 175 Colo. 308, 487 P.2d 375 (1971).

All of the justices and judges of the judicial department are accountable to the people. Hamm v. Scott, 426 F. Supp. 950 (D. Colo. 1977).

The language in this section stating that "a question shall be placed on the . . . ballot" does not render judicial retention a "ballot question" for purposes of the Fair Campaign Practices Act (FCPA). A judicial retention vote is not a "ballot question" because it does not involve a citizen petition or referred measure. Because a judicial retention vote does not meet the definition of a "ballot issue" or "ballot question" contained in the FCPA, organization opposing retention of three justices of the Colorado supreme court is not an issue committee for purposes of Colorado law governing campaign finance. Colo. Ethics Watch v. Clear the Bench, 2012 COA 42, 277 P.3d 931.

Section 26. Denver county judges. The provisions of sections 16, 20, 23, 24 and 25 hereof shall not be applicable to judges of the county court of the City and County of Denver. The number, manner of selection, qualifications, term of office, tenure, and removal of such judges shall be as provided in the charter and ordinances of the City and County of Denver.

ANNOTATION

County court judges of city and county of Denver may be appointed by mayor. Under this section, it is constitutional for judges of the county court of the city and county of Denver to be appointed by the mayor of Denver rather than being either elected by the people or appointed by the governor. Francis v. County Court, 175 Colo. 308, 487 P.2d 375 (1971).

It is not a violation of the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the United States constitution to provide for the only city and county in the state a procedure for judicial selection different from the remainder of the state. Francis v. County Court, 175 Colo. 308, 487 P.2d 375 (1971).

This home rule provision apportions independent authority over county court judgeships in the city and county of Denver. Francis v. County Court, 175 Colo. 308, 487 P.2d 375 (1971); Matter of Title, Ballot Title and Sub. Cl., and Summary for 1999-2000 No. 104, 987 P.2d 249 (Colo. 1999).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Legal Classification of Special District Corporate Forms in Colorado", see 45 Den. L.J. 347 (1968).

Article confers power on general assembly to make rules and regulations. The constitution of Colorado, in and by this article distinctly and in terms confers upon the legislative branch of the government the making of all laws and regulations for the conduct of elections in said state, and to secure the purity of such elections and guard against abuses of the elective franchises, and that under and by said constitution the judicial department is without authority in that behalf. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. News-Times Publishing Co., 35 Colo. 253, 84 P. 912 (1906), dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 205 U.S. 454, 27 S. Ct. 556, 51 L. Ed. 879 (1907).

"Elections" in this section is not used in its general or comprehensive sense, but in its restricted political sense, meaning public elections for the choice of public officers. Mayor of Valverde v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 104, 34 P. 947, 41 Am. St. R. 208 (1893).

Right to determine residency requirement reserved to general assembly. This section specifically reserves to the general assembly the right to determine the length of residence required in the county, or precinct, as a qualification for voting. It therefore was purely a question for the general assembly as to whether the same rule should be adopted as to residence in the case of an election to locate a county seat, as the constitution has already adopted in the case of an election upon the question of removal of a county seat. Town of Sugar City v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 57 Colo. 432, 140 P. 809 (1914).

The residence contemplated is synonymous with "home" or "domicile", and means an actual settlement within the state, and its adoption as a fixed and permanent habitation; and requires not only a personal presence for the requisite time, but a concurrence therewith of an intention to make the place of inhabitancy the true home; and that one who has made a home or domicile in some other state or territory where his family reside, cannot, by a sojourn here on business or pleasure, however long, without abandoning such former domicile, acquire a residence in the constitutional and statutory sense. Sharp v. McIntire, 23 Colo. 99, 46 P. 115 (1896).

Requirements for "domicile". Personal presence and intent to remain necessary to acquire new domicile. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

Voter need not be personally present when "he offers to vote". Bullington v. Grabow, 88 Colo. 561, 298 P. 1059 (1931) (upholding validity of absent voters' law).

Municipal charter cannot prohibit person from voting for person of own choice. An amendment of municipal charter that makes no provision for qualified elector to cast ballot for person of own selection violates this section. People ex rel. Walker v. Stapleton, 79 Colo. 629, 247 P. 1062 (1926).

Elector may cast vote according to his own preference. Any elector may cast his vote at each election according to his own preference, and have it counted as cast. People ex rel. Eaton v. District Court, 18 Colo. 26, 31 P. 339 (1892).

Student in college town is presumed not to have right to vote. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

Registering to vote does not come within ambit of constitutional qualification to vote. Duprey v. Anderson, 184 Colo. 70, 518 P.2d 807 (1974).

But is merely administrative process. Whether initial registration, or registration after purging is involved, it is not a qualification to vote, but is merely an administrative process designed to facilitate rather than complicate participation in the election process. Duprey v. Anderson, 184 Colo. 70, 518 P.2d 807 (1974).

Election under soil conservation act not same as election under this section. An election under soil conservation act amendment dealing with questions of land use ordinances, is not the same as an election under this constitutional provision setting out age requirements and so on. People ex rel. Cheyenne Soil Erosion Dist. v. Parker, 118 Colo. 13, 192 P.2d 417 (1948).

Where nonresidents, corporations and others owning land in soil erosion district were extended right to vote upon adoption of land use ordinance, it did not violate constitutional provisions dealing with qualifications of voters. People ex rel. Cheyenne Soil Erosion Dist. v. Parker, 118 Colo. 13, 192 P.2d 417 (1948).

Applied in Bd. of Comm'rs v. People ex rel. Love, 26 Colo. 297, 57 P. 1080 (1899).

Section 1a. Qualifications of elector - residence on federal land. (First paragraph deleted by amendment, L. 2004, p. 2746, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 2005, p. 2341, December 1, 2004.)

Any person who otherwise meets the requirements of law for voting in this state shall not be denied the right to vote in an election because of residence on land situated within this state that is under the jurisdiction of the United States.

ANNOTATION

Constitutionality. This section, insofar as it attempts to establish a three month durational residency as a condition of the right to vote is unconstitutional under the fourteenth amendment to the United States constitution. Jarmel v. Putnam, 179 Colo. 215, 499 P.2d 603 (1972).

Section 4. When residence does not change. For the purpose of voting and eligibility to office, no person shall be deemed to have gained a residence by reason of his or her presence, or lost it by reason of his or her absence, while in the civil or military service of the state, or of the United States, nor while a student at any institution of learning, nor while kept at public expense in any asylum, nor while confined in public prison.

ANNOTATION

Purpose of section. The purpose of this provision is to prevent the control of municipal affairs by persons who have no pecuniary interest in them. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

This provision of the constitution is aimed at the participation of an unconcerned body of men in the control through the ballot box of municipal affairs in whose further conduct they have no interest, and from the mismanagement of which by the officers their ballots might elect, they sustain no injury. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

"Asylum". The word "asylum" is defined as "an institution for the protection and relief of the unfortunate". Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

This section does not prevent inmate or student from becoming voter. An inmate of an asylum, or a student attending school, is not, by this constitutional provision, prevented from becoming a voter in the place where the school or asylum is situated. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

But right to vote is not gained by mere residence at a place. The right to vote is not gained by a mere residence at a place; but, if it exists, it must be shown by acts entirely distinct from such residence. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

Thus, student coming into state to attend school does not acquire residence in this state for the purpose of voting. His mere presence does not give the right. Parsons v. People, 30 Colo. 388, 70 P. 689 (1902).

Nor do inmates of soldiers' homes. Inmates of soldiers' homes have no connection with local municipal government, and that they are there only in the character of beneficiaries, for a temporary purpose. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

A hospital maintained by the United States government for the treatment of disabled soldiers, who may be transferred or discharged as determined by the government authorities, is an asylum, as that term is used in this section and the inmates of such an institution are not, on account of their mere residence there, entitled to vote at general elections. Merrill v. Shearston, 73 Colo. 230, 214 P. 540 (1923).

Nor do civilian employees in government hospital. Civilian employees in government hospital are not entitled to vote. Kemp v. Heebner, 77 Colo. 177, 234 P. 1068 (1925).

Under the state constitution and controlling statutes, employees of a hospital would and could not acquire on hospital grounds a home or domicile, a place of permanent residence. Their stay there was subject to the determination of hospital authorities and, in the nature of the case, was limited. Kemp v. Heebner, 77 Colo. 177, 234 P. 1068 (1925).

Section 5. Privilege of voters. Voters shall in all cases, except treason, felony or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at elections, and in going to and returning therefrom.

Section 6. Electors only eligible to office. No person except a qualified elector shall be elected or appointed to any civil or military office in the state.

ANNOTATION

"Qualified elector", as employed in this section, is used in its broadest sense, meaning a person qualified to vote generally. In re House Bill No. 166, 9 Colo. 628, 21 P. 473 (1886).

"Civil office" is frequently used interchangeably with term "public trust". The phrase "civil office" as thus employed is frequently used interchangeably with the term "public trust"; it undoubtedly relates to public offices; that is, to those offices which involve an election or appointment by or on behalf of the general public and the performance of duties essentially public in their nature. In re Thomas, 16 Colo. 441, 27 P. 707 (1891).

A civil office is defined to be a public station or employment, conferred by the appointment of government. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties. An office held under a state government necessarily includes the same characteristics, and all of them are comprised in the office of notary public. In re House Bill No. 166, 9 Colo. 628, 21 P. 473 (1886).

Eligibility to hold office distinguished from eligibility to be elected. There is a distinct difference between the eligibility of a person to be designated by a county assembly for nomination at a direct primary election of a candidate for a county office, and his eligibility to hold such office if elected by the voters of the county. Andersen v. Smyth, 146 Colo. 165, 360 P.2d 970 (1961).

Party affiliation unnecessary. It is not necessary that one have any party affiliation in order to hold the office of county commissioner. Andersen v. Smyth, 146 Colo. 165, 360 P.2d 970 (1961).

Person who has completed term of imprisonment eligible to run for public office. A person who has been convicted of a crime, but who has served his full term of imprisonment and is on probation on another count, the period of which had not expired, is eligible to be a candidate for public office under this section of this article. Sterling v. Archambault, 138 Colo. 222, 332 P.2d 994 (1958).

Attorneys at law are not "civil officers" within meaning of this section. In re Thomas, 16 Colo. 441, 27 P. 707, 13 L.R.A. 538 (1891).

Applied in Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 417, 8 P. 661 (1885); Jeffries v. Harrington, 11 Colo. 191, 17 P. 505 (1887); Mannix v. Selbach, 31 Colo. 502, 74 P. 460 (1903).

Section 7. General election. The general election shall be held on such day as may be prescribed by law.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 52. L. 92: Entire section amended, p. 2316, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 93, p. 2163, January 14, 1993.

Cross references: For time for holding the general election, see also § 1-4-201.

ANNOTATION

Annual elections have since been changed to biennial, and the day now "prescribed by law" is the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. People ex rel. Austin v. Billig, 72 Colo. 209, 210 P. 324 (1922).

"General election", as here used, means state elections. That "general elections" may be either state or municipal, or both, requires no argument and no citation of authority. That the term as used in the constitution, wherever state officers or state questions are under consideration, means a general state election is also clear. People ex rel. Austin v. Billig, 72 Colo. 209, 210 P. 324 (1922).

Section 8. Elections by ballot or voting machine. All elections by the people shall be by ballot, and in case paper ballots are required to be used, no ballots shall be marked in any way whereby the ballot can be identified as the ballot of the person casting it. The election officers shall be sworn or affirmed not to inquire or disclose how any elector shall have voted. In all cases of contested election in which paper ballots are required to be used, the ballots cast may be counted and compared with the list of voters, and examined under such safeguards and regulations as may be provided by law. Nothing in this section, however, shall be construed to prevent the use of any machine or mechanical contrivance for the purpose of receiving and registering the votes cast at any election, provided that secrecy in voting is preserved.

When the governing body of any county, city, city and county or town, including the city and county of Denver, and any city, city and county or town which may be governed by the provisions of special charter, shall adopt and purchase a voting machine, or voting machines, such governing body may provide for the payment therefor by the issuance of interest-bearing bonds, certificates of indebtedness or other obligations, which shall be a charge upon such city, city and county, or town; such bonds, certificates or other obligations may be made payable at such time or times, not exceeding ten years from date of issue, as may be determined, but shall not be issued or sold at less than par.

ANNOTATION

Privilege of inspecting ballots in contested elections. The purpose of the provision that ballots may be examined in contested elections, was to give, in the election contests authorized by section 12 of this article, the privilege of inspecting and comparing ballots; not to withdraw it from the proceedings in which theretofore it had been universally exercised. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

The leading object of this section was to preserve the purity of the ballot by insuring its secrecy; but, lest the language indicating this intent should be carried too far, and become the means of perpetrating fraud, the privilege in question was carefully extended to election contests, in which, perhaps, it might otherwise have been challenged. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

The content of a ballot is not protected from public inspection when the identity of the individual voter cannot be discerned from such content. Marks v. Koch, 284 P.3d 118 (Colo. App. 2011).

To the extent digital copies of paper ballots do not reveal a particular voter's identity, permitting the right to inspect the copies under the Colorado Open Records Act would not be contrary to the "secrecy in voting" provision of this section. Marks v. Koch, 284 P.3d 118 (Colo. App. 2011).

Right of examination of ballot not limited to contested elections. The declaration in this section that the ballots may be examined in contested elections, does not limit this examination to such proceedings. The right mentioned has always been freely exercised in quo warranto, which is the common-law method of inquiring into election frauds. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

Reasonable requirements may be imposed as condition to examination of ballots. With regard to the phrase "the ballots cast may be counted and compared with the list of voters, and examined under such safeguards and regulations as may be provided by law", the supreme court has never attempted to change and has no right to change the permissive word, "may", to the mandatory word, "must", without due regard to proper "safeguards and regulations" further therein referred to. To do so would be to promote unending chaos after every election. Gray v. Huntley, 77 Colo. 478, 238 P. 53 (1925).

Imposition of "reasonable requirement" that some evidence should be first introduced as to the charges before bringing in the election judges from the different precincts to open the ballot boxes at the expense of the county upheld. See Kindel v. Le Bert, 23 Colo. 385, 48 P. 641 (1897).

The phrase "secrecy in voting" protects from public disclosure the identity of an individual voter and any content of the voter's ballot that could identify the voter. Marks v. Koch, 284 P.3d 118 (Colo. App. 2011).

Use of marked ballots contrary to this section. An election wherein ballots are numbered in such a manner that the vote of any person thereafter may be determined by comparison with the number on the ballot and the poll registration book is contrary to constitutional and statutory guarantee of a secret ballot. Taylor v. Pile, 154 Colo. 516, 391 P.2d 670 (1964).

And results in void election. The use of "marked ballots" by which the vote of every elector could be ascertained resulted in a void election. Taylor v. Pile, 154 Colo. 516, 391 P.2d 670 (1964).

Right to refuse to testify as to how vote was cast. The constitutional and statutory right to cast a secret ballot carries with it the accompanying right to refuse to testify as to how or for what the vote was cast. Taylor v. Pile, 154 Colo. 516, 391 P.2d 670 (1964).

This protection does not extend to "illegal" voter. Taylor v. Pile, 154 Colo. 516, 391 P.2d 670 (1964).

But voter listed as qualified who acts in good faith is not "illegal" voter. A voter who is listed as qualified, and who at all times acts in the good faith belief that he is qualified to vote, is not an illegal voter. Taylor v. Pile, 154 Colo. 516, 391 P.2d 670 (1964).

Purchase of voting machines optional. Purchase of voting machines is not made mandatory by this section, but optional. Kingsley v. City & County of Denver, 126 Colo. 194, 247 P.2d 805 (1952).

Purchase of voting machines by municipality is local matter. While the right to use voting machines in general elections is a matter of state control, the purchase of such machines by a municipality is a local or municipal matter, and bonds issued under authority of this section must also comply with the requirements of a charter adopted under authority of § 6 of art. XX, Colo. Const. Kingsley v. City & County of Denver, 126 Colo. 194, 247 P.2d 805 (1952).

Section 9. No privilege to witness in election trial. In trials of contested elections, and for offenses arising under the election law, no person shall be permitted to withhold his testimony on the ground that it may criminate himself, or subject him to public infamy; but such testimony shall not be used against him in any judicial proceeding, except for perjury in giving such testimony.

ANNOTATION

Where vote illegal, voter can be compelled to answer how he voted. If it is not shown that the vote was illegal, the voter cannot be compelled to answer how he voted; but if illegal, in addition to compelling him to answer, other evidence may be received and considered on the subject. People v. Turpin, 49 Colo. 234, 112 P. 539, 33 L.R.A. (n.s.) 766, 1912A Ann. Cas. 724 (1910).

Where place of residence is voluntarily placed at issue by defendant in prior civil proceedings, the constitutional protection of the testimony is not needed to protect the purity of elections, and testimony may be admitted at subsequent proceedings. People v. Onesimo Romero, 746 P.2d 534 (Colo. 1987).

Civil proceeding for certification as a candidate on the primary election ballot for state senator is not within statutory meaning of contested election and testimony offered at such civil proceeding is not protected and may be introduced in criminal proceeding. People v. Onesimo Romero, 746 P.2d 534 (Colo. 1987).

Section 10. Disfranchisement during imprisonment. No person while confined in any public prison shall be entitled to vote; but every such person who was a qualified elector prior to such imprisonment, and who is released therefrom by virtue of a pardon, or by virtue of having served out his full term of imprisonment, shall without further action, be invested with all the rights of citizenship, except as otherwise provided in this constitution.

ANNOTATION

Section limited to disenfranchisement while in public prison. The constitutional prohibition is limited to the disenfranchisement of persons while confined in a public prison. Sterling v. Archambault, 138 Colo. 222, 332 P.2d 994 (1958).

A person who has been convicted of a crime, but who has served his full term of imprisonment and is on probation on another count, the period of which has not expired, is no longer confined and hence is eligible to be a candidate for public office under this section and section 6 of this article. Sterling v. Archambault, 138 Colo. 222, 332 P.2d 994 (1958).

The intent of this provision is to prohibit from voting only those who, at the time of an election, are confined in a public prison serving a term of imprisonment. Moore v. MacFarlane, 642 P.2d 496 (Colo. 1982).

A person serving a sentence of parole does not meet the requirement of having served out the full term of imprisonment and, therefore, is ineligible to vote. Danielson v. Dennis, 139 P.3d 688 (Colo. 2006).

Section 11. Purity of elections. The general assembly shall pass laws to secure the purity of elections, and guard against abuses of the elective franchise.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Legal Classification of Special District Corporate Forms in Colorado", see 45 Den. L.J. 347 (1968).

This constitutional duty was imposed upon general assembly, and not upon municipalities. Mauff v. People, 52 Colo. 562, 123 P. 101 (1912); City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 251 U.S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 219, 64 L. Ed. 407 (1920).

Laws enacted in response to this mandate do not relate to subjects pertaining to local self-government or municipal affairs, and such laws are not within the contemplation of § 13 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., requiring the general assembly to provide, by general laws, for the organization and classification of cities. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908).

In this and the next section there are express constitutional commands that the general assembly shall pass "laws" to secure the purity of elections, and by "general laws", designate the courts and judges by whom the several classes of election contests shall be tried. If, then, the general assembly, with respect to these election matters which are of governmental and state importance, has jurisdiction over election contests, such jurisdiction in the general assembly is exclusive, and manifestly neither the charter of a city, nor an ordinance of its council, which must be confined to matters strictly local and municipal in their character, can legislate concerning it. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906).

There are limitations on power of general assembly. While the general assembly is expressly commanded by the constitution, to "pass laws to secure the purity of elections, and guard against abuses of the elective franchise", there are, nevertheless, certain limitations beyond which it cannot proceed. Littlejohn v. People, 52 Colo. 217, 121 P. 159 (1912).

Registration laws should be construed in light of this section. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908).

Purging registration book is exclusively an administrative adjunct which is necessary in order to provide for the purity of elections and to guard against abuses. Duprey v. Anderson, 184 Colo. 70, 518 P.2d 807 (1974).

Married woman signing husband's name with "Mrs." The signing by a married woman of her husband's name preceded by "Mrs." does not constitute an abuse of elective franchise. Case v. Morrison, 118 Colo. 517, 197 P.2d 621 (1948).

Applied in People ex rel. Lowry v. District Court, 32 Colo. 15, 74 P. 896 (1903); Fish v. Kugel, 63 Colo. 101, 165 P. 249 (1917); Bullington v. Grabow, 88 Colo. 561, 298 P. 1059 (1931); Friesen v. People ex rel. Fletcher, 118 Colo. 1, 192 P.2d 430 (1948); People ex rel. Cheyenne Soil Erosion Dist. v. Parker, 118 Colo. 13, 192 P.2d 417 (1948); Martin v. Boyle, 124 Colo. 289, 237 P.2d 110 (1951); Meyer v. Putnam, 186 Colo. 132, 526 P.2d 139 (1974); Olshaw v. Buchanan, 192 Colo. 45, 555 P.2d 979 (1976).

Section 12. Election contests - by whom tried. The general assembly shall, by general law, designate the courts and judges by whom the several classes of election contests, not herein provided for, shall be tried, and regulate the manner of trial, and all matters incident thereto, but no such law shall apply to any contest arising out of an election held before its passage.

ANNOTATION

This section relates to contests between candidates for public office, and is not a limitation upon the equity powers granted to the district court by § 11 of art. VI, Colo. Const., nor upon the power of the general assembly to make statutory provision of the contest of other elections than those specifically mentioned in the constitution. Patterson v. People ex rel. Parr, 23 Colo. App. 479, 130 P. 618 (1913); Nicholson v. Stewart, 142 Colo. 566, 351 P.2d 461 (1960).

Jurisdiction to try election contests must be conferred by statute; and unless by some legislative enactment the county court has been designated as the tribunal for the trial of a contest of this character, the interposition of the supreme court is properly invoked to restrain it from entertaining jurisdiction of the contest in question. Booth v. County Court, 18 Colo. 561, 33 P. 581 (1893).

While it is true that the charter is a "law", and in a limited sense, it is not a "law" as to county or state or governmental affairs. The express constitutional provision that election contests shall be tried by courts or judges designated by the general assembly by general law necessarily negatives the existence of any such authority in any other legislative body. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 407, 88 P. 189 (1906).

When the constitution commands the general assembly to provide a method and forum for the trial of "election contests", the statute passed in obedience to such command is exclusive as to such contests, though no exclusive words be employed. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1899).

Election contests have no relation to quo warranto proceedings. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

A quo warranto proceeding is not an election contest in the same sense in which those terms are used in the constitution. That proceeding only determines that the person holding the office is or is not a usurper. But, ousting him, if the court finds against him, it adjudges the right to the office to no one. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

Because the constitution, in this section directs specific legislation for the trial of "election contests", it does not necessarily follow that the people, in their sovereign capacity, are thereby precluded from inquiring by information in the nature of quo warranto into usurpations of office. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

This section covers special proceedings for contesting elections of municipal officers. County Court v. Schwarz, 13 Colo. 291, 22 P. 783 (1889).

Election contest of franchise within purview of section. If there is such a thing as an election contest of a franchise, it is conceded that it is within the purview of this section. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906).

Applied in Heinssen v. State, 14 Colo. 228, 23 P. 995 (1890); Cox v. Starkweather, 128 Colo. 89, 260 P.2d 587 (1953).

ARTICLE VIII
State Institutions

Section 1. Established and supported by state. Educational, reformatory and penal institutions, and those for the benefit of insane, blind, deaf and mute, and such other institutions as the public good may require, shall be established and supported by the state, in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

"Educational institutions" refers to schools other than public schools. This section uses the term "educational institutions" in referring to schools other than the constitutionally-required public schools. Wilmore v. Annear, 100 Colo. 106 , 65 P.2d 1433 (1937).

Reformatory and penitentiary are creatures of constitution, and not of the general assembly, and legislation affecting them must be regarded in the light of this provision. Hessick v. Moynihan, 83 Colo. 43, 262 P. 907 (1927).

State highway department is state institution within the meaning of this section. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935); Mitchell v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 112 Colo. 582, 152 P.2d 601 (1944).

Soldiers' and sailors' home is entitled to be supported by state same as other state institutions, except that those institutions in which the inmates are involuntarily confined may be entitled to preference, in case the public revenues are not sufficient for all. Goodykoontz v. People ex rel. Sawyer, 20 Colo. 374, 38 P. 473 (1894).

"Support" means something more than mere passage of biennial appropriation bills. This would seem to be self-evident from the words that follow: "in such manner as may be prescribed by law". Hessick v. Moynihan, 83 Colo. 43, 262 P. 907 (1927).

This provision does not prevent collection for expenses of care. Wigington v. State Home & Training Sch., 175 Colo. 159, 486 P.2d 417 (1971).

Providing suitable buildings for use of state normal school held mandatory on trustees. Pursuant to this constitutional mandate, the general assembly, by statute, prescribed the control and regulation of the state normal school (formerly Colorado state college, now University of Northern Colorado), authorized the establishment of the school and created the board of trustees. Such statutes not only grant to the latter the power, but in addition, make it mandatory upon such trustees, to provide suitable buildings for the use of the school. Hoyt v. Trustees of State Normal Sch., 96 Colo. 442, 44 P.2d 513 (1935).

Applied in Wicks v. City and County of Denver, 61 Colo. 266, 156 P. 1100 (1916).

Section 2. Seat of government - where located. The general assembly shall have no power to change or to locate the seat of government of the state, which shall remain at the city and county of Denver.

Section 3. Seat of government - how changed - definitions. (1) When the seat of government shall have been located in the city and county of Denver as provided in section 2 of this article, the location thereof shall not thereafter be changed, except by a vote of two-thirds of all the qualified electors of the state voting on that question, at a general election, at which the question of location of the seat of government shall have been submitted by the general assembly.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, if the governor determines that a disaster emergency exists that substantially affects the ability of the state government to operate in the city and county of Denver, the governor may issue an executive order declaring a disaster emergency. After declaring the disaster emergency and after consulting with the chief justice of the supreme court, the president of the senate, and the speaker of the house of representatives, the governor may designate a temporary meeting location for the general assembly.

(3) After the declaration of a disaster emergency by the governor, the general assembly shall convene at the temporary meeting location, whether during regular session or in a special session convened by the governor or by written request by two-thirds of the members of each house. The general assembly, acting by bill, may then designate a temporary location for the seat of government. The bill shall contain a date on which the temporary location of the seat of government shall expire.

(4) As used in this section:

(a) "Disaster emergency" means the occurrence or imminent threat of widespread or severe damage, injury, illness, or loss of life or property resulting from an epidemic or a natural, man-made, or technological cause.

(b) "Seat of government" means the location of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the state of Colorado.

Section 5. Educational institutions. (1) The following educational institutions are declared to be state institutions of higher education: The university at Boulder, Colorado Springs, and Denver; the university at Fort Collins; the school of mines at Golden; and such other institutions of higher education as now exist or may hereafter be established by law if they are designated by law as state institutions. The establishment, management, and abolition of the state institutions shall be subject to the control of the state, under the provisions of the constitution and such laws and regulations as the general assembly may provide; except that the regents of the university at Boulder, Colorado Springs, and Denver may, whenever in their judgment the needs of that institution demand such action, establish, maintain, and conduct all or any part of the schools of medicine, dentistry, nursing, and pharmacy of the university, together with hospitals and supporting facilities and programs related to health, at Denver; and further, that nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent state educational institutions from giving temporary lecture courses in any part of the state, or conducting class excursions for the purpose of investigation and study; and provided further, that subject to prior approval by the general assembly, nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the state institutions of higher education from hereafter establishing, maintaining, and conducting or discontinuing centers, medical centers, or branches of such institutions in any part of the state.

(2) The governing boards of the state institutions of higher education, whether established by this constitution or by law, shall have the general supervision of their respective institutions and the exclusive control and direction of all funds of and appropriations to their respective institutions, unless otherwise provided by law.

But such tax valid as applied to football games. Absent a showing that football is so related to the educational process that its devotees may not be taxed by a home rule city, the court will uphold the validity of a city admissions tax as applied to football games sponsored by a state university. Implied repeals of authority guarded against. ARTICLE IX
Education

Law reviews: For article, "The Colorado Constitution in the New Century", see 78 U. Colo. L. Rev. 1265 (2007).

Section 1. Supervision of schools - board of education. (1) The general supervision of the public schools of the state shall be vested in a board of education whose powers and duties shall be as now or hereafter prescribed by law. Said board shall consist of a member from each congressional district of the state and, if the total number of such congressional districts is an even number, one additional member, and said members shall be elected as hereinafter provided. The members of said board shall be elected by the registered electors of the state, voting at general elections, in such manner and for such terms as may be by law prescribed; provided, that provisions may be made by law for election of a member from each congressional district of the state by the electors of such district; and provided, further, that each member from a congressional district of the state shall be a qualified elector of such district. If the total number of congressional districts of the state is an even number, the additional member of said board shall be elected from the state at large. The members of said board shall serve without compensation, but they shall be reimbursed for any necessary expenses incurred by them in performing their duties as members of said board.

(2) The commissioner of education shall be appointed by the board of education and shall not be included in the classified civil service of the state.

(3) The qualifications, tenure, compensation, powers, and duties of said commissioner shall be as prescribed by law, subject to the supervision of said board.

ANNOTATION

Adoption of this section did not change meaning of § 13 of art. XII, Colo. Const., either expressly or by implication. The particular provision of this section creating the office of commissioner of education does not serve to repeal or modify § 13 of art. XII, Colo. Const.; it simply substitutes the appointive office of commissioner of education for the elective office of superintendent of public instruction. Bd. of Educ. v. Spurlin, 141 Colo. 508, 349 P.2d 357 (1960).

Framers contemplated "general supervision" to include direction, inspection, and critical evaluation of Colorado's public education system from a statewide perspective; intended the state board to serve as both a conduit of and a source for educational information and policy; and intended the general assembly to have broad but not unlimited authority to delegate to the state board "powers and duties" consistent with this intent. Bd. of Educ., Dist. No. 1 v. Booth, 984 P.2d 639 (Colo. 1999).

Creation of state charter school institute in part 5 of article 30.5 of title 22 does not violate the "general supervision" provision because it is intended to make the statewide education system more thorough by expanding the options available to all students in the state and more uniform by ensuring that comparable opportunities for creating charter schools exist across the state. Boulder Valley Sch. Dist. RE-2 v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 217 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2009).

Section 2. Establishment and maintenance of public schools. The general assembly shall, as soon as practicable, provide for the establishment and maintenance of a thorough and uniform system of free public schools throughout the state, wherein all residents of the state, between the ages of six and twenty-one years, may be educated gratuitously. One or more public schools shall be maintained in each school district within the state, at least three months in each year; any school district failing to have such school shall not be entitled to receive any portion of the school fund for that year.

Education of children of state is duty which devolves upon state government. This article provides for a general system of public schools, the details to be supplied by legislation. The administration of the laws in relation to schools is confided to state officers, county officers, and district officers. Florman v. Sch. Dist. No. 11, 6 Colo. App. 319, 40 P. 469 (1895).

Education not fundamental right. The Colorado Constitution does not establish education as a fundamental right, and it does not require that the general assembly establish a central public school finance system restricting each school district to equal expenditures per student. Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

Education is not a fundamental right under the United States Constitution. Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

This section requires the general assembly to establish and maintain a public school system but does not create a duty to teach morality in public schools. Skipworth v. Bd. of Educ., 874 P.2d 487 (Colo. App. 1994).

Parent has constitutional right to have children educated in the public schools. People ex rel. Vollimar v. Stanley, 81 Colo. 276, 255 P. 610 (1927); Zavilla v. Masse, 112 Colo. 183, 147 P.2d 823 (1944).

Hence this section is mandatory and requires affirmative action on part of general assembly to the extent and in the manner specified. In re Kindergarten Sch., 18 Colo. 234, 32 P. 422 (1893); Duncan v. People ex rel. Moser, 89 Colo. 149, 299 P. 1060 (1931).

And arrangements for accommodations for pupils in another district does not satisfy constitutional mandate, although authorized by a vote of the district electors. Duncan v. People ex rel. Moser, 89 Colo. 149, 299 P. 1060 (1931).

Where two school districts although functioning otherwise, instead of conducting schools within their respective territories, had arranged with defendant school district to have their pupils enjoy its educational facilities, and in furtherance thereof provided transportation for the pupils to its school buildings and return, it was held that, under this section, a complaining parent could have required either school board to abandon the transportation plan and cause school to be held at a school house within the territorial limits of the district. Sch. Dist. No. 6 v. Hards, 112 Colo. 319, 149 P.2d 651 (1944).

"Thorough and uniform system" should not be interpreted to mean a single uniform system of public schools consisting of school districts governed by locally elected officials. The state is not prohibited from creating a school system with different types of schools, some controlled by school districts while others are not, so long as the additional educational opportunities are open to all students in the state. Boulder Valley Sch. Dist. RE-2 v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 217 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2009).

"Public schools" as the term is used in this section clearly applies to schools that serve only those between the ages of six and 21 residing in the district. Wilmore v. Annear, 100 Colo. 106, 65 P.2d 1433 (1937).

"Free public school" is one to which any resident of the state, between the ages of six and 21 years, shall be admitted, and there be educated gratuitously, that is to say, at public expense, or from the public funds provided for that purpose. Sch. Dist. No. 16 v. Union High Sch. No. 1, 25 Colo. App. 510, 139 P. 1039 (1914), rev'd on other grounds, 60 Colo. 292, 152 P. 1149 (1915).

But free books to all students not intended. It was not the intent of the framers of the state constitution that school districts furnish books free to all students. Marshall v. Sch. Dist. RE #3, 191 Colo. 451, 553 P.2d 784 (1976).

A school district does not have a constitutional duty to furnish without charge the use of school books in connection with the education of the children of nonindigent parents. Marshall v. Sch. Dist. RE #3, 191 Colo. 451, 553 P.2d 784 (1976).

This section is in no measure prohibitory or limitation on power to provide free schools for children under six years of age, whenever the general assembly deems it wise and beneficial to do so. This view is in harmony with other sections of this article. In re Kindergarten Sch., 18 Colo. 234, 32 P. 422 (1893).

And enactment authorized if not prohibited. The question was whether this affirmative section limited the powers of the general assembly to establish free schools for any person outside the ages of six and 21 years. The court applied the rule of construction which is: The general assembly being invested with complete power for all the purposes of civil government, and the state constitution being merely a limitation upon that power, the court will look into it, not to see if the enactment in question is authorized, but only to see if is prohibited. Schwartz v. People, 46 Colo. 239, 104 P. 92 (1909).

Under this provision, charge for tuition is permissible. Sch. Dist. No. 16 v. Union High Sch. No. 1, 25 Colo. App. 510, 139 P. 1039 (1914), rev'd on other grounds, 60 Colo. 292, 152 P. 1149 (1915).

School district is subdivision of state for educational purposes. The several officers charged with the supervision of the schools, from the state board of education down to the directors of the school district, are merely the instruments of the state government, chosen for the purpose of effectuating its policy in relation to schools. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

The entire control of schools and school property is in the state, to be exercised as it may see fit, subject to the requirements and restrictions contained in the constitution; and school officers and school districts are merely the agencies through which it acts in the performance of duties with which it is charged by that instrument. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

Where the general assembly allocated authority between the state board and local boards in order to further a legitimate educational purpose under the charter schools act, there is a presumption the allocation is valid unless it clearly impedes the capacity of either the state board or local board to exercise its independent constitutional authority. Bd. of Educ., Dist. No. 1 v. Booth, 984 P.2d 639 (Colo. 1999).

Formation, dissolution, and change in boundaries of school districts are legislative matters. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

School districts may be abolished or dissolved at the will of the general assembly, subject to constitutional limitations, if any. It is not necessary that the districts affected give their consent to such action, except as otherwise provided by statute. A change of boundaries of school districts may occur in a variety of instances, as in the case of consolidation of districts, division to create new districts, taking from one district and adding to another, cutting off a part of a district, annexing unorganized territory to a district, etc. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

And in exercise of its power, general assembly may act directly, or may delegate its power to subordinate authorities without violating the general rule against the delegation of legislative power. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

Individual taxpayers and directors have no property interest in school. The argument that the schoolhouse or some interest therein is the property of the directors or individual taxpayers and that by its transfer the constitutional rights of the plaintiffs as school directors or as individuals have been invaded is not sound. The directors have no interest as such. The property is not theirs but the district's. The individual taxpayers do not own the property nor have they any legal or equitable interest in it. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

Equal educational opportunities not required. The "thorough and uniform" clause does not require the state to provide equal educational opportunity to its schoolchildren. Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

This section is satisfied if thorough and uniform educational opportunities are available through state action in each school district. Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

Nor identical educational expenditures. The requirement of a "thorough and uniform system of free public schools" does not require that educational expenditures per pupil in every school district be identical. Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

Section does not require either equal expenditures within a district or that educational expenditures per pupil in every school district be identical. Such an interpretation would conflict with the grant of control over locally raised funds to school districts under art. IX, § 15, of the Colorado constitution. Dolores Huerta Prep. High v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 215 P.3d 1229 (Colo. App. 2009).

The "thorough and uniform" clause does not provide any manageable standard for determining the qualitative guarantee asserted by parents of children in various Colorado school districts as a method of assessing adequate education funding. Lobato v. Colo., 216 P.3d 29 (Colo. App. 2008).

Broad reference to "thorough and uniform system of free public schools" does not create a duty to teach morality in public schools. Skipworth v. Bd. of Educ., 874 P.2d 487 (Colo. App. 1994).

Colorado's school finance system does not violate this section, nor does it deny equal protection of the law. Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

The legislature is constitutionally mandated to implement a "thorough and uniform" system of public education. This mandate imposes a judicial constraint, or check, on the legislature's general appropriation power, giving the court the authority to review the merits of the plaintiffs' claims that the state's school finance system is unconstitutional. Lobato v. State, 218 P.3d 358 (Colo. 2009).

A local school board's right to control instruction within the district pursuant to § 15 of this article does not limit the general assembly's authority to establish substantive and procedural criteria for the termination of teachers and for judicial review of such decisions. The concept that the courts should be the ultimate tribunal in school district employment disputes is not a novel one. Heimer v. Bd. of Educ., Adams County, 895 P.2d 152 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 919 P.2d 786 (Colo. 1996).

Section 3. School fund inviolate. The public school fund of the state shall, except as provided in this article IX, forever remain inviolate and intact and the interest and other income thereon, only, shall be expended in the maintenance of the schools of the state, and shall be distributed amongst the several counties and school districts of the state, in such manner as may be prescribed by law. No part of this fund, principal, interest, or other income shall ever be transferred to any other fund, or used or appropriated, except as provided in this article IX. The state treasurer shall be the custodian of this fund, and the same shall be securely and profitably invested as may be by law directed. The state shall supply all losses thereof that may in any manner occur. In order to assist public schools in the state in providing necessary buildings, land, and equipment, the general assembly may adopt laws establishing the terms and conditions upon which the state treasurer may (1) invest the fund in bonds of school districts, (2) use all or any portion of the fund or the interest or other income thereon to guaranty bonds issued by school districts, or (3) make loans to school districts. Distributions of interest and other income for the benefit of public schools provided for in this article IX shall be in addition to and not a substitute for other moneys appropriated by the general assembly for such purposes.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "The 'New' Colorado State Land Board", see 78 Den. U. L. Rev. 347 (2001).

This section is imperative mandate binding upon all departments of government. In re Loan of Sch. Fund, 18 Colo. 195, 32 P. 273 (1893).

The changes to this section enacted in 1996 do not violate Colorado's fiduciary obligations arising out of the federal trust enacted by the Colorado Enabling Act and therefore do not facially violate the supremacy clause of article VI of the United States Constitution. Branson Sch. Dist. RE-82 v. Romer, 161 F.3d 619 (10th Cir. 1998).

Appropriation of land and proceeds to state or municipal purpose prohibited. State constitutional provisions, declaring that land granted by the federal government to states for school purposes and the proceeds thereof shall be faithfully applied to the objects for which it was given, prohibit its appropriation to state or municipal purposes, directly or indirectly. People ex rel. Dunbar v. City of Littleton, 183 Colo. 195, 515 P.2d 1121 (1973).

This section can be held to be requirement, and not prohibition, and such construction is in harmony with the progressive school policy of the state, and will enable the general assembly to confer upon all classes of children the advantages of a system that has proven of incalculable benefit. In re Kindergarten Sch., 18 Colo. 234, 32 P. 422, 19 L.R.A. 469 (1893).

Public school fund of state and interest derived therefrom is state property. Such interest pursuant to this section must be apportioned and distributed amongst the several counties and school districts in this state in such manner as may be prescribed by law and not in conflict with any constitutional provision. Upon the distribution thereof, title thereto vests in the distributees. Craig v. People ex rel. Hazzard, 89 Colo. 139, 299 P. 1064 (1931).

This section requires state to supply all losses to school fund, and that liability rested upon the state at the moment it came into being. Leddy v. People ex rel. Farrar, 59 Colo. 120, 147 P. 365 (1915).

Security of investment of school fund is of highest importance. It is true, the section provides that the public school fund shall be invested as may be by law directed; but a further requirement is, that such fund shall be securely and profitably invested. The security of the investment is of the first and highest importance. In re Loan of Sch. Fund, 18 Colo. 195, 32 P. 273 (1893).

Legislation respecting such investment is left to discretion of general assembly and governor. It may in some cases be difficult to determine in advance whether a proposed investment of the school fund will be secure as well as profitable. In general, legislation respecting such matters must be left to the wisdom and discretion of the general assembly and of the chief executive of the state. In re Loan of Sch. Fund, 18 Colo. 195, 32 P. 273 (1893).

Lands granted by federal government to states for school purposes are exempt from special assessments upon one of three overlapping reasons, the essence of which is that enforcement of the assessments against either the land or its proceeds would be a diversion of school funds in violation of either: (1) the act of congress granting the land to the state for school purposes; (2) state constitutional provisions making such land part of the state school fund and declaring that the principal must remain inviolate; and (3) the fact that the state holds such lands in trust for the purpose of the grant. People ex rel. Dunbar v. City of Littleton, 183 Colo. 195, 515 P.2d 1121 (1973).

Municipal fee for flood control was not a "special assessment", but instead was a service fee reasonably related and essential to the provision of flood control services benefiting all property within the municipal flood control district, including school lands. Therefore, imposition of the fee against the State Land Board did not contravene constitutional limitations on the board's authority to expend state funds. City of Littleton v. State, 855 P.2d 448 (Colo. 1993).

Taxpayer has no standing to challenge the management decisions of the state board of land commissioners with regard to school lands. Such decisions have no effect on taxpayers, because the management of school lands has no effect on the state's funding of schools through the taxing power. Brotman v. East Lake Creek Ranch L.L.P., 31 P.3d 886 (Colo. 2001).

Section 4. County treasurer to collect and disburse. Each county treasurer shall collect all school funds belonging to his county, and the several school districts therein, and disburse the same to the proper districts upon warrants drawn by the county superintendent, or by the proper district authorities, as may be provided by law.

Duty of county treasurer. Under this section, it is the duty of the county treasurer to collect his county's allotted share of the public school income fund. Craig v. People ex rel. Hazzard, 89 Colo. 139, 299 P. 1064 (1931).

Section 5. Of what school fund consists. The public school fund of the state shall consist of the proceeds of such land as have heretofore been, or may hereafter, be granted to the state by the general government for educational purposes; all estates that may escheat to the state; also all other grants, gifts or devises that may be made to this state for educational purpose.

State, 855 P.2d 448 (Colo. 1993).

General assembly determines character and type of estates which shall escheat to the state. This section does no more than lay down the general principle for the general assembly that property defined by the general assembly as an "estate" and which the general assembly declares to be escheatable to the state, shall go to the school fund. People ex rel. Dunbar v. People ex rel. City & County of Denver, 141 Colo. 459, 349 P.2d 142 (1960).

Section 6. County superintendent of schools. There may be a county superintendent of schools in each county, whose term of office shall be four years, and whose duties, qualifications, and compensation shall be prescribed by law.

The provisions of section 8 of article XIV of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, the office of county superintendent of schools may be abolished by any county if the question of the abolishment of said office is first submitted, at a general election, to a vote of the qualified electors of said county and approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon. In any county so voting in favor of such abolishment, the office of county superintendent of schools and the term of office of any incumbent in said county shall terminate on June 30 following.

Editor's note: Because there are currently no county superintendents of schools, the requirement that such person be elected was stricken in section 8 of article XIV as obsolete in senate concurrent resolution 00-005.

Section 7. Aid to private schools, churches, sectarian purpose, forbidden. Neither the general assembly, nor any county, city, town, township, school district or other public corporation, shall ever make any appropriation, or pay from any public fund or moneys whatever, anything in aid of any church or sectarian society, or for any sectarian purpose, or to help support or sustain any school, academy, seminary, college, university or other literary or scientific institution, controlled by any church or sectarian denomination whatsoever; nor shall any grant or donation of land, money or other personal property, ever be made by the state, or any such public corporation to any church, or for any sectarian purpose.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Blaine's Name in Vain?: State Constitutions, School Choice, and Charitable Choice", see 83 Den. U.L. Rev. 57 (2005).

This section prohibits aid by school district to church. Sch. Dist. No. 97 v. Schmidt, 128 Colo. 495, 263 P.2d 581 (1953).

And state aid to sectarian controlled school. As to a school "controlled by a sectarian denomination", a public school cannot be that. It is controlled by the public. Sectarian meant, to the members of the convention and to the electors who voted for and against the constitution, "pertaining to some one of the various religious sects", and the purpose of this section was to forestall public support of institutions controlled by such sects. It had no reference to public schools. People ex rel. Vollmar v. Stanley, 81 Colo. 276, 255 P. 610 (1927), overruled to the extent that it is inconsistent with the establishment clause standards set forth in Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L. Ed. 2d 844 (1963); Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

Bible reading in public schools does not cause taxpayers to pay for aid to sectarian purpose.

Loan of services of employee of school district to church, while his regularly assigned tasks were to be performed by others, was not a payment from any public funds or moneys in aid of the church under this section. Sch. Dist. No. 97 v. Schmidt, 128 Colo. 495, 263 P.2d 581 (1953).

Educational grant program not aid to sectarian institution. An educational grant program, available to students at both private and public institutions, does not amount to constitutionally significant aid to a sectarian educational institution. Americans United for Separation of Church & State Fund, Inc. v. State, 648 P.2d 1072 (Colo. 1982).

Applied in In re Kindergarten Sch., 18 Colo. 234, 32 P. 422 (1893).

Section 8. Religious test and race discrimination forbidden - sectarian tenets. No religious test or qualification shall ever be required of any person as a condition of admission into any public educational institution of the state, either as a teacher or student; and no teacher or student of any such institution shall ever be required to attend or participate in any religious service whatsoever. No sectarian tenets or doctrines shall ever be taught in the public school, nor shall any distinction or classification of pupils be made on account of race or color, nor shall any pupil be assigned or transported to any public educational institution for the purpose of achieving racial balance.

Colorado's "busing clause" does not violate the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution. Keyes v. Congress of Hispanic Educators, 902 F. Supp. 1274 (D. Colo. 1995).

Purpose of constitutional restriction of "sectarian" instruction was to provide against the promulgation or teaching of the distinctive doctrines, creeds, or tenets of any particular Christian or other religious sect. People ex rel. Vollmar v. Stanley, 81 Colo. 276, 255 P. 610 (1927), overruled to the extent that it is inconsistent with the establishment clause standards set forth in Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L. Ed. 2d 844 (1963); Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

"Sectarian" means pertaining to a sect and is commonly used to describe things pertaining to the various sects of Christianity and is not extended beyond the various religious sects. A sectarian doctrine or tenet would be one peculiar to one or more of these sects, as, for example, the doctrine held by Baptists that immersion is necessary to valid baptism, a practice which many other sects tolerate but do not require. People ex rel. Vollmar v. Stanley, 81 Colo. 276, 255 P. 610 (1927); overruled to the extent that it is inconsistent with the establishment clause standards set forth in Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L. Ed. 2d 844 (1963); Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

"Educational institution of the state" means one of the so-called state institutions, such as, the university of Colorado. People ex rel. Walker v. Higgins, 67 Colo. 441, 184 P. 365 (1919).

Meaning of clause as to religious test is that any person of any religion or no religion may become a teacher or student, and it has nothing to do with what may be taught; and even if it had there would be no religious test for admission to the school merely because some of the pupils were taught what the religion of others forbade them to learn, but which the school did not require them to learn. People ex rel. Vollmar v. Stanley, 81 Colo. 276, 255 P. 610 (1927), overruled to the extent that it is inconsistent with the establishment clause standards set forth in Abington Sch. Dist. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 83 S. Ct. 1560, 10 L. Ed. 2d 844 (1963); Conrad v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 662 (Colo. 1982).

Religious opinion may not justify denial of right to attend school. Where plaintiffs were denied the civil right to attend the public schools because of their opinion that it is a violation of one of God's commandments to salute the flag, and their consequent refusal to do so, it was held that their opinion concerning this matter was, in the constitutional sense, a religious opinion not justifying denial of right to attend public school. Zavilla v. Masse, 112 Colo. 183, 147 P.2d 823 (1944).

School board's neighborhood school policy is not to be determinative of whether segregation is practiced simply because it appears to be neutral. Keyes v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 413 U.S. 189, 93 S. Ct. 2686, 37 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1973).

Especially where policy not free of manipulation. The mere assertion of a neighborhood school policy is not dispositive where the school authorities have been found to have practiced de jure segregation in a meaningful portion of the school system by techniques that indicate that the "neighborhood school" concept has not been maintained free of manipulation. Keyes v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 413 U.S. 189, 93 S. Ct. 2686, 37 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1973).

Proof of substantial segregation supports finding of dual system. Proof of state-imposed segregation in a substantial portion of the district will suffice to support a finding by the trial court of the existence of a dual system. Keyes v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 413 U.S. 189, 93 S. Ct. 2686, 37 L. Ed. 2d 513 (1973).

Provision for separate social functions of white and black pupils violates section. An authorized order of school officials that separate social functions must be provided for white and black pupils, held to be in violation of this section. Jones v. Newlon, 81 Colo. 25, 253 P. 386, 50 A.L.R. 1263 (1927).

Section 9. State board of land commissioners. (1) The state board of land commissioners shall be composed of five persons to be appointed by the governor, with the consent of the senate, one of whom shall be elected by the board as its president.

(2) The governor shall endeavor to appoint members of the board who reside in different geographic regions of the state. The board shall be composed of one person with substantial experience in production agriculture, one person with substantial experience in public primary or secondary education, one person with substantial experience in local government and land use planning, one person with substantial experience in natural resource conservation, and one citizen at large.

(3) The governor shall appoint a new board of land commissioners on or before May 1, 1997. The term of each member shall be for four years; except that of the first board members appointed under this subsection (3), two members shall be appointed for terms that expire June 30, 1999, and three members shall be appointed for terms that expire June 30, 2001. No member shall serve more than two consecutive terms. Members of the board shall be subject to removal, and vacancies on the board shall be filled, as provided in article IV, section 6 of this constitution.

(4) The board shall, pursuant to section 13 of article XII of this constitution, hire a director with the consent of the governor, and, through the director, a staff, and may contract for office space, acquire equipment and supplies, and enter into contracts as necessary to accomplish its duties. Payment for goods, services, and personnel shall be made from the income from the trust lands. The general assembly shall annually appropriate from the income from the trust lands, sufficient moneys to enable the board to perform its duties and in that regard shall give deference to the board's assessment of its budgetary needs. The members of the board shall not, by virtue of their appointment, be employees of the state; they may be reimbursed for their reasonable and necessary expenses and may, in addition, receive such per diem as may be established by the general assembly, from the income from the trust lands.

(5) The individual members of the board shall have no personal liability for any action or failure to act as long as such action or failure to act does not involve willful or intentional malfeasance or gross negligence.

(6) The board shall serve as the trustee for the lands granted to the state in public trust by the federal government, lands acquired in lieu thereof, and additional lands held by the board in public trust. It shall have the duty to manage, control, and dispose of such lands in accordance with the purposes for which said grants of land were made and section 10 of this article IX, and subject to such terms and conditions consistent therewith as may be prescribed by law.

(7) The board shall have the authority to undertake nonsimultaneous exchanges of land, by directing that the proceeds from a particular sale or other disposition be deposited into a separate account to be established by the state treasurer with the interest thereon to accrue to such account, and withdrawing therefrom an equal or lesser amount to be used as the purchase price for other land to be held and managed as provided in this article, provided that the purchase of lands to complete such an exchange shall be made within two years of the initial sale or disposition. Any proceeds, and the interest thereon, from a sale or other disposition which are not expended in completing the exchange shall be transferred by the state treasurer to the public school fund or such other trust fund maintained by the treasurer for the proceeds of the trust lands disposed of or sold. Moneys held in the separate account shall not be used for the operating expenses of the board or for expenses incident to the disposition or acquisition of lands.

This section is special provision of constitution and deals with special object. People ex rel. Murphy v. Field, 66 Colo. 367, 181 P. 526 (1919).

State board of land commissioners is agency of state, created by this article of the constitution. Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Co. v. State, 149 Colo. 159, 368 P.2d 563 (1961).

And member of board is clearly made constitutional officer, deriving all his powers from constitutional authority. People ex rel. Murphy v. Field, 66 Colo. 367, 181 P. 526 (1919).

This section does not conflict with § 13 of art. XII, Colo. Const. There is no repugnance between the provisions of the constitution as to civil service and the provisions in the instant section for the appointment of state board of land commissioners, as to render them irreconcilable. A member of the land board holds only for the term for which he was appointed. He is not continued in office by the articles regulating civil service. People ex rel. Murphy v. Field, 66 Colo. 367, 181 P. 526 (1919).

The changes to this section enacted in 1996 do not violate Colorado's fiduciary obligations arising out of the federal trust enacted by the Colorado Enabling Act and therefore do not facially violate the supremacy clause of article VI of the United States Constitution. Branson Sch. Dist. RE-82 v. Romer, 161 F.3d 619 (10th Cir. 1998).

Whatever power board possesses to sell state lands or any part thereof is derived from constitution. Briggs v. People, 21 Colo. App. 85, 121 P. 127 (1912).

And general assembly is without power to give to body of its own creation authority to exercise such powers conjointly with such board. In re Canal Certificates, 19 Colo. 63, 34 P. 274 (1893).

Although general assembly has constitutional authority to regulate board's activities. Evans v. Simpson, 190 Colo. 426, 547 P.2d 931 (1976).

Through reasonable rules. By the terms "under such regulations as may be prescribed by law", occurring in this section, is meant under such reasonable rules as may be prescribed from time to time by the legislative department of the government. In re Leasing of State Lands, 18 Colo. 359, 32 P. 986 (1893); In re Canal Certificates, 19 Colo. 63, 34 P. 274 (1893).

And board's activities may not contradict or exceed specific statutory limits. Evans v. Simpson, 190 Colo. 426, 547 P.2d 931 (1976).

Where an attempted nonsimultaneous exchange of land did not specify a time period for transfer of the private property and the board issued a patent when the private property had not yet even been identified, the transfer amounted to a sale in violation of both the constitution and the implementing statutes. East Lake Creek Ranch, LLP v. Brotman, 998 P.2d 46 (Colo. App. 1999), rev'd on other grounds, 31 P.3d 886 (Colo. 2001).

There is nothing facially invalid about requiring in subsection (2) a diverse board, so long as the board is motivated solely to benefit the public schools. Diversity in experience on the board may help it make more prudent decisions, considering a variety of factors and circumstances, thereby benefitting the public schools. Branson Sch. Dist. RE-82 v. Romer, 958 F. Supp. 1501 (D. Colo. 1997), aff'd on other grounds, 161 F.3d 619 (10th Cir. 1998).

It is contrary to neither the Enabling Act nor ordinary trust principles to alter in subsection (5) the standards for liability of the individual board members. The individual members may take no action on their own with regard to school lands. They may act only as a board. The board is subject to the fiduciary duties generally applicable to trustees. Branson Sch. Dist. RE-82 v. Romer, 958 F. Supp. 1501 (D. Colo. 1997), aff'd on other grounds, 161 F.3d 619 (10th Cir. 1998).

Leases may contain any terms not prohibited by law. The constitution mandates that unless limited by express statutory regulations the board shall enter into whatever leases it deems to be most beneficial to the state. It may therefore utilize any lease terms not prohibited by law, such as provision for cancellation to obtain maximum revenues. Evans v. Simpson, 190 Colo. 426, 547 P.2d 931 (1976).

Effect of failure of board to comply with legislative act. When the board attempts to dispose of the state lands under its lawful powers, a failure on its part to substantially comply with the requirements of a legislative act concerning such disposition leaves the title unaffected and conveys no title in the land to the purchaser. Briggs v. People, 21 Colo. App. 85, 121 P. 127 (1912).

Taxpayer has no standing to challenge the management decisions of the state board of land commissioners with regard to school lands. Such decisions have no effect on taxpayers, because the management of school lands has no effect on the state's funding of schools through the taxing power. Brotman v. East Lake Creek Ranch L.L.P., 31 P.3d 886 (Colo. 2001).

Moneys held not to be "income" of board. Moneys received by the state land board from the sale of the state lands, or rentals or royalties therefrom, or for interest on deferred installments of purchase money, are not "the income" of the board within the meaning of this section. In re Salaries of Comm'rs & Employees of State Land Bd., 55 Colo. 105, 133 P. 140 (1913).

Applied, as to sale of school lands, in People v. G.H. Hard Land Co., 51 Colo. 260, 117 P. 141 (1911).

Section 10. Selection and management of public trust lands.(1) The people of the state of Colorado recognize (a) that the state school lands are an endowment of land assets held in a perpetual, inter-generational public trust for the support of public schools, which should not be significantly diminished, (b) that the disposition and use of such lands should therefore benefit public schools including local school districts, and (c) that the economic productivity of all lands held in public trust is dependent on sound stewardship, including protecting and enhancing the beauty, natural values, open space and wildlife habitat thereof, for this and future generations. In recognition of these principles, the board shall be governed by the standards set forth in this section 10 in the discharge of its fiduciary obligations, in addition to other laws generally applicable to trustees.

It shall be the duty of the state board of land commissioners to provide for the prudent management, location, protection, sale, exchange, or other disposition of all the lands heretofore, or which may hereafter be, held by the board as trustee pursuant to section 9(6) of this article IX, in order to produce reasonable and consistent income over time. In furtherance thereof, the board shall:

(a) Prior to the lease, sale, or exchange of any lands for commercial, residential or industrial development, determine that the income from the lease, sale, or exchange can reasonably be anticipated to exceed the fiscal impact of such development on local school districts and state funding of education from increased school enrollment associated with such development;

(b) Protect and enhance the long-term productivity and sound stewardship of the trust lands held by the board, by, among other activities:

(I) Establishing and maintaining a long-term stewardship trust of up to 300,000 acres of land that the board determines through a statewide public nomination process to be valuable primarily to preserve long-term benefits and returns to the state; which trust shall be held and managed to maximize options for continued stewardship, public use, or future disposition, by permitting only those uses, not necessarily precluding existing uses or management practices, that will protect and enhance the beauty, natural values, open space, and wildlife habitat thereof; at least 200,000 acres of which land shall be designated on or before January 1, 1999, and at least an additional 95,000 acres of which land shall be designated on or before January 1, 2001; specific parcels of land held in the stewardship trust may be removed from the trust only upon the affirmative vote of four members of the board and upon the designation or exchange of an equal or greater amount of additional land into said trust.

(II) Including in agricultural leases terms, incentives, and lease rates that will promote sound stewardship and land management practices, long-term agricultural productivity, and community stability;

(III) Managing the development and utilization of natural resources in a manner which will conserve the long-term value of such resources, as well as existing and future uses, and in accordance with state and local laws and regulations; and

(IV) Selling or leasing conservation easements, licenses and other similar interests in land.

(c) Comply with valid local land use regulations and land use plans.

(d) Allow access by public schools without charge for outdoor educational purposes so long as such access does not conflict with uses previously approved by the board on such lands.

(e) Provide opportunities for the public school districts within which such lands are located to lease, purchase, or otherwise use such lands or portions thereof as are necessary for school building sites, at an amount to be determined by the board, which shall not exceed the appraised fair market value, which amount may be paid over time.

(2) No law shall ever be passed by the general assembly granting any privileges to persons who may have settled upon any such public trust lands subsequent to the survey thereof by the general government, by which the amount to be derived by the sale, or other disposition of such lands, shall be diminished, directly or indirectly.

Law reviews. For article, "One Year Review of Constitutional Law", see 40 Den. L. Ctr. J. 134 (1963). For article, "The 'New' Colorado State Land Board", see 78 Den. U. L. Rev. 347 (2001).

The changes to this section enacted in 1996 do not violate Colorado's fiduciary obligations arising out of the federal trust enacted by the Colorado Enabling Act and therefore do not facially violate the supremacy clause of article VI of the United States Constitution. Branson Sch. Dist. RE-82 v. Romer, 161 F.3d 619 (10th Cir. 1998).

As phrased, subsection (1)(c) seeks only to further the economic productivity of the school lands through consideration of natural resource concerns. Therefore, the court did not enjoin it in a facial challenge. Branson Sch. Dist. RE-82 v. Romer, 958 F. Supp. 1501 (D. Colo. 1997), aff'd on other grounds, 161 F.3d 619 (10th Cir. 1998).

Subsection (1)(b)(II) does not require the board to take any action that is not consonant with its duty to benefit the sole beneficiary of the trust. Facially there is no reason why sound stewardship and land management practices, long-term agricultural productivity, and community stability are at odds with the best interests of the common schools. Branson Sch. Dist. RE-82 v. Romer, 958 F. Supp. 1501 (D. Colo. 1997), aff'd on other grounds, 161 F.3d 619 (10th Cir. 1998).

"General government", in the second sentence, can only mean the United States of America. Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Co. v. State, 149 Colo. 159, 368 P.2d 563 (1961).

State board of land commissioners is legal landlord of state lands and it executes all leases of state lands in the capacity of landlord. Harrah v. People ex rel. Attorney Gen., 125 Colo. 420, 243 P.2d 1035 (1952).

Constitution specifically describes lands which shall be subject to disposition by land commissioners. Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Co. v. State, 149 Colo. 159, 368 P.2d 563 (1961).

Board alone has duty to provide for sale or other disposition of lands granted to the state by the general government under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Co. v. State, 149 Colo. 159, 368 P.2d 563 (1961).

And power applies to oil and gas leases. Where the lands included within oil and gas leases are lands granted to the state by the general government, they are lands concerning which the land commissioners have exclusive powers of disposal. It does not lie within the power of the general assembly to place limitation or qualification upon the exercise of that power. Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Co. v. State, 149 Colo. 159, 368 P.2d 563 (1961).

And to school land. Lands granted to the state by the United States, to be held and maintained as an institution of learning under § 23-52-101, are lands over which the land commissioners have exclusive powers of disposal, and it is not within the power of the general assembly to place limitations upon the exercise thereof. Sunray Mid-Continent Oil Co. v. State, 149 Colo. 159, 368 P.2d 563 (1961).

Yet, board is mere agency, with the duty to do no less, and power to do no more, in the disposition of the state lands, than to comply with the directions of the statute. Walpole v. State Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 62 Colo. 554, 163 P. 848 (1917).

And board must exercise its constitutional powers in accordance with regulations prescribed and in such manner as, by its judgment, will secure the maximum amount under such regulations. In re Leasing of State Lands, 18 Colo. 359, 32 P. 986 (1893).

As general assembly has constitutional authority to regulate board's activities. Evans v. Simpson, 190 Colo. 426, 547 P.2d 931 (1976).

And board's activities may not contradict or exceed specific statutory limits. Evans v. Simpson, 190 Colo. 426, 547 P.2d 931 (1976).

Leases may contain any terms not prohibited by law. The constitution mandates that unless limited by express statutory regulations the board shall enter into whatever leases it deems to be most beneficial to the state. It may therefore utilize any lease terms not prohibited by law, such as provision for cancellation to obtain maximum revenues. Evans v. Simpson, 190 Colo. 426, 547 P.2d 931 (1976).

Payment for state land held unconstitutional. In re Canal Certificates, 19 Colo. 63, 34 P. 274 (1893).

Board cannot dedicate land simply by showing roadway on original subdivision plat. The state board of land commissioners does not have the authority to dedicate land to be used as a public highway simply by showing the roadway on an original subdivision plat. Tuttle v. County Comm'rs, 44 Colo. App. 334, 613 P.2d 641 (1980).

Municipal fee for flood control was not a "special assessment", but instead was a service fee reasonably related and essential to the provision of flood control services benefiting all property within the municipal flood control district, including school lands. Therefore, imposition of the fee against the State Land Board did not contravene constitutional limitations on the board's authority to expend state funds. City of Littleton v. State, 855 P.2d 448 (Colo. 1993).

Section 12. Regents of university. There shall be nine regents of the university of Colorado who shall be elected in the manner prescribed by law for terms of six years each. Said regents shall constitute a body corporate to be known by the name and style of "The Regents of the University of Colorado". The board of regents shall select from among its members a chairman who shall conduct the meetings of the board and a vice-chairman who shall assume the duties of the chairman in case of his absence.

Regents constitute body corporate, but this body is a part of the state, a department of the state to which is entrusted the supervision and government of the university of the state. In re Macky's Estate, 46 Colo. 79, 102 P. 1075 (1909).

Its functions of administration deemed franchises, subject to alteration. Although it is true that the board of regents is a public corporation and that its rights and franchises are not vested, yet its various functions of administration affecting the public are franchises conferred by the constitution and general assembly, just as much as though the corporation was a private one, and are franchises in the same sense, subject to alteration, that the various functions of a private corporation are franchises. There is no federal constitutional right to education. Cary v. Bd. of Educ., 598 F.2d 535 (10th Cir. 1979).

Whether there is public education system is left to states. Cary v. Bd. of Educ., 598 F.2d 535 (10th Cir. 1979).

School districts are subdivisions of state. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952); Bagby v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 186 Colo. 428, 528 P.2d 1299 (1974).

And school districts are created only through legislative authority. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

Subject to legislative control. School districts being public agencies, they and their directors are subject to legislative control, save as the legislative power may be limited by the constitution. Sch. Dist. No. 16 v. Union High Sch. No. 1, 25 Colo. App. 510, 139 P. 1039 (1914), rev'd on other grounds, 60 Colo. 292, 152 P. 1149 (1915); Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

General assembly has almost unlimited power to alter school districts. Because few, if any, restrictions are placed upon the legislative power in school affairs by the constitution, the general assembly has almost unlimited power to abolish, divide or alter school districts. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

In authorizing procedures for the reorganization of school districts, the general assembly has the power to provide for the inclusion of existing districts, or portions thereof, in a new proposed district and to direct transfer of assets of the existing districts to the new one, notwithstanding the fact that the existing districts and a majority of the electors residing therein may in fact oppose the reorganization and the resultant transfer of assets. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

And may delegate power to administrative bodies. It has been generally recognized that the broad discretionary power to change the boundaries of school districts may be delegated by the general assembly to administrative bodies to be exercised under certain conditions, and in agreement with certain standards. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

Consent of particular districts, or inhabitants thereof, is not necessary as constitutional prerequisite to the changing of boundaries, dissolution or division of school districts, or to the transfer of assets from an existing school district to the larger reorganized district of which it becomes a part. Whether such consent should be required before reorganization is effected is a question of legislative policy. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

This section vests in directors of every school district control of instruction of youth of that district, in public schools. Sch. Dist. No. 16 v. Union High Sch. No. 1, 60 Colo. 292, 152 P. 1149 (1915).

And state has authority to effectuate state's education purposes. A school district is a subordinate division of the government and exercises authority to effectuate the state's education purposes. Bagby v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 186 Colo. 428, 528 P.2d 1299 (1974).

Value system and educational emphasis to reflect will of people. It is legitimate for the curriculum of the school district to reflect the value system and educational emphasis which are the collective will of those whose children are being educated and who are paying the costs. Cary v. Bd. of Educ., 598 F.2d 535 (10th Cir. 1979).

Rules for discipline and control of school may be adopted. A board of education has power to adopt such rules and bylaws for the discipline and control of the school as it deems proper, and courts will not interfere unless there is a clear abuse of the power and discretion vested in the board. Goodman v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 32 F.2d 586 (8th Cir. 1929).

And much latitude allowed. Under such a grant of control of instruction as contained in this section much latitude is indulged, provided the object of the power sought to be exercised is reasonably germane to the purposes of the grant. Goodman v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 32 F.2d 586 (8th Cir. 1929).

On an underlying constitutional basis, school boards are accorded by statute the authority to employ and to fix the salaries of their employees and are vested with "considerable discretion". Ball v. Weld County Sch. Dist. No. RE-3J, 37 Colo. App. 16, 545 P.2d 1370 (1975).

Taxpayers and directors do not own school property. The argument that the schoolhouse or some interest therein is the property of the directors or individual taxpayers and that by its transfer the constitutional rights of the plaintiffs as school directors or as individuals have been invaded is not sound. The directors have no interest as such. The property is not theirs but the district's. The individual taxpayers do not own the property nor have they any legal or equitable interest in it. Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

School district has no right to school property formerly within its jurisdiction, and no right to control or operate public schools in that geographical area, because the general assembly has plenary power to determine the number and territory of school districts. Sch. Dist. No. 1 v. Sch. Planning Comm., 164 Colo. 541, 437 P.2d 787 (1968).

Candidate for school director properly elected. A candidate for school director residing in and nominated from a subdistrict, but elected by votes of electors of the entire district, was held to be properly elected. Berni v. Cook, 153 Colo. 444, 386 P.2d 588 (1963).

Teacher may bargain away freedom to communicate in official role. Cary v. Bd. of Educ., 427 F. Supp. 945 (D. Colo. 1977), aff'd, 598 F.2d 535 (10th Cir. 1979).

Where senior high school English teachers brought suit claiming that the action of the school district board of education in prohibiting the use of certain books as instructional material constituted an infringement of academic freedom, the federal district court held that such claims must be denied where all the teachers of the district, through a bargaining agent, entered a collective bargaining agreement with the school board in which final authority for the choice of instructional material was yielded to the school board. Cary v. Bd. of Educ., 427 F. Supp. 945 (D. Colo. 1977), aff'd, 598 F.2d 535 (10th Cir. 1979).

Employment termination procedures outlined in a school district's handbook do not contravene an explicit grant of authority by the state. Adams Cty. Sch. Dist. No. 50 v. Dickey, 791 P.2d 688 (Colo. 1990).

This section does not require that a court defer to a board of education's decision not to retain a teacher when the court is reviewing that decision pursuant to § 22-63-302. This section must be read in conjunction with sections 1 and 2 of this article in which responsibility for the general supervision of schools is vested in the state board of education, with powers and duties prescribed by law, and in which responsibility for establishing and maintaining a thorough and uniform system of free public schools is vested in the general assembly. These sections establish that school districts are subdivisions of the state and created through legislative authority. Furthermore, the general assembly has laid down substantive and procedural criteria applicable to the termination of teachers and judicial review of such decisions. Heimer v. Bd. of Educ., Adams County, 895 P.2d 152 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 919 P.2d 786 (Colo. 1996).

Where the state board and local boards have potentially conflicting authority, a reviewing court must strike a balance between local control of instruction and the state board's general supervision. Review must be on a case-by-case basis, guided by these principles: First, a local board's resolution of individual cases inherently implicates its ability to control instruction; second, generally applicable law triggers control of instruction concerns when applied to specific decisions likely to implicate education policy; third, local board discretion can be limited in such circumstances by statutory criteria and/or judicial review; and fourth, such general constraints, if they exist, must not usurp the local board's decision-making authority or its ability to implement, guide, or manage the educational programs for which it is ultimately responsible. Bd. of Educ., Dist. No. 1 v. Booth, 984 P.2d 639 (Colo. 1999).

Because a pilot program deprived the school districts of all local control of instruction, Booth is not applicable since there are no constitutional powers to balance. Owens v. Colo. Cong. of Parents, 92 P.3d 933 (Colo. 2004).

Pilot program violated the local control requirement of this section because it directed the school districts to turn over a portion of their locally raised funds to nonpublic schools over whose instruction the districts have no control. The pilot program stripped local school districts of any discretion over the character of instruction participating students receive at district expense. Owens v. Colo. Cong. of Parents, 92 P.3d 933 (Colo. 2004).

Control over instruction is meaningless without control over local funding because local funding provides the link connecting the local citizenry to their school district. Allowing a district to raise and disburse its own funds enables the district to determine its own educational policy, free from restrictions imposed by the state or any other entity. Owens v. Colo. Cong. of Parents, 92 P.3d 933 (Colo. 2004).

Beginning with Belier v. Wilson, 59 Colo. 96, 147 P. 355 (1915), the court has stressed the importance of district control of locally raised funds over and above the legislature's power to guide and implement education policy. Owens v. Colo. Cong. of Parents, 92 P.3d 933 (Colo. 2004).

The constitutional division of power between the state and local boards is not measured by funding. The court rejected defendant's argument that with greater state funding comes greater state control over educational policy. Owens v. Colo. Cong. of Parents, 92 P.3d 933 (Colo. 2004).

The basic rationale of our statewide school finance system is effectuating local control over public schools. Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982); Owens v. Colo. Cong. of Parents, 92 P.3d 933 (Colo. 2004).

Framers of this section sought to empower the electors in each school district, including the parents of public school students, with control over instruction through the creation of local school boards which would represent the will of the electorate. Owens v. Colo. Cong. of Parents, 92 P.3d 933 (Colo. 2004).

School districts deemed to have standing when alleging that charter school legislation infringed upon powers granted under this section. Boulder Valley Sch. Dist. RE-2 v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 217 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2009).

Local boards' power to implement, guide, or manage educational programs in local public schools is not usurped by charter school institute. Nothing in part 5 of article 30.5 of title 22 forces anything upon local school districts. Boulder Valley Sch. Dist. RE-2 v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 217 P.3d 918 (Colo. App. 2009).

Applied in Kyle v. Abernathy, 46 Colo. 214, 102 P. 746 (1909); Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

Section 17. Education - Funding. (1) Purpose. In state fiscal year 2001-2002 through state fiscal year 2010-2011, the statewide base per pupil funding, as defined by the Public School Finance Act of 1994, article 54 of title 22, Colorado Revised Statutes on the effective date of this section, for public education from preschool through the twelfth grade and total state funding for all categorical programs shall grow annually at least by the rate of inflation plus an additional one percentage point. In state fiscal year 2011-2012, and each fiscal year thereafter, the statewide base per pupil funding for public education from preschool through the twelfth grade and total state funding for all categorical programs shall grow annually at a rate set by the general assembly that is at least equal to the rate of inflation.

(2) Definitions. For purposes of this section: (a) "Categorical programs" include transportation programs, English language proficiency programs, expelled and at-risk student programs, special education programs (including gifted and talented programs), suspended student programs, vocational education programs, small attendance centers, comprehensive health education programs, and other current and future accountable programs specifically identified in statute as a categorical program.

(b) "Inflation" has the same meaning as defined in article X, section 20, subsection (2), paragraph (f) of the Colorado constitution.

(3) Implementation. In state fiscal year 2001-2002 and each fiscal year thereafter, the general assembly may annually appropriate, and school districts may annually expend, monies from the state education fund created in subsection (4) of this section. Such appropriations and expenditures shall not be subject to the statutory limitation on general fund appropriations growth, the limitation on fiscal year spending set forth in article X, section 20 of the Colorado constitution, or any other spending limitation existing in law.

(4) State Education Fund Created. (a) There is hereby created in the department of the treasury the state education fund. Beginning on the effective date of this measure, all state revenues collected from a tax of one third of one percent on federal taxable income, as modified by law, of every individual, estate, trust and corporation, as defined in law, shall be deposited in the state education fund. Revenues generated from a tax of one third of one percent on federal taxable income, as modified by law, of every individual, estate, trust and corporation, as defined in law, shall not be subject to the limitation on fiscal year spending set forth in article X, section 20 of the Colorado constitution. All interest earned on monies in the state education fund shall be deposited in the state education fund and shall be used before any principal is depleted. Monies remaining in the state education fund at the end of any fiscal year shall remain in the fund and not revert to the general fund.

(b) In state fiscal year 2001-2002, and each fiscal year thereafter, the general assembly may annually appropriate monies from the state education fund. Monies in the state education fund may only be used to comply with subsection (1) of this section and for accountable education reform, for accountable programs to meet state academic standards, for class size reduction, for expanding technology education, for improving student safety, for expanding the availability of preschool and kindergarten programs, for performance incentives for teachers, for accountability reporting, or for public school building capital construction.

(5) Maintenance of Effort. Monies appropriated from the state education fund shall not be used to supplant the level of general fund appropriations existing on the effective date of this section for total program education funding under the Public School Finance Act of 1994, article 54 of title 22, Colorado Revised Statutes, and for categorical programs as defined in subsection (2) of this section. In state fiscal year 2001-2002 through state fiscal year 2010-2011, the general assembly shall, at a minimum, annually increase the general fund appropriation for total program under the "Public School Finance Act of 1994," or any successor act, by an amount not below five percent of the prior year general fund appropriation for total program under the "Public School Finance Act of 1994," or any successor act. This general fund growth requirement shall not apply in any fiscal year in which Colorado personal income grows less than four and one half percent between the two previous calendar years.

ANNOTATION

This section prescribes minimum increases for state funding of education. It was not intended to qualify, quantify, or modify the "thorough and uniform" mandate expressed in § 2 of this article. Consequently, the mandate in this section relates solely to a minimum level of funding. Lobato v. State, 218 P.3d 358 (Colo. 2009).

ANNOTATION

I. General Consideration.
II. Power of General Assembly to Tax.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For comment on Johnson v. McDonald appearing below, see 8 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 152 (1936).

This section is mandate to general assembly. It limits its otherwise plenary power to act or not to act by requiring an annual tax to be provided sufficient, when supplemented by other resources of the state, to defray the estimated state expenses for each fiscal year. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Vail Assocs., Inc., 19 P.3d 1263 (Colo. 2001).

It is made the imperative duty of the general assembly under this section to provide a tax sufficient to defray the estimated expenses of the state government for each fiscal year. People ex rel. Thomas v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 P. 608 (1886); In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); People ex rel. Regents of State Univ. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 20 Colo. 220, 37 P. 964 (1894).

This mandate is not absolute, but contingent; contingent on the estimated expense exceeding the other resources which might be derived from various sorts of excise taxation. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

Primary purpose for which annual tax required is to provide sufficient appropriations to defray the estimated expenses of the state government for each fiscal year. In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

The fund derived cannot be diverted to other objects until its primary purpose is satisfied. Having provided a revenue for a specific purpose, as under this section, in obedience to the constitutional mandate, it is manifest that the fund cannot be diverted to other objects until the primary purpose of its creation is satisfied. It would be trifling with a serious provision of the constitution to hold that the obligation to provide a tax for a given purpose is imperative, but that the appropriation of the fund arising from such tax is optional. In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

Expenses primarily intended to be provided for by this section. The ordinary expenses of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the state are the expenses primarily intended to be provided for by this section. In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

This section relates merely to raising of revenue, not to its disposition after it is raised. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

This section is clearly applicable to ad valorem taxes and at least of debatable applicability to excise taxes. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

Legislative appropriations may be declared void for deficiency of revenue. When the entire revenue of a given fiscal year has been exhausted the legislative appropriations for that year remaining unpaid, or any unpaid portions thereof, are totally void, constitute no debt and impose no obligation, legal or moral, upon the people or upon any future general assembly. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

But not prior to expiration of fiscal year. Appropriations cannot be declared void for deficiency of revenue previous to the expiration of the fiscal year. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

Applied in People ex rel. Hershey v. McNichols, 91 Colo. 141, 13 P.2d 266 (1932).

II. POWER OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY TO TAX.

Taxation indisputably legislative prerogative. Gates Rubber Co. v. South Sub. Metro. Recreation & Park Dist., 183 Colo. 222, 516 P.2d 436 (1973).

General assembly has unlimited power of taxation. Except as inhibited by the constitution, the legislative department of government has the unlimited power of taxation, not only as to the subjects of taxation, but also as to the rate, and may tax its own citizens for the prosecution of any particular business. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

And is not restricted to taxation upon property. There is nothing in the revenue article or elsewhere in the constitution which expressly, or by necessary implication, restricts the lawmaking body in its attempts to produce revenue for state purposes to taxation upon property, real and personal. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

This section expressly speaks of other sources of revenue to defray the expenses of the state government than that provided for by an annual tax on property. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

Hence it may derive revenue from occupation or privilege taxes. The general assembly may derive revenue from other sources, such as an occupation tax, with which, in connection with a property tax, the expenses of the state government shall be met. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

If the general assembly has power to raise revenue to aid in defraying the expenses of the state government by the imposition of a poll tax, it may also, for the same purpose, lay a tax upon occupations, or a privilege tax. People v. Ames, 24 Colo. 422, 51 P. 426 (1897); Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

General assembly also has power to create central body to assess county property. There should be no doubt as to the power of the general assembly to create a central body, and empower it with the duty of performing those functions of assessment, in each county, essential to bring the property therein for taxation purposes to its full cash value, the standard by it prescribed to insure a just valuation. Such law would in no wise interfere with the constitutional powers of the state or county boards of equalization. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

General assembly may require Denver to pay registrar of registration district within its limits. This section does not deprive the general assembly of the power to require the city and county of Denver to pay the compensation of the registrar of the registration district situated within its limits since the general assembly may require a city, as a governmental agency, to perform, at its own expense, many duties of a governmental nature. People ex rel. Hershey v. McNichols, 91 Colo. 141, 13 P.2d 266 (1932).

Section 3. Uniform taxation - exemptions. (1) (a) Each property tax levy shall be uniform upon all real and personal property not exempt from taxation under this article located within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax. The actual value of all real and personal property not exempt from taxation under this article shall be determined under general laws, which shall prescribe such methods and regulations as shall secure just and equalized valuations for assessments of all real and personal property not exempt from taxation under this article. Valuations for assessment shall be based on appraisals by assessing officers to determine the actual value of property in accordance with provisions of law, which laws shall provide that actual value be determined by appropriate consideration of cost approach, market approach, and income approach to appraisal. However, the actual value of residential real property shall be determined solely by consideration of cost approach and market approach to appraisal; and, however, the actual value of agricultural lands, as defined by law, shall be determined solely by consideration of the earning or productive capacity of such lands capitalized at a rate as prescribed by law.

(b) Residential real property, which shall include all residential dwelling units and the land, as defined by law, on which such units are located, and mobile home parks, but shall not include hotels and motels, shall be valued for assessment at twenty-one percent of its actual value. For the property tax year commencing January 1, 1985, the general assembly shall determine the percentage of the aggregate statewide valuation for assessment which is attributable to residential real property. For each subsequent year, the general assembly shall again determine the percentage of the aggregate statewide valuation for assessment which is attributable to each class of taxable property, after adding in the increased valuation for assessment attributable to new construction and to increased volume of mineral and oil and gas production. For each year in which there is a change in the level of value used in determining actual value, the general assembly shall adjust the ratio of valuation for assessment for residential real property which is set forth in this paragraph (b) as is necessary to insure that the percentage of the aggregate statewide valuation for assessment which is attributable to residential real property shall remain the same as it was in the year immediately preceding the year in which such change occurs. Such adjusted ratio shall be the ratio of valuation for assessment for residential real property for those years for which such new level of value is used. In determining the adjustment to be made in the ratio of valuation for assessment for residential real property, the aggregate statewide valuation for assessment that is attributable to residential real property shall be calculated as if the full actual value of all owner-occupied primary residences that are partially exempt from taxation pursuant to section 3.5 of this article was subject to taxation. All other taxable property shall be valued for assessment at twenty-nine percent of its actual value. However, the valuation for assessment for producing mines, as defined by law, and lands or leaseholds producing oil or gas, as defined by law, shall be a portion of the actual annual or actual average annual production therefrom, based upon the value of the unprocessed material, according to procedures prescribed by law for different types of minerals. Non-producing unpatented mining claims, which are possessory interests in real property by virtue of leases from the United States of America, shall be exempt from property taxation.

(c) The following classes of personal property, as defined by law, shall be exempt from property taxation: Household furnishings and personal effects which are not used for the production of income at any time; inventories of merchandise and materials and supplies which are held for consumption by a business or are held primarily for sale; livestock; agricultural and livestock products; and agricultural equipment which is used on the farm or ranch in the production of agricultural products.

(d) Ditches, canals, and flumes owned and used by individuals or corporations for irrigating land owned by such individuals or corporations, or the individual members thereof, shall not be separately taxed so long as they shall be owned and used exclusively for such purposes.

(2) (a) During each property tax year beginning with the property tax year which commences January 1, 1983, the general assembly shall cause a valuation for assessment study to be conducted. Such study shall determine whether or not the assessor of each county has complied with the property tax provisions of this constitution and of the statutes in valuing property and has determined the actual value and valuation for assessment of each and every class of taxable real and personal property consistent with such provisions. Such study shall sample at least one percent of each and every class of taxable real and personal property in the county.

(b) (I) If the study conducted during the property tax year which commences January 1, 1983, shows that a county assessor did not comply with the property tax provisions of this constitution or the statutes or did not determine the actual value or the valuation for assessment of any class or classes of taxable real and personal property consistent with such provisions, the state board of equalization shall, during such year, order such county assessor to reappraise during the property tax year which commences January 1, 1984, such class or classes for such year. Such reappraisal shall be performed at the expense of the county.

(II) If the study performed during the property tax year which commences January 1, 1984, shows that the county assessor failed to reappraise such class or classes as ordered or failed in his reappraisal to meet the objections of the state board of equalization, the state board of equalization shall cause a reappraisal of such class or classes to be performed in the property tax year which commences January 1, 1985. The cost of such reappraisal shall be paid by the state by an appropriation authorized by law. However, if such reappraisal shows that the county assessor did not value or assess taxable property as prescribed by the provisions of this constitution or of the statutes, upon certification to the board of county commissioners by the state board of equalization of the cost thereof, the board of county commissioners shall pay to the state the cost of such reappraisal.

(III) The reappraisal performed in the property tax year which commences January 1, 1985, shall become the county's abstract for assessment with regard to such reappraised class or classes for such year. The state board of equalization shall order the county's board of county commissioners to levy, and the board of county commissioners shall levy, in 1985 an additional property tax on all taxable property in the county in an amount sufficient to repay, and the board of county commissioners shall repay, the state for any excess payment made by the state to school districts within the county during the property tax year which commences January 1, 1985.

(c) (I) Beginning with the property tax year which commences January 1, 1985, and applicable to each property tax year thereafter, the annual study conducted pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection (2) shall, in addition to the requirements set forth in paragraph (a) of this subsection (2), set forth the aggregate valuation for assessment of each county for the year in which the study is conducted.

(II) If the valuation for assessment of a county as reflected in its abstract for assessment is more than five percent below the valuation for assessment for such county as determined by the study, during the next following year, the state board of equalization shall cause to be performed, at the expense of the county, a reappraisal of any class or classes of taxable property which the study shows were not appraised consistent with the property tax provisions of this constitution or the statutes. The state board of equalization shall cause to be performed during the next following year, at the expense of the county, a reappraisal of any class or classes of taxable property which the study shows were not appraised consistent with the property tax provisions of this constitution or the statutes even though the county's aggregate valuation for assessment as reflected in the county's abstract for assessment was not more than five percent below the county's aggregate valuation for assessment as determined by the study. The reappraisal shall become the county's valuation for assessment with regard to such reappraised class or classes for the year in which the reappraisal was performed.

(III) In any case in which a reappraisal is ordered, state equalization payments to school districts within the county during the year in which the reappraisal is performed shall be based upon the valuation for assessment as reflected in the county's abstract for assessment. The state board of equalization shall also order the board of county commissioners of the county to impose, and the board of county commissioners shall impose, at the time of imposition of property taxes during such year an additional property tax on all taxable property within the county in an amount sufficient to repay, and the board of county commissioners shall repay, the state for any excess payments made by the state to school districts within the county during the year in which such reappraisal was performed plus interest thereon at a rate and for such time as are prescribed by law.

(IV) If the valuation for assessment of a county as reflected in its abstract for assessment is more than five percent below the valuation for assessment for such county as determined by the study and if the state board of equalization fails to order a reappraisal, state equalization payments to school districts within the county during the year following the year in which the study was conducted shall be based upon the valuation for assessment for the county as reflected in the county's abstract for assessment. The board of county commissioners of such county shall impose in the year in which such school payments are made an additional property tax on all taxable property in the county in an amount sufficient to repay, and the board of county commissioners shall repay, the state for the difference between the amount the state actually paid in state equalization payments during such year and what the state would have paid during such year had such state payments been based on the valuation for assessment as determined by the study.

Purpose and construction of section. The principal design of this section is to subject taxable property to the payment of its fair and equitable proportion of the revenue necessary for governmental purposes. People ex rel. Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 P. 144 (1888).

If there is doubt as to the meaning of a particular word or phrase made use of in this section, such doubt should be so resolved as to most effectively accomplish this beneficent purpose. People ex rel. Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 P. 144 (1888).

Specific requirements of section. It is manifest that three things were attempted to be required: 1. That all taxes should be uniform upon the same class of subjects. 2. That they should be levied and collected under general laws. 3. That such general laws should prescribe such regulations as would secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real and personal. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Rocky Mt. News Printing Co., 15 Colo. App. 189, 61 P. 494 (1900).

This section prohibits the general assembly from providing purely statutory exemptions that are not within the constitutional exemption categories of this article or enacting provisions that would prevent certain private interests from bearing their fair and proportionate burden of taxation. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Vail Assocs., Inc., 19 P.3d 1263 (Colo. 2001).

Section is only limitation upon taxing power of state. This section requiring uniformity of all taxes is the only constitutional limitation upon the taxing power of the state. City & County of Denver v. Lewin, 106 Colo. 331, 105 P.2d 854 (1940).

There is but one mode of taxation provided, and this mode is applicable alike to the levy of taxes for state, county, city and town purposes. Taxes levied under this mode must "be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax", and must be assessed upon all property according to its "just valuation". Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 106 (1881).

Taxation must be under authority of statute and cannot be authorized solely by constitutional provisions. City & County of Denver v. Sec. Life & Accident Co., 173 Colo. 248, 477 P.2d 369 (1970).

The imposition of a tax is a legislative act, and unless authority is so given, it does not exist; also the property to be taxed, as well as the mode of taxation, is subject to legislative control. Carlisle v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 8 Colo. 320, 7 P. 164 (1885).

All property not exempted is subject to taxation. Estes Park Toll Rd. Co. v. Edwards, 3 Colo. App. 74, 32 P. 549 (1893).

The constitution of this state, and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, subject all property, real and personal, within the state to taxation, that shall not be expressly exempted by law. Carlisle v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 8 Colo. 320, 7 P. 164 (1885).

"Property" is to be taken in its broad and general sense. Property within the meaning of the constitution and statutes providing for taxation is to be taken in its broad and general sense, and to constitute property which is subject to ownership as the terms are used in their broad sense there must exist the exclusive right to alienate or transfer, as well as the right to use and enjoyment. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Rocky Mt. News Printing Co., 15 Colo. App. 189, 61 P. 494 (1900).

Property owner cannot by contract escape taxation. The owner of the fee or reversionary interest in real property cannot by contract escape the burden of taxation placed upon him by the constitutional mandate of this section concerning uniformity of taxation. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Boettcher, 99 Colo. 408, 63 P.2d 447 (1936).

Social services code funding scheme does not violate this section. The counties retain sufficient control over the funds raised by levy under the code to be deemed the taxing authorities so that, since the levies fall uniformly upon the same class of property within each county, the funding scheme does not violate this section. Colo. Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 697 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1985).

Review is limited to the narrow ascertainment of agency abuse of discretion by neglecting to abide by the statute in the calculation of tax assessments. Leavell-Rio Grande v. Bd. of Assess. Appeals, 753 P.2d 797 (Colo. App. 1988).

Applied in Murray v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 28 Colo. 427, 65 P. 26 (1901); Burton v. City & County of Denver, 99 Colo. 207, 61 P.2d 856 (1936); City & County of Denver v. Tax Research Bureau, 101 Colo. 140, 71 P.2d 809 (1937); Gordon v. Wheatridge Water Dist., 107 Colo. 128, 109 P.2d 899 (1941); Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Fifty-first Gen. Ass'y, 198 Colo. 302, 599 P.2d 887 (1979).

II. CLASSIFICATION AND VALUATION OF PROPERTY.

This section does not attempt to classify property for taxation, and the only limitation contained in this section upon the method of taxing property is with respect to ditches, etc., used in a certain way. Ames v. People ex rel. Temple, 26 Colo. 83, 56 P. 656 (1899).

There is no constitutional restriction against general assembly classifying property for taxation and providing methods of taxation so long as the discrimination is based upon the nature or use of property justifying it. The uniformity and equality enjoined by the constitution require only that the same means and methods be applied impartially to all the constituents of each class so that it operates equally and uniformly upon all persons and corporations in similar circumstances. Ames v. People ex rel. Temple, 26 Colo. 83, 56 P. 656 (1899).

General assembly may classify for purpose of taxation so long as classification is reasonable one. Western Elec. Co. v. Weed, 185 Colo. 340, 524 P.2d 1369 (1974); Am. Mobilehome Ass'n v. Dolan, 191 Colo. 433, 553 P.2d 758 (1976).

If the classification conceivably rests upon some reasonable considerations of difference or policy, there is no constitutional violation. Am. Mobilehome Ass'n v. Dolan, 191 Colo. 433, 553 P.2d 758 (1976).

To justify judicial interference, classification must be based on invidious distinction. To justify judicial interference, the classification adopted must be based upon an invidious and unreasonable distinction or difference with reference to similar kinds of property. People ex rel. Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 P. 144 (1888); Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953).

The burden is on one attacking classification to negative every conceivable basis which might support it, at least where no fundamental right is imperiled. Am. Mobilehome Ass'n v. Dolan, 191 Colo. 433, 553 P.2d 758 (1976).

General assembly determines persons and objects to be taxed. The power of taxation is an incident to sovereignty, and belongs to the legislative department to determine the persons and objects to be taxed subject to constitutional limitations, and to provide the necessary mode and provisions for making the law effective. Stanley v. Little Pittsburg Mining Co., 6 Colo. 415 (1882); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Rocky Mt. News Printing Co., 15 Colo. App. 189, 61 P. 494 (1900).

Thus it may enlarge list of taxable subjects. There is nothing in this section imposing upon the general assembly any restrictions or limitations so as to preclude it from extending and enlarging the list of taxable subjects so as to embrace tangible and intangible things which might not be property under the broad definition of the word, and which might be the subjects of qualified ownership only. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Rocky Mt. News Printing Co., 15 Colo. App. 189, 61 P. 494 (1900).

General assembly could constitutionally treat and classify movable structures differently than conventional residences for tax purposes. Am. Mobilehome Ass'n v. Dolan, 191 Colo. 433, 553 P.2d 758 (1976).

Just valuation required. This section enjoins upon the general assembly the duty of providing such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property. Carlisle v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 8 Colo. 320, 7 P. 164 (1885); Ames v. People ex rel. Temple, 26 Colo. 83, 56 P. 656 (1899); People ex rel. Hallett v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 27 Colo. 86, 59 P. 733 (1899).

Mode of making assessments is legislative function. Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953).

Subject to the fundamental or organic limitations on the power of the state, the general assembly has plenary power on the matter of taxation, and it alone has the right and discretion to determine all questions of time, method, nature, purpose, and extent in respect of the imposition of taxes, the subjects on which the power may be exercised, and all the incidents pertaining to the proceedings from beginning to end. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

And is not for determination by courts. The method or plan by which valuations for taxation purposes is to be formulated is not for determination by the courts. Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953).

The exercise of discretion in the matter of taxation, within constitutional limitations, is not subject to judicial control. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

However, legislative jurisdiction over assessment of property is limited to enactment of general laws. Legislative jurisdiction over the assessment of property, in the legal signification of that term, is limited by the constitution, so far at least as counties and other municipal corporations are concerned, to the enactment of "general laws which shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, real and personal". In re House Bill No. 270, 9 Colo. 635, 21 P. 476 (1886).

The assessment, levy, and collection of ad valorem taxes is exclusively a legislative function and is to be exercised pursuant to general laws, subject only to limitations imposed by the constitution of the state of Colorado and the constitution of the United States. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

General assembly has power to create central body to assess county property. Bearing in mind the constitutional duty imposed upon the general assembly to provide by law for a state tax sufficient, with other resources, to defray the estimated expenses of the state government for each fiscal year, the constitutional limitation of the rate of taxation on property for state purposes, the necessity for uniformity, and the constitutional mandate that taxes shall be levied upon a plan which shall secure a just valuation for the purposes of taxation, there should be no doubt as to the power of the general assembly to create a central body, and empower it with the duty of performing those functions of assessment, in each county, essential to bring the property therein for taxation purposes to its full cash value, the standard by it prescribed to insure a just valuation. Such law would in no wise interfere with the constitutional powers of the state or county boards of equalization. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equaliz. v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Section 39-1-103(14)(b), prohibiting assessors from considering the indirect costs of development in ascertaining the assessment value of vacant land under the present worth valuation method does not violate the provision of this section, which requires the assessor to determine the actual value of property. Fid. Castle Pines, Ltd. v. State, 948 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1997).

Section 39-1-103(14)(b) does not violate this section by creating a separate class of commercial property, nor does it create an unreasonable classification of commercial property. Fid. Castle Pines, Ltd. v. State, 948 P.2d 26 (Colo. App. 1997).

A residential dwelling must be situated upon a lot zoned for residential use in order for the lot to qualify as "residential real property" eligible for the tax assessment relief granted homeowners pursuant to subsection (1)(b). Lots possessing improvements and amenities which are not appurtenant to a residential dwelling do not qualify as residential real property. Vail Assocs., Inc. v. Bd. of Assess. Appeals, 765 P.2d 593 (Colo. App. 1988).

Based on a reading of the constitutional definition of residential real property and this section together, residential land must contain a residential dwelling unit and be used as a unit in conjunction with the residential improvements on the residential land. Fifield v. Pitkin County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2012 COA 197, __ P.3d __.

Land on a parcel contiguous to another commonly owned parcel with a residential dwelling unit need only be used as a unit in conjunction with that residential dwelling unit or associated residential improvement to qualify as residential land. Fifield v. Pitkin County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2012 COA 197, __ P.3d __.

Definition of residential property contains no prescribed limit on the amount of acreage which may be so classified. Rather, the size of a residential tract must be determined on a case-by-case basis according to the amount of acreage which is being used as a unit in conjunction with the residential improvements on each particular property. Gyurman v. Weld County Bd. of Equaliz., 851 P.2d 307 (Colo. App. 1993).

Egg handling equipment, items used in cleaning chicken houses, and item used for vaccinating chickens are agricultural equipment which shall be exempt from property taxation as personal property. Morning Fresh Farms v. Bd. of Equaliz., 794 P.2d 1073 (Colo. App. 1990).

Processing costs occurring on oil leasehold site are properly deducted from the sale price of the oil in valuing the unprocessed material at the wellhead under subsection (1)(b) of this section and § 39-7-101 (1)(d). The legislature, consistent with the constitution, intended "wellhead" to mean the physical location where the extracted material emerges from the ground. The statute defines "selling price at the wellhead" as the "next taxable revenues realized by the taxpayer for sale of the oil or gas, whether such sale occurs at the wellhead or after gathering, transportation, manufacturing, and processing of the product". In determining whether on-site processing costs are properly deductible in arriving at the wellhead value of the unprocessed material, the essential practice and lesson of the industry is that there is no market for the material until the initial steps of processing the unprocessed material have occurred. Here, the selling price of the separated oil was established at the storage tanks. Because gathering, processing, and transportation occurred before the product was valued at the tank battery, those costs are properly deductible in arriving at the value of the "unprocessed material" at the wellhead. Washington County Bd. of Equaliz. v. Petron Dev. Co., 109 P.3d 146 (Colo. 2005).

III. EQUALITY AND UNIFORMITY OF TAXATION.

A. In General.

This section establishes a framework for the uniform taxation of real and personal property situated in Colorado. Arapahoe County Bd. of Equaliz. v. Podoll, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997); San Miguel County Bd. of Equaliz. v. Telluride Co., 947 P.2d 1381 (Colo. 1997).

Uniformity required is uniformity of taxes, not uniformity of procedure, or of rules or regulations to govern the levy thereof. To demand absolute uniformity in the latter regard would tend strongly to defeat the prior and supreme requirement. The constitution leaves this matter with the general assembly, simply directing that the regulations shall be made by general law, and shall secure just valuations. It is hardly necessary to dwell upon the vital importance of having different rules for the assessment of railroad rolling stock, or the net output of mines and other kinds of personalty, or of producing mines and other realty, etc. Stanley v. Little Pittsburg Mining Co., 6 Colo. 415 (1882); Carlisle v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 8 Colo. 320, 7 P. 164 (1885); People ex rel. Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 P. 144 (1888); Am. Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Adams, 28 Colo. 119, 63 P. 410 (1900); Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953).

Neither due process nor equal protection imposes upon state any rigid rule of equality of taxation. Tom's Tavern, Inc. v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 321, 526 P.2d 1328 (1974).

This section requires all taxes to be uniform upon same class of subjects. Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. v. Sullivan, 173 F. 456 (8th Cir. 1909). Carbon County Sheep & Cattle Co. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 60 Colo. 224, 152 P. 903 (1915).

Taxation burden must be uniform on same class of property. This provision requires that the burden of taxation be uniform on the same class of property within the jurisdiction of the authority levying the tax. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

Under the "uniformity of taxation" clause, as well as the "due process of law" and the "equal protection of the law" provisions, the general assembly is not prohibited from defining "various classes of real and personal property", which may be taxed for a specific purpose. The uniformity which is required is that all persons who are members of any class, or all property logically belonging in a given classification, shall receive equal treatment to that accorded all other persons or property in the same class. Any "classification" of persons or property must not be unreasonable or arbitrary, and must have sanction in reason and logic. Dist. 50 Metro. Recreation Dist. v. Burnside, 167 Colo. 425, 448 P.2d 788 (1968).

And same methods must be applied to all in same class. The uniformity and equality enjoined by the constitution require only that the same means and methods be applied impartially to all the constituents of each class, so that it operates equally and uniformly upon all persons and corporations in similar circumstances. Ames v. People ex rel. Temple, 26 Colo. 83, 56 P. 656 (1899); City & County of Denver v. Lewin, 106 Colo. 331, 105 P.2d 854 (1940); Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953); Podoll v. Arapahoe County Bd. of Equaliz., 920 P.2d 861 (Colo. App. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997).

If the same method is applied without discrimination throughout the state to the valuation of all property included in a particular class, the requirement of the constitution is sufficiently complied with. People ex rel. Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 P. 144 (1888).

Uniformity and equality enjoined by constitution require only that same means and methods be applied impartially to all constituents of each class, so that it operates equally and uniformly upon all persons and corporations in similar circumstances. M.H.C. Realty Corp. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 31 Colo. App. 564, 506 P.2d 762 (1972).

Actual value is the guiding principle for the taxation of real property in Colorado. Arapahoe County Bd. of Equaliz. v. Podoll, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997); San Miguel County Bd. of Equaliz. v. Telluride Co., 947 P.2d 1381 (Colo. 1997).

Actual value of residential property must be determined using means and methods applied impartially to all the members of each class, in order to reconcile the requirement of article X, § 20, of the constitution that the market approach be used for valuation with the equalization requirement of this section. Podoll v. Arapahoe County Bd. of Equaliz., 920 P.2d 861 (Colo. App. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997).

Uniformity in taxing implies equality in burden of taxation. Leonard v. Reed, 46 Colo. 307, 104 P. 410, 133 Am. St. R. 77 (1909).

The requirement of equality is not met when a higher or greater levy in proportion to value is imposed upon one species of property than upon others similarly situated or of like character. Hutchinson v. Herrick, 70 Colo. 534, 203 P. 275 (1921).

Thus it is well settled that the property or business of a nonresident cannot be taxed in a different manner or at a different rate than that of a resident. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Dunn, 21 Colo. 185, 40 P. 357 (1895).

Statute authorizing the imposition of disparate tax levies upon real property in the same district does not violate the uniform taxation provision of this section. Senior Corp. v. Bd. of Assess. Appeals, 702 P.2d 732 (Colo. 1985) (decided under section in effect prior to 1982 amendment).

Taxes resulting in flagrant inequality are unconstitutional. Where taxes result in a flagrant inequality between the burden imposed and the benefit received, such is confiscatory and unconstitutional. Ochs v. Town of Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965).

To secure uniformity in taxation, there must be uniformity in valuation of subjects upon which tax is levied. To attain this end, boards of equalization have been provided, one object of which is to so equalize assessment as to bring the different assessments of the several parts of a taxing district to the same relative standard, so that no one part will be compelled to pay a disproportionate share of a tax. People v. Ames, 27 Colo. 126, 60 P. 346 (1900).

Use of base year approach for valuing property does not violate provision requiring "actual value" to be basis for tax. Carrara Place v. Bd. of Equaliz., 761 P.2d 197 (Colo. 1988).

Valuation, however low, which is equal and uniform is just valuation. There is no constitutional requirement that taxes be levied under a plan which shall secure a full valuation, and, therefore, a valuation, however low, which is equal and uniform, is a just valuation and meets the constitutional requirement. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equaliz. v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equaliz., 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

The rule of uniformity is enforced although it involves in some particular instance a departure from the letter of the statute providing how property shall be taxed. First Nat'l Bank v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 36 Colo. 265, 84 P. 1111 (1906).

The basic principle of taxation is not valuation, but equalization. Fundamentally, in the necessity of obtaining public funds through taxation for the purpose of operating the government, valuations fixed on taxable property are within themselves, of no particular moment. The basic principle of taxation is not valuation, but equalization. From the very beginning of state government, stress has been placed upon equalization in the contribution of taxes levied for governmental use. Weidenhaft v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 432, 283 P.2d 164 (1955).

Equality and uniformity are essential to constitutionality of taxation. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equaliz. v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equaliz., 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

Equality and uniformity of taxation are necessary under the provisions of the constitutions of which part requires that taxation shall be equal and uniform, that all property in the state shall be taxed in proportion to its value, that all taxes shall be uniform on the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, or that the general assembly shall provide for an equal and uniform rate of assessment and taxation. Such requirements lie at the foundation of the taxing power of the state, and have for their purpose the distribution of the burden of taxation evenly and equitably as far as practical. Pueblo Junior Coll. Dist. v. Donner, 154 Colo. 26, 387 P.2d 727 (1963).

Exact uniformity and mathematical accuracy in values for assessment and taxation of property are absolutely impossible. No statute can be framed which would bring about these results. People ex rel. Iron Silver Mining Co. v. Henderson, 12 Colo. 369, 21 P. 144 (1888); Foster v. Hart Consol. Mining Co., 52 Colo. 459, 122 P. 48 (1912).

Exact uniformity or mathematical accuracy in tax valuations is not required. Am. Mobilehome Ass'n v. Dolan, 191 Colo. 433, 553 P.2d 758 (1976).

If it were necessary, in order to comply with the constitutional requirement regarding uniformity of taxation, that a statute to that end must prescribe such rules as would bring about absolute exactness, it would be impossible to frame one which would stand the constitutional test. Foster v. Hart Consol. Mining Co., 52 Colo. 459, 122 P. 48 (1912).

In disallowing taxpayer's deductions, the county assessor determined that "gathering, processing, and transportation" expenses could not be deducted unless they occurred "away from" or "beyond" the leasehold property surrounding the well. This construction of the applicable law would result in non-uniform treatment of similarly situated taxpayers within the same class and is contrary to both this section and the legislature's implementing statute. County was required to allow for deduction of processing costs on the leasehold site to comply with the constitutional and statutory provisions. Washington County Bd. of Equaliz. v. Petron Dev. Co., 109 P.3d 146 (Colo. 2005).

A definition of "well site" that includes an entire oil or gas leasehold violates the uniformity of taxation requirement. Leaseholds vary in size and numbers of wells, and the definition would force oil and gas producers with larger leaseholds who are able to gather, transport, manufacture, and process material entirely on their leaseholds to pay higher taxes by preventing them from deducting the costs of those activities. Petron Dev. Co. v. Washington County Bd. of Equaliz., 91 P.3d 408 (Colo. App. 2003), aff'd on other grounds, 109 P.3d 146 (Colo. 2005).

A cyclical revaluation plan is violative of constitutional equality and uniformity standards only where its implementation results in intentional discrimination, arbitrary action, constructive fraud, or grossly and relatively unfair assessments. Nuttall v. Leffingwell, 193 Colo. 137, 563 P.2d 356 (1977).

The temporary existence of differences in property valuations which result from a systematic and definite revaluation plan does not constitute discrimination of a nature violative of constitutional and statutory uniformity and equality requirements, absent a showing of conduct which amounts to an intentional violation of the essential principle of practical uniformity. Nuttall v. Leffingwell, 193 Colo. 137, 563 P.2d 356 (1977).

There are neither constitutional nor statutory requirements that all taxable property be revalued before individual revaluations are entered on the tax rolls. Nuttall v. Leffingwell, 193 Colo. 137, 563 P.2d 356 (1977).

Exclusion of apartments and boarding houses from levy and collection of ad valorem taxes on taxable commercial property by business improvement district pursuant to § 31-25-1213 does not violate uniformity requirement of this section as legislature's classification of apartments and boarding houses as residential property is reasonable. Jensen v. City & County of Denver, 806 P.2d 381 (Colo. 1991).

Applied in Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Owen, 7 Colo. 467, 4 P. 795 (1884); In re House Bill No. 165, 15 Colo. 595, 26 P. 141 (1890); Mayor of Town of Valverde v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 104, 34 P. 947, 41 Am. St. R. 208 (1893); Millheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922); Walker v. Bedford, 93 Colo. 400, 26 P.2d 1051 (1933); Consol. Motor Freight, Inc. v. Bedford, 93 Colo. 440, 26 P.2d 1066 (1933); Rinn v. Bedford, 102 Colo. 475, 84 P.2d 827 (1938); Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970); Platinum Props. v. Assessment App. Bd., 738 P.2d 34 (Colo. App. 1987).

B. Assessment of Property.

Purpose of provisions regulating assessment is to secure uniformity. The purpose of the provisions of the constitution and statute regulating the assessment of property, is to secure uniformity of taxation in each county of the state, for county purposes, and enable the commissioners in each county to determine the rate of tax necessary to meet the expenses of the county for the ensuing fiscal year. City & County of Denver v. Pitcher, 54 Colo. 203, 129 P. 1015 (1913).

Actual value of residential property must be determined using means and methods applied impartially to all the members of each class, in order to reconcile the requirement of article X, § 20, of the constitution that the market approach be used for valuation with the equalization requirement of this section. Podoll v. Arapahoe County Bd. of Equaliz., 920 P.2d 861 (Colo. App. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997).

Imposition of a tax is a legislative act so method by which valuation for taxation purposes is to be formulated is not proper subject for judicial determination. Leavell-Rio Grande v. Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 753 P.2d 797 (Colo. App. 1988).

Assessor has duty of listing and valuing property. The duty of listing and valuing all taxable property devolves upon the assessor, and him alone. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

And duty of uniform assessment. It not only is the duty of the assessor to see to it that all property within his county is returned for tax assessment, and to finally fix the valuation upon each item for that purpose, but he further is obligated to undertake, so far as within his power and judgment, to see to it that taxes shall be uniformly assessed within his county. Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953); Bartlett &

Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

It is expressly stated that the assessor has specific duties to perform in conformity with legislative directives and that in performing these duties he, as well as others, shall comply with the very general admonitions in this section with the ultimate goal of securing just and equalized valuations. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

The assessor is not a free agent in the performance of the exacting official duties imposed upon him by law, but he is under the supervision of the Colorado tax commission, the express province of which is to see to it that the assessment of all property throughout the state be made relatively just and uniform and at its true and full cash value; and to require all county assessors, under penalty of forfeiture and removal from office, to assess all property of every kind or character at its actual and full cash value. Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953).

When the assessor presents evidence of all three approaches to valuation, it would impose an onerous and unnecessary burden also to require the taxpayer to provide those valuations. Because neither the constitution nor the statute imposes such a requirement, the court will not so interpret them. Principal Mut. Ins. v. Bd. of Equaliz., 890 P. 273 (Colo. App. 1994).

No requirement for assessor or board to compare valuations with other counties. The constitutional provision for just and equal valuation of property among counties does not require the assessor or the board of assessment appeals to compare valuations with those made for comparable properties in other counties and make adjustments to achieve equality. Bd. of Assess. App. v. E.E. Sonnenberg, 797 P.2d 27 (Colo. 1990).

Bill in equity will lie to enjoin collection of tax resulting from illegal discrimination. Where there is a systematic, intentional, continuing omission or undervaluation of other taxable property by the taxing officers of a state or county, in violation of the constitution or law, which inevitably effects an unjust discrimination in taxation against the property of the complainant and against other property similarly situated, a bill in equity will lie to enjoin the collection of that portion of the tax which resulted from the illegal discrimination. Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. v. Sullivan, 173 F. 456 (8th Cir. 1909).

But court may not substitute its judgment for that of tax officials in the matter of assessment of property, where they have regularly exercised their legal powers. Colo. Tax Comm'n v. Colo. Cent. Power Co., 94 Colo. 287, 29 P.2d 1030 (1934).

Reclassification from residential to commercial property satisfies constitutional requirement that assessments be just and equal where property was used as a community center in a planned community development despite fact that model homes used for commercial purposes in same county are classified as residential. Mission Viejo v. Douglas Cty. Bd. of Equaliz., 881 P.2d 462 (Colo. App. 1994).

In determining whether a valuation for assessment is just and equal under the constitution, actual use is only one factor to be considered. Mission Viejo v. Douglas Cty. Bd. of Equaliz., 882 P.2d 462 (Colo. App. 1994).

No requirement for assessor or board to reduce assessed value of lots that were correctly assessed to conform to erroneous assessment of adjacent lots. Bishop v. Colo. Bd. of Assess. Appeals, 899 P.2d 251 (Colo. App. 1994).

It is not error for board to consider evidence of other sales of comparable property within the base period which were subject to long-term leases like the subject property. Bd. of Assess. App. v. City and County of Denver, 829 P.2d 1319 (Colo. App. 1991), aff'd, 848 P.2d 355 (Colo. 1993).

Valuation presumed to be right. The evaluation of property for taxation, as determined by the assessor, is presumed to be right and one who attacks it has the burden of affirmatively and clearly showing that it is manifestly excessive, fraudulent or oppressive. Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953).

Mere error of judgment or overvaluation is not sufficient to overthrow the assessor's determination, nor is exactness necessary in working out a relative uniformity between properties of the same general classification. Citizens' Comm. for Fair Prop. Taxation v. Warner, 127 Colo. 121, 254 P.2d 1005 (1953).

The use of standard depreciation schedule to determine taxable value is not arbitrary just because individual variations in value may occur. Rather, it can constitute a reasonable method of appraising value where mass produced, fungible items are involved. Am. Mobilehome Ass'n v. Dolan, 191 Colo. 433, 553 P.2d 758 (1976).

No reduction in improvement assessments based on quality grades is required by this section. Assessor used the market approach to determine the median value for all of the property in the subdivision and applied the median value to each individual residence. Arapahoe Cty. Bd. of Equaliz. v. Podoll, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997).

Valuation was not just and equal where county could offer no reasonable explanation why there was a 32.8% increase in the assessed value of plaintiffs' residences but only a 10.73% average increase as to the vast majority of comparable residences. Podoll v. Arapahoe County Bd. of Equaliz., 920 P.2d 861 (Colo. App. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997).

Applied in People ex rel. Hallett v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 27 Colo. 86, 59 P. 733 (1899); Carbon County Sheep & Cattle Co. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 60 Colo. 224, 152 P. 903 (1915); Mtn. States Tel. v. Bd. of Assess., 696 P.2d 326 (Colo. 1985).

C. Taxes Affected.

1. Ad Valorem Taxes.

Ad valorem tax is tax levied upon classes of real and personal property located within the boundaries of the taxing entity for the purpose of providing revenues in order to defray general governmental expenses. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

This section refers to levy of ad valorem taxes on property. It seems to be almost universally accepted that this and like constitutional provisions refer to the levy of ad valorem taxes upon property. Denver City Ry. v. City of Denver, 21 Colo. 350, 41 P. 826 (1895); Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Manley, 99 Colo. 153, 60 P.2d 913 (1936); Colo. Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 697 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1985).

This section of the constitution refers solely to taxation according to the commonly accepted meaning of that term, by assessment, levy, and collection. Ard v. People, 66 Colo. 480, 182 P. 892 (1919).

A general ad valorem tax is prescribed by this section which must be imposed uniformly upon both real and personal property according to their assessed valuation. Ochs v. Town of Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965); Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

If tax is for "general" purpose it must be an ad valorem tax. Ochs v. Town of Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965).

General assembly is not at liberty to impose property tax upon theory that it is imposing excise tax. When all the elements of regulation or restraint are wanting and the primary purpose of a tax act is the raising of revenue, it loses its character as a license tax and becomes a tax for revenue. Walker v. Bedford, 93 Colo. 400, 26 P.2d 1051 (1933).

A revenue measure is one which has for its object the levying of taxes in the strict sense of the words. If the principal object is another purpose, the incidental production of revenue growing out of the enforcement of the act will not make it one for raising revenue. Colo. Nat'l Life Assurance Co. v. Clayton, 54 Colo. 256, 130 P. 330 (1913); Chicago B. & Q. R.R. v. Sch. Dist. No. 1, 63 Colo. 159, 165 P. 260 (1917); Ard v. People, 66 Colo. 480, 182 P. 892 (1919).

Municipal transportation utility fee does not constitute a property tax and therefore does not violate the uniformity requirement of this section. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

2. Excise and Privilege Taxes.

Distinction between excise and property taxes. Where a tax is imposed directly by the general assembly without assessment, and is measured by the extent a privilege is exercised by the taxpayer without regard to the nature or value of his assets, it is an excise tax; if the tax be computed upon a valuation of property which is fixed by assessors, although a privilege may be included in the valuation, it is a property tax. Walker v. Bedford, 93 Colo. 400, 26 P.2d 1051 (1933).

A tax levied directly by the city, without assessment, and imposed without regard to the nature or value of assets, constitutes an excise tax and not an ad valorem tax and is therefore not subject to the constitutional restriction of this section. Deluxe Theatres, Inc. v. City of Englewood, 198 Colo. 85, 596 P.2d 771 (1979).

Excise tax is imposed on a particular act, event, or occurrence rather than being based on assessed value of property subject to the tax. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

Section not applicable to taxes on privileges and occupations. This section refers to the levy of ad valorem taxes upon property, and does not apply to taxes imposed upon privileges and occupations. Jackson v. City of Glenwood Springs, 122 Colo. 323, 221 P.2d 1083 (1950); California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960); Tom's Tavern, Inc. v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 321, 526 P.2d 1328 (1974); Deluxe Theatres, Inc. v. City of Englewood, 198 Colo. 85, 596 P.2d 771 (1979).

The uniformity provision of this section is not applicable to excise taxes, as it applies only to direct or ad valorem taxes. Denver City Ry. v. City of Denver, 21 Colo. 350, 41 P. 826 (1907); Ard v. People, 66 Colo. 480, 182 P. 892 (1919); Hughes v. State, 97 Colo. 279, 49 P.2d 1009 (1935).

Thus imposition of a tax upon occupations not governed by rule of uniformity and neither expressly nor by implication is the general assembly inhibited thereby from conferring upon the city the power to exact such a tax. And the general assembly, having in express terms conferred upon the city the power to tax, as well as to license and regulate, the enactment of the ordinance under consideration was a legitimate exercise of that power, and the charge for license therein provided may be enforced as a valid tax. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904); Denver City Ry. v. City of Denver, 21 Colo. 350, 41 P. 826 (1907); Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

There must be reasonable relation between license fee and cost of regulatory services performed. Even though a license fee may incidentally raise revenue, yet there must be some reasonable relation between the fee and the cost of services performed in the matter of regulation. Heckendorf v. Town of Littleton, 132 Colo. 108, 286 P.2d 615 (1955).

But exaction of license fee with view to revenue is exercise of power of taxation. The exaction of a license fee with a view to revenue is not the exercise of the police power, but of the power of taxation. Walker v. Bedford, 93 Colo. 400, 26 P.2d 1051 (1933).

While a license tax may be levied upon such business or occupations as are proper subjects of municipal regulation and control, and the purpose of such tax is for regulation or restraint, yet when all the elements of regulation or restraint are wanting, and the primary purpose of the act is the raising of revenue only, then it loses its character as a license tax and becomes a tax for revenue. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Dunn, 21 Colo. 185, 40 P. 357 (1895).

Where regulation or restraint despite the nomenclature of an act is almost negligible, if not entirely so, the levy ceased to be a license fee and becomes in reality a revenue raising measure. Heckendorf v. Town of Littleton, 132 Colo. 108, 286 P.2d 615 (1955).

City has power to impose license tax as revenue measure or as police regulation or both; consequently it is immaterial, where the validity of an ordinance imposing such a tax is attacked, whether it is for one purpose or the other or for both. Denver City Ry. v. City of Denver, 21 Colo. 350, 41 P. 826 (1895); Hollenbeck v. City & County of Denver, 97 Colo. 370, 49 P.2d 435 (1935).

In the absence of a showing that it acted arbitrarily, a city council's action in adopting licensing ordinances is not subject to review by the courts unless the ordinances so enacted operate as a prohibition of a legitimate occupation or business and one not inherently dangerous to the public welfare. Hollenbeck v. City & County of Denver, 97 Colo. 370, 49 P.2d 435 (1935).

And where each class is affected alike by licensing ordinance, the latter is not discriminatory or repugnant to the "uniformity" clause of the constitution. Hollenbeck v. City & County of Denver, 97 Colo. 370, 49 P.2d 435 (1935).

City's service expansion fee is excise tax. City's service expansion fee which was imposed on persons who obtain building permits from the city for new construction, additions to existing structures, and substantial alterations or reconstruction of existing buildings and which was calculated on the square footage and type of proposed improvement for which the building permit was sought was an excise tax and not an ad valorem tax subject to this section's uniformity requirement. Cherry Hills Farms, Inc. v. City of Cherry Hills Vill., 670 P.2d 779 (Colo. 1983).

Municipal transportation utility fee does not constitute an excise tax. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

Inheritance tax is not tax on property as is contemplated by this section. It is, rather, a contribution which the state levies for itself as a condition upon which the title to property shall pass upon the death of its owner. In re House Bill No. 122, 23 Colo. 492, 48 P. 535 (1897); First Nat'l Bank v. People, 183 Colo. 320, 516 P.2d 639 (1973).

But is considered a privilege tax. Succession to an inheritance may be taxed as a privilege, though the property of the estate itself be already taxed as property, and taxes are required to be uniform. It is an impost or duty upon the devolution of an estate. Brown v. Elder, 32 Colo. 527, 77 P. 853 (1904).

Tax on use of highway is not property tax. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Manley, 99 Colo. 153, 60 P.2d 913 (1936).

Nor are fees for registration of motor vehicles, etc. The purpose of registration fees for motor vehicles, trailers and semitrailers, and trailer coaches is not the levying of taxes or the collection of revenue. Such fees are in the nature of a license or toll for the use of the public highways. Ard v. People, 66 Colo. 480, 182 P. 892 (1919).

Nor is tax on income from oil and gas. This section does not apply to the excise tax upon income derived from the production of oil and gas. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

Tax providing for old age pensions is excise tax. In re Hunter's Estate, 97 Colo. 279, 49 P.2d 1009 (1935).

Tax imposed on gasoline is excise tax. Altitude Oil Co. v. People, 70 Colo. 452, 202 P. 180 (1921), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 260 U.S. 693, 43 S. Ct. 11, 67 L. Ed. 467 (1922); People v. City & County of Denver, 84 Colo. 576, 272 P. 629 (1928).

3. Local Assessments.

"Tax" does not refer to assessments for local improvements. The word "tax", when used in the constitution, refers to the ordinary public taxes, and not to the assessments for benefits in the nature of local improvements. While, therefore, the power to make such assessments is referable to the taxing power, it is held not to be an infringement upon the rule requiring all taxes to be uniform. City of Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 30 P. 1041 (1892); Reams v. City of Grand Junction, 676 P.2d 1189 (Colo. 1984); Zelinger v. City & County of Denver, 724 P.2d 1356 (Colo. 1986).

"Taxation" and "assessment" are not synonymous terms. Each is a separate and distinct exercise of the sovereign power to tax. Ochs v. Town of Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965).

Taxation is that burden or charge upon all property laid for raising revenue for general public purposes in defraying the expense of the government. Ochs v. Town of Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965).

Assessments are local and resorted to for making local improvements on the theory that the property affected is increased in value at least to the amount of the levy. Ochs v. Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965); Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

If the principal object of an ordinance is to defray the expense of operating a utility directed against those desiring to use the service, the incidental production of revenue does not make it a revenue measure. Western Heights Land Corp. v. City of Fort Collins, 146 Colo. 464, 362 P.2d 155 (1961).

Uniformity clause does not apply to such special assessments. The uniformity of taxation enjoined by this section does not prohibit the general assembly from authorizing the levy of special assessments in cities and towns, for local improvements in the nature of benefits to the abutting property. All matters of hardship and expediency must be left for legislative cognizance and action. City of Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 30 P. 1041 (1892).

Local assessments are upheld upon the theory that the property against which the assessment is made is specially benefited by the improvement, while taxes refer more particularly to those burdens imposed for revenue. City of Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 30 P. 1041 (1892).

Special assessments are not imposed upon the basis of value, but upon the basis of special benefits accruing from their construction, so that the question of value cuts no figure. Hildreth v. City of Longmont, 47 Colo. 79, 105 P. 107 (1909).

Revenues from special assessments cannot be diverted to general town purposes. If "taxes" are special assessments upon the certain properties, the revenues therefrom cannot be diverted to providing for general town purposes, but will necessarily have to be used and confined to payment for the capital improvement resulting in an equivalent benefit to the properties. Ochs v. Town of Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965); Reams v. City of Grand Junction, 676 P.2d 1189 (Colo. 1984); Zelinger v. City & County of Denver, 724 P.2d 1356 (Colo. 1986); Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

Special assessments for conservancy districts are not a tax within the meaning of this section. People ex rel. Setters v. Lee, 72 Colo. 598, 213 P. 583 (1923).

Rates adopted by city ordinance with reference to its water and sewer service cannot be considered as taxes even though imposed and collected by the city, such ordinance not being a revenue measure, but designed to defray expense of operating a utility directed against those using the service. W. Heights Land Corp. v. City of Fort Collins, 146 Colo. 464, 362 P.2d 155 (1961).

Special service fee does not constitute a tax if it is a charge imposed for the purpose of defraying the cost of a particular government service rather than designed to raise revenues to defray general governmental expenses. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784, P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

Municipal transportation utility fee constitutes a special service fee rather than a special assessment. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

IV. EXEMPTION OF DITCHES, CANALS, AND FLUMES.

Purpose of section to avoid double taxation. It is evident that the intention of this section is only to exempt, in cases where the ditch and right could be regarded under the decisions as appurtenant and the land taxed to cover the increased value, so as to prevent double taxation. Empire Land & Canal Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 1 Colo. App. 205, 28 P. 482 (1891).

"Ditches, canals, and flumes" includes dams, reservoirs, and improvements. Ditches, canals, and flumes have been defined so as to include headgates, dams, reservoirs, reservoir beds, the earth upon which the dam stands, and the lands surrounding the reservoirs with the improvements thereon that are an integral part of the irrigation system as a whole and necessary for its proper maintenance and operation. Logan Irrigation Dist. v. Holt, 110 Colo. 253, 133 P.2d 530 (1943); Jacobucci v. District Court, 189 Colo. 380, 541 P.2d 667 (1975).

But not horses, machinery, and tools. Exemption does not reach horses, machinery, and tools with which repairing is done. The provision of this section which exempts from separate taxation certain ditches, canals and flumes, does not reach the horses, machinery and tools with which the cleaning and repairing is done. Koenig v. Jewish Consumptives' Relief Soc'y, 98 Colo. 253, 55 P.2d 325 (1936).

The words "ditches, canals and flumes", as used in this section, do not extend to agricultural implements, machinery, and livestock kept for the purpose of the repair and maintenance of such ditches, canals and flumes. Logan Irrigation Dist. v. Holt, 110 Colo. 253, 133 P.2d 530 (1943).

Irrigation works not exempt from taxation. The provision of this section relating to canals, ditches and flumes owned by corporations and used exclusively to irrigate their lands or the lands of individual stockholders thereof, or owned by individuals and used exclusively to irrigate their lands, does not exempt such properties from taxation. It provides that they shall not be separately taxed. Shaw v. Bond, 64 Colo. 366, 171 P. 1142 (1918); Beaty v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 101 Colo. 346, 73 P.2d 982 (1937).

But may be considered as one class for taxation purposes. Such ditches, canals, and flumes thus used may be considered as constituting one class for purposes of taxation, and the method for ascertaining the value of this class is likewise fixed. Ames v. People ex rel. Temple, 26 Colo. 83, 56 P. 656 (1899).

Ditch in one county and land in another must be valued together. While the main portion of the ditch may be situate in one county and the land in another, nevertheless in ascertaining values the two must be taken together. Ames v. People ex rel. Temple, 26 Colo. 83, 56 P. 656 (1899).

General assembly cannot extend provisions of this section. Logan Irrigation Dist. v. Holt, 110 Colo. 253, 133 P.2d 530 (1943).

Canals exempted. The exemption from separate taxation applies to (a) canals owned by one or more individuals, used exclusively to irrigate their lands; (b) canals owned by corporations, used exclusively to irrigate their lands or the lands of their stockholders; (c) canals owned in part by individuals and partly by corporations, used exclusively to irrigate lands of either or both. In other words, canals owned and used exclusively for irrigation of lands owned by the owners of the canals. Shaw v. Bond, 64 Colo. 366, 171 P. 1142 (1918).

Exemption applies to ditches owned by corporation when the water is exclusively used by corporation or individual members. It was evidently the intention of the framers of the constitution to exempt from taxation ditches owned by a corporation when the water is used by the corporation or individual members, who by virtue of their corporate interests are joint owners in the ditch, or where an individual owns a private ditch, or where a number of individuals, having a common right to water, unite in constructing the ditch, own and use it in common, and the water is distributed pro rata for the exclusive use of the owners of the ditch upon land owned by them respectively; but in each case the water carried by the ditch must be used exclusively by the owners of the ditch. When the ditch is so owned, and the water so used, the ditch shall not be taxed separately from the land. Empire Land & Canal Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 1 Colo. App. 205, 28 P. 482 (1891); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Cortez Land & Sec. Co., 81 Colo. 266, 254 P. 996 (1927).

And to interest of shareholder in such corporation. The interest of a shareholder in an irrigation corporation, the property of which is exempt from taxation, is also exempt. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Cortez Land & Sec. Co., 81 Colo. 266, 254 P. 996 (1927).

And to ditch conveying water to reservoir. Ditch conveying water to reservoir where it is distributed to those entitled to ditch is not subject to separate taxation. Shaw v. Bond, 64 Colo. 366, 171 P. 1142 (1918).

Irrigation system owned exclusively by company owning no land is not exempt under this section. San Luis Power & Water Co. v. Trujillo, 93 Colo. 385, 26 P.2d 537 (1933).

Reservoir dam may not be separately taxed as improvement upon land on which it stood. Kendrick v. Twin Lakes Reservoir Co., 58 Colo. 281, 144 P. 884 (1914); Shaw v. Bond, 64 Colo. 366, 171 P. 1142 (1918).

Mere diversion of water does not constitute appropriation of water so as to satisfy requirements of this section. Jacobucci v. District Court, 189 Colo. 380, 541 P.2d 667 (1975).

Section 3.5. Homestead exemption for qualifying senior citizens and disabled veterans. (1) For property tax years commencing on or after January 1, 2002, fifty percent of the first two hundred thousand dollars of actual value of residential real property, as defined by law, that, as of the assessment date, is owner-occupied and is used as the primary residence of the owner-occupier shall be exempt from property taxation if:

(a) The owner-occupier is sixty-five years of age or older as of the assessment date and has owned and occupied such residential real property as his or her primary residence for the ten years immediately preceding the assessment date;

(b) The owner-occupier is the spouse or surviving spouse of an owner-occupier who previously qualified for a property tax exemption for the same residential real property under paragraph (a) of this subsection (1); or

(c) For property tax years commencing on or after January 1, 2007, only, the owner-occupier, as of the assessment date, is a disabled veteran.

(1.3) An owner-occupier may claim only one exemption per property tax year even if the owner-occupier qualifies for an exemption under both paragraph (c) of subsection (1) of this section and either paragraph (a) or paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of this section.

(1.5) For purposes of this section, "disabled veteran" means an individual who has served on active duty in the United States armed forces, including a member of the Colorado national guard who has been ordered into the active military service of the United States, has been separated therefrom under honorable conditions, and has established a service-connected disability that has been rated by the federal department of veterans affairs as one hundred percent permanent disability through disability retirement benefits or a pension pursuant to a law or regulation administered by the department, the department of homeland security, or the department of the army, navy, or air force.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) of this section, section 20 of this article, or any other constitutional provision, for any property tax year commencing on or after January 1, 2003, the general assembly may raise or lower by law the maximum amount of actual value of residential real property of which fifty percent shall be exempt under subsection (1) of this section.

(3) For any property tax year commencing on or after January 1, 2002, the general assembly shall compensate each local governmental entity that receives property tax revenues for the net amount of property tax revenues lost as a result of the property tax exemption provided for in this section. For purposes of section 20 of article X of this constitution, such compensation shall not be included in local government fiscal year spending and approval of this section by the voters statewide shall constitute a voter-approved revenue change to allow the maximum amount of state fiscal year spending for the 2001-02 state fiscal year to be increased by forty-four million one hundred twenty-three thousand six hundred four dollars and to include said amount in state fiscal year spending for said state fiscal year for the purpose of calculating subsequent state fiscal year spending limits. Payments made from the state general fund to compensate local governmental entities for property tax revenues lost as a result of the property tax exemption provided for in this section shall not be subject to any statutory limitation on general fund appropriations because the enactment of this section by the people of Colorado constitutes voter approval of a weakening of any such limitation.

Reason for exemption. The property of a state is exempt from the operation of its own tax statutes because, as the sovereign power, the state, through its officers or through the municipalities it creates, receives the revenue from the taxes levied and collected, and, from the means thus furnished, discharges the duties and pays the expenses of government. Game & Fish Comm'n v. Feast, 157 Colo. 303, 402 P.2d 169 (1965).

The property of a state constitutes one of the instrumentalities by which it performs its functions. Since every tax would to a certain extent diminish its capacity and ability, the courts have generally been unwilling to hold that such property is subject to taxation in any form. Game & Fish Comm'n v. Feast, 157 Colo. 303, 402 P.2d 169 (1965).

This section enunciates a policy that public property owned by governmental entities that have the power to levy taxes is exempt from ad valorem taxation because taxation of such property would diminish public revenues available to carry out public purposes. City and County of Denver v. Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 30 P.3d 177 (Colo. 2001).

Ownership of land by city is only condition essential for exemption. City of Colo. Springs v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 36 Colo. 231, 84 P. 1113 (1906); Stewart v. City & County of Denver, 70 Colo. 514, 202 P. 1085 (1921).

An exemption from taxation of the property of cities is absolute, and depends upon no condition but ownership by the city. Stewart v. City & County of Denver, 70 Colo. 514, 202 P. 1085 (1921).

Fact that land lies outside city limits is immaterial. The fact that property lies outside of the territorial limits of the municipal corporation owning the same, and a part of such property is alleged, in effect, to be unnecessary for waterworks, or other municipal purposes does not bring the property within any exception to this constitutional provision simply because there is no exception concerning the character or situation of the property. All property of a municipal corporation is included. Stewart v. City & County of Denver, 70 Colo. 514, 202 P. 1085 (1921).

Section does not exempt cities from excise taxes. People v. City & County of Denver, 84 Colo. 576, 272 P. 629 (1928).

"Municipal corporations" applies only to municipal corporations proper. An express exemption of property of "municipal corporations" applies only to municipal corporations proper and not to corporations composed of shareholders which in form and controlling features are business enterprises upon which municipal powers have been incidentally conferred in promotion of their primary purpose. Logan Irrigation Dist. v. Holt, 110 Colo. 253, 133 P.2d 530 (1943).

Irrigation district's property not exempt. Irrigation districts are public corporations, but they are not in any true sense within classification, "state, counties, cities, towns, and other municipal corporations", so as to render property belonging to them exempt from taxation under this provision. Logan Irrigation Dist. v. Holt, 110 Colo. 253, 133 P.2d 530 (1943).

Fire and police pension association's property not exempt from taxation. The fire and police pension association (FPPA) lacks ad valorem taxation authority and therefore is not a political subdivision for purposes of the statute that exempts property of political subdivisions from taxation. Moreover, there is no other statutory provision that specifically exempts the FPPA's property from taxation. City and County of Denver v. Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 30 P.3d 177 (Colo. 2001).

Properties, the rents and income of which are devoted to the maintenance of a school, are exempt under this section. City & County of Denver v. Gunter, 63 Colo. 69, 163 P. 1118 (1917); Pitcher v. Miss Wolcott Sch. Ass'n, 63 Colo. 294, 165 P. 608 (1917).

There is no reason why the property of a political subdivision of the state should not be exempt from taxation under this section as "property...of the state". Therefore, § 41-3-107, exempting airport authorities from taxation, is constitutional. Denver Beechcraft v. Bd. of Assess. Appeals, 681 P.2d 945 (Colo. 1984).

Section no defense to action by city to enforce warranty of title. This section was held to be no defense to an action brought by city to enforce warranty of title to real property on which was a tax lien, since the lien of record constituted a cloud on title. Wellshire Land Co. v. City & County of Denver, 103 Colo. 416, 87 P.2d 1 (1929).

Applied in Colo. Farm & Livestock Co. v. Beerbohm, 43 Colo. 464, 96 P. 443 (1908); People v. City & County of Denver, 90 Colo. 598, 10 P.2d 1106 (1932); Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955); Game & Fish Comm'n v. Feast, 157 Colo. 303, 402 P.2d 169 (1965); Allardice v. App. 1989).

Section 5. Property used for religious worship, schools and charitable purposes exempt. Property, real and personal, that is used solely and exclusively for religious worship, for schools or for strictly charitable purposes, also cemeteries not used or held for private or corporate profit, shall be exempt from taxation, unless otherwise provided by general law.

Purpose of exemptions. Exemptions to charitable and educational institutions are predicated on the fact that they render service to the state, and thus relieve the state and its people of a burden which they otherwise would have to assume. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

Distinction must be made between charitable and religious exemptions; a religious group does not have as a fundamental purpose the providing of services which the state would otherwise have to provide since the state is constitutionally prohibited from such religious involvement. General Conference of Church of God--7th Day v. Carper, 192 Colo. 178, 557 P.2d 832 (1976).

While such "social benefit" analysis may have continuing validity in the determination of charitable exemptions, it has no place in the state's evaluation of its treatment of bona fide religious groups. General Conference of Church of God--7th Day v. Carper, 192 Colo. 178, 557 P.2d 832 (1976).

To the extent that Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956) established some requirement of benefit to the people of the state of Colorado as a condition for the property tax exemption of religious organizations, it is hereby overruled. General Conference of Church of God--7th Day v. Carper, 192 Colo. 178, 557 P.2d 832 (1976).

"Taxation" is used in its ordinary sense. The evident purpose in inserting the word "general" before the word "taxation" was to show the legislative intention that "taxation" was used in the ordinary sense in which it is employed in the constitution and statutes generally, as distinguished from "assessments" against property for local improvements. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

As to constitutionality of tax exemption statutes, see Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

Taxation must be under authority of statute and cannot be authorized solely by constitutional provisions such as this section. City & County of Denver v. Security Life & Accident Co., 173 Colo. 248, 477 P.2d 369 (1970).

The taxing power of the state is exclusively a legislative function, and taxes can be imposed only in pursuance of legislative authority, there being no such thing as taxation by implication. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

But tax exemptions must arise directly from constitutional authorization, and until such authorization is granted, the legislative branch of the government is impotent. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

There are no implied exemptions. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

General assembly may limit, modify, or abolish exemptions provided by this section. Under this constitutional provision with reference to exemptions, it is expressly provided that the property exempted, "shall be exempt from taxation, unless otherwise provided by general law", thus leaving it absolutely within the power of the general assembly to limit, modify, or abolish the exemptions provided by the constitution. McGlone v. First Baptist Church, 97 Colo. 427, 50 P.2d 547 (1935).

"Use" is test of right of exemption. Use, not use and ownership, is the test of the right of exemption under this section. City amp; County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

The constitution requires only "use", and use, rather than ownership, is the well-established test of exemption from taxation. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

This section mentions no particular or specific character of use, and all requirements are met if a use is for the purposes fostered for exemption. The taxing authorities admit a use by contending that the use is insignificant. It is not for them to measure a use. Horton v. Fountain Valley Sch., 98 Colo. 480, 56 P.2d 933 (1936).

Financial insolvency is not a condition precedent to tax exempt status. Am. Water Works Ass'n v. Bd. of Assmt. Appeals, 38 Colo. App. 341, 563 P.2d 359 (1976).

Requirements of this section are met if some work has been done. The requirements of the constitution concerning exemption from taxation of property of religious, charitable, and educational institutions are met if there has been work done on the lots and there is a bona fide continuous intention on the part of such organizations that their real property, and buildings to be by them constructed thereon, are to be devoted exclusively to religious, charitable, or educational purposes. McGlone v. First Baptist Church, 97 Colo. 427, 50 P.2d 547 (1935).

The fact that an addition to a hospital remains in an unfinished state, due to inability to obtain funds to complete it, does not destroy the property's tax exempt status, because of the uses to which it is being put, related to hospital activity, pending its completion. City & County of Denver v. Spears' Free Clinic & Hosp. for Poor Children, 142 Colo. 347, 350 P.2d 1057 (1960).

Thus "structure" is "building", although incomplete, within the meaning of the latter term as used in this section relating to property exempt from taxation. El Jebel Shrine Ass'n v. McGlone, 93 Colo. 334, 26 P.2d 108 (1933).

Application of section to corporations. The constitution and statute granting exemption from taxation to certain charitable and educational nonprofit corporations should, in the absence of plain indications to the contrary, apply only to corporations created by the state itself and over which it has control, or to those corporations whose property in the state of Colorado is operated for the benefit of the people of this state. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

This section must be understood to have exclusive reference to institutions or corporations created by the laws of this state, and not to foreign corporations that may choose to locate branches in this state. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

A nonprofit foreign corporation operating educational or eleemosynary institutions in Colorado for the benefit of the people of this state, is not deprived of the tax exemptions granted by the constitution and statutes. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

A resident or nonresident, nonprofit, educational or charitable corporation which is not using its property in this state for the benefit of people of Colorado is not exempt from the payment of general taxes on property held by it within this state. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

A foreign corporation operating in Colorado but not primarily serving the people of this state should not qualify for such exemptions simply by the device of changing into a Colorado domestic corporation. Young Life Campaign v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 134 Colo. 15, 300 P.2d 535 (1956).

Injunction is proper relief from assessments where property is exempt. Where property specifically exempt, under the constitution and statute, is involved, and relief is sought from clouded titles and continuing assessments, equity may be invoked. In such cases the generally recognized rule supports resort to injunction. Such is the holding in this jurisdiction. Colo. Farm & Live Stock Co. v. Beerbohm, 43 Colo. 464, 96 P. 443 (1908); Shaw v. Bond, 64 Colo. 366, 171 P. 1142 (1918); Grisard v. Roselawn Cem. Ass'n, 92 Colo. 289, 19 P.2d 766 (1933).

An important exception to the general doctrine of noninterference by injunction against the collection of the revenue because of illegality in the tax is recognized in that class of cases where the relief is sought against a tax assessed upon property which has been exempted by law from taxation. Indeed, the exception has been so uniformly recognized as to become of itself a governing rule. City & County of Denver v. Spears' Free Clinic & Hosp. for Poor Children, 142 Colo. 347, 350 P.2d 1057 (1960).

So is declaratory judgment. A declaratory action will lie at the instance of a taxpayer to test the right of the taxpayer's exemption from taxes. City & County of Denver v. Spears' Free Clinic & Hosp. for Poor Children, 142 Colo. 347, 350 P.2d 1057 (1960).

Applied in Colo. Tax Comm'n v. Denver Bible Inst., 94 Colo. 402, 30 P.2d 870 (1934); Beth Medrosh Hagodol v. City of Aurora, 126 Colo. 267, 248 P.2d 732 (1952); First Nat'l Bank v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 189 Colo. 128, 538 P.2d 427 (1975).

II. PROPERTY EXPRESSLY EXEMPT.

A. Property Used for Religious Worship.

Exemption not perpetual. The exemption provided by this section is not perpetual and does not run with the land but is dependent upon the use to which the property is put. St. Mark Coptic Orthodox Church v. State Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 762 P.2d 775 (Colo. App. 1988).

The test for determining whether the exemption for property used for religious worship applies depends upon the character of the use of to which the property is put. St. Mark Coptic Orthodox Church v. State Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 762 P.2d 775 (Colo. App. 1988); Maurer v. Young Life, 779 P.2d 1317 (Colo. 1989); Pilgrim Rest Baptist Church, Inc. v. Prop. Tax Adm'r, 971 P.2d 270 (Colo. App. 1998).

Property tax exemptions based on religious use should not be narrowly construed, and each claim for tax exemption must be resolved on the basis of its own facts under the applicable legal standards. Maurer v. Young Life, 779 P.2d 1317 (Colo. 1989); Bd. of Assessment Appeals v. AM/FM Int'l, 940 P.2d 338 (Colo. 1997); Pilgrim Rest Baptist Church, Inc. v. Prop. Tax Adm'r, 971 P.2d 270 (Colo. App. 1998).

Implicit within the property tax scheme is a requirement that, in order for the property to qualify for tax exemption for that tax year, there must be at least some actual use of the property for tax exempt purposes in that tax year. Pilgrim Rest Baptist Church, Inc. v. Prop. Tax Adm'r, 971 P.2d 270 (Colo. App. 1998).

Court declines to hold, as a matter of law, that any particular frequency or quantity of use religious in character is required to satisfy the constitutional and statutory standards for an exemption based on religious use. Pilgrim Rest Baptist Church, Inc. v. Prop. Tax Adm'r, 971 P.2d 270 (Colo. App. 1998).

Church property used primarily for commercial purposes is not exempt. Where property owned by a church corporation is not used exclusively for religious worship, but on the contrary is employed primarily for commercial and business purposes, it is not exempt from taxation. First Congregational Church v. Wright, 110 Colo. 135, 131 P.2d 419 (1942).

Buildings must be used for designated purpose before exemption applies. The mandate of the constitution, subject to no exceptions, is that buildings be used for a designated purpose before the exemption applies. McGlone v. First Baptist Church, 97 Colo. 427, 50 P.2d 547 (1935).

The intention to construct a building to be used for religious worship does not exempt the real estate upon which it is to be located from taxation. McGlone v. First Baptist Church, 97 Colo. 427, 50 P.2d 547 (1935).

B. Property Used for Schools.

This section is to be liberally construed. Pitcher v. Miss Wolcott Sch. Ass'n, 63 Colo. 294, 165 P. 608, 1917E L.R.A. 1095 (1917).

Thus it includes all property the income of which is used for particular educational institutions. Under the statute granting a charter to defendant in error and making certain of its property exempt from taxation, the exemption held to include all property of the corporation the income from which is devoted exclusively to its purposes as an educational institution or which is necessary to carry out its design. City & County of Denver v. Colo. Sem., 96 Colo. 109, 41 P.2d 1109 (1934).

Exemption is not lost by change of name. The fact that an educational institution operating by virtue of a state charter under which its property is exempt from taxation may have changed its name, held not to operate as a forfeiture or abandonment of its rights under the charter. City & County of Denver v. Colo. Sem., 96 Colo. 109, 41 P.2d 1109 (1934).

What permissible uses must embrace. In determining whether or not property used for school purposes is exempt from taxation, the uses permissible must necessarily embrace all which are proper and appropriate to effect the objects of the institution claiming the benefits of the exemption. Horton v. Fountain Valley Sch., 98 Colo. 480, 56 P.2d 933 (1936).

Where question as to future profit is not to be considered. In determining whether property used for school purposes is exempt from taxation, it being conceded that the institution involved is not operating at a profit, the question of whether it might at some time become a profit-making enterprise is not open for consideration. Horton v. Fountain Valley Sch., 98 Colo. 480, 56 P.2d 933 (1936).

Formerly, premises of private schools conducted for profit were exempt. Pitcher v. Miss Wolcott Sch. Ass'n, 63 Colo. 294, 165 P. 608 (1917).

Now only those not conducted for profit are exempt. School buildings, with the grounds connected therewith, used solely for religious, educational, and benevolent purposes, and not conducted for profit, are exempt from taxation. Kemp v. Pillar of Fire, 94 Colo. 41, 27 P.2d 1036 (1933).

Exemption not lost even though some money is received as part tuition and rental. The fact that some money is received from a few students as part payment for their tuition, board, and lodging, and that a small rental is received for some of the land does not, in the circumstances, deprive the property of its exempt character. Bishop & Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of City & County of Denver, 37 Colo. 378, 86 P. 1021 (1906); Pitcher v. Miss Wolcott Sch. Ass'n, 63 Colo. 294, 165 P. 608 (1917); Horton v. Colo. Springs Masonic Bldg. Soc'y, 64 Colo. 529, 173 P. 61 (1918); Bd. of Comm'rs v. San Luis Valley Masonic Ass'n, 80 Colo. 183, 250 P. 147 (1926); Denver Turnverein v. McGlone, 91 Colo. 473, 15 P.2d 709 (1932); Kemp v. Pillar of Fire, 94 Colo. 41, 27 P.2d 1036 (1933).

Nor because part of school building is used as living quarters. A building and lots donated for a theological school on condition that the bishop of the diocese should be the chief instructor and reside in the building, and in which such school is conducted, the bishop being the principal instructor, is exempt from taxes under the provisions of the constitution and this section exempting from taxes lots and buildings thereon, where the buildings are used solely and exclusively for schools, although the bishop resides in the building with his family and uses all of the rooms thereof for living purposes and the students are limited to half a dozen, none of whom reside in the building, but attend recitations and lectures at the building, and none of the instructors receive any salary as such, and a considerable part of the bishop's time is devoted to his duties as bishop of the diocese. Bishop & Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of Arapahoe County, 29 Colo. 143, 68 P. 272 (1901).

C. Property Used for Charitable Purposes.

The justification for charitable tax exemption, especially insofar as the rights of the body politic are involved, is that if the charitable work were not being done by a private party, it would have to be undertaken at public expense. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

One justification for exempting charitable enterprises from taxation is that they perform functions which tax-supported governmental entities would otherwise be required to perform. West Brandt Found., Inc. v. Carper, 652 P.2d 564 (Colo. 1982).

Present benefit to public required. But there must be present benefit to the general public which is sufficient to justify the loss of tax revenue. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

Charitable purpose as an end will be strictly construed. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

But means to achieve that end will be liberally construed. Charitable purpose as an end will be strictly construed; but if the end be clearly established as charitable, then the means used to achieve that end will be liberally construed as a use for a charitable purpose. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968); West Brandt Found., Inc. v. Carper, 652 P.2d 564 (Colo. 1982).

Constitution does not authorize general assembly to define "charitable purpose". The power to construe the constitutional meaning of "charitable purposes" is vested solely in the judiciary. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

"Charity". A charity in the legal sense may be more fully defined as a gift, to be applied consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works or otherwise lessening the burdens of government. Bishop & Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of City & County of Denver, 37 Colo. 378, 86 P. 1021 (1906); Horton v. Colo. Springs Masonic Bldg. Soc'y, 64 Colo. 529, 173 P. 61 (1918); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Denver & R. G. R. R. Employees' Relief Ass'n, 70 Colo. 592, 203 P. 850 (1922); Bd. of Comm'rs v. San Luis Valley Masonic Ass'n, 80 Colo. 183, 250 P. 147 (1926); Denver Press Club v. Collins, 92 Colo. 74, 18 P.2d 451 (1932).

"Charitable" includes both public and private charity. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

This section does not contain the work "public" in connection with "strictly charitable purposes". Horton v. Colo. Springs Masonic Bldg. Soc'y, 64

Colo. 529, 173 P. 61 (1918).

Charity should have "spontaneity" -- the generous giving of one's talents and goods to those in need. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

Reciprocity between recipients and donor negates charity. Where material reciprocity between alleged recipients and their alleged donor exists -- then charity does not. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

The special facilities and services of the residence for physically independent senior citizens who pay a monthly rental differ only in type, but not in nature, from those provided by commercial multi-residential buildings. The aggregate of the facilities and services provided does not suggest "charity" within the ordinary connotation of that term. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

Character of institution is determined by purpose of construction and manner of operation. The character of an institution is to be determined by the purpose of its construction and the manner of its operation, and not by the opinion of any individual as to whether its work conforms to his notion of charity or not. Bishop & Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of City & County of Denver, 37 Colo. 378, 86 P. 1021 (1906).

Where compensation exacted from patients does not exceed what is required for the successful maintenance of the institution, it does not render it less a charity. Bishop & Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of City & County of Denver, 37 Colo. 378, 86 P. 1021 (1906).

Charging fees for use will not preclude exemption. The fact that fees are charged for use of facilities is not fatal to a claim for exemption. West Brandt Found., Inc. v. Carper, 652 P.2d 564 (Colo. 1982).

Rather than charitable character of owner. Whether property alleged to be used for charitable purposes is exempt from taxation must depend upon the use made of the property, rather than upon the charitable character of the owner. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Denver & R. G. R. R. Employees' Relief Ass'n, 70 Colo. 592, 203 P. 850 (1922).

Nonprofit status cannot be equated with charitableness. It is but one factor which merits consideration in the determination of whether property is being used for strictly charitable purposes. United Presbyterian Ass'n v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 167 Colo. 485, 448 P.2d 967 (1968).

Property of fraternal organization is exempt. Property owned by a Masonic association and used for charitable purposes and for fraternal pleasure and recreation only, held, under the facts disclosed, to be used strictly for charitable purposes within the spirit and meaning of the constitution and this section, and to be exempt from taxation. Bd. of Comm'rs v. San Luis Valley Masonic Ass'n, 80 Colo. 183, 250 P. 147 (1926).

A building owned by a corporation organized by several Masonic societies who own all the stock except the qualifying shares issued to its directors, and which derive all their income from annual dues, fees for initiation, and charitable donations, and devote it entirely to the relief of the needy, is exempt from taxation, though a stand is maintained therein, for the sale to those privileged to be there, of cigars, tobacco, and other like wares, as well as a reading room for the use of members of the different Masonic bodies, and though dances and dinners are given in a room devoted to this purpose, where nonmembers are admitted, and an admission fee is charged. Horton v. Colo. Springs Masonic Bldg. Soc'y, 64 Colo. 529, 173 P. 61 (1918).

As is property of corporation used for physical culture, etc., of its members. Property of a corporation not for profit and which is used in connection with the promotion of physical culture and mental qualities of its members and others who may comply with its rules, held exempt from general taxation. Denver Turnverein v. McGlone, 91 Colo. 473, 15 P.2d 709 (1932).

As are land and buildings used as home for consumptives, notwithstanding that payment is exacted from patients for actual necessities furnished, according to their circumstances and the accommodations received, where such compensation does not exceed the expenses, and the institution is not maintained for gain or profit, and the sums paid or contributed are devoted to the purpose for which the charity was founded. Bishop & Chapter of Cathedral of St. John the Evangelist v. Treasurer of City & County of Denver, 37 Colo. 378, 86 P. 1021 (1906).

Office building used partly for charitable purposes is not exempt. A five-story office building owned by a purely charitable organization which rents all of the floors, with the exception of part of the fourth and all of the fifth, to businesses is not exempt from taxation under this section. Creel v. Pueblo Masonic Bldg. Ass'n, 100 Colo. 281, 68 P.2d 23 (1937).

But proportionate part of building is exempt. Where a part of a building is exempt from taxation because used for strictly charitable purposes, a proportionate part of the lot upon which it is located also is exempt. Hanagan v. Rocky Ford Knights of Pythias Bldg. Ass'n, 101 Colo. 545, 75 P.2d 780 (1938).

Real property not occupied by owner is not exempt. Real property alleged to be used solely and exclusively for charitable purposes is not exempt from taxation where it is not occupied by the owner, although the revenue therefrom is devoted exclusively to charity. Spears' Free Clinic & Hosp. for Poor Children v. Wilson, 103 Colo. 182, 84 P.2d 66 (1938); City Temple Institutional Soc'y v. McGuire, 104 Colo. 11, 87 P.2d 760 (1939).

Nor is property of corporation organized to maintain hospital for members by payment of dues. The property of a corporation organized to create a fund by the payment of monthly dues by its members, employees of a railroad company, which fund is used to secure and maintain a hospital for the benefit of such members, is not used exclusively for strictly charitable purposes, so as to be exempt from taxation under this section. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Denver & R. G. R. R. Employees' Relief Ass'n, 70 Colo. 592, 203 P. 850 (1922).

Nor is property adjacent to that used for charitable purposes. Property, laterally adjacent to other property of a fraternal organization which is used for charitable purposes and therefore exempt from taxation, when such property is used solely for producing revenue which is not merely incidental income "from property which otherwise is necessary to effect the objects of the institution", is subject to taxation. Hanagan v. Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, 102 Colo. 277, 80 P.2d 328 (1938).

Organization held not charitable. A social organization, not for profit, held, under the disclosed facts, not to be strictly charitable organization so as to exempt its property from taxation under this section of the constitution. Denver Press Club v. Collins, 92 Colo. 74, 18 P.2d 451 (1932).

Labor union is not a charity. Real property belonging to a labor union is not exempt from taxation on the ground that it is devoted to a "strictly charitable purpose". "A beneficial society whose beneficence is confined to the members, their families, dependents or friends, and depends upon the contributions made", not voluntarily given, but assessed against its members, is not "charity", but a private institution for the mutual advantage of its members. Lane v. Wilson, 103 Colo. 99, 83 P.2d 331 (1938).

Evidence insufficient to support claim for exemption. West Brandt Found., Inc. v. Carper, 652 P.2d 564 (Colo. 1982).

D. Cemeteries.

Cemeteries not used or held for profit are exempt from taxation under this section. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925); Grisard v. Roselawn Cem. Ass'n, 92 Colo. 289, 19 P.2d 766 (1933).

A nonprofit cemetery is entitled to the exemption under this provision even though the city attempting to collect a local improvement assessment levied on it was a home-rule city. People v. City & County of Denver, 90 Colo. 598, 10 P.2d 1106 (1932).

General assembly may exempt such cemeteries from local assessments. The law-making body, possessing plenary legislative power over the subject of assessments may, if it chooses, and as it has done, exempt nonprofit cemeteries from local assessments. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

Taxation and assessment are not synonymous terms. Each is a separate and distinct exercise of the sovereign power to tax, but taxation, as the word is employed in our constitution and statutes generally, is that burden or charge upon all property laid for raising revenue for general public purposes in defraying the expense of government. Assessments are local and resorted to for making local improvements on the theory that the property affected is increased in value at least to the amount of the levy. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

Section 6. Self-propelled equipment, motor vehicles, and certain other movable equipment. The general assembly shall enact laws classifying motor vehicles and also wheeled trailers, semi-trailers, trailer coaches, and mobile and self-propelled construction equipment, prescribing methods of determining the taxable value of such property, and requiring payment of a graduated annual specific ownership tax thereon, which tax shall be in lieu of all ad valorem taxes upon such property; except that such laws shall not exempt from ad valorem taxation any such property in process of manufacture or held in storage, or which constitutes the inventory of manufacturers or distributors thereof or dealers therein; and further except that the general assembly shall provide by law for the taxation of mobile homes.

Such graduated annual specific ownership tax shall be in addition to any state registration or license fees imposed on such property, shall be payable to a designated county officer at the same time as any such registration or license fees are payable, and shall be apportioned, distributed, and paid over to the political subdivisions of the state in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

All laws exempting from taxation property other than that specified in this article shall be void.

Annotator's note. Cases material to § 6 of art. X, Colo. Const., decided prior to its 1966 amendment have been included in the annotations to § 6 of art. X, Colo. Const.

1936 reenactment of section conferred additional power on general assembly. When this article was amended by a vote of the people in 1936, this section was reenacted, and additional power was conferred upon general assemblies to provide for specially classified or limited taxation or the exemption of tangible or intangible personal property in the administration of an income tax law, which power did not exist prior to the amendment. City & County of Denver v. Tax Research Bureau, 101 Colo. 140, 71 P.2d 809 (1937).

Taxation must be under authority of statute and cannot be authorized solely by constitutional provisions such as this section. City & County of Denver v. Security Life & Accident Co., 173 Colo. 248, 477 P.2d 369 (1970).

Statements in section construed together. The statement in this section that laws passed by the general assembly shall not exempt from ad valorem taxation any property specified in this section in the process of manufacture, etc. must be construed in connection with the declaration that the graduated annual specific ownership tax shall be in lieu of all ad valorem taxes upon such property. Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955).

Property specifically mentioned in section distinguished from other personal property. It is clear that by the constitutional amendment authorizing the classification of motor vehicles and the imposition of a graduated annual specific ownership tax thereon, the people intended to, and did, direct that the chattel property specifically mentioned should be distinguished from all other personal property subject to payment of an ad valorem tax, and that once the specific ownership tax was paid no other property tax could be levied thereon. Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955).

By the amendment the people themselves created a class of "motor vehicles, etc.", within the broad classification of personal property, and commanded that this new "class of subjects" be separately treated for purposes of taxation. Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131

Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955).

Where specific ownership taxes are paid, no ad valorem taxes should be assessed. Motor vehicles on which specific ownership taxes are paid should not be assessed for ad valorem taxes even though they become part of a dealer's stock. Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955).

The dealer should not be subjected to a tax for a given year upon the value of merchandise consisting of vehicles on which a specific ownership tax had been paid for that year. Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955).

But where owner does not pay specific ownership taxes, vehicles are subject to ad valorem taxes. The owner of vehicles "in process of manufacture", and those "held in storage", and new unused vehicles which "constitute the stock of manufacturers, or distributors thereof or of dealers therein", never will be called upon to pay the specific ownership tax. Unquestionably it is only such vehicles that should always be subject to the ad valorem tax, and this for the reason that no specific ownership tax is to be collectible unless and until a license to operate the vehicle is obtained. Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955).

If a motor vehicle is carried over a dealer's stock for a year for which no specific ownership tax is paid, then such vehicle is subject to an ad valorem tax for that year. Cooper Motors, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 78, 279 P.2d 685 (1955).

Special mobile equipment held not subject to assessment by county assessor. A partnership engaging in constructing and maintaining highways having "elected" to make application for the registration of its special mobile equipment and having in fact paid a special ownership tax thereon, such property was not thereafter subject to assessment by the county assessor by virtue of this section. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E.J. Rippy & Sons, 161 Colo. 261, 421 P.2d 461 (1966).

Water conservation district is not "political subdivision". A water conservation district is not a "political subdivision" of the state within the meaning of this section. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist. v. Witwer, 108 Colo. 307, 116 P.2d 200 (1941).

Applied in Koenig v. Jewish Consumptives' Relief Soc'y, 98 Colo. 253, 55 P.2d 325 (1936); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Morris, 104 Colo. 139, 89 P.2d 248 (1939); Jackson v. City of Glenwood Springs, 122 Colo. 323, 221 P.2d 1083 (1950); Pueblo Junior Coll. Dist. v. Donner, 154 Colo. 26, 387 P.2d 727 (1963); State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Temple, 176 Colo. 537, 491 P.2d 1371 (1971).

Section 7. Municipal taxation by general assembly prohibited. The general assembly shall not impose taxes for the purposes of any county, city, town or other municipal corporation, but may by law, vest in the corporate authorities thereof respectively, the power to assess and collect taxes for all purposes of such corporation.

Source of municipality's authorization to impose taxes. The source by which a municipality may impose either a general ad valorem tax or special assessment taxes upon the properties within its corporate limits is found under the provisions of this section. Ochs v. Town of Hot Sulphur Springs, 158 Colo. 456, 407 P.2d 677 (1965).

Right to impose taxes for county expenses is vested exclusively in counties by the constitution, which prohibits the general assembly from imposing taxes for county purposes, but places no restriction upon the general assembly from placing a limit upon the amount of levy, nor does it prohibit the general assembly from curtailing the amount of taxes the county may impose for county purposes. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 P. 641 (1885); Tallon v. Vindicator Consol. Gold Mining Co., 59 Colo. 316, 149 P. 108 (1915).

This section contains a specific restriction upon the general assembly, and in turn provides for a specific grant to the county. It is evident that this right, which the general assembly was empowered to give to a county, town or municipality to exercise for itself, was withheld from the general assembly, undoubtedly with the view that the limited needs, uses, and purposes of such local communities could be better determined by those directly affected. This would include the purpose here involved (old age pensions), if it still remained a county function or purpose; but under the present act, the county and its officials are stripped of all authority except as trustees for its distribution. In re Hunter's Estate, 97 Colo. 279, 49 P.2d 1009 (1935).

But section 17 of this article overrides this section by directing that the general assembly may levy income tax for any political subdivision, which includes home rule cities among others. The fact that the general assembly has not seen fit so to do is immaterial. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Constitution neither defines "county purpose" nor prevents general assembly from doing so. It does prevent the general assembly from singling out, at its pleasure, one or more counties, levying a tax upon the property therein for the uses and purposes singular to such county or counties, which would be of no statewide interest or concern, but does not prevent the levy of a tax, the distribution of which will reach the beneficial subjects wherever located, within the state, according to proportionate needs. In re Hunter's Estate, 97 Colo. 279, 49 P.2d 1009 (1935).

The whole people, by this section of their constitution, say to their general assembly, "You shall not impose taxes for county purposes. That is definite and final." What are county purposes? The constitution does not say, and does not forbid the general assembly to say. Hence the general assembly, within all reasonable limit (of course it cannot, by mere fiat, make black white), has that power. It has exercised it. An examination of its acts from territorial days discloses that it has always said that the purpose for which this statute imposes taxes (i.e. poor relief) is a county purpose. Walker v. Bedford, 93 Colo. 400, 26 P.2d 1051 (1933).

Test for "county purposes". The test as to "county purposes" is, "Is it for strictly county uses, for which the county or its inhabitants alone would benefit, or is it for a purpose in which the entire state is concerned or will benefit?" In re Hunter's Estate, 97 Colo. 279, 49 P.2d 1009 (1935); Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Manley, 99 Colo. 153, 60 P.2d 913 (1936).

The word "other" in the phrase "county, city, town or other municipal corporation" does not necessarily refer back to the word "county". No violence would be done to the language employed, if the word should be confined, in its reference, to the words "cities" and "towns"; and if it is important to know what meaning the makers of the constitution attached to the words "municipal corporations", as used in that instrument, an examination of § 13 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., will be satisfactory. Stemer v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 5 Colo. App. 379, 38 P. 839 (1895).

"Taxes" as used in this section refers to the ordinary public taxes. See City of Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 30 P. 1041, 17 L.R.A. 135 (1892).

Municipal purpose may be changed to state purpose. While at the time of the adoption of the state constitution, a particular purpose may have been municipal only, under changed conditions it may have become a state purpose, and no longer under the ban of the constitutional provision contained in this section. Police Protective Ass'n v. Warren, 101 Colo. 586, 76 P.2d 94 (1937).

Distinction between water conservancy districts and irrigation districts. Under powers conferred upon the general assembly by this section water conservancy districts have been authorized to levy and collect general taxes on all property, real and personal, within the districts, and to levy and collect assessments for special benefits. In this grant of power lies the distinction between water conservancy districts and irrigation districts organized under the Colorado statutes as such. The public character of the former constitutes the difference. People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938).

Apportioning revenue is not carrying out county purpose. In dividing the revenue remaining after cost of administration between the highway department and the counties, apportioning it on the basis of state highway mileage within the respective counties, the state is not carrying out a county purpose, but carrying out a purpose in which the entire state is concerned. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. Manley, 99 Colo. 153, 60 P.2d 913 (1936).

Funding provisions of social services code not violative of this section because the social services code serves both state and local purposes. Colo. Dept. of Soc. Servs. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 697 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1985).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "A Review of the 1959 Constitutional and Administrative Law Decisions", see 37 Dicta 81 (1960).

Purpose of section is to provide for economy. The purpose of the framers of the constitution was to provide for economy in the administration of the affairs of state, and for that reason they limited the rate of taxation on property. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

A principal design of the framers of the constitution, and of the people in adopting the same, was to inaugurate an economical state government, and, in order to carry out this purpose, limitations against extravagance in the administration of it were inserted. People ex rel. Thomas v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 P. 608 (1886).

Its language is plain, clear, and unambiguous, and no room is left for construction as to the limitations therein imposed, unless it be in respect to the meaning intended to be conveyed by the clause "for state purposes". People ex rel. Thomas v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 P. 608 (1886).

It requires the levying of a tax for state purposes. Bd. of Comm'rs v. People, 17 Colo. App. 519, 69 P. 73 (1902).

The levy for state purposes is as much a legislative levy as the levy for any special purpose. It is a levy of four mills when no lower rate is directed by the state board of equalization. This, therefore, is to be treated as an absolute levy of four mills, subject to two conditions: First, that all prior levies, if not repugnant to constitutional requirements, shall be respected; second, a reservation of power in the state board of equalization to reduce the general levy. This levy is fixed by the general assembly subject to the right of the state board of equalization to reduce the rate to an amount sufficient merely to meet appropriations, should the assessment justify such reduction. People ex rel. Regents of State Univ. v. State Bd. of Equaliz., 20 Colo. 220, 37 P. 964 (1894).

And limits rate of taxation for such purposes. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 P. 641 (1885); People ex rel. Thomas v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 P. 608 (1886); In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); People ex rel. Regents of State Univ. v. State Bd. of Equaliz., 20 Colo. 220, 37 P. 964 (1894); Goodykoontz v. People, 20 Colo. 374, 38 P. 473 (1894); Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896); In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

The general assembly having power to levy taxes aggregating four mills in amount, its mandates must if not contrary to other constitutional requirements, be enforced until the four mill limit is reached. The power being then exhausted, further levies cannot be made. When the total levies aggregate more than four mills on the dollar, it is the plain duty of every officer connected with the levy and collection of the revenue to refrain from doing any act which falls within the inhibition of the state constitution. People ex rel. Thomas v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 P. 608 (1886); In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); People ex rel. Regents of State Univ. v. State Bd. of Equaliz., 20 Colo. 220, 37 P. 964 (1894).

But limitation applies to rate of taxation on property for state purposes only, and does not abridge the power of the general assembly to provide for the levy of a military poll tax. People v. Ames, 24 Colo. 422, 51 P. 426 (1897).

And does not prevent general assembly from selecting other subjects of taxation. The provisions in this article containing restrictions as to rate of taxation evidently refer exclusively to a property tax, but there is nothing therein which prevents the general assembly from selecting other subjects of taxation, and prescribing the amount of the tax that it may see fit to impose thereon. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904); Brown v. Elder, 32 Colo. 527, 77 P. 853 (1904).

When the court observed that the general assembly, in attempting to provide revenue for state purposes, is confined to that derived from the levy at the rate of four mills on the dollar, and that the way to obtain adequate revenue therefor is to increase the assessed valuation, it was referring to revenue derived from the taxation of property, and not of other sources of revenue. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

This section pertains to property tax, and has no application to excise tax. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

Or to service tax. The service tax not being a property tax, constitutional provisions like this are not in point in an attack on the constitutionality of the tax. Rinn v. Bedford, 102 Colo. 475, 84 P.2d 827 (1938).

It is intended that annual state tax will meet annual expenditure. Taking the provisions of this section and section 16 of this article together, the intention would seem to be that the annual state tax should meet the annual state expenditure. People ex rel. Seeley v.

May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 P. 641 (1885).

That difficulty encountered by the state board of equalization in making the total amount of taxes produced by a four-mill levy pay all appropriations, is no reason for overriding this mandatory section of the constitution either by the board or by this court. The remedy, as often pointed out, is either for the general assembly to lessen appropriations, or to bring about an increase of the valuation for state purposes. In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

Levy may be as much less than maximum as is deemed proper. The constitution limits the maximum of the levy for general state purposes to four mills on the dollar, and the tax levying authorities for that purpose may make it as much less as in their judgment they deem proper. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equaliz. v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equaliz., 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

Rates in excess of constitutional limit. Under this section, providing that, when the assessed value of property in the state shall have reached $100,000,000, the tax for "state purposes" shall not exceed four mills per dollar of valuation, rates of taxation for state purposes aggregating five and seventeen-thirtieths mills per dollar, declared after the assessed value of property in the state had reached $100,000,000, are in excess of the constitutional limit, although only four mills thereof is declared to be for state purposes, and the remainder is for the support of state institutions authorized by the constitution. People ex rel. Thomas v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422, 12 P. 608 (1886).

Purpose for which debt is created determines whether payment is to be within or without rate prescribed. The purpose, whether ordinary or extraordinary, for which, and not the authority, whether the general assembly or the people, by which, a state debt is created, is the true test for determining whether its payment is to be provided for by taxation, within, or beyond, the rate prescribed by the constitution for state purposes. In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

Expenses held ordinary. Indebtedness contracted for the capitol building and to meet casual deficiencies in the revenue fall within the ordinary expenses of the state, and a tax levied to pay the interest and principal of such bonds must be included in, and form a part of, the four mills general levy for state purposes. In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

Suppression of insurrection is extraordinary expense. In the absence of a limitation in the constitution, the power of the general assembly in matters of taxation is plenary. There being no such restriction upon taxation for suppressing an insurrection, the general assembly may appropriate any sum required for such purpose, and levy any rate necessary to pay the same. In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

And that portion of the public debt created to meet expenditure to suppress insurrection does not fall within the limit of this section of the constitution limiting the rate of taxation for state purposes on each dollar of valuation. In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

Hence special tax may be levied to pay interest and principal of insurrection bonds. The general assembly may levy a special tax, if necessary, in excess of, and in addition to, the four-mill rate for state purposes, to pay the interest and principal of insurrection bonds. In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

Section 12. Public funds - report of state treasurer. (1) The general assembly may provide by law for the safekeeping and management of the public funds in the custody of the state treasurer, but, notwithstanding any such provision, the state treasurer and his sureties shall be responsible therefor.

(2) The state treasurer shall keep adequate records of all moneys coming into his custody and shall at the end of each quarter of the fiscal year submit a written report to the governor, signed under oath, showing the condition of the state treasury, the amount of money in the several funds, and where such money is kept or deposited. Swearing falsely to any such report shall be deemed perjury.

(3) The governor shall cause every such quarterly report to be promptly published in at least one newspaper printed at the seat of government, and otherwise as the general assembly may require.

ANNOTATION

Treasurer is constitutional custodian of public funds. See In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888); People ex rel. Miller v. Higgins, 69 Colo. 79, 168 P. 740 (1917).

General assembly cannot devolve this stewardship upon another. In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888).

It may command him to disburse such funds as it shall see fit, subject only to constitutional restriction, and it may also direct the investment of the school fund. But for the safekeeping of the public moneys, till paid out or invested as authorized by statute, he alone is responsible. In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888). People ex rel. Miller v. Higgins, 69 Colo. 79, 168 P. 740 (1917).

But cannot, directly or indirectly, divest him of general control of custody of public moneys before disbursement or investment; hence a bill authorizing the governor to dictate the particular banks in which such moneys shall be deposited is invalid. In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888).

This section has no application to a special fund. This section giving the state treasurer control over state money, has no application to a special fund, not a part of the general revenues of the state, and of which the treasurer is custodian only, e.g., the state compensation insurance fund. Stong v. Indus. Comm'n, 71 Colo. 133, 204 P. 892 (1922).

General assembly to regulate safekeeping and management of public funds. By this section power is expressly lodged in the general assembly to make all reasonable and proper regulations regarding the safekeeping and management of the public funds. Ample provision in the premises is here conferred upon the general assembly. People v. Walsen, 17 Colo. 170, 28 P. 1119 (1892).

Absolute liability of treasurer and his sureties for all public moneys received by him is fixed by this section. In this respect the obligation of the treasurer is different from that of an ordinary trustee. No amount of care will excuse him in case of loss by theft, fire, or by insolvency of the banks selected as depositaries; he must make the loss good to the state. He can only be discharged by paying over the money when required, and the sureties upon his official bond also assume this unusual liability. In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888).

The language of the state constitution which makes the treasurer absolutely liable, takes away an important right of a trustee. In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888); People v. Walsen, 17 Colo. 170, 28 P. 1119 (1892).

It is true the last clause of the last sentence of this section makes absolute the liability of the state treasurer, for all public funds received by him by virtue of his office, but taking the whole sentence together we are of the opinion that it was not intended to create a new liability but to avoid the possibility of regulation on the part of the general assembly from being construed as creating an exception to the general rule of absolute liability. Gartley v. People ex rel. Pueblo County, 24 Colo. 155, 49 P. 272 (1897).

Treasurer's liability ceases when funds have lawfully passed out of his hands. Unquestionably absolute liability rests upon the state treasurer in reference to all money actually in his custody, but it is equally certain that where the public money has passed out of his hands by lawful means or procedure, upon valid claims or legal loans, he has discharged his duty in the premises, and his liability in relation thereto ends. People ex rel. Miller v. Higgins, 69 Colo. 79, 168 P. 740 (1917).

No statute can operate to relieve state treasurer or his sureties from liability upon his official bond. The responsibility of that officer and his sureties for the protection and safety of the public funds while in his hands is irrevocably fixed by the constitutional mandate of this section. In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888).

Treasurer is not liable for interest received upon public money. People v. Walsen, 17 Colo. 170, 28 P. 1119, 15 L.R.A. 456 (1892).

Claim that state treasurer alone may invest school fund has no support in constitution. That instrument does not even impliedly authorize him to do so. It makes him the custodian of, and responsible for, such fund, as of other public funds, and authorizes the general assembly to provide by law further regulations for the safekeeping and management thereof. Had the intent been to invest the treasurer with the power of investing the fund, the language of the constitution would, doubtless, have been: "He shall securely and profitably invest the same", etc. People ex rel. Miller v. Higgins, 69 Colo. 79, 168 P. 740 (1917).

Section 13. Making profit on public money - felony. The making of profit, directly or indirectly, out of state, county, city, town or school district money, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, by any public officer, shall be deemed a felony, and shall be punished as provided by law.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 59.

ANNOTATION

This section is not self-executing. This section forbidding the making of profit by public officials out of public funds, and classifying the forbidden act as a felony, is not self-executing. In re Breene, 14 Colo.

401, 24 P. 3 (1890).

It recognizes that a profit may be made by the treasurer, although it declares the making thereof a felony to be punished as provided by law. It does not provide that the profit to be made shall enure to the benefit of the state. People v. Walsen, 17 Colo. 170, 28 P. 1119 (1892).

It may be a legislative duty to provide that all interest paid by banks upon public funds shall be placed to the credit of the state. Nor is there any doubt concerning the legislative authority to require periodical reports, under oath, from the treasurer and from bank officials, showing the terms and conditions of the deposits in question, including the rate of interest allowed thereon. Reasonable legislative regulations, in addition to those named by the constitution, looking to the safekeeping and management of public funds, may be a wise precaution; and, if they regulate the control thereof without withdrawing it from the treasurer, we perceive no constitutional objection thereto. In re House Resolution, 12 Colo. 395, 21 P. 486 (1888).

This section does not cover money of water conservancy district. The functions of a water conservancy district, however designated, are in no sense the functions of a state subdivision like counties, towns, cities, or school districts, within the meaning of this section. N. Colo. Water Conservancy Dist. v. Witwer, 108 Colo. 307, 116 P.2d 200 (1941).

Section inapplicable to assemblyman's unrelated business dealings with city. This section does not apply where a member of the general assembly has business dealings with a city which are totally unrelated to his position in the general assembly. McCroskey v. Gustafson, 638 P.2d 51 (Colo. 1981).

Applied in Moulton v. McLean, 5 Colo. App. 454, 39 P. 78 (1895).

Section 14. Private property not taken for public debt. Private property shall not be taken or sold for the payment of the corporate debt of municipal corporations.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 59.

ANNOTATION

Purpose of section. This section is to protect private property from judgment creditors of a city. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

Meaning of section. This section only means that a creditor of a municipality may not levy upon and sell the private property of individuals within the corporation to pay the debt of the municipality. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

Applied in People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938).

Section 15. Boards of equalization - duties - property tax administrator. (1) (a) There shall be in each county of the state a county board of equalization, consisting of the board of county commissioners of said county. As may be prescribed by law, the county boards of equalization shall raise, lower, adjust, and equalize valuations for assessment of taxes upon real and personal property located within their respective counties, subject to review and revision by the state board of equalization.

(b) There shall be a state board of equalization, consisting of the governor or his designee, the speaker of the house of representatives or his designee, the president of the senate or his designee, and two members appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate. Each of such appointed members shall be a qualified appraiser or a former county assessor or a person who has knowledge and experience in property taxation. The general assembly shall provide by law for the political composition of such board and for the compensation of its members and, with regard to the appointed members, for terms of office, the filling of vacancies, and removal from office. As may be prescribed by law, the state board of equalization shall review the valuations determined for assessment of taxes upon the various classes of real and personal property located in the several counties of the state and shall, upon a majority vote, raise, lower, and adjust the same to the end that all valuations for assessment of taxes shall be just and equalized; except that said state board of equalization shall have no power of original assessment. Whenever a majority vote of the state board of equalization is prescribed by this constitution or by statute, "majority vote" means an affirmative vote of the majority of the entire membership of such board.

(c) The state board of equalization and the county boards of equalization shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

(2) The state board of equalization shall appoint, by a majority vote, a property tax administrator who shall serve for a term of five years and until his successor is appointed and qualified unless removed for cause by a majority vote of the state board of equalization. The property tax administrator shall have the duty, as provided by law, of administering the property tax laws and such other duties as may be prescribed by law and shall be subject to the supervision and control of the state board of equalization. The position of property tax administrator shall be exempt from the personnel system of this state.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Annotator's note. Cases material to § 15 of art. X, Colo. Const., decided prior to its 1962 amendment have been included in the annotations to § 15 of art. X, Colo. Const.

State board of equalization is constitutional body. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

State board is final arbiter in fixing values upon property which has been originally assessed for the purposes of raising public revenue. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 61 Colo. 149, 156 P. 812 (1916); People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Board of equalization is quasi court invested with the duty to ascertain and determine certain facts, and its determination thereof is a judgment. People ex rel. Rollins v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 7 Colo. App. 229, 42 P. 1032 (1883); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Burpee, 24 Colo. 57, 48 P. 539 (1897); People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 61 Colo. 149, 156 P. 812, 1918D Ann. Cas. 1185 (1916).

Boards of equalization adjust values within their respective jurisdictions. The boards of equalization, both county and state, adjust, equalize, raise or lower values within their respective jurisdictions, county boards being confined to property within the particular county and the state board acts throughout the state, bringing all property of different classes to the same standard of values. Goldsmith v. Standard Chem. Co., 23 F.2d 313 (8th Cir. 1927).

Equalization of assessments by county boards is subject to revision by state board. The duties of the several county boards of equalization, to equalize the assessments in their respective counties as returned by the county assessors, are constitutional duties, but their action in that regard is subject to revision, change and amendment by the state board of equalization. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Order of state board may affect real or personal property. Union P. R. R. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 35 F.2d 785 (10th Cir. 1929).

Judgment by state board to make raise constitutes warrant which assessor must obey. If the state board of equalization has jurisdiction, and makes a raise, its judgment constitutes a warrant which an assessor is bound to obey. Thus an assessor has no more standing to question the validity of such action of the board than a lower court has to question the validity of the mandate of a reviewing court. He is obligated to carry out the mandate of the board. It follows that writs of mandamus and prohibition are appropriate. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

But state board cannot compel compliance with orders which are without its jurisdiction and authority, by the law under which it assumed to act. People v. Ames, 27 Colo. 126, 60 P. 346 (1900).

Since the power of the state board of equalization is limited to the equalization of assessed valuation of property, and since the state board is specifically prohibited from making original assessments, the state board exceeded its authority by determining whether to allow a property tax exemption. Telluride Airport Auth. v. Bd. of Equalization, 789 P.2d 201 (Colo. App. 1989).

Duties of auditor. This section makes the auditor a member of the state board of equalization and prescribes certain duties of that board. It is only in this way that the constitution can be said to prescribe any particular duty of the auditor. Am. Bonding Co. v. People, 53 Colo. 512, 127 P. 941 (1912).

Equalization and assessment distinguished. The process of equalization relates to the raising or lowering of the total valuation placed upon a class or subclass of property in the aggregate. Assessment, on the other hand, constitutes the process of placing a value for tax purposes upon the property of a particular taxpayer. Wenner v. Bd. of Assessment Appeals, 866 P.2d 172 (Colo. App. 1993).

Applied in Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Fifty-First Gen. Ass'y, 198 Colo. 302, 599 P.2d 887 (1979).

II. POWERS AND DUTIES.

Constitution vests state board with certain powers. MacGinnis v. Denver Land Co., 90 Colo. 72, 6 P.2d 919 (1931).

Which can be taken away only by constitutional enactment. Powers of equalization exercised by the state and several county boards of equalization are constitutionally vested, and can be taken away only by constitutional, and not by statutory enactment. In re Opinion of the Justices, 55 Colo. 17, 123 P. 660 (1912).

The constitutional duty imposed upon the state board of equalization is to adjust and equalize the property values among the several counties of the state, and that upon the several county boards, to adjust and equalize such values within their respective counties. These duties having been imposed upon these agencies by the constitution, the general assembly is powerless to take them away, or confer them upon another. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

State board has power of equalization but not assessment. Valuing the property of a particular taxpayer, as a whole, is in its essence assessment of such taxpayer's property. While dealing with, and raising or lowering, the value of classes of property, without reference to ownership, within a designated territorial limit, is in its essence equalization. Assessment is personal, while equalization is impersonal. The board has power of equalization but not assessment. Union P. R. R. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 35 F.2d 785 (10th Cir. 1929); In re Opinion of the Justices, 55 Colo. 17, 123 P. 660 (1912).

The state board of equalization has no power either to make or supervise the making of assessments of public utility property and that its functions are limited to its constitutional power of equalization. Union P. R. R. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 35 F.2d 785 (10th Cir. 1929).

The board of equalization has no authority to make original assessments, or order the raising or lowering thereof, or direct the assessor so to do. Bohen v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 109 Colo. 283, 124 P.2d 606 (1942); Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

State board cannot examine valuation of individual taxpayer's property. Union P. R. R. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 35 F.2d 785 (10th Cir. 1929); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Union P. R. R., 89 Colo. 110, 299 P. 1055 (1931); MacGinnis v. Denver Land Co., 90 Colo. 72, 6 P.2d 919 (1931).

In attaining its end, the state board of equalization, by the specific language of the constitution, is enjoined to equalize, not by raising or lowering the total assessment of an individual taxpayer, but by raising or lowering the valuation of the two principal classes of property, namely, real and personal, or the valuation of any class thereof. Union P. R. R. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 35 F.2d 785 (10th Cir. 1929).

It is a well-recognized and essential rule of constitutional and statutory construction that interpretation leading to absurdities and impossibilities will, if possible, be avoided. If the state board of equalization were charged with the ultimate duty of approving the valuation of every item of property in the state, and the total assessment of every taxpayer, its five members would have to live long and labor diligently to complete the work of a single year. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Union P. R. R., 89 Colo. 110, 299 P. 1055 (1931).

No provision is made to bring individual assessment before state board. Union P. R. R. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 35 F.2d 785 (10th Cir. 1929).

Assumption that state board dealt with aggregate values. Under pertinent constitutional provisions and laws it will be assumed that the state board of equalization in passing a resolution lowering the assessed valuations of property was dealing with aggregate values rather than otherwise, and the change cannot be deemed an act of original assessment. MacGinnis v. Denver Land Co., 90 Colo. 72, 6 P.2d 919 (1931).

State board may increase valuations in the aggregate. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

The state tax commission and the board are authorized under the constitution, the statutes, and the decisions of the supreme court, to determine that there should be lump sum or percentage increase in the total valuation of property within a county even though this has the effect of increasing the aggregate valuation of property in that county and in the state as a whole. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915); People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

But board of assessment appeals acts independently of board of equalization. In re Opinion of the Justices, 55 Colo. 17, 123 P. 660 (1912); People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

Adjustment and equalization are duties of board of county commissioners. This section makes it the duty of the board of county commissioners, sitting as a board of equalization, to adjust and equalize the valuation of real and personal property within its county. Tarabino Real Estate Co. v. Sandoval, 115 Colo. 336, 173 P.2d 459 (1946).

Board of assessment appeals is subject to approval of state board. Board of assessment appeals' action in raising, lowering or equalizing values is subject to approval of state board. See Goldsmith v. Standard Chem. Co., 23 F.2d 313 (8th Cir. 1927).

III. PROCEDURES.

Board may set own rules of procedure. The state board must be permitted to determine (within limits) its own rules of procedure. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

The statutes are silent as to any method to be used by the state board in the performance of its constitutional duties. MacGinnis v. Denver Land Co., 90 Colo. 72, 6 P.2d 919 (1931).

Full scale hearing before board not contemplated. The constitutional provision creating the state board does not contemplate a full scale hearing similar to that which obtains in a courtroom. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Actual notice to the individual taxpayer is not required as a condition precedent to action by state boards of equalization, notwithstanding such boards may exercise the power of increasing or decreasing the aggregate valuations as returned from the respective counties. The rule is equally well settled that the only notice necessary in such cases is the law which fixes the time and place of the holding of the meetings of such boards. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

When the state board is performing its equalization function, it is not required to give a specific notice and hearing. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Board may consider any type of evidence. In the absence of a statutory mandate, boards of equalization are not required to examine witnesses, or base their action upon any particular kind of evidence, but may proceed in their own way, and on any information satisfactory to them. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914), aff'd sub nom. Bi-Metallic Inv. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915); First Nat'l Bank v. Patterson, 65 Colo. 166, 176 P. 498 (1918); First Nat'l Bank v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 264 U.S. 450, 44 S. Ct. 385, 68 L. Ed. 784 (1924); Holly Sugar Corp. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 10 F.2d 506 (D. Colo. 1926).

The state constitution is silent in regard to the evidence or character thereof essential to valid action upon the part of the state board of equalization in the performance of its duties. It may, therefore, resort to any source of information it may desire in reaching its conclusions, even though it be assumed that it may not reach its conclusions from its own knowledge. Where the fundamental law creates an agency and invests it with power, without prescribing the manner in which it may be exercised, the agency is at liberty to adopt its own mode of procedure. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Where the state board of equalization has before it the sworn abstracts of assessment of several county assessors and also information in a judgment of the state tax commission that a certain raise upon specific classes or property should be made in order to bring the same to the constitutional requirement of full cash value, together with the general knowledge possessed by their own members in their acquaintance with the property contained in the state, the board has jurisdiction, and acts upon the kind of evidence and information which the constitution contemplates. People ex. rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

If the state board does not swear and examine witnesses upon a subject, it is immaterial. The constitution does not require it and contemplates no such means of information. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Presumption as to performance of duty. The presumption is that the state board of equalization in passing a resolution for the reduction of assessed valuations of property discharged its entire duty with reference to an adjustment of assessments. MacGinnis v. Denver Land Co., 90 Colo. 72, 6 P.2d 919 (1931).

Court must uphold resolution of board where possible. If a resolution of the state board of equalization is susceptible of two interpretations, courts must adopt that construction which will support its validity, and provisions of such a resolution are sufficiently certain which can be made certain. MacGinnis v. Denver Land Co., 90 Colo. 72, 6 P.2d 919 (1931).

The courts must give effect to the unambiguous authorization in this section of the constitution, which empowers the board to increase valuations. People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Hively, 139 Colo. 49, 336 P.2d 721 (1959).

Section 16. Appropriations not to exceed tax - exceptions. No appropriation shall be made, nor any expenditure authorized by the general assembly, whereby the expenditure of the state, during any fiscal year, shall exceed the total tax then provided for by law and applicable for such appropriation or expenditure, unless the general assembly making such appropriation shall provide for levying a sufficient tax, not exceeding the rates allowed in section eleven of this article, to pay such appropriation or expenditure within such fiscal year. This provision shall not apply to appropriations or expenditures to suppress insurrection, defend the state, or assist in defending the United States in time of war.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Purpose of section. The unquestioned purpose of this section is to prohibit the making of appropriations authorizing expenditures for any fiscal year in excess of the revenue provided for the payment thereof during said period, to the end that indebtedness beyond the current means of discharging the same may be precluded. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

Prohibitions of section. This section not only prohibits the general assembly from making excess appropriations, but also forbids officials of the executive department, particularly the auditor and treasurer, from paying or authorizing the payment of any appropriations for a given fiscal year except out of monies which in reality constitute revenue of the same fiscal year and are available for that use. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

This section does not provide the governor with authority to transfer funds in order to assure that expenditures do not exceed appropriations. Colo. General Assembly v. Lamm, 700 P.2d 508 (Colo. 1985).

Inhibition of section applies to fiscal year, not general assembly. It clearly was the intention of the people in adopting this constitutional provision that the inhibition should apply to the fiscal year and not to the general assembly which may chance to be in session at that time, so that the power of the Thirty-First and Thirty-Second General Assemblies, with relation to providing revenue within constitutional bounds for appropriations of that fiscal year, would be coextensive. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

Applicability of section to ad valorem and excise taxes. This section is clearly applicable to ad valorem taxes and at least of debatable applicability to excise taxes. But in determining this case, the supreme court did not determine whether the section relates solely to ad valorem taxes. That matter could and should wait for determination until the question was directly involved in an appropriate action. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

Section not applicable to creation of debt. The matter of debts is covered by art. XI, Colo. Const. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

"Annual tax" includes occupation taxes. The annual tax provided by law, mentioned in this section, is not limited to a tax on property. Such expression "annual tax" may, and does, include occupation taxes as well. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

II. APPROPRIATIONS.

A. In General.

Appropriations and expenditures are of two general classes. Under this section appropriations and expenditures which may be made are of two general classes: First, ordinary, which include all kinds of appropriations and expenditures necessary and proper for the support of the government and its institutions in time of peace; second, extraordinary, or such as are necessary "to suppress insurrection, defend the state, or assist in defending the United States in time of war". In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

Expenditures made to suppress insurrection. In paying the costs of an insurrection, etc., the general assembly is not limited, either as to the amount of the expenditures and appropriations therefor, or in the rate of taxation to pay the same and the interest thereof, whether the debt created for that purpose is in the form of certificates of indebtedness, or warrants, or has been converted into a debt by loan and funded into bonds. The same freedom from constitutional limitations upon the general assembly attends a debt created for this extraordinary purpose, irrespective of the form or evidence of such debt. In re State Bd. of Equalization, 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

Power to appropriate can only be exercised subject to provisions of this section, by which appropriations in excess of the revenue are inhibited. In re Continuing Appropriations, 18 Colo. 192, 32 P. 272 (1893).

This section of the constitution must control in determining whether an appropriation is or is not valid. To warrant the issuance of the peremptory writ against the auditor in this proceeding it must clearly appear, either that there were, at the date of the appropriation, "funds in the treasury not otherwise appropriated", that is, revenue "then provided for by law, and applicable for such appropriation" sufficient to pay the said sum, or, that the general assembly making such appropriation did, within constitutional limits, provide for levying a sufficient tax to pay such appropriation within the proper fiscal years. Henderson v. People ex rel. Wingate, 17 Colo. 587, 31 P. 334 (1892).

The general assembly, composed of representatives from all parts of the state, aided by the records and reports of state and county officers for preceding fiscal years, with power to take testimony and send for persons and papers, should be able to make such estimates that, with reasonable economy, all necessary expenditure may be provided for without transcending the constitutional limit. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

Expenditures are limited to taxes raised. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 P. 641 (1885).

Under this section the general assembly may not make any appropriation or expenditure of its revenue beyond the total tax then provided for by law and applicable to that particular purpose, unless it shall provide for levying a tax sufficient to pay such appropriation or expenditure, and this tax must be within the limit of four mills prescribed in section 11 of this article. In re State Bd. of Equalization, 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1897).

To bring an expenditure within the inhibition of this section, as a result of such authorized expenditures the state must be obligated to spend during a fiscal year more revenue than is available for expenditure during such fiscal year. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

In fixing the total amount of appropriations for any fiscal year the general assembly, except in certain specified instances, is limited to the revenue that may properly be applied in the payment of the same. The amount of such revenue is almost entirely a matter of calculation. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

General assembly may not appropriate in excess of revenue. Thus the general assembly is inhibited from making appropriations or authorizing expenditures in excess of the revenue applicable to such appropriations. Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896); In re Loan of Sch. Fund, 18 Colo. 195, 32 P. 273 (1893).

By this section, each and every general assembly is inhibited, in absolute and unqualified terms, from making appropriations or authorizing expenditures of the former class in excess of the total tax then provided by law, and applicable for such appropriation or expenditure, unless such general assembly shall provide for levying a sufficient tax, within constitutional limits, to pay the same within such fiscal year. This language needs no construction. It is plain, simple and unambiguous. It need not be misunderstood. It cannot be evaded. It means that the state cannot be plunged into debt by unauthorized legislation. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

All excessive appropriations are void. It is well settled that all excessive appropriations are absolutely void. In fact, the constitution contains such plain and explicit inhibitions against the state being burdened with debts thus created, as to leave no room for construction. In re Priority of Legislative Appropriations, 19 Colo. 58, 34 P. 277 (1893); Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

If the general assembly passes acts making appropriations or authorizing expenditures in excess of constitutional limits such acts are void. They create no indebtedness against the state, and entail no obligation, legal or moral, upon the people, or upon any future general assembly. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 P. 641 (1885); In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662, 9 S. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060 (1889).

Illegal appropriations should be carefully avoided, inasmuch as they seriously damage, though they cannot wreck, the credit of the state; for, while they create no valid indebtedness, yet it cannot be denied that they tarnish the reputation of the government for business integrity and fair dealing, and are greatly injurious to the public welfare. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

Excessive appropriations may not be recognized. No state officer can legally recognize legislation making such appropriations. Parks v.

Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

Neither the governor, auditor nor treasurer, nor any other officer of the executive department, can in any way legally approve or recognize legislative acts making appropriations in excess of constitutional limits. The unauthorized act of one official is no justification or excuse for a similar act by another. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

But must be treated as void. It is the duty of every public officer connected with the administration of the state finances to treat as void each and every appropriation in excess of constitutional limits. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); Henderson v. People ex rel. Wingate, 17 Colo. 587, 31 P. 334 (1892).

When excessive appropriations are declared void. When the entire revenue of a given fiscal year has been exhausted the legislative appropriations for that year remaining unpaid, or any unpaid portions thereof, are totally void, constitute no debt and impose no obligation, legal or moral, upon the people or upon any future general assembly. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

But not prior to expiration of fiscal year. But appropriations cannot be declared void for deficiency of revenue prior to the expiration of the fiscal year. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

Appropriations may not be declared void until the total revenues for the fiscal year involved properly shall have been applied to payment of the appropriations, and only after this process is entirely complete do any of the appropriations or any portion thereof become finally void. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

There is no absolute criterion by which it can be known in advance whether an appropriation will be in excess of the limit. Neither the auditor's estimates nor the judgment of the general assembly afford any support to such excessive appropriations; but such acts are mere nullities. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

Income tax revenues applicable to appropriations. The entire income tax upon incomes returned for the calendar year ending December 31, 1938, and the entire income tax upon incomes returned for taxpayers' fiscal years so ending that the fifteenth day of the fourth month following the close of such taxpayers' fiscal years would fall on a date prior to June 30, 1939, constitute revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and may be applied to the payment of first and second class appropriations for that period, without reference to whether the actual payment is made upon the due date, by subsequent installments, or otherwise. People ex rel. Colo. State Hosp. v. Armstrong, 104 Colo. 238, 90 P.2d 522 (1939).

B. Priority.

Appropriations for executive, legislative, and judicial departments are entitled to preference. Acts of the general assembly making the necessary appropriations to defray the expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the state government for each fiscal year, including interest on any valid public debt, are entitled to preference over all other appropriations from the general public revenue of the state, without reference to the date of their passage, and irrespective of emergency clauses. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); Henderson v. People ex rel. Wingate, 17 Colo. 587, 31 P. 334 (1892); Institute for Educ. of Mute &

Blind v. Henderson, 18 Colo. 98, 31 P. 714 (1892); Goodykoontz v. People ex rel. Sawyer, 20 Colo. 374, 38 P. 473 (1894); Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

Other appropriations may be made from surplus remaining. Appropriations other than those necessary to defray the expenses of the state government, and to pay the interest on the public debt, and being such as are proper to foster and maintain public institutions and public improvements, may be made by the general assembly to the extent of the surplus over and above the amount required for the necessary appropriations aforesaid; provided, always, that the aggregate of such appropriations, when added to the necessary appropriations aforesaid, do not exceed the limits prescribed by this section. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

Priority of effective dates of appropriations acts governs as to surplus. Priority of date of the taking effect of the acts making such appropriations must govern after preferred appropriations are discharged. Within constitutional limits the general assembly may appropriate the public funds of the state as it chooses, but when it has once reached the limit, further appropriations are of no force and effect, for the reason that there is no revenue available to meet such appropriations. People v. State Bd. of Equalization, 20 Colo. 220, 37 P. 964 (1894); Goodykoontz v. People ex rel. Sawyer, 20 Colo. 374, 38 P. 473 (1894); Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

Since in absence of legislative preference, appropriations for state institutions have no priority. In the absence of a legislative preference, appropriations for the state educational, reformatory or penal institutions have, in case of a deficiency of the revenue, no precedence over other appropriations. Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

Priority of appropriations of same grade bearing same date. It may be competent for the general assembly to provide that, in case of deficiency, the public funds shall be prorated between claimants of the same grade, but certainly, in the absence of such legislation, the courts cannot require this to be done when the priority in time can be ascertained; consequently, in case of several appropriations of the same grade made by separate bills bearing the same date, and there are funds to pay part, but not sufficient for all, priority should be given as of the time of day of the taking effect of the several acts. Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

Preference between appropriations cannot be determined in ex parte proceeding. If appropriations do in fact exceed the estimated revenues for certain years, as all cannot be paid, a question of preference between claimants is involved that cannot be determined in an ex parte proceeding in answer to a legislative or executive question. In re Priority of Legislative Appropriations, 19 Colo. 58, 34 P. 277 (1893).

In case appropriations overrun the constitutional limit, the question of preference between conflicting claimants would almost necessarily involve important private and corporate rights, and therefore, should not be decided in an opinion in answer to submitted interrogatories, even though some considerations publici juris may also be involved, but should be left for adjudication in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. In re Appropriations, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889).

Section 17. Income tax. The general assembly may levy income taxes, either graduated or proportional, or both graduated and proportional, for the support of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, or for public schools, and may, in the administration of an income tax law, provide for special classified or limited taxation or the exemption of tangible and intangible personal property.

Effect of section. This section substitutes an income tax for all ad valorem taxes on intangible personal property; from and after July 1, 1937, owners of intangible personal property were subject to the income tax, which intangibles were exempt from ad valorem taxation. City & County of Denver v. Tax Research Bureau, 101 Colo. 140, 71 P.2d 809 (1937).

General assembly has exclusive power to levy income taxes. Adoption of this section gave the general assembly the exclusive power to levy graduated or proportional income taxes, which prior to that time could not be done without such a mandate in view of the constitutional provisions requiring uniform application of all laws. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

The mere fact that the wording is permissive to the state does not make it any less an exclusive power to levy this special type of tax. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Such power cannot be delegated. Under the precise wording of this section of the state constitution, conferring upon the general assembly the power to levy an income tax, such power may not be delegated to any other body. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

The state constitution vests exclusive nondelegable power in the general assembly to levy income taxes. City & County of Denver v. Duffy Storage & Moving Co., 168 Colo. 91, 450 P.2d 339, appeal dismissed, 396 U.S. 2, 90 S. Ct. 23, 24 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1969).

Reason for limiting such power to state. Possibly the fear of permitting a veritable tax jungle of separate city income taxes which could harass and overburden the taxpayers was what prompted the people to determine that such a mode of taxation is to be used only for the state. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Thus, power of home rule cities to tax incomes is foreclosed. The adoption of this section preempted the field of income taxation for the general assembly and foreclosed the power of home rule cities to tax incomes. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Denver is without power to enact an ordinance imposing an income tax. City & County of Denver v. Duffy Storage & Moving Co., 168 Colo. 91, 450 P.2d 339, appeal dismissed, 396 U.S. 2, 90 S. Ct. 23, 24 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1969); Johnson v. City & County of Denver, 186 Colo. 398, 527 P.2d 883 (1974).

A tax on income is in excess of the powers delegated to Colorado municipalities. Bd. of Trustees v. Foster Lumber Co., 190 Colo. 479, 548 P.2d 1276 (1976).

And injunction is proper to prevent submission of proposal to confer such power on city council. Where a home rule city has no power to levy an income tax, the city council has no authority to call a special election to submit to the electors a proposal to confer such power upon the council, and injunction is the proper remedy to prevent such submission. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

This section modified all provisions of art. XX, Colo. Const., in conflict therewith. This section, having been adopted after art. XX, Colo. Const., the former has modified all other constitutional provisions in conflict therewith. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

This section overrides section 7 of this article, by directing that the general assembly may levy this tax for any political subdivision, which includes home rule cities among others. The fact that the general assembly has not seen fit so to do is immaterial. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

It is a legislative and not a judicial function to provide the means by which local governments may raise greater revenues. Bd. of Trustees v. Foster Lumber Co., 190 Colo. 479, 548 P.2d 1276 (1976).

Income tax must be graduated or proportional or it is illegal. Johnson v. City & County of Denver, 186 Colo. 398, 527 P.2d 883 (1974).

The power to tax income is plain and extends to gross income. Whether and to what extent deductions shall be allowed depends upon legislative grace; and only as there is clear provision therefor can any particular deduction be allowed. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

No distinction between gross income and net income tax. There is no legal or practical significance to a distinction between gross income and net income tax. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

The imposition of taxes on gross and net incomes is not an ad valorem tax. California Co. v. State, 141 Colo. 288, 348 P.2d 382 (1959), appeal dismissed, 364 U.S. 285, 81 S. Ct. 42, 5 L. Ed. 2d 37, reh'g denied, 364 U.S. 897, 81 S. Ct. 219, 5 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1960).

A true business or occupational tax is not an income tax nor a tax on real property. The fact that the business necessarily involves and concerns realty does not change the nature of the tax. City of Englewood v. Wright, 147 Colo. 537, 364 P.2d 569 (1961).

City tax limited to employee engaged in occupation is not income tax. A tax, limited to an employee engaged in an occupation, i.e., one who is performing such service for an employer, as defined, within Denver for any period of time in the calendar month upon compensation, is not a flat income tax. City & County of Denver v. Duffy Storage & Moving Co., 168

Colo. 91, 450 P.2d 339, appeal dismissed, 396 U.S. 2, 90 S. Ct. 23, 24 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1969).

Imposition of user fee by airport authority upon rental car company which is based upon portion of gross revenues of company attributable to passengers picked up at airport does not constitute an illegal income tax. Westrac, Inc. v. Walker Field, 812 P.2d 714 (Colo. App. 1991).

Sales and use tax ordinance imposed on companies engaged in business of servicing coin-operated machines functioned as a constitutionally permissible sales tax and not as an income tax where the incidence of the tax fell on the customers of a retail business, notwithstanding companies' claim that tax burden unavoidably fell on them rather than purchasers, and where the companies qualified as retailers or vendors under the ordinance even though the users of the machines were customers of the location owners and not of the companies. Apollo Stereo Music v. City of Aurora, 871 P.2d 1206 (Colo. 1994).

Distinction between fee and tax based upon nature and function of the charge rather than by its label. Fees charged for use of public facility owned by municipal corporation are not taxes if purpose is to defray expenses for operating and improving facility and if fees are only imposed on users of facility. Taxes are not based on amount of use and the proceeds thereof are used to defray general municipal expenses. Westrac, Inc. v. Walker Field, 812 P.2d 714 (Colo. App. 1991).

Applied in Rountree v. City & County of Denver, 197 Colo. 497, 596 P.2d 739 (1979).

Section 18. License fees and excise taxes - use of. On and after July 1, 1935, the proceeds from the imposition of any license, registration fee, or other charge with respect to the operation of any motor vehicle upon any public highway in this state and the proceeds from the imposition of any excise tax on gasoline or other liquid motor fuel except aviation fuel used for aviation purposes shall, except costs of administration, be used exclusively for the construction, maintenance, and supervision of the public highways of this state. Any taxes imposed upon aviation fuel shall be used exclusively for aviation purposes.

ANNOTATION

The roads of the state are, in effect, made the producers of a special fund, for the gasoline tax is a tax on motor fuel used in propelling vehicles along the highways. It amounts to an indirect tax for the use of the highway by motor vehicles. See Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

This special fund is not available for general purposes. See Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

This section removes excise taxes on motor fuel from availability for general state purposes. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

No appropriation for road purposes necessary. Since this section sets aside and fixes the amount--the whole of the revenues from the taxes mentioned--as applicable to road purposes, no appropriation by the general assembly is necessary. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

General assembly's power over funds realized is limited to authorizing their expenditure, and determining the policy of road construction, maintenance and supervision, within the constitutional limitations as to the use of such funds. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

Privilege and access fees based upon access to an airport and charged to a car rental company do not violate this section. Thrifty Rent-A-Car v. Denver, 833 P.2d 852 (Colo. App. 1992).

Applied in Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 498 (1950).

Section 19. State income tax laws by reference to United States tax laws. The general assembly may by law define the income upon which income taxes may be levied under section 17 of this article by reference to provisions of the laws of the United States in effect from time to time, whether retrospective or prospective in their operation, and shall in any such law provide the dollar amount of personal exemptions to be allowed to the taxpayer as a deduction. The general assembly may in any such law provide for other exceptions or modifications to any of such provisions of the laws of the United States and for retrospective exceptions or modifications to those provisions which are retrospective.

Section 20. The Taxpayer's Bill of Rights.(1) General provisions. This section takes effect December 31, 1992 or as stated. Its preferred interpretation shall reasonably restrain most the growth of government. All provisions are self-executing and severable and supersede conflicting state constitutional, state statutory, charter, or other state or local provisions. Other limits on district revenue, spending, and debt may be weakened only by future voter approval. Individual or class action enforcement suits may be filed and shall have the highest civil priority of resolution. Successful plaintiffs are allowed costs and reasonable attorney fees, but a district is not unless a suit against it be ruled frivolous. Revenue collected, kept, or spent illegally since four full fiscal years before a suit is filed shall be refunded with 10% annual simple interest from the initial conduct. Subject to judicial review, districts may use any reasonable method for refunds under this section, including temporary tax credits or rate reductions. Refunds need not be proportional when prior payments are impractical to identify or return. When annual district revenue is less than annual payments on general obligation bonds, pensions, and final court judgments, (4) (a) and (7) shall be suspended to provide for the deficiency.

(2) Term definitions. Within this section:

(a) "Ballot issue" means a non-recall petition or referred measure in an election.

(b) "District" means the state or any local government, excluding enterprises.

(c) "Emergency" excludes economic conditions, revenue shortfalls, or district salary or fringe benefit increases.

(d) "Enterprise" means a government-owned business authorized to issue its own revenue bonds and receiving under 10% of annual revenue in grants from all Colorado state and local governments combined.

(e) "Fiscal year spending" means all district expenditures and reserve increases except, as to both, those for refunds made in the current or next fiscal year or those from gifts, federal funds, collections for another government, pension contributions by employees and pension fund earnings, reserve transfers or expenditures, damage awards, or property sales.

(f) "Inflation" means the percentage change in the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index for Denver-Boulder, all items, all urban consumers, or its successor index.

(g) "Local growth" for a non-school district means a net percentage change in actual value of all real property in a district from construction of taxable real property improvements, minus destruction of similar improvements, and additions to, minus deletions from, taxable real property. For a school district, it means the percentage change in its student enrollment.

(3) Election provisions. (a) Ballot issues shall be decided in a state general election, biennial local district election, or on the first Tuesday in November of odd-numbered years. Except for petitions, bonded debt, or charter or constitutional provisions, districts may consolidate ballot issues and voters may approve a delay of up to four years in voting on ballot issues. District actions taken during such a delay shall not extend beyond that period.

(b) At least 30 days before a ballot issue election, districts shall mail at the least cost, and as a package where districts with ballot issues overlap, a titled notice or set of notices addressed to "All Registered Voters" at each address of one or more active registered electors. The districts may coordinate the mailing required by this paragraph (b) with the distribution of the ballot information booklet required by section 1 (7.5) of article V of this constitution in order to save mailing costs. Titles shall have this order of preference: "NOTICE OF ELECTION TO INCREASE TAXES/TO INCREASE DEBT/ON A CITIZEN PETITION/ON A REFERRED MEASURE." Except for district voter-approved additions, notices shall include only:

(i) The election date, hours, ballot title, text, and local election office address and telephone number.

(ii) For proposed district tax or bonded debt increases, the estimated or actual total of district fiscal year spending for the current year and each of the past four years, and the overall percentage and dollar change.

(iii) For the first full fiscal year of each proposed district tax increase, district estimates of the maximum dollar amount of each increase and of district fiscal year spending without the increase.

(iv) For proposed district bonded debt, its principal amount and maximum annual and total district repayment cost, and the principal balance of total current district bonded debt and its maximum annual and remaining total district repayment cost.

(v) Two summaries, up to 500 words each, one for and one against the proposal, of written comments filed with the election officer by 45 days before the election. No summary shall mention names of persons or private groups, nor any endorsements of or resolutions against the proposal. Petition representatives following these rules shall write this summary for their petition. The election officer shall maintain and accurately summarize all other relevant written comments. The provisions of this subparagraph (v) do not apply to a statewide ballot issue, which is subject to the provisions of section 1 (7.5) of article V of this constitution.

(c) Except by later voter approval, if a tax increase or fiscal year spending exceeds any estimate in (b) (iii) for the same fiscal year, the tax increase is thereafter reduced up to 100% in proportion to the combined dollar excess, and the combined excess revenue refunded in the next fiscal year. District bonded debt shall not issue on terms that could exceed its share of its maximum repayment costs in (b) (iv). Ballot titles for tax or bonded debt increases shall begin, "SHALL (DISTRICT) TAXES BE INCREASED (first, or if phased in, final, full fiscal year dollar increase) ANNUALLY...?" or "SHALL (DISTRICT) DEBT BE INCREASED (principal amount), WITH A REPAYMENT COST OF (maximum total district cost), ...?"

(4) Required elections. Starting November 4, 1992, districts must have voter approval in advance for:

(a) Unless (1) or (6) applies, any new tax, tax rate increase, mill levy above that for the prior year, valuation for assessment ratio increase for a property class, or extension of an expiring tax, or a tax policy change directly causing a net tax revenue gain to any district.

(b) Except for refinancing district bonded debt at a lower interest rate or adding new employees to existing district pension plans, creation of any multiple-fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation whatsoever without adequate present cash reserves pledged irrevocably and held for payments in all future fiscal years.

(5) Emergency reserves. To use for declared emergencies only, each district shall reserve for 1993 1% or more, for 1994 2% or more, and for all later years 3% or more of its fiscal year spending excluding bonded debt service. Unused reserves apply to the next year's reserve.

(6) Emergency taxes. This subsection grants no new taxing power. Emergency property taxes are prohibited. Emergency tax revenue is excluded for purposes of (3) (c) and (7), even if later ratified by voters. Emergency taxes shall also meet all of the following conditions:

(a) A 2/3 majority of the members of each house of the general assembly or of a local district board declares the emergency and imposes the tax by separate recorded roll call votes.

(b) Emergency tax revenue shall be spent only after emergency reserves are depleted, and shall be refunded within 180 days after the emergency ends if not spent on the emergency.

(c) A tax not approved on the next election date 60 days or more after the declaration shall end with that election month.

(7) Spending limits. (a) The maximum annual percentage change in state fiscal year spending equals inflation plus the percentage change in state population in the prior calendar year, adjusted for revenue changes approved by voters after 1991. Population shall be determined by annual federal census estimates and such number shall be adjusted every decade to match the federal census.

(b) The maximum annual percentage change in each local district's fiscal year spending equals inflation in the prior calendar year plus annual local growth, adjusted for revenue changes approved by voters after 1991 and (8) (b) and (9) reductions.

(c) The maximum annual percentage change in each district's property tax revenue equals inflation in the prior calendar year plus annual local growth, adjusted for property tax revenue changes approved by voters after 1991 and (8) (b) and (9) reductions.

(d) If revenue from sources not excluded from fiscal year spending exceeds these limits in dollars for that fiscal year, the excess shall be refunded in the next fiscal year unless voters approve a revenue change as an offset. Initial district bases are current fiscal year spending and 1991 property tax collected in 1992. Qualification or disqualification as an enterprise shall change district bases and future year limits. Future creation of district bonded debt shall increase, and retiring or refinancing district bonded debt shall lower, fiscal year spending and property tax revenue by the annual debt service so funded. Debt service changes, reductions, (1) and (3) (c) refunds, and voter-approved revenue changes are dollar amounts that are exceptions to, and not part of, any district base. Voter-approved revenue changes do not require a tax rate change.

(8) Revenue limits. (a) New or increased transfer tax rates on real property are prohibited. No new state real property tax or local district income tax shall be imposed. Neither an income tax rate increase nor a new state definition of taxable income shall apply before the next tax year. Any income tax law change after July 1, 1992 shall also require all taxable net income to be taxed at one rate, excluding refund tax credits or voter-approved tax credits, with no added tax or surcharge.

(b) Each district may enact cumulative uniform exemptions and credits to reduce or end business personal property taxes.

(c) Regardless of reassessment frequency, valuation notices shall be mailed annually and may be appealed annually, with no presumption in favor of any pending valuation. Past or future sales by a lender or government shall also be considered as comparable market sales and their sales prices kept as public records. Actual value shall be stated on all property tax bills and valuation notices and, for residential real property, determined solely by the market approach to appraisal.

(9) State mandates. Except for public education through grade 12 or as required of a local district by federal law, a local district may reduce or end its subsidy to any program delegated to it by the general assembly for administration. For current programs, the state may require 90 days notice and that the adjustment occur in a maximum of three equal annual installments.

For comment, "Dismantling the Trojan Horse: Mesa County Board of County Commissioners v. State", see 82 U. Colo. L. Rev. 259 (2011).

Interpretation of a constitutional provision is a question of law and an appellate court is not required to accord deference to a trial court's ruling in that regard. Cerveny v.

City of Wheat Ridge, 888 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

In interpreting a constitutional amendment that was adopted by popular vote, courts must determine what the people believed the language of the amendment meant when they voted it into law. To do so, courts must give the language the natural and popular meaning usually understood by the voters. Cerveny v. City of Wheat Ridge, 888 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996); Havens v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 924 P.2d 517 (Colo. 1996).

In interpreting a constitutional provision, the court should ascertain and give effect to the intent of those who adopted it. In the case of this section, it is the court's responsibility to ensure that it gives effect to what the voters believed the amendment to mean when they accepted it as their fundamental law, considering the natural and popular meaning of the words used. City of Wheat Ridge v. Cerveny, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

A court will not assume that all legislative drafting principles apply when interpreting an initiated constitutional amendment but will apply generally accepted principles such as according words their plain or common meaning in order to enact the intent of the voter in the same manner as it would otherwise seek to enact the intent of the legislature. Bruce v. City of Colo. Springs, 129 P.3d 988 (Colo. 2006).

The language in subsection (1) stating that the preferred interpretation of this section "shall reasonably restrain most the growth of government" is an interpretative guideline that a reviewing court may employ when it finds two separately plausible interpretations of the text of this section. It is not a refutation of the beyond a reasonable doubt standard. As the presumption of constitutionality applies to a statute challenged under this section, the beyond a reasonable doubt showing is necessary to overcome that presumption. Mesa County Bd. of County Comm'rs v. State, 203 P.3d 519 (Colo. 2009).

Where multiple interpretations of a provision of this section are equally supported by the text of that section, a court should choose that interpretation which it concludes would create the greatest restraint on the growth of government; however, the proponent of an interpretation has the burden of establishing that its proposed construction of this section would reasonably restrain the growth of government more than any other competing interpretation. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995); Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995); HCA-Healthone, LLC v. City of Lone Tree, 197 P.3d 236 (Colo. App. 2008).

A court should require a significant financial burden on the state only if the text of this section leaves no other choice. Courts have consistently rejected readings that would hinder basic government functions or cripple the government's ability to provide services. Barber v. Ritter, 196 P.3d 238 (Colo. 2008).

Amendment's objective is to prevent governmental entities from enacting taxing and spending increases above its limits without voter approval. Campbell v. Orchard Mesa Irr. Dist., 972 P.2d 1037 (Colo. 1998).

This section requires voter approval for certain state and local government tax increases and restricts property, income, and other taxes. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

And acts to limit the discretion of government officials to take certain actions pertaining to taxing, revenue, and spending in the absence of voter approval. Prop. Tax Adjustment Specialists, Inc. v. Mesa County Bd. of Comm'rs, 956 P.2d 1277 (Colo. App. 1998).

This section operates to impose a limitation on the power of the people's elected representatives, and while this section circumscribes the revenue, spending, and debt powers of state and local governments, creating a series of procedural requirements, it does not create any fundamental rights. Havens v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 924 P.2d 517 (Colo. 1996).

Districts may seek present authorization for future tax rate increases where such rate increases may be necessary to repay a specific, voter-approved debt. Any rate change ultimately implemented by a district pursuant to the "without limitation as to rate" clause in the ballot title must be consistent with the district's state estimate of the final fiscal year dollar amount of the increase. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

This section and article XXVII of the Colorado Constitution are not in irreconcilable, material, and direct conflict, since this section does not authorize what article XXVII forbids or forbid what article XXVII authorizes. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

Since the inclusion of all net lottery proceeds in the calculation of state fiscal year spending creates an implicit conflict between this section and article XXVII, legislation exempting net lottery proceeds dedicated by article XXVII to great outdoors Colorado purposes from this section and subjecting such proceeds dedicated to the capital construction fund and the excess that spill over into the general fund to this section represented a reasonable resolution of that implicit conflict. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

This section and § 9 of article XVIII of the Colorado Constitution are not in direct conflict. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

This section and § 3 of this article reconciled. In order to reconcile the requirement of subsection (8)(c) of this section that residential property be valued "solely by the market approach to appraisal" with the equalization requirement of article X, § 3, the actual value of residential property must be determined using means and methods applied impartially to all the members of each class. Podoll v. Arapahoe County Bd. of Equaliz., 920 P.2d 861 (Colo. App. 1995), rev'd on other grounds, 935 P.2d 14 (Colo. 1997).

This section does not conflict with § 1-11-203.5, which governs ballot title contests. Since the limited period for filing ballot title contests specified in § 1-11-203.5 also is not "manifestly so limited as to amount to a denial of justice", § 1-11-203.5 is constitutional. Cacioppo v. Eagle County Sch. Dist. RE-50J, 92 P.3d 453 (Colo. 2004).

Amendment relates back. Although under art. V, § 1(4), this section took effect January 14, 1993, once effective, its terms could and did relate back to conduct occurring the day after the 1992 election. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

Dispute under election provisions reviewed under a "substantial compliance" standard. City of Aurora v. Acosta, 892 P.2d 264 (Colo. 1995).

Substantial compliance found. District in mail ballot election found to have substantially complied with section when purposes of the ballot disclosure provisions are not undermined and all required information was in the election notices if not the ballot title. City of Aurora v. Acosta, 892 P.2d 264 (Colo. 1995).

Voter approval of dollar amounts not required. This section does not require voter approval of a dollar amount when the revenue change is not a district tax increase. City of Aurora v. Acosta, 892 P.2d 264 (Colo. 1995).

The Taxpayer's Bill of Rights does not grant governmental entities the right to file enforcement suits or class action suits. Boulder County Bd. of Comm'rs v. City of Broomfield, 7 P.3d 1033 (Colo. App. 1999).

Plaintiff had standing, as expressly provided under this section, to bring action as an individual taxpayer to determine whether E-470 authority was subject to this section's regulation. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

Petitioners have taxpayer standing to challenge the constitutionality of transfers of money from special funds to the general fund and the concomitant expenditure of that money to defray general governmental expenses. Barber v. Ritter, 196 P.3d 238 (Colo. 2008).

The four-year time limitation for individual or class action suits under this section applies to enforcement of the specific requirements of this constitutional provision, but does not affect the statute of limitations set forth in the statutory provisions regarding taxes that were levied erroneously or illegally. Prop. Tax Adjustment Specialists, Inc. v. Mesa County Bd. of Comm'rs, 956 P.2d 1277 (Colo. App. 1998).

Provisions for collecting and spending revenues entered into by the E-470 public highway authority were not subject to the election provisions of this section where bond contracts entered into prior to passage of this section required that the revenues would be received and spent by the highway authority for the purpose of operating the highway and repaying the indebtedness. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

The phrase "multiple-fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation whatsoever" in § 20 of article X is necessarily broader than the phrase "debt by loan in any form" as defined by this section. Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999) (overruling Boulder v. Dougherty, Dawkins, 890 P.2d 199 (Colo. App. 1994)).

However, the scope of the phrase is not without bounds. The voters could not have intended an absurd result such as requiring voter approval for a multiple year lease-purchase agreement for equipment such as copy machines or computers. Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999).

County's equipment lease-purchase agreement did not create any multiple-fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation under this section where the county was free to terminate the agreement without penalty by failing to appropriate funds to pay the rent in any lease year. Boulder v. Dougherty, Dawkins, 890 P.2d 199 (Colo. App. 1994).

This section does not supersede prior case authority permitting lease purchase agreements. This section is analyzed in light of the existing well-established constitutional law in existence at the time of this section's adoption. Boulder v. Dougherty, Dawkins, 890 P.2d 199 (Colo. App. 1994).

Tax status. Whether the interest income derived from a county's equipment lease agreement or any similar transaction is tax free has no impact on the court's interpretation of the Colorado Constitution. Boulder v. Dougherty, Dawkins, 890 P.2d 199 (Colo. App. 1994).

This section creates a series of procedural requirements and nothing more. This section circumscribes the revenue, spending, and debt powers of state and local governments, it does not create any fundamental rights. With respect to the attorney fee provision of subsection (1), a holding that a victorious plaintiff must recover attorney fees as of right is antithetical to the overarching goal of the section to limit government spending. City of Wheat Ridge v. Cerveny, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

This section does not provide an exemption from any obligation under the Colorado Open Records Act. Whether an institution is an "enterprise" does not have a bearing on whether it is free from the requirements of the Act. Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Tollefson, 961 P.2d 1150 (Colo. App. 1998).

Charges imposed on cable subscribers and for city street light service are fees, not taxes, and, therefore, are not subject to the ballot title and information and voter approval requirements of this section. Bruce v. City of Colorado Springs, 131 P.3d 1187 (Colo. App. 2005).

Passage of this section directly modified the powers of home rule cities, and a home rule city's ordinance is invalid to the extent that it conflicts with this section's requirements. HCA-Healthone, LLC v. City of Lone Tree, 197 P.3d 236 Colo. App. 2008).

II. DEFINITIONS.

E-470 authority is a district subject to the voter approval provisions of this section since the power to unilaterally impose taxes, with no direct relation to services provided, is inconsistent with the characteristics of a business as the term is commonly used, nor is it consistent with the definition of "enterprise" read as a whole. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

The attorney fee provisions of this section authorize an award of fees but do not require such an award. The fee-shifting phrase "successful plaintiffs are allowed costs and reasonable attorney fees" set forth in subsection (1) is plain and unambiguous. It allows a court to make an award of attorney fees but does not require the court to do so. City of Wheat Ridge v. Cerveny, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

In assessing whether to award attorney fees under this section, the court must consider a number of factors and reach its conclusion based on the totality of the circumstances. Most importantly, the court must evaluate the significance of the litigation, and its outcome, in furthering the goals of this section. This evaluation must also include the nature of the claims raised, the significance of the issues on which the plaintiff prevailed in comparison to the litigation as a whole, the quantum of financial risk undertaken by the plaintiff, and the factors the court would weigh in determining what "reasonable" attorney fees would be. The court may also consider the nature of the fee agreement between the plaintiff and plaintiff's attorney. Where the plaintiff has had only partial success, the court must exclude the time and effort expended on losing issues if it chooses to award attorney fees. City of Wheat Ridge v. Cerveny, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

The appropriateness of awarding attorney fees is diminished where the named plaintiff bears no risk and the benefit of an award of attorney fees will accrue to others. In addition, deficiencies in the attorney fee agreement, including deviation from rule requirements or professional standards, may adversely impact the quality of the representation or cause the court to find that the attorney's conduct does not merit an award regardless of a successful outcome. City of Wheat Ridge v. Cerveny, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

The fact that the plaintiffs are not the real parties in interest does not necessarily preclude an award of attorney fees under this section. The fact that the real parties in interest were not parties to the litigation does not disqualify nominal plaintiffs from being considered successful plaintiffs who are eligible for attorney fees under this section. City of Wheat Ridge v. Cerveny, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

The amendment's provision for attorney fees and costs in favor of successful plaintiffs does not contravene the constitutional requirement for equal protection by denying similar treatment to successful governmental defendants. The scheme set out in the amendment bears a rational relationship to a permissible governmental purpose; the facilitation of taxpayer suits to enforce compliance with the purpose of restraining governmental growth. Cerveny v. City of Wheat Ridge, 888 P.2d 339 (Colo. App. 1994), rev'd on other grounds, 913 P.2d 1110 (Colo. 1996).

The sale of lottery tickets does not constitute a "property sale" under this section. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

This section does not use the terms "gift" and "grant" synonymously. "Gifts" are exempt from fiscal year spending; however, if an entity receives more than ten percent of its revenues in "grants," the entity is disqualified as an enterprise. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

Net lottery proceeds are not to be excluded from state fiscal year spending as "gifts". Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

It is erroneous to exclude net lottery proceeds from the purview of this section on the basis of a characterization of the great outdoors Colorado trust fund board created under article XXVII of the Colorado Constitution as a "district" or "non-district". Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

By its terms, this section also limits the growth of state revenues, usually met by tax increases, by restricting the increase of fiscal year spending to the rate of inflation plus population increase, unless voter approval for an increase in spending is obtained. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

If the revenues of the state or a local government increase beyond the allowed limits on fiscal year spending, any excess above the allowed limit or voter-approved increase must be refunded to the taxpayers. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

Board of county commissioners was acting pursuant to express grants of constitutional and statutory authority in creating the Eagle county air terminal corporation as an enterprise and empowering it to act on county's behalf in constructing and operating a new commercial passenger terminal. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Fixed Base Operators, 939 P.2d 464 (Colo. App. 1997).

Trial court properly determined that the Eagle county air terminal corporation was an enterprise rather than a district.

Corporation was a government-owned and controlled non-profit corporation authorized to issue its own revenue bonds and it received no revenue in the form of grants from state and local governments. Bd. of Comm'rs v. Fixed Base Operators, 939 P.2d 464 (Colo. App. 1997).

An irrigation district is not a local government within the meaning of the amendment's taxing and spending election requirements. The private character of a 1921 Act irrigation district differs in essential respects from that of a public governmental entity exercising taxing authority contemplated by the amendment. An irrigation district exists to serve the interests of landowners not the general public. Rather than being a local government agency, a 1921 Act irrigation district is a public corporation endowed by the state with the powers necessary to perform its predominately private objective. Campbell v. Orchard Mesa Irr. Dist., 972 P.2d 1037 (Colo. 1998).

Trial court properly concluded that urban renewal authority is not subject to the requirements of this section. Urban renewal authority at issue has no authority to levy taxes or assessments of any kind and there is no provision for authority to conduct elections of any kind. Based upon these factors, urban renewal authority is not a "local government" and, therefore, not a "district" within the meaning of this section. Olson v. City of Golden, 53 P.3d 747 (Colo. App. 2002).

III. REQUIREMENT OF ADVANCE VOTER APPROVAL.

Definition of "ballot issue," for purposes of subsection (3)(a) regarding scheduling of elections, is limited to fiscal matters. Zaner v. City of Brighton, 899 P.2d 263 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd, 917 P.2d 280 (Colo. 1996).

Language in subsection (3)(a) that allows voters to "approve a delay of up to four years in voting on ballot issues" does not mean that voters' waiver of revenue and spending limits must be limited in duration to four years. Havens v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 58 P.3d 1165 (Colo. App. 2002).

A substantial compliance standard is the proper measure when reviewing claims brought to enforce the election provisions of this section. In determining whether a district has substantially complied with a particular provision of this section, courts should consider factors, including: (1) The extent of the district's noncompliance; (2) the purpose of the provision violated and whether the purpose is substantially achieved despite the district's noncompliance; and (3) whether it can reasonably be inferred that the district made a good faith effort to comply or whether the district's noncompliance is more properly viewed as the product of an intent to mislead the electorate. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995); Bruce v. City of Colo. Springs, 129 P.3d 988 (Colo. 2006).

A plaintiff suing under this section's enforcement clause need not set forth in the complaint facts showing that the claimed violations affected the election results. A requirement that a plaintiff allege facts that the election results would have been different had the claimed violations not occurred would make enforcement of the provisions of this section effectively impossible in most elections. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

The incurrence of a debt and the adoption of taxes as the means with which to repay that debt are properly viewed as a single subject when presented together in one ballot issue. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

Ballot title is not a ballot title for tax or bonded debt increases and the city is not required to begin the measure with the language "Shall city taxes be increased by up to 8 million dollars?". The primary purpose and effect of the measure is to grant a franchise to a public utility to furnish gas and electricity to the city and its residents, although the ballot title also seeks authorization for a contingent tax increase of up to $8,000,000 to be implemented only in the highly unlikely event that the city were unable to collect from the public utility. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

A ballot issue to extend an existing tax is not a tax increase for purposes of subsection (3)(c), and the title of such a ballot issue, therefore, need not include the mandatory language for ballot issues to increase taxes specified in subsection (3)(c). Bruce v. City of Colo. Springs, 129 P.3d 988 (Colo. 2006).

Ballot title violates subsection (3)(c) by failing to include an estimate of the full fiscal year dollar increase in ad valorem property taxes. All that is required is a good faith estimate of the dollar increase. To create an exemption from the requirements of subsection (3)(c) any time a district has difficulties estimating its proposed tax increases would undermine the primary purpose of the disclosure provisions of this section. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

A claim that a ballot issue proposed a "phased-in" tax increase and that a ballot title that disclosed only the first rather than the final full fiscal year dollar increase was, therefore, improper under subsection (3)(c) involved only the form and content of the ballot title, could be resolved by the type of summary adjudication contemplated by the applicable ballot title contest statute, and was subject to and time-barred by the statutory five-day filing limit set forth in § 1-11-203.5 (2). Cacioppo v. Eagle County Sch. Dist. RE-50J, 92 P.3d 453 (Colo. 2004).

The purpose of the disclosure requirements regarding the dollar estimate of a tax increase is to permit the voters to make informed choices at the ballot. That purpose was not substantially achieved in the case of the proposed ad valorem property tax increase because the ballot title failed to give any indication of the potential magnitude of the tax increase. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

The only portion of the ballot measure that should be invalidated for failure to provide estimate of the tax increase is the authorization for the city to increase ad valorem property taxes "in an amount sufficient to pay the principal and interest on" the open space bonds. The first portion of the measure, which authorizes the city to issue bonds, does not violate this section and need not be stricken from the measure. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

Requirement in subsection (3)(b)(V) that election official summarize relevant written comments does not lend itself to imposing a requirement upon election officials to examine the motives or good faith of voters submitting the comments. Such an examination, moreover, would present significant freedom of speech concerns with respect to the voter's right to submit comments and could deprive the electorate of comments to make an intelligent decision on a proposal. The plaintiff, accordingly, was not entitled to a declaratory judgment. Gresh v. Balink, 148 P.3d 419 (Colo. App. 2006).

The calculation method employed to calculate fiscal year spending is not prohibited by the plain language of this section. It is entirely unclear whether the city's cash reserves are properly viewed as a reserve increase, a reserve transfer, or a reserve expenditure for purposes of subsection (2)(e). Plaintiffs' claim that the city's calculation of its fiscal year spending data may have misled the voters is without foundation because the city clearly disclosed in its election notice that fiscal year spending included the accrual of the cash reserves. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

Failure of election notice to include the overall percentage change in fiscal year spending over a five-year period is not significant. All of the information relevant to calculating the overall percentage change was provided by the city in its chart. On the whole, the election notice substantially complies with the disclosure requirements set forth in subsection (3)(b). Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

Where there is a discrepancy between the total debt repayment cost stated in the election notice and the amount stated in the ballot title, the district should be bound by the lower figure. The electorate did not receive any advance warning of the higher debt repayment cost stated in the ballot title. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

The absence of the district's submission resolution from the election notice did not make the election notice insufficient or misleading in any way. This section does not require districts to include in their election notices the ministerial acts, orders, or directions of the governing body authorizing submission of a particular initiative to the electorate where to do so would be duplicative and potentially confusing and would not add any substantive information to the election notice that was not already disclosed in the ballot title. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

Transportation revenue anticipation notes issued in accordance with § 43-4-705, constitute a "multiple fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation whatsoever" that requires voter approval. It is evident that the state is receiving money in the form of a loan from investors. Because the notes are negotiable instruments, it can be implied that the notes contain an unconditional promise of payment. It is apparent that the payment obligations are likely to extend into multiple years because the state must make a pledge of its credit for the notes to be marketable. Given the amount of notes issued in comparison to the annual budget of the department of transportation, it is reasonable for the voters to have expected that the notes would be submitted to them for their consideration. Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999).

Economic incentive development agreements do not create a "multiple-fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation" requiring voter approval. The language of the agreement leaves the decision to make reimbursement payments to the discretion of the city council. Moreover, the agreements are not contingent on borrowing of funds, the extension of the city's credit, or any payments for which funds are unavailable. City of Golden v. Parker, 138 P.3d 285 (Colo. 2006).

Lease-purchase agreements authorized by House Bill 03-1256 did not constitute a "multiple fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation whatsoever" that requires voter approval. The lease-purchase agreements authorized do not pledge the credit of the state or require the borrowing of funds, and lease payment obligations of the state are subject to discretionary annual appropriations. Colo. Crim. Justice Reform Coalition v. Ortiz, 121 P.3d 288 (Colo. App. 2005).

Transfers from cash funds to the general fund do not constitute a tax policy change directly causing a net tax revenue gain. The transfers involve fees and not taxes, and consequently, they cannot involve a net revenue gain. Moreover, transfers are a redistribution of revenue rather than an increase in overall revenue. Barber v. Ritter, 196 P.3d 238 (Colo. 2008).

Nor do they constitute a new tax or a tax rate increase. Barber v. Ritter, 196 P.3d 238 (Colo. 2008).

A charge is a fee and not a tax when the express language of its enabling legislation explicitly contemplates that its primary purpose is to defray the cost of services provided to those charged. When determining whether a charge is a fee or a tax, courts must look to the primary or principal purpose for which the money was raised, not the manner it which it was ultimately spent. Barber v. Ritter, 196 P.3d 238 (Colo. 2008).

Leases containing nonappropriation clauses do not create multiple-fiscal year obligations requiring voter approval in advance, and a lease that includes an initial 20-month period before its nonappropriation clause takes effect also does not require voter approval in advance because the district had adequate present cash reserves pledged for the first 20 months of lease payments. Bruce v. Pikes Peak Library Dist., 155 P.3d 630 (Colo. App. 2007).

Subsection (4)(a) does not require a school district to obtain voter approval for every tax or mill levy, but only for those taxes that are either new or represent increases from the previous year. To the extent that the school district's 1992 mill levy was the same as the previous year, subsection (4)(a) did not apply. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

Subsection (4)(a) does not require a second election at either the local or state level for legislation directing how revenue received as a result of a waiver election should be used. Such legislation is not a policy change, but an implementation of the waiver election. Mesa County Bd. of County Comm'rs v. State, 203 P.3d 519 (Colo. 2009).

A pre-TABOR election can serve as "voter approval in advance" for a post-TABOR mill levy increase. Bruce v. Pikes Peak Library Dist., 155 P.3d 630 (Colo. App. 2007).

Advance voter approval requirement held satisfied by 1984 approval of issuance of general obligation bonds. The incurment of debt and the repayment of that debt are issues that are so intertwined that they may properly be submitted to the voters as a single subject. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

Voters may give present approval for future increases in taxes under this section when the increase might be necessary to repay a specific, voter-approved debt. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

The voter-approval requirement in subsection (4)(a) applies only to applicable tax changes enacted after this section. The requirement leaves previously enacted legislative measures in place unless superseded by this section, even if the implementation of the measure occurs after the effective date of this section. Huber v. Colo. Mining Ass'n, 264 P.3d 884 (Colo. 2011).

Prior voter approval is not required for the tax rate increase on the severance of coal. The increase results from the department applying an adjustment factor to the coal tax that was enacted prior to the constitutional requirement for prior voter approval. Accordingly, the rate change is a nondiscretionary, ministerial function of the department and not a tax increase. Huber v. Colo. Mining Ass'n, 264 P.3d 884 (Colo. 2011).

Abatements and refunds levy, designed to recoup tax revenue lost because of an error in assessment, is not subject to subsection (4)(a). But for the error, such revenue would have been collected, and the total dollar amount of taxes imposed does not increase although the mill levy rate may change. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

District levy for purposes of meeting federal requirements predated this section, hence was exempt, in view of statutory budgeting process that gives no discretion to board of county commissioners to alter budget fixed earlier in the year. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

While authority's bonds constituted a financial obligation under this section, the remarketing of the bonds nevertheless was not subject to subsection (4)(b), since the bond remarketing scheme does not create any new obligation, it merely remarketed debt that was authorized before the enactment of this section under the terms of a financing plan adopted at the time the debt was issued. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

Intergovernmental loan repayment was a new multi-year fiscal obligation to which subsection (4)(b) applied and authority must obtain voter approval before incurring this debt. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

A broadly worded, voter-approved waiver of revenue limits, authorizing school districts to collect and retain all revenues notwithstanding the limitations of this section does just that, with no restrictions or language requirements. There are no specific language requirements for this type of waiver election. Mesa County Bd. of County Comm'rs v. State, 203 P.3d 519 (Colo. 2009).

Expansion of local use tax base to include all tangible personal property rather than only construction or building materials constituted a new tax and required voter approval in advance under subsection (4)(a). HCA-Healthone, LLC v. City of Lone Tree, 197 P.3d 236 Colo. App. 2008).

The delayed voting provision of subsection (3)(a) does not authorize retroactive voter approval of new taxes or other revenue generating measures requiring voter approval in advance under subsection (4)(a). In adopting this section, the voters intended that approval of a tax must occur before it is imposed, not afterward, and an interpretation of this section that prohibits retroactive approval reasonably restrains government more than a contrary interpretation. HCA-Healthone, LLC v. City of Lone Tree, 197 P.3d 236 Colo. App. 2008).

IV. SPENDING AND REVENUE

LIMITS.

Strict compliance with the revenue and spending limitations of this section is required. While a substantial compliance standard of review applies to the election provisions of this section in order to ensure that the voting franchise is not unduly restricted and prevent a court from lightly setting aside election results, this section contains no "de minimis" or "substantial compliance" exception to its revenue and spending provisions. Bruce v. Pikes Peak Library Dist., 155 P.3d 630 (Colo. App. 2007).

The school finance act incorporated by reference the property tax revenue limit and each district's corresponding ability to waive that limit pursuant to subsection (7)(c). The property tax revenue "limit" imposed by the school finance act is a reference to the subsection (7)(c) limit and not an "other limit" as contemplated by subsection (1). Mesa County Bd. of County Comm'rs v. State, 203 P.3d 519 (Colo. 2009).

The electorate of a governmental entity may authorize retention and expenditure of the excess collection without forcing a corresponding revenue reduction. Havens v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 924 P.2d 517 (Colo. 1996).

Although the great outdoors Colorado trust fund board is not a local government, private entity, agency of the state, or enterprise under this section, it is essentially governmental in nature and the best reading of this section is to exclude from state fiscal year spending limits only those entities that are non-governmental since this interpretation is the interpretation that reasonably restrains most the growth of government. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

Section 9 of article XVIII of the Colorado Constitution prohibits the general assembly from enacting limitations on revenues collected by the Colorado limited gaming commission in order to comply with this section, and insofar as revenues generated by limited gaming might tend in a given year to violate the spending limits imposed by this section, the general assembly may comply with this section by decreasing revenues collected elsewhere, or if that is impossible after the fact, the general assembly may comply with this section by refunding the surplus to taxpayers. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

The party seeking to invoke the "preferred interpretation" has the burden of establishing that its proposed construction of this section would reasonably restrain the growth of government more than any other competing interpretation. The mere assertion by a party that its interpretation would "reasonably restrain most the growth of government" is not dispositive. Bickel v. City of Boulder, 885 P.2d 215 (Colo. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1155, 115 S. Ct. 1112, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1076 (1995).

"Offset" is not a term of art defined by this section or utilized in a compensatory financial sense in the applicable provision; rather, read in context, the reasonable meaning of the operating phrase "revenue change as an offset" in subsection (7)(d) is that voter approval for the excess revenue retention constitutes the required offset to the refund requirement which otherwise would apply. Havens v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 924 P.2d 517 (Colo. 1996).

The electorate's approval for retention of the excess revenues as a "revenue change" is the required "offset" to the governmental entity's otherwise applicable refund obligation: "[T]he excess shall be refunded in the next fiscal year unless voters approve a revenue change as an offset." Havens v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 924 P.2d 517 (Colo. 1996).

Remarketing of revenue bonds does not constitute creation of debt requiring voter approval under this section because the remarketing does not create any new debt, impose any tax, or expose taxpayers to any new liability or obligation. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

Under this section, bonded debt increases annual fiscal spending only by the amount of the debt service, not by the amount of the borrowed funds expended; thus, the expenditure of the escrowed bond proceeds for further construction and the operation of E-470 highway does not impact annual fiscal spending, and is not subject to the voter approval requirements of subsection (7)(d). Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

The collection and expenditure of Authority revenues for service on bonds are "changes in debt service," to which the provisions of subsection (7)(b) do not apply under the plain language of this section. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

It is incorrect to interpret the phrase "revenue change as an offset" in subsection (7)(d) to require that offsetting revenue reductions must be paired with the retained excess revenues for the following reasons: (1) Such a construction would restrict the electorate's franchise in a manner inconsistent with the evident purpose of this section, which is to limit the discretion of governmental officials to take certain taxing, revenue, and spending actions in the absence of voter approval; (2) such a construction does not accord with legitimate voter expectations that this section, if adopted, would defer to citizen approval or disapproval certain proposed tax, revenue, and spending measures that varied from this section's limitations; (3) the general assembly has construed this section as including the approval of revenue changes, under subsection (7) by means of measures referred to the voters by local government; (4) such a construction conflicts with the clear pattern of this section deferring to voter choice in the waiver of otherwise applicable limitations; and (5) the court has declined to adopt a rigid interpretation of this section which would have the effect of working a reduction in government services. Havens v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 924 P.2d 517 (Colo. 1996).

Subsection (8)(c) prohibits a presumption in favor of any pending valuation in order to put a taxpayer on equal footing with a county in property tax valuation proceedings but does not address or modify a taxpayer's burden of proof at a board of assessment appeals proceeding. A taxpayer thus must prove by a preponderance of the evidence only that an assessment is incorrect to prevail at a board of assessment appeals proceeding and is not required to establish an appropriate basis for an alternative reduced valuation for the property at issue. Bd. of Assessment Appeals v. Sampson, 105 P.3d 198 (Colo. 2005).

The language "tax policy change" cannot be applied to any policy modifications that may have a de minimis impact on a district's revenues. In some cases, the cost of the election to authorize a tax policy change could exceed the additional revenue obtained, which would be an unreasonable result that the voters could not have intended when they passed this section. Mesa County Bd. of County Comm'rs v. State, 203 P.3d 519 (Colo. 2009).

A "tax policy change directly causing a net revenue gain" only requires voter approval when the revenue gain exceeds the limits dictated by subsection (7). To find that a tax policy change resulting in a net tax revenue gain that does not violate subsection (7) revenue limits requires voter approval would eliminate the need for the detailed revenue limits entirely. Mesa County Bd. of County Comm'rs v. State, 203 P.3d 519 (Colo. 2009).

V. STATE MANDATES.

"Subsidy" of state by county is legally impossible. Attempted turnback by county of its responsibilities under human services code pursuant to subsection (9) was invalid because when a county (itself a political subdivision of the state) attempts to subsidize the state, the state, through the county, contributes to itself. Therefore, county's contribution to cost of social services program is not a "subsidy" and subsection (9) does not apply. Romer v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, Weld County, 897 P.2d 779 (Colo. 1995).

This section did not change the mixed state and local character of social services. Romer v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, Weld County, 897 P.2d 779 (Colo. 1995).

A county's duties to the state court system, including security, may not be reduced or ended pursuant to subsection (9). State v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, Mesa County, 897 P.2d 788 (Colo. 1995).

Section 21. Tobacco Taxes for Health Related Purposes. (1) The people of the state of Colorado hereby find that tobacco addiction is the leading cause of preventable death in Colorado, that Colorado should deter children and youth from starting smoking, that cigarette and tobacco taxes are effective at preventing and reducing tobacco use among children and youth, and that tobacco tax revenues will be used to expand health care for children and low income populations, tobacco education programs and the prevention and treatment of cancer and heart and lung disease.

(2) There are hereby imposed the following additional cigarette and tobacco taxes:

(a) Statewide cigarette tax, on the sale of cigarettes by wholesalers, at the rate of three and two-tenths cents per cigarette (64 cents per pack of twenty); and

(b) A statewide tobacco products tax, on the sale, use, consumption, handling, or distribution of tobacco products by distributors, at the rate of twenty percent of the manufacturer's list price.

(3) The cigarette and tobacco taxes imposed by this section shall be in addition to any other cigarette and tobacco taxes existing as of the effective date of this section on the sale or use of cigarettes by wholesalers and on the sale, use, consumption, handling, or distribution of tobacco products by distributors. Such existing taxes and their distribution shall not be repealed or reduced by the general assembly.

(4) All revenues received by operation of subsection (2) shall be excluded from fiscal year spending, as that term is defined in section 20 of article X of this constitution, and the corresponding spending limits upon state government and all local governments receiving such revenues.

(5) The revenues generated by operation of subsection (2) shall be appropriated annually by the general assembly only in the following proportions and for the following health related purposes:

(a) Forty-six percent (46%) of such revenues shall be appropriated to increase the number of children and pregnant women enrolled in the children's basic health plan above the average enrollment for state fiscal year 2004, add the parents of enrolled children, and expand eligibility of low income adults and children who receive medical care through the "Children's Basic Health Plan Act", article 19 of title 26, Colorado Revised Statutes, or any successor act, or through the "Colorado Medical Assistance Act", article 4 of title 26, Colorado Revised Statutes, or any successor act.

(b) Nineteen percent (19%) of such revenues shall be appropriated to fund comprehensive primary care through any Colorado qualified provider, as defined in the "Colorado Medical Assistance Act," article 4 of title 26, Colorado Revised Statutes, or any successor act, that meets either of the following criteria:

(I) Is a community health center as defined in section 330 of the U.S. public health services act, or any successor act; or

(II) At least 50% of the patients served by the qualified provider are uninsured or medically indigent as defined in the "Colorado Medical Assistance Act," article 4 of title 26, Colorado Revised Statutes, or any successor act, or are enrolled in the children's basic health plan or the Colorado medical assistance program, or successor programs.

Such revenues shall be appropriated to the Colorado department of health care policy and financing, or successor agency, and shall be distributed annually to all eligible qualified providers throughout the state proportionate to the number of uninsured or medically indigent patients served.

(c) Sixteen percent (16%) of such revenues shall be appropriated for school and community-based and statewide tobacco education programs designed to reduce initiation of tobacco use by children and youth, promote cessation of tobacco use among youth and adults, and reduce exposure to second-hand smoke. Such revenues shall be appropriated through the "Tobacco Education, Prevention and Cessation Act", part 8 of article 3.5 of title 25, Colorado Revised Statutes, or any successor act.

(d) Sixteen percent (16%) of such revenues shall be appropriated for the prevention, early detection, and treatment of cancer and cardiovascular and pulmonary diseases. Such revenues shall be appropriated to the prevention services division of the Colorado department of public health and environment, or successor agency, and shall be distributed statewide with oversight and accountability by the Colorado state board of health created by article 1 of title 25, Colorado Revised Statutes.

(e) Three percent (3%) of such revenues shall be appropriated for health related purposes to provide revenue for the state's general fund, old age pension fund, and municipal and county governments to compensate proportionately for tax revenue reductions attributable to lower cigarette and tobacco sales resulting from the implementation of this tax.

(6) Revenues appropriated pursuant to paragraphs (a), (b), and (d) of subsection (5) shall be used to supplement revenues that are appropriated by the general assembly for health related purposes on the effective date of this section, and shall not be used to supplant those appropriated revenues.

(7) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the general assembly may use revenue generated under this section for any health related purpose and to serve populations enrolled in the children's basic health plan and the Colorado medical assistance program at their respective levels of enrollment on the effective date of this section. Such use of revenue must be preceded by a declaration of a state fiscal emergency, which shall be adopted only by a joint resolution, approved by a two-thirds majority vote of the members of both houses of the general assembly and the governor. Such declaration shall apply only to a single fiscal year.

(8) Revenues appropriated pursuant to subsections (5) and (7) of this section shall not be subject to the statutory limitation on general fund appropriations growth or any other spending limitation existing in law.

(9) This section is effective January 1, 2005.

Editor's note: (1) For the proclamation of the governor, December 1, 2004, see L. 2005, p. 2335.

(2) The "Colorado Medical Assistance Act" and the "Children's Basic Health Plan Act" referenced in subsection (5) were relocated by Senate Bill 06-219 to articles 4 and 8 of title 25.5.

ANNOTATION

Bill that eliminated appropriations for health-related purposes in effect on January 1, 2005 does not conflict with this section. The plain language of this section clearly and unambiguously provides that the general assembly is responsible for setting spending levels for health-related purposes from sources of revenue other than the taxes imposed by this section, and nothing in this section mandates that a certain level of funding for health-related purposes from such other sources of revenue exist on January 1, 2005. Colo. Cmty. Health Network v. Colo. Gen. Assembly, 166 P.3d 280 (Colo. App. 2007).

Public Indebtedness

Section 1. Pledging credit of state, county, city, town or school district forbidden. Neither the state, nor any county, city, town, township or school district shall lend or pledge the credit or faith thereof, directly or indirectly, in any manner to, or in aid of, any person, company or corporation, public or private, for any amount, or for any purpose whatever; or become responsible for any debt, contract or liability of any person, company or corporation, public or private, in or out of the state.

This section and following section are broader in scope, and more specific in the matter of restriction, than any similar constitutional provision considered or brought to the attention of the supreme court. Lord v. City & County of Denver, 58 Colo. 1, 143 P. 284 (1914).

The language of this section and the following section could not make plainer the intent of the framers of the constitution, to utterly prohibit the mingling of public moneys with those of private persons, either directly or indirectly, or in any manner whatsoever. Lord v. City & County of Denver, 58 Colo. 1, 143 P. 284 (1914); McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 101 Colo. 316, 74 P.2d 99 (1937); In re Colorado State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

Construction of section. This section is to be construed as prohibiting a town or city by its own voluntary corporate act from pledging its credit to, or becoming responsible for, any debt, contract or liability in aid of a third party. Mayor of Valverde v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 104, 34 P. 947 (1893).

This section cannot be so construed as to prevent the state or any subdivision thereof from pledging its own credit for its own debts or obligations as may be permitted by law and as determined by the legislative body in its discretion. Bradfield v. City of Pueblo, 143 Colo. 559, 354 P.2d 612 (1960).

Applicability of section. This and the next section have no applicability to bonds issued to acquire lands for donation to the United States government to be used as sites for an aeronautical school and bombing field, as the United States is not a "corporation" in the sense in which that word is used in the sections. McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 101 Colo. 316, 74 P.2d 99 (1937).

Obligations incurred for public purpose. This constitutional proscription is inapplicable where a city's obligations are incurred for a public purpose. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

"Township", as used in this and the following section, gives no indication of what shall constitute a township or its proper functions. County Court v. Schwarz, 13 Colo. 291, 22 P. 783 (1889).

Functions of water conservancy district, however designated, are in no sense functions of a state subdivision like counties, towns, cities, or school districts, within the meaning of this section. People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938); Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist. v. Witwer, 108 Colo. 307, 116 P.2d 200 (1941).

Improvement district not person, company, or corporation within meaning of section. An improvement district created under the charter of the city and county of Denver is not a "person, company, or corporation, public or private", within the meaning of this section. It has no legal existence as a separate entity, and cannot sue or be sued. It is merely a geographical division created by the municipality for convenience in the construction of public improvements. Montgomery v. City & County of Denver, 102 Colo. 427, 80 P.2d 434 (1938).

Section 48 of the Denver city charter, authorizing payments by the city of the balance of special improvement district bonds in which 80 percent of the outstanding bonds have been redeemed does not transgress this section. Montgomery v. City & County of Denver, 102 Colo. 427, 80 P.2d 434 (1938).

State cannot, by statute, make county liable for debts of person or corporation. If neither state nor county can become responsible for the debts of any person or corporation, it follows that the state cannot by statute make a county liable, either absolutely or contingently, for such debt, or any part thereof. Leddy v. People ex rel. Farrar, 59 Colo. 120, 147 P. 365 (1915); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Humes, 144 Colo. 434, 356 P.2d 910 (1960).

As county may not be guarantor. This section of the constitution has been interpreted by the supreme court as preventing the county from standing in the position of a guarantor for the debts of an individual. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Humes, 144 Colo. 434, 356 P.2d 910 (1960).

Public revenue bonds do not create debt, if there is no pledge of public property. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

And no credit pledged where bonds show city will not be liable for payment. There is no pledge of the credit of Denver on bonds for the purchase and improvement of a sports stadium and no debt of Denver is created where the bonds themselves clearly show that Denver shall in no event be looked to for payment or be liable therefor. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

When no debt or obligation of the state is created, the state cannot be said to have lent its credit in violation of this section. In re Colorado State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

Essentially cash transaction did not violate section. In a transaction in which the city and county held an option to purchase a certain tract from an investment company for $537,810, which was to be exchanged with a railroad company for one of its tracts, and for which the railroad company agreed to pay $30,000, leaving a net cost to the city of $507,810, which was also the appraised value of the railroad company's land, it was held that the contemplated transaction did not violate this section, since the transaction was essentially a cash transaction, involving not deferred payments, but the contemporaneous deeding of the railroad company's property to the city, and of the investment company's property to the railroad, and the payment of cash to the investment company; whereas the process of lending or pledging one's credit as prohibited by this section contemplates a period of time over which the credit is lent or pledged. Chitwood v. City & County of Denver, 119 Colo. 165, 201 P.2d 605 (1948).

Nor city's lease of land before lessor obtained title. Where a lease of land by a city was executed before title to the land in question was obtained by the lessor, a private corporation, but the obligation of the city under the lease was limited to the payment of rent and was contingent on the lessor's securing the property, the city neither assumed, secured, guaranteed, underwrote or pledged its credit, directly or indirectly, for any indebtedness or obligation of the lessor. McCray v. City of Boulder, 165 Colo. 383, 439 P.2d 350 (1968).

Nor proposed appropriation. A proposed house bill appropriation to be deposited in a capital reserve fund which secures obligations of the housing finance authority did not constitute a pledge of the state's credit in violation of this section. In re Colorado State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

Section 31-25-107 (9) constitutional. Section 31-25-107 (9), relating to approval of urban renewal plans by local governing body, does not violate this section. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

Ordinance for refund of license fees does not violate this section. Peterson v. McNichols, 128 Colo. 137, 260 P.2d 938 (1953).

Where the contractual obligation is that of a private company and not the city, it is not an unconstitutional pledge of the city's credit. Witcher v. Canon City, 716 P.2d 445 (Colo. 1986).

Applied in People ex rel. Miller v. Higgins, 69 Colo. 79, 168 P. 740 (1917); Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922); Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist. v. Denver & S. L. Ry., 45 F.2d 715 (10th Cir. 1930); McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 131 Colo. 246, 280 P.2d 1096 (1955).

Section 2. No aid to corporations - no joint ownership by state, county, city, town, or school district. Neither the state, nor any county, city, town, township, or school district shall make any donation or grant to, or in aid of, or become a subscriber to, or shareholder in any corporation or company or a joint owner with any person, company, or corporation, public or private, in or out of the state, except as to such ownership as may accrue to the state by escheat, or by forfeiture, by operation or provision of law; and except as to such ownership as may accrue to the state, or to any county, city, town, township, or school district, or to either or any of them, jointly with any person, company, or corporation, by forfeiture or sale of real estate for nonpayment of taxes, or by donation or devise for public use, or by purchase by or on behalf of any or either of them, jointly with any or either of them, under execution in cases of fines, penalties, or forfeiture of recognizance, breach of condition of official bond, or of bond to secure public moneys, or the performance of any contract in which they or any of them may be jointly or severally interested. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit any city or town from becoming a subscriber or shareholder in any corporation or company, public or private, or a joint owner with any person, company, or corporation, public or private, in order to effect the development of energy resources after discovery, or production, transportation, or transmission of energy in whole or in part for the benefit of the inhabitants of such city or town.

This section does not prohibit grant from state to subdivision of itself; the provision only prohibits grants to private corporations. In re Colo. State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

Public aid to railroad companies prohibited. It was undoubtedly the intention of the framers of the constitution, whether wisely or not, to prohibit, by the fundamental law of the new state, all public aid to railroad companies, whether by donation, grant or subscription, no matter what might be the public benefit and advantages flowing from the construction of such roads. Colo. Cent. R. R. v. Lea, 5 Colo. 192 (1879); McNichols v. Police Protective Ass'n, 121 Colo. 45, 215 P.2d 303 (1949).

The significance of the inhibition of this section is read in the evil which it was intended to remedy. Common was the practice, theretofore, of issuing municipal bonds to aid in the construction of railroads. The practice was felt to be evil, stimulating unnecessary railroad enterprises, and injuriously affecting the interests of the taxpayer. The universal method of railroad enterprises was through private corporations. The possibility of other methods was unknown, or not seriously contemplated. So, when the people by their constitution prohibited public aid to private corporations, obviously the thought was that all public assistance to the building of railroads was prohibited. Lord v. City & County of Denver, 58 Colo. 1, 143 P. 284 (1914).

And sale of municipal property for inadequate price repugnant to section. A municipality cannot ordinarily lawfully sell its property for a grossly inadequate price, since such a transaction is in effect a gift of public funds and repugnant to this section of the constitution. Tamblyn v. City & County of Denver, 118 Colo. 191, 194 P.2d 299 (1948).

But purchase of tract from investment company to be exchanged for tract of railroad company did not violate section. In a transaction in which the city and county held an option to purchase a certain tract from an investment company for $537,810, which was to be exchanged with a railroad company for one of its tracts, and for which the railroad company agreed to pay $30,000, leaving a net cost to the city of $507,810, which was also the appraised value of the railroad company's land, it was held that the contemplated transaction did not violate this section, since the city clearly does not make any donation or grant to any other corporation or company, and is obtaining exactly the same property and paying the same amount of cash as it would have paid if it had dealt solely with the railroad company, and as if the investment company had not been a party to the transaction. Chitwood v. City & County of Denver, 119 Colo. 165, 201 P.2d 605 (1948).

Nor police pensions and payments in lieu of sick leave. An amendment to the charter of the city and county of Denver, providing for police pensions and authorizing the payment of a lump sum in lieu of sick leave to those members of the department who, upon retirement, have exhausted none or only a portion of their sick leave allowance, does not violate the provisions of this section of the constitution, since this section refers primarily to aid to private corporations. McNichols v. Police Protective Ass'n, 121 Colo. 45, 215 P.2d 303 (1949), overruled on another point, Police Pension & Relief Bd. v. Behnke, 136 Colo. 288, 316 P.2d 1025 (1957).

Nor ordinance creating retirement plan. A city ordinance creating a retirement plan for city employees and providing that upon termination of such plan, all funds remaining in the trust were to be distributed to employees in proportion to their respective service records, did not offend against the provisions of this section and section 1 of this article, since such funds constitute a part of the compensation of such employees for services rendered to the city. McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 131 Colo. 246, 280 P.2d 1096 (1955).

Nor proposed appropriation. A proposed house bill appropriation to be deposited in a capital reserve fund which secures obligation of the housing finance authority did not violate this section. In re Colo. State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

Notwithstanding the apparent absolute prohibition of this section, a "public purpose" exception has evolved. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Statute, on its face, does not violate this section if it provides for appropriations from a designated state fund to a political subdivision which may benefit a private corporation but does not require a grant or donation from the state to a private corporation or company. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Payment of relocation benefits to persons displaced by urban renewal not unconstitutional. The payment of relocation benefits to persons displaced by an urban renewal project does not constitute an unconstitutional expenditure of public funds in the aid of private persons. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

State ownership of shares in a mutual ditch company not prohibited. In view of mutual ditch companies' special treatment in the constitution and statutes, an appropriation may be made by the general assembly for the sole purpose that the division of wildlife purchase water shares; and, since a line of Colorado court cases hold that mutual ditch companies are not "true" corporations but merely vehicles for individual ownership of water rights, it is clear that stock ownership in a mutual ditch company constitutes ownership of a real property interest in water rights rather than a personal property interest in corporate stock. Therefore, the constitutional provision prohibiting state ownership of corporate stock was never intended to prohibit state ownership of shares in a mutual ditch company. S.E. Colo. Water Cons. v. Ft. Lyon Canal Co., 720 P.2d 133 (Colo. 1986).

Rule requiring a municipality-utility customer to pay a portion of the cost of new utility facilities does not violate this section where municipality received consideration for its payments, placing ownership of the facilities in the utility enhances the utility's ability to perform its duties, and the expenditure by the municipality serves a valid public purpose. City of Aurora v. P.U.C., 785 P.2d 1280 (Colo. 1990).

State statute that regulates a matter of statewide concern in a way that restricts a political subdivision from levying a tax or enacting a fee for the mere use of public rights-of-way across its boundaries does not constitute an unlawful donation or grant to a private corporation under this section. Permitting telecommunications providers to occupy and use the public rights-of-way without acquiring and paying for authorization from every political subdivision in the state furthers a valid public purpose by encouraging competition and ensuring that consumers benefit from it. City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

Functions of water conservancy district, however designated, are in no sense functions of state subdivision like counties, towns, cities, or school districts, within the meaning of this section. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist. v. Witwer, 108 Colo. 307, 116 P.2d 200 (1941).

Trial court erred in dismissing claim that economic development agreement violated this section where the agreement required a city to acquire and renovate a facility and to lease the facility to the corporation for no more than one dollar per year. Applicability of public purpose exception in circumstances in which a facility upon which public funds are to be expended is to be conveyed to a private corporation for negligible consideration is an issue of first impression for Colorado appellate courts, and resolution of the claim and city's defense that the public purpose exception made the agreement permissible likely involves resolution of disputed issues of fact. Fischer v. City of Colo. Springs, 260 P.3d 331 (Colo. App. 2010).

Applied in Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist. v. Denver & S.L. Ry., 45 F.2d 715 (10th Cir. 1930); Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970); Perl-Mack Enterprises Co. v. City & County of Denver, 194 Colo. 4, 568 P.2d 468 (1977); Witcher v. Canon City, 716 P.2d 445 (Colo. 1986).

Section 3. Public debt of state – limitations. The state shall not contract any debt by loan in any form, except to provide for casual deficiencies of revenue, erect public buildings for the use of the state, suppress insurrection, defend the state, or, in time of war, assist in defending the United States; and the amount of debt contracted in any one year to provide for deficiencies of revenue shall not exceed one-fourth of a mill on each dollar of valuation of taxable property within the state, and the aggregate amount of such debt shall not at any time exceed three-fourths of a mill on each dollar of said valuation, until the valuation shall equal one hundred millions of dollars, and thereafter such debt shall not exceed one hundred thousand dollars; and the debt incurred in any one year for erection of public buildings shall not exceed one-half mill on each dollar of said valuation; and the aggregate amount of such debt shall never at any time exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars (except as provided in section 5 of this article), and in all cases the valuation in this section mentioned shall be that of the assessment last preceding the creation of said debt.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For comment on Johnson v. McDonald appearing below, see 8 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 152 (1936).

Annotator's note. L. 19, ch. 161, referred to in next to the last paragraph of this section, was repealed by L. 31, ch. 122, § 147. For present provisions regulating the registration of motor vehicles and providing for the fees therefor, see § 42-3-101 et seq.

The purpose of this section is to prevent the pledging of state revenue for future years or the creation of obligations that would require future revenues from a tax otherwise available for general purposes. Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999).

Purpose of people in adopting this section was to keep the state substantially on a cash basis, prohibit the pledge of future fixed revenues, forbid the contracting of debts which must be paid therefrom, and to make certain that one general assembly shall not paralyze the next by devouring the available revenues of both. In re Senate Resolution No. 2, 94 Colo. 101, 31 P.2d 325 (1933); In re Colo. State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

To constitute debt in constitutional sense, one general assembly, in effect, must obligate a future general assembly to appropriate funds to discharge the debt created by the first general assembly. In re Colo. State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566 P.2d 350 (1977).

Some of the indications of a debt in the constitutional sense are that the obligation pledges revenues of future years, that it requires use of revenue from a tax otherwise available for general purposes, that it is a legally enforceable obligation against the state in future years, or that appropriation by future general assemblies of moneys in payment of the obligation is nondiscretionary. Glennon Heights, Inc. v. Central Bank & Trust, 658 P.2d 872 (Colo. 1983); Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999).

"Year", in this section, means "fiscal year", and in this state the fiscal year shall be deemed to commence on the 1st day of December and end on the 30th day of November in each year. In re Contracting of State Debt by Loan, 21 Colo. 399, 41 P. 1110 (1895).

Definitions of "debt" depend on context in which used. The definitions of the word "debt" are many, and depend on the context and the general subject with reference to which it is used. Its meaning in the sections of the constitution and statutes in question must be determined by their purpose, which was to prevent the overburdening of the public, and bankruptcy of the municipality. Clearly the revenue bonds are not within that purpose. The public can never be overburdened by that which it is under no obligation to discharge, nor can the city become bankrupt by what it does not have to pay. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

Debt limitation is exceeded as of time bonds are issued. Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

Discretionary or contingent obligations are not a constitutional debt. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981); Colo. Crim. Justice Reform Coalition v. Ortiz, 121 P.3d 288 (Colo. App. 2005).

Financing devices which have been upheld by the court include: (1) Special fund cases in which the borrowed funds are repaid from the revenue generated by the improvement; (2) cases in which the entity borrowing money is a public entity independent of the state; and (3) cases in which the state enters into lease/purchase agreements for a building or other improvement and in which the parties are not bound to renew the lease at the end of the year. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Bd. of Regents, 804 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1991).

Test of whether financing device violates this section is applied in In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

Requisites that must exist in order that statute not violate this section. (a) If a statute creates a debt; (b) if it creates a fund to pay it; (c) if that fund would not be available for general purposes if not used to pay the debt; (d) (conclusion) the statute is not prohibited by this section because the purpose of this section is to prevent the pledging of future revenues. What revenues? Clearly the revenues that create the fund referred to -- the fund to pay the debt -- a fund that would not be available for general purposes. The words used clearly mean this and can mean nothing else. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935).

Since the purpose of this section is to prevent the pledging of revenues of future years, a statute which at the same time it creates a debt, creates the fund to pay it, and which fund would not be otherwise available for general purposes, is clearly outside the constitutional prohibition. In re Senate Resolution No. 2, 94 Colo. 101, 31 P.2d 325 (1933).

Statute, on its face, does not violate this section if it neither pledges future state revenues nor imposes obligations that would require future revenues from a tax otherwise available for general purposes. In re House Bill 91S-1005, 814 P.2d 875 (Colo. 1991).

So statute creating debt and "special fund" to pay it outside prohibition. Since the purpose of this section is to prevent the pledging of revenues of future years, a statute which at the same time it creates a debt creates the fund to pay it, which fund would not be otherwise available for general purposes, is clearly outside the constitutional prohibition. Johnson v. McDonald, 97 Colo. 324, 49 P.2d 1017 (1935); Watrous v. Golden Chamber of Commerce, 121 Colo. 521, 218 P.2d 498 (1950); City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

"Special fund" doctrine not extendable beyond well-defined scope. The "special fund" doctrine as recognized by this court cannot be extended beyond its well-defined scope. The courts cannot sanction a resort to "special funds" and "revenue bonds" in order to accomplish a purpose which the constitution declares to be against public policy, and which it expressly forbids. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Applied in In re Loan of Sch. Fund, 18 Colo. 195, 32 P. 273 (1893); In re Casual Deficiency, 21 Colo. 403, 42 P. 669 (1895); Post Printing & Publishing Co. v. Shafroth, 53 Colo. 129, 124 P. 176, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 226 U.S. 602, 33 S. Ct. 115, 57 L. Ed. 377 (1912); In re Colo. State Senate, 193 Colo. 298, 566

P.2d 350 (1977); Lujan of Colo. State Bd. v. Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982).

II. APPLICATIONS.

Section authorizes contracting debt by loan to provide for appropriations to suppress insurrection. This section gives to the general assembly power to contract a debt by loan, which may be evidenced by bonds, to provide for appropriations made to suppress an insurrection. As might be expected, no limit in this section is fixed to the amount of the debt so evidenced by bonds, and in this respect there is preserved entire harmony with § 16 of art. X, Colo. Const., which authorizes unlimited appropriations to suppress insurrections to be raised by direct unlimited tax without the intervention of a loan. In re State Bd. of Equaliz., 24 Colo. 446, 51 P. 493 (1911).

This section gives to the state the power to contract a debt, by loan, to provide for the payment of expenses incurred to suppress insurrection, subject to no limitation as to the amount. In re Contracting of State Debt by Loan, 21 Colo. 399, 41 P. 1110 (1895).

Debts to provide for casual deficiencies of revenue cannot be contracted by state in excess of limit prescribed in this section. A casual deficiency of the revenue is one that happens by chance or accident, and without design or intention to evade the constitutional inhibition. In re Appropriations by Gen. Ass'y, 13 Colo. 316, 22 P. 464 (1889); In re Contracting of State Debt by Loan, 21 Colo. 399, 41 P. 1110 (1895).

Any obligation paid out of tax levy fund deemed debt. Any obligation paid or contracted to be paid, out of a fund that is the product of a tax levy is a debt within the purpose of the constitutional limitation. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Issuance of bonds to secure payment of state indebtedness void under section. If an indebtedness represented by a proposed bond issue is construed to be an obligation of the state of Colorado, the issuance of bonds to secure the payment thereof would be null and void under the provisions of this section and sections 4 and 5 of this article. Lewis v. State Bd. of Agric., 138 Colo. 540, 335 P.2d 546 (1959).

Transportation revenue anticipation notes do not constitute a debt by loan in any form that is prohibited by this section because: (1) They do not pledge state revenues for future years because they are subject to annual allocation by the transportation commission; (2) repayment does not require the use of revenues available for general purposes; (3) note holders may not look to other state revenues for payment; and (4) payment is subject to annual appropriation, which does not bind future legislatures. Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999).

Revenue anticipation warrants to be paid out of taxes imposed upon motor fuel are valid obligations, which do not create a "debt" of the state within the constitutional limitations upon the power of the general assembly to incur indebtedness. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

But issuance of securities where principal and interest to be paid exclusively from gasoline excise taxes prohibited. A proposed issuance of securities to finance highways where the principal and interest of the debentures are to be paid exclusively from excise taxes on gasoline, is prohibited by this section and section 4 of this article. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Issuance of bonds to acquire land to be donated to U.S.

government not within prohibition of section. By art. XX, Colo. Const., the city and county of Denver is given exclusive power to act on local and municipal subjects including the issuance or authorization of bonds for the purpose of acquiring lands to be donated to the United States government as sites for an aeronautical school and bombing field; such being a local municipal purpose, it does not come within the inhibition of this section. McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 101 Colo. 316, 74 P.2d 99 (1937).

Transfer of cash funds to general fund did not create "debt" within the meaning of this section. Barber v. Ritter, 170 P.3d 763 (Colo. App. 2007).

Even if those cash funds are public trusts. Even if cash funds are public trusts, they are not irrevocable trusts, and the legislature has the authority to amend them to allow for the transfer of monies to the general fund. Barber v. Ritter, 196 P.3d 238 (Colo. 2008).

Debt financing provisions applicable to reorganized university hospital held unconstitutional under this section where premised upon allegedly "private" status of hospital which in fact remained a public entity. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Bd. of Regents, 804 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1990) (decided prior to the 1991 repeal of § 23-21-401 et seq.).

Severability clause could not preserve remainder of statutory scheme where debt financing provisions were inextricably intertwined with invalid provisions for reorganization and continued operation of public hospital as "private" entity. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Bd. of Regents, 804 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1990) (decided prior to the 1991 repeal of § 23-21-401 et seq.).

Section 4. Law creating debt. In no case shall any debt above mentioned in this article be created except by a law which shall be irrepealable, until the indebtedness therein provided for shall have been fully paid or discharged; such law shall specify the purposes to which the funds so raised shall be applied, and provide for the levy of a tax sufficient to pay the interest on and extinguish the principal of such debt within the time limited by such law for the payment thereof, which in the case of debts contracted for the erection of public buildings and supplying deficiencies of revenue shall not be less than ten nor more than fifteen years, and the funds arising from the collection of any such tax shall not be applied to any other purpose than that provided in the law levying the same, and when the debt thereby created shall be paid or discharged, such tax shall cease and the balance, if any, to the credit of the fund shall immediately be placed to the credit of the general fund of the state.

Section 5. Debt for public buildings - how created. A debt for the purpose of erecting public buildings may be created by law as provided for in section four of this article, not exceeding in the aggregate three mills on each dollar of said valuation; provided, that before going into effect, such law shall be ratified by the vote of a majority of such qualified electors of the state as shall vote thereon at a general election under such regulations as the general assembly may prescribe.

Section 6. Local government debt. (1) No political subdivision of the state shall contract any general obligation debt by loan in any form, whether individually or by contract pursuant to article XIV, section 18 (2) (a) of this constitution except by adoption of a legislative measure which shall be irrepealable until the indebtedness therein provided for shall have been fully paid or discharged, specifying the purposes to which the funds to be raised shall be applied and providing for the levy of a tax which together with such other revenue, assets, or funds as may be pledged shall be sufficient to pay the interest and principal of such debt. Except as may be otherwise provided by the charter of a home rule city and county, city, or town for debt incurred by such city and county, city, or town, no such debt shall be created unless the question of incurring the same be submitted to and approved by a majority of the qualified taxpaying electors voting thereon, as the term "qualified taxpaying elector" shall be defined by statute.

(2) Except as may be otherwise provided by the charter of a home rule city and county, city, or town, the general assembly shall establish by statute limitations on the authority of any political subdivision to incur general obligation indebtedness in any form whether individually or by contract pursuant to article XIV, section 18 (2) (a) of this constitution.

(3) Debts contracted by a home rule city and county, city, or town, statutory city or town or service authority for the purposes of supplying water shall be excepted from the operation of this section.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, "Legality of the Denver Housing Authority", see 12 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 30 (1939).

Annotator's note. Since former § 8 of art. XI, Colo. Const., is similar to this section, relevant cases construing that former section have been included in the annotations to this section.

This section is specific provision dealing with power of local governments to incur indebtedness. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

Purpose of this section is to place a limitation upon the power of local governments to contract debts in the construction of projects and facilities. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 P. 641 (1885); People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 404, 12 P. 838 (1886); Rollins v. Lake County, 34 F. 845 (D. Colo. 1888), rev'd on other grounds, 130 U.S. 662, 9 S. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060 (1889); Aggers v. People ex rel. Town of Montclair, 20 Colo. 348, 38 P. 386 (1894); City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957); Deti v. City of Durango, 136 Colo. 272, 316 P.2d 579 (1957); Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

The phrase "multiple-fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation whatsoever" in § 20 of article X is necessarily broader than the phrase "debt by loan in any form" as defined by this section. Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999) (overruling Boulder v. Dougherty, Dawkins, 890 P.2d 199 (Colo. App. 1994)).

"Debt by loan in any form". The phrase "multiple-fiscal year direct or indirect district debt or other financial obligation whatsoever" contained in article X, section 20, of the Colorado Constitution is not any broader and does not require a result different from the phrase "debt by loan in any form" contained in this section. Boulder v. Dougherty, Dawkins, 890 P.2d 199 (Colo. App. 1994), overruled in Submission of Interrogatories on House Bill 99-1325, 979 P.2d 549 (Colo. 1999).

Section not authorization of indebtedness. This section is restrictive in its effect and operation, and does not by its terms authorize any local government to incur any form of indebtedness for any purpose. Dudley v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 80 F. 672 (8th Cir. 1897), rev'd on other grounds, 173 U.S. 243, 19 S. Ct. 398, 43 L. Ed. 684 (1899).

Sections 3 and 4 of this article impose limitations similar to this section, except that they apply to debts of the state rather than to those of local government. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957); In re Senate Resolution No. 2, 94 Colo. 101, 31 P.2d 325 (1933).

Appropriation ordinance, providing for payment of machinery purchased under contract, and adopted at the time of the execution of the contract and supplemental thereto, held not to comply with this section. Reimer v. Town of Holyoke, 93 Colo. 571, 27 P.2d 1032 (1933).

Discretionary or contingent obligations are not a constitutional debt. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

Even where practical circumstances would exert substantial social or political pressure on a future city council to appropriate money to repay such contingent or discretionary obligations. Fischer v. City of Colo. Springs, 260 P.3d 331 (Colo. App. 2010).

As to duty of purchaser of bonds to ascertain limitation, see Rollins v. Lake County, 34 F. 845 (D. Colo. 1888), rev'd on other grounds, 130 U.S. 662, 9 S. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060 (1889); Lake County v. Graham, 130 U.S. 674, 9 S. Ct. 654, 32 L. Ed. 1065 (1889); Chaffee County v. Potter, 142 U.S. 355, 12 S. Ct. 216, 35 L. Ed. 1040 (1892); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Platt, 79 F. 567 (8th Cir. 1897); Dudley v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 80 F. 672 (8th Cir. 1897); Gunnison County Comm'rs v. Rollins, 173 U.S. 255, 19 S. Ct. 390, 43 L. Ed. 689 (1899); Bd. of Comm'rs v. Sutliff, 97 F. 270 (8th Cir. 1899); Geer v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 97 F. 435 (8th Cir. 1899).

Rental obligations for future years. Where there is no showing that current revenues will be insufficient to meet all current expenses, including rentals as they become due, a city's rental obligations for future years do not constitute debt in contravention of this section. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

A master lease between a special district and a limited partnership violates the constitutional prohibition against governmental debt by loan and was ultra vires and consequently void because the lease contained no provision for cancellation by the special district during the five-year term, appropriation of the monies by the district to meet the rental obligation was nondiscretionary, and the district was obligated to meet the rental obligation whether or not it could sublease the building and thus derive revenues, possibly requiring use of tax revenues otherwise available for general purposes. Black v. First Fed. Sav. and Loan Assoc., 830 P.2d 1103 (Colo. App. 1992).

A district that acted as both a special district and as a limited partner could not maintain its position as a limited partner and also protect itself from becoming a party to an ultra vires contract, therefore, the district's participation in the limited partnership was void and consequently the district was not liable for debts and obligations incurred by the limited partnership. Black v. First Fed. Sav. and Loan Assoc., 830 P.2d 1103 (Colo. App. 1992).

Separate building authority. The implementation of a proposed financing plan which involves a separate building authority will not create a general obligation debt where neither fraud nor injustice is present in the proposed financing plan, which is an essential basis for disregarding the separate corporate existence of the building authority. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

A city's agreement to pay the costs incurred by a building authority if a project is abandoned does not necessarily make it an insurer of the authority's bonds. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

Remedy for unduly restrictive constitutional provision lies with the people. Where a constitutional provision is considered unduly restrictive in limiting the amount of debt that may be contracted by a local government, the remedy lies with the people who have the power to repeal such provision. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Liability of annexed territory for payment of preexisting indebtedness. Linke v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 129 Colo. 165, 268 P.2d 416 (1954).

Applied in Wilder v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 41 F. 512 (D. Colo. 1890); People ex rel. Austin v. Graham, 70 Colo. 509, 203 P. 277 (1921); People ex rel. Setters v. Lee, 72 Colo. 598, 213 P. 583 (1923); Colo. Cent. Power Co. v. Municipal Power Dev. Co., 1 F. Supp. 961 (D. Colo. 1932); Reimer v. Town of Holyoke, 93 Colo. 571, 27 P.2d 1032 (1933); People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938); Hiatt v. City of Manitou, 154 Colo. 525, 392 P.2d 282 (1964); Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005 (Colo. 1982); Glennon Heights, Inc. v. Central Bank & Trust, 658 P.2d 872 (Colo. 1983).

II. GENERAL OBLIGATION DEBT BY LOAN.

This section is limitation upon power of local government to contract any and all indebtedness. Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U.S. 662, 9 S. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060 (1889); Lake County v. Graham, 130 U.S. 674, 9 S. Ct. 654, 32 L. Ed. 1065 (1889).

And limitation of this section is applicable to all debts, irrespective of their form. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 P. 641 (1885); Rollins v. Lake County, 34 F. 845 (D. Colo. 1888), rev'd on other grounds, 130 U.S. 662, 9 S. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060 (1889).

Definitions of "debt" depend on context in which used. The definitions of the word "debt" are many, and depend on the context and the general subject with reference to which it is used. Its meaning in the sections of the constitution and statutes in question must be determined by their purpose, which was to prevent the overburdening of the public, and bankruptcy of the local government. Perl-Mack Civic Ass'n v. Bd. of Dirs. of Baker Metro. & San. Dist., 140 Colo. 371, 344 P.2d 685 (1959).

No debt where no pledge of credit. Where there is no pledge of the credit of the local government for the payment of revenue bonds, no "debt" is thereby created. Consequently, the issuance of such bonds has no effect whatsoever on the debt limitations prescribed in this section. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

Issuance of funding bonds in exchange for valid warrants not creation of debt. The issuance of funding bonds, in exchange for valid warrants, is in no sense the creation of a debt. It is but the substitution of new evidence for a preexisting debt. It changes form, but does not increase the indebtedness. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Standley, 24 Colo. 1, 49 P. 23 (1897).

Nor leasing of building for local government purposes for a monthly rental of $670 for a term of 25 years is not a creation of indebtedness for the aggregate amount of the rentals, within the meaning of this section. Heberer v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 88 Colo. 159, 293 P. 349 (1930).

Nor section 48 of the charter of the city of Denver, in authorizing payment by the city of deficiencies in bond payments does not create a debt within the meaning of that word as used in this section and hence is not violative of this section because of the fact that such payments have not been approved by the taxpaying electorate. Montgomery v. City & County of Denver, 102 Colo. 427, 80 P.2d 434 (1938).

Where local government debts held not to constitute "debt by loan in any form". A contention that the term "debt by loan in any form" includes indebtedness incurred by the local government for expenses and evidenced by warrants, and further that where one provides supplies, etc., or renders service to a local government and does not receive payment at the time, it is, in effect, a loan of those supplies and of those services was refuted by the court, and the local government was held liable on warrants issued to cover current indebtedness. Georgetown v. Bank of Idaho Springs, 99 Colo. 519, 64 P.2d 132 (1936).

Or ordinance providing for issuance of bonds to fund special improvement district, which provided for the local government to take over bond payments by advancing the funds therefor, if four-fifths of the outstanding bonds have been paid and cancelled and if the remaining assets are delinquent in payments and there is no paid-in surplus, arose only on a contingency and was not an obligation as such, because the contingency might never arise. Fladung v. City of Boulder, 165 Colo. 244, 438 P.2d 688 (1968).

But any impairment of general local government revenues deemed debt. An impairment of the general local government revenues and any obligation paid or contracted to be paid out of a fund that is the product of a tax levy is a debt within the purpose of the constitutional limitation. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Having reached the limit of indebtedness, a local government cannot create a debt to be paid directly or indirectly, in whole or in part, from funds raised by taxation, or from a fund which must be replenished by funds raised by taxation. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

When local government mortgages its property to secure bonded indebtedness, debt has been created. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

And ordinance which pledged local government revenues for rental and discharge of bonds to cover the cost and maintenance of a community building, created a "debt" within the meaning of the constitution. Deti v. City of Durango, 136 Colo. 272, 316 P.2d 579 (1957).

Off-street parking bonds increase outstanding indebtedness of local government. Off-street parking bonds, unlike bonds relying solely upon revenues for their payment, do in fact increase the outstanding indebtedness of the local government. Allardice v. Adams County, 173 Colo. 133, 476 P.2d 982 (1970).

A master lease between a special district and a limited partnership violates the constitutional prohibition against governmental debt by loan and was ultra vires and consequently void because the lease contained no provision for cancellation by the special district during the five-year term, appropriation of the monies by the district to meet the rental obligation was nondiscretionary, and the district was obligated to meet the rental obligation whether or not it could sublease the building and thus derive revenues, possibly requiring use of tax revenues otherwise available for general purposes. Black v. First Fed. Sav. and Loan Assoc., 830 P.2d 1103 (Colo. App. 1992).

But statute creating both debt and fund to pay it held outside prohibition. A statute which at the same time it creates a debt, creates the fund to pay it, and which fund would not be otherwise available for general purposes, is clearly outside the constitutional prohibition. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

"Special fund" doctrine. If the project or facility to be created produces all the revenue to be used in discharging the bonds issued to create the project, without recourse on the part of the bondholder to other revenues of the local government, then the "special fund" doctrine is applicable, and the obligations evidenced by the revenue bonds are outside of the constitutional limitation, and do not constitute a "debt" within the meaning thereof. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

The special fund doctrine authorizes the issuance of bonds by local governments without being limited by this section of the constitution where the obligations created by the bonds are payable only out of revenues derived from the improvement built with the funds thus borrowed. Perl-Mack Civic Ass'n v. Bd. of Dirs. of Baker Metro. & San. Dist., 140 Colo. 371, 344 P.2d 685 (1959); Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

Bonds issued for financing the building of a local government's electric light and power plant, which are to be paid off exclusively from the income obtained from the plant to be built, do not create a "debt" within the meaning of this section. Shields v. City of Loveland, 74 Colo. 27, 218 P. 913 (1923); Franklin Trust Co. v. City of Loveland, 3 F.2d 114 (8th Cir. 1924); Heberer v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 88 Colo. 159, 293 P. 349 (1930).

The pledging of future revenue to be derived from the operation of an electric light plant then owned by a local government for the purpose of permitting the local government to make additions and betterments to the existing plant and facilities is not subject to the limitation on debts. Searle v. Town of Haxtun, 84 Colo. 494, 271 P. 629 (1928).

Under the special fund doctrine, net revenue bonds do not create a "debt" or indebtedness under this section of the constitution. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

But "special fund" doctrine does not permit local government to create unlimited obligations payable out of local government's revenues so long as those revenues are derived from a source other than ad valorem taxes. Such determination would deprive the taxpayer of any semblance of the protection afforded by the constitutional limitations placed upon the power of local governments to contract indebtedness. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Where the payment sources have extended beyond the revenue from the facility to be constructed or enlarged and have involved commitment of moneys otherwise available for general governmental purposes, there is a violation of constitutional provisions restricting debt financing. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

Doctrine not extendable beyond well-defined scope. The "special fund" doctrine as recognized by this court cannot be extended beyond its well-defined scope. The courts cannot sanction a resort to "special funds" and "revenue bonds" in order to accomplish a purpose which the constitution declares to be against public policy, and which it expressly forbids. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

And does not apply where funds derived from other tax sources to be allocated to special fund. Where bonds are issued by a local government for the construction of a facility and are payable exclusively out of the net revenues to be derived from the operation of such facility, the "special fund" doctrine is applicable, but it does not apply where it is proposed to allocate funds derived from other tax sources to a special fund for the payment of such bonds. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Where a local government proposed to issue bonds for the erection of a hospital and to pledge for the redemption thereof all net revenues from the operation of such hospital, together with cigarette taxes, parking meter fees, and the unpledged revenue from a local government's power system, such proposal would create a "debt" of the local government. City of Trinidad v. Haxby, 136 Colo. 168, 315 P.2d 204 (1957).

Doctrine inapposite where bonds secured by property lien. If revenue bonds are secured by a lien on governmental property, the "special fund" doctrine is inapposite. Gude v. City of Lakewood, 636 P.2d 691 (Colo. 1981).

A master lease which contains no provision for cancellation during the term of the lease amounts to a debt by loan and is therefore unconstitutional. Black v. First Fed. Sav. and Loan Assoc., 830 P.2d 1103 (Colo. App. 1992).

III. ALLOWABLE DEBTS.

A. In General.

Section deals with indebtedness that is reasonably anticipated as result of voluntary action by the general assembly or local government authorities -- such indebtedness as springs from express or implied contracts. Involuntary liability, arising ex delicto, is a subject that is not contemplated by the provision. People ex rel. Seeley v. May, 9 Colo. 404, 12 P. 838 (1886).

"Indebtedness" is used in general sense. In re Funding of County Indebtedness, 15 Colo. 421, 24 P. 877 (1890).

"Such debt", refers obviously to debt that is contemplated, and not one that may be imagined. Rollins v. Lake County, 34 F. 845 (D. Colo. 1888), rev'd on other grounds, 130 U.S. 662, 9 S. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060 (1889).

This section does not in express terms authorize refunding, but refunding is not thereby prohibited. A refunding is merely a funding again or anew. Manly v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 46 Colo. 491, 104 P. 1045 (1909).

Legal local governmental indebtedness which existed prior to the adoption of the amendment to this section in 1888 might have been funded as the original law then stood and in accordance with its limitations, although the constitution did not expressly authorize the act of funding. If such indebtedness could be funded under the constitution as it existed before 1888, it could also be refunded. Manly v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 46 Colo. 491, 104 P. 1045 (1909).

Bond issuance by urban renewal authority constitutional. A proposed bond issuance by the Denver urban renewal authority of tax-allocation bonds pursuant to § 31-25-107 (9) did not violate the constitutional debt limitation provision of this section or conflict with Denver's charter debt limitation provision A6.17. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

Expenditures that do not materially depart from the purpose of a bond measure and necessary expenditures incidental to an authorized purpose are properly within a municipality's discretion and, therefore, permissible. Busse v. City of Golden, 73 P.3d 660 (Colo. 2003).

B. Approval by Electors.

"Taxpaying electors". Whenever the term "taxpaying electors" appears in the Colorado constitution and in the Denver charter, it is construed to mean merely "electors". Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

As to restriction of electors to those paying property tax within preceding year under former § 8 of art. XI, Colo. Const., see Deti v. City of Durango, 136 Colo. 272, 316 P.2d 579 (1957).

Purposes for which indebtedness to be created should be submitted separately to voters. City of Denver v. Hayes, 28 Colo. 110, 63 P. 311 (1900); City & County of Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 P. 1066 (1905).

School bond election may relate to acquisition, construction, and equipping of separate facilities without offending the requirement that the submission of such matters to the voters be limited to a single proposition or purpose. Abts v. Bd. of Educ., 622 P.2d 518 (Colo. 1980).

Test to determine validity of bond issue having more than one object or funding more than one structure is whether there exists a natural relationship between the various structures or objects united in one proposition so that they form but one rounded whole. Abts v. Bd. of Educ., 622 P.2d 518 (Colo. 1980).

Advance voter approval requirement held satisfied by 1984 approval of issuance of general obligation bonds. The incurment of debt and the repayment of that debt are issues that are so intertwined that they may properly be submitted to the voters as a single subject. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

There is no conflict between this section and art. X, § 20. Bolt v. Arapahoe County Sch. Dist. No. 6, 898 P.2d 525 (Colo. 1995).

IV. WATER SUPPLY EXCEPTION.

Section excepts debts created for supplying water. By this section special exception to the prohibition against the lending of credit by a local government, expressed in section 1 of this article, is made in favor of the power of local governments to create debts for supplying themselves with water for irrigation, for suppressing fires, and for domestic use; and there seems to be no limit to the extent of the debts which may be incurred for such purposes. Nat'l Bank v. Town of Granada, 41 F. 87, reh'g granted on other grounds, 44 F. 262 (D. Colo. 1890).

Although section does not prevent general assembly from prescribing conditions as to water supply exemptions. While this section of the constitution exempts debts incurred for supplying water to a local government from the special limitations therein, it does not prevent the general assembly from otherwise prescribing conditions. City of Aurora v. Krauss, 99 Colo. 12, 59 P.2d 79 (1936).

Section 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., did not repeal the exception as to debts contracted for supplying water. Section 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., providing that a self-chartered city shall have certain powers including power to construct waterworks and that "it shall have power to issue bonds upon the vote of the taxpaying electors in any amount necessary to carry out said powers or purposes as may by the charter be provided" does not repeal the exception in this section as to debts contracted for supplying water. Newton v. City of Ft. Collins, 78 Colo. 380, 241 P. 1114 (1925).

Section 7. State and political subdivisions may give assistance to any political subdivision. No provision of this constitution shall be construed to prevent the state or any political subdivision from giving direct or indirect financial support to any political subdivision as may be authorized by general statute.

ARTICLE XII
Officers

Section 1. When office expires - suspension by law. Every person holding any civil office under the state or any municipality therein, shall, unless removed according to law, exercise the duties of such office until his successor is duly qualified; but this shall not apply to members of the general assembly, nor to members of any board or assembly, two or more of whom are elected at the same time. The general assembly may, by law, provide for suspending any officer in his functions pending impeachment or prosecution for misconduct in office.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 63.

ANNOTATION

Language of this section is as clear and definite as human language can be. People ex rel. Lamb v. Shaffer, 90 Colo. 432, 9 P.2d 612 (1932).

"According to law", in this section, can have no other construction than that such officers shall be removed as provided by the constitution or statute law. Trimble v. People ex rel. Phelps, 19 Colo. 187, 34 P. 981 (1893); Burkholder v. People ex rel. Nazarene, 59 Colo. 99, 147 P. 347 (1915).

Meaning of "exercise the duties". The provision of this section that the officer shall "exercise the duties" is a qualification of the common-law rule that an incumbent shall hold over until his successor is appointed and qualified, if the words "hold over" mean " "continue to hold the office". That this provision was intended as such qualification gains some support from the language of § 6 of art. IV, Colo. Const., which provides that, in case of vacancy, the governor shall appoint a fit person to "discharge the duties" of the office. Here it is plain that the words "discharge the duties" are used in contradistinction to the words "fill the office". People ex rel. Griffith v. Scott, 52 Colo. 59, 120 P. 126 (1911); Walsh v. People ex rel. McClenahan, 72 Colo. 406, 211 P. 646 (1922); People ex rel. Lamm v. Banta, 189 Colo. 474, 542 P.2d 377 (1975).

Section guards against vacancy in public office. The evident purpose of the provision that a civil officer shall exercise the duties of his office until his successor is duly qualified is to prevent the interruption in public business which results from a vacancy in office. Clark v. Duvall, 61 Colo. 76, 156 P. 144 (1916).

And vacancy occurs when term of office expires. Because the language of this section defines an officer who holds over as a mere "locum tenens" or, in other words, a de facto officer, based on this definition, a vacancy occurs when the term of office expires. People ex rel. Lamm v. Banta, 189 Colo. 474, 542 P.2d 377 (1975).

Expiration of incumbent's term creates vacancy, within the meaning of § 6 of art. IV, Colo. Const., notwithstanding this section. Walsh v. People ex rel. McClenahan, 72 Colo. 406, 211 P. 646 (1922).

Section applicable to mayor of municipal corporation. This section recognizes the mayor of a municipal corporation as an officer who is entitled, unless removed according to law, to exercise the duties of his office until his successor is duly qualified. Londoner v. People ex rel. Barton, 15 Colo. 557, 26 P. 135 (1890); Bd. of Trustees v. People ex rel. Keith, 13 Colo. App. 553, 59 P. 72 (1899).

And to county judges. This section authorizes the incumbent of the office of county judge and other civil offices, to exercise the duties of such office until his successor is duly qualified. People v. Boughton, 5 Colo. 487 (1880).

But not to board of directors of municipal library. Under this section, members of the board of directors of a municipal library whose terms of office have expired do not hold over until their successors have qualified. People ex rel. Lamb v. Shaffer, 90 Colo. 432, 9 P.2d 612 (1932).

Official acts of county commissioner whose term of office has expired, but whose successor has not qualified, are valid. People ex rel. Williams v. Reid, 11 Colo. 138, 17 P. 302 (1887).

Applied in Carlile v. Henderson, 17 Colo. 532, 31 P. 117 (1892); People ex rel. Ralston v. Herring, 30 Colo. 445, 71 P. 413 (1902); People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); Shinn v. People ex rel. Rush, 59 Colo. 509, 149 P. 623 (1915); Gibbs v. People ex rel. Watts, 66 Colo. 414, 182 P. 894 (1919); People ex rel. Beach v. Chew, 67 Colo. 394, 179 P. 812 (1919).

Section 2. Personal attention required. No person shall hold any office or employment of trust or profit, under the laws of the state or any ordinance of any municipality therein, without devoting his personal attention to the duties of the same.

Section 3. Defaulting collector disqualified from office. No person who is now or hereafter may become a collector or receiver of public money, or the deputy or assistant of such collector or receiver, and who shall have become a defaulter in his office, shall be eligible to or assume the duties of any office of trust or profit in this state, under the laws thereof, or of any municipality therein, until he shall have accounted for and paid over all public money for which he may be accountable.

Section 5. Investigation of state and county treasurers. The district court of each county shall, at each term thereof, specially give in charge to the grand jury, if there be one, the laws regulating the accountability of the county treasurer, and shall appoint a committee of such grand jury, or of other reputable persons not exceeding five, to investigate the official accounts and affairs of the treasurer of such county, and report to the court the condition thereof. The judge of the district court may appoint a like committee in vacation at any time, but not oftener than once in every three months. The district court of the county wherein the seat of government may be shall have the like power to appoint committees to investigate the official accounts and affairs of the state treasurer and the auditor of state.

Section 6. Bribery of officers defined. Any civil officer or member of the general assembly who shall solicit, demand or receive, or consent to receive, directly or indirectly, for himself or for another, from any company, corporation or person, any money, office, appointment, employment, testimonial, reward, thing of value or enjoyment or of personal advantage or promise thereof, for his vote, official influence or action, or for withholding the same, or with an understanding that his official influence or action shall be in any way influenced thereby, or who shall solicit or demand any such money or advantage, matter or thing aforesaid for another, as the consideration of his vote, official influence or action, or for withholding the same, or shall give or withhold his vote, official influence or action, in consideration of the payment or promise of such money, advantage, matter or thing to another, shall be held guilty of bribery, or solicitation of bribery, as the case may be, within the meaning of this constitution, and shall incur the disabilities provided thereby for such offense, and such additional punishment as is or shall be prescribed by law.

Section 7. Bribery - corrupt solicitation. (1) Any person who directly or indirectly offers, gives, or promises any money or thing of value or privilege to any member of the general assembly or to any other public officer in the executive or judicial department of the state government to influence him in the performance of any of his public or official powers or duties is guilty of bribery and subject to such punishment therefor as may be prescribed by law.

(2) The offense of corrupt solicitation of members of the general assembly or of public officers of the state or of any political subdivision thereof and any occupation or practice of solicitation of such members or officers to influence their official action shall be defined by law and shall be punished by fine, imprisonment, or both.

Editor's note: The Governor's proclamation date in 1974 was December 20, 1974.

Section 8. Oath of civil officers. Every civil officer, except members of the general assembly and such inferior officers as may be by law exempted, shall, before he enters upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe an oath or affirmation to support the constitution of the United States and of the state of Colorado, and to faithfully perform the duties of the office upon which he shall be about to enter.

ANNOTATION

Medical commissioners not required to take oath of office. Isham v. People, 82 Colo. 550, 262 P. 89 (1927).

Nor hearing officer. A hearing officer possesses no independent power of his own, and therefore his position is that of an employee and not that of a civil officer and there is no requirement that an employee take an oath of office before entering upon his duties. Campbell v. State, 176 Colo. 202, 491 P.2d 1385 (1971).

Applicability to executive officers. With respect to executive officers, this section applies only to those elected officials named in § 1 of art. IV, Colo. Const. Hedstrom v. Motor Vehicle Div., 662 P.2d 173 (Colo. 1983).

Applied in People v. Western Union Tel. Co., 70 Colo. 90, 198 P. 146 (1921); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Fifty-First Gen. Ass'y, 198 Colo. 302, 599 P.2d 887 (1979).

Section 9. Oaths - where filed. Officers of the executive department and judges of the supreme and district courts, and district attorneys, shall file their oaths of office with the secretary of state; every other officer shall file his oath of office with the county clerk of the county wherein he shall have been elected.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 65.

ANNOTATION

Failure to file paperwork for oath with secretary of state in a timely fashion does not create a permanent vacancy. No permanent vacancy is created if an elected district attorney misses the deadline to timely file the necessary paperwork for his or her oath and bond requirements with the secretary of state. Therefore, the elected district attorney is authorized to prosecute defendants during a period of a temporary defect. The district attorney acts as a de facto officer whose acts performed in the discharge of his official duties were valid and binding. People v. Scott, 116 P.3d 1231 (Colo. App. 2004).

Deputy district attorneys are not "every other officer" for purposes of art. XII, § 9, because they are appointed not elected; thus, § 20-1-201 (3) controls. Section 20-1-201 (3) requires that deputy districts attorneys must file their oath with the secretary of state. Leske v. Golder, 124 P.3d 863 (Colo. App. 2005).

Applied in Isham v. People, 82 Colo. 550, 262 P. 89 (1927).

Section 10. Refusal to qualify - vacancy. If any person elected or appointed to any office shall refuse or neglect to qualify therein within the time prescribed by law, such office shall be deemed vacant.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, "One Year Review of Constitutional Law", see 41 Den. L. Ctr. J. 77 (1964).

This section and § 9 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., must be read and construed together. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Provisions of § 9 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., are limited by this and following section. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909).

"Vacancy" relates to term of office as well as to office itself, either or both, according to the facts of the particular case. People ex rel. Bentley v. Le Fevre, 21 Colo. 218, 40 P. 882 (1895); Gibbs v. People ex rel. Watts, 66 Colo. 414, 182 P. 894 (1919); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

The word "vacancy", as used in modern times, relates not only to the office which is to be filled, but to the term for which the appointment is to be made. It is constantly used in statutes and constitutions with reference to both office and tenure, and the proper interpretation of the word, when power is given to an executive or a board to fill a vacancy, is a power to fill the office designated for the unexpired term which may remain after the death, removal, or resignation of the antecedent incumbent. When the incumbent dies, is removed, or resigns, there is a vacancy not only in the office, but in the term, for which he was appointed, if that was for a definite period. Monash v. Rhodes, 11 Colo. App. 404, 53 P. 236 (1898), aff'd, 27 Colo. 235, 60 P. 569 (1900); People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909).

Right to office contingent upon qualifying. When a person is elected to a term, under the constitution, a contingent or inchoate right to the office is vested in him, which becomes absolute upon his qualification. He is elected to the term and no one else can enter therein until he is ousted therefrom, which can never be until the commencement of the term. When he does not qualify, the contingent right is gone. There is no one legally entitled to the term, and when the date of the term arrives there is a vacancy under the constitution, though there be some one actually and legally performing the duties of the office. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909).

A person chosen to fill a term of office is not permitted to assume the duties of the office until he files a bond and oath of office, which must be done before the commencement of the term, or the office shall be deemed vacant. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

And vacancy occurs whether failure to qualify comes through wilful neglect, refusal, or impossibility because of death. Gibbs v. People ex rel. Watts, 66 Colo. 414, 182 P. 894 (1919).

If one entitled to a new term on the arrival of the term does not appear and qualify, though the reason thereof be death, there is a vacancy in the office for the term. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Section recognizes legal vacancy although incumbent continues to perform duties of office. This section recognizes a legal vacancy that will authorize the appointment of a successor, even though nothing has happened to the real incumbent, and he is continuing to perform the duties of the office. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P. 2d 275 (1963).

Incumbent of previous term holds over where there is a vacancy in an office, until an appointment is made. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Vacancy exists when one term expires and new term of office begins. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Failure to file paperwork for oath with secretary of state in a timely fashion does not create a permanent vacancy. No permanent vacancy is created if an elected district attorney misses the deadline to timely file the necessary paperwork for his or her oath and bond requirements with the secretary of state. Therefore, the elected district attorney is authorized to prosecute defendants during a period of a temporary defect. The district attorney acts as a de facto officer whose acts performed in the discharge of his official duties were valid and binding. People v. Scott, 116 P.3d 1231 (Colo. App. 2004).

Section 11. Elected public officers - term - salary - vacancy. No law shall extend the term of any elected public officer after his election or appointment nor shall the salary of any elected public officer be increased or decreased during the term of office for which he was elected. The term of office of any officer elected to fill a vacancy shall terminate at the expiration of the term during which the vacancy occurred.

ANNOTATION

Appointment of qualified person ends previous term. When an appointment to fill a vacancy is made and the appointee qualifies, the previous term and the rights of the incumbent to the office are ended. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Appointee holds office until next general election, if no new term intervenes between the time of his appointment and the time of such election. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

And has same power as predecessor. A person elected or appointed to fill a vacancy in an unexpired term of a public office, such as sheriff, holds precisely as his predecessor would have held had he continued in office, and in no other way; and has the same rights, and none other, that such predecessor would have had. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

District attorney is a state public officer. Tisdel v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 621 P.2d 1357 (Colo. 1980).

Prohibition against modifying public officer's salary intended to deter appropriative body's influence. The prohibition against modifying an elected public officer's salary during his term of office is intended to deter the appropriative body from influencing a public officer by threat or promise of salary change and to discourage the officer from himself seeking increased compensation. Tisdel v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 621 P.2d 1357 (Colo. 1980).

Applied in Kallenberger v. Buchanan, 649 P.2d 314 (Colo. 1982).

Section 13. State personnel system - merit system. (1) Appointments and promotions to offices and employments in the state personnel system shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained by a comparative analysis of candidates based on objective criteria without regard to race, creed, color, or political affiliation. A numerical or nonnumerical method may be used for the comparative analysis of candidates.

(2) (a) The state personnel system shall comprise all appointive public officers and employees of the state, except the following:

(I) Members of the public utilities commission, the industrial commission of Colorado, the state board of land commissioners, the Colorado tax commission, the state parole board, and the state personnel board;

(II) Members of any board or commission serving without compensation except for per diem allowances provided by law and reimbursement of expenses;

(III) The employees in the offices of the governor and the lieutenant governor whose functions are confined to such offices and whose duties are concerned only with the administration thereof;

(IV) Appointees to fill vacancies in elective offices;

(V) One deputy of each elective officer other than the governor and lieutenant governor specified in section 1 of article IV of this constitution;

(VI) Officers otherwise specified in this constitution;

(VII) Faculty members of educational institutions and departments not reformatory or charitable in character, and such administrators thereof as may be exempt by law;

(VIII) Students and inmates in state educational or other institutions employed therein;

(IX) Attorneys at law serving as assistant attorneys general;

(X) Members, officers, and employees of the legislative and judicial departments of the state, unless otherwise specifically provided in this constitution;

(XI) Subject to the approval of the state personnel director, the following persons from each principal department: Deputy department heads, chief financial officers, public information officers, legislative liaisons, human resource directors, and executive assistants to the department heads; and

(XII) Subject to the approval of the state personnel director, senior executive service employees.

(b) The total number of employees exempted from the state personnel system pursuant to subparagraphs (XI) and (XII) of paragraph (a) of this subsection (2) shall not exceed an amount equal to one percent of the total number of persons in the state personnel system.

(3) Officers and employees within the judicial department, other than judges and justices, may be included within the personnel system of the state upon determination by the supreme court, sitting en banc, that such would be in the best interests of the state.

(4) Where authorized by law, any political subdivision of this state may contract with the state personnel board for personnel services.

(5) The person to be appointed to any position under the state personnel system shall be one of the six persons ranking highest on the eligible list for such position, or such lesser number as qualify, as determined from the comparative analysis process, subject to limitations set forth in rules of the state personnel board applicable to multiple appointments from any such list.

(6) (a) Except as set forth in paragraph (b) of this subsection (6), all appointees shall reside in the state, but applications need not be limited to residents of the state as to those positions the state personnel board or the state personnel director determines cannot be readily filled from among residents of this state.

(b) If a position is for work that is to be performed primarily at a location that is within thirty miles of the state border:

(I) Applications for the position are not limited to residents of the state; and

(II) An appointee to the position is not required to be a resident of the state.

(7) The head of each principal department shall be the appointing authority for the employees of his office and for heads of divisions, within the personnel system, ranking next below the head of such department. Heads of such divisions shall be the appointing authorities for all positions in the personnel system within their respective divisions. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect the supreme executive powers of the governor prescribed in section 2 of article IV of this constitution.

(8) Persons in the personnel system of the state shall hold their respective positions during efficient service or until reaching retirement age, as provided by law. They shall be graded and compensated according to standards of efficient service which shall be the same for all persons having like duties. A person certified to any class or position in the personnel system may be dismissed, suspended, or otherwise disciplined by the appointing authority upon written findings of failure to comply with standards of efficient service or competence, or for willful misconduct, willful failure or inability to perform his duties, or final conviction of a felony or any other offense which involves moral turpitude, or written charges thereof may be filed by any person with the appointing authority, which shall be promptly determined. Any action of the appointing authority taken under this subsection shall be subject to appeal to the state personnel board, with the right to be heard thereby in person or by counsel, or both.

(9) (a) The state personnel director may authorize the temporary employment of persons, not to exceed nine months, during which time an eligible list shall be provided for permanent positions. No other temporary or emergency employment shall be permitted under the state personnel system.

(b) Nothing in paragraph (a) of this subsection (9) shall be construed as permitting the appointment of a temporary employee for the purpose of eliminating a permanent position from the state personnel system.

(10) The state personnel board shall establish probationary periods for all persons initially appointed, but not to exceed twelve months for any class or position. After satisfactory completion of any such period, the person shall be certified to such class or position within the personnel system, but unsatisfactory performance shall be grounds for dismissal by the appointing authority during such period without right of appeal.

(11) Persons certified to classes and positions under the classified civil service of the state immediately prior to July 1, 1971, persons having served for six months or more as provisional or acting provisional employees in such positions immediately prior to such date, and all persons having served six months or more in positions not within the classified civil service immediately prior to such date but included in the personnel system by this section, shall be certified to comparable positions, and grades and classifications, under the personnel system, and shall not be subject to probationary periods of employment. All other persons in positions under the personnel system shall be subject to the provisions of this section concerning initial appointment on or after such date.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, "Some Legal Aspects of the Colorado Coal Strike", see 4 Den. B. Ass'n Rec. 22 (Dec. 1927). For note, "Colorado's Ombudsman Office", see 45 Den. L. J. 93 (1969).

Purpose of state personnel system legislation is to protect employees from arbitrary and capricious political action and to insure employment during good behavior. Such protection applies during authorized service. Tenure, however, is not meant to guarantee duration of employment for any number of set years or over any particular period of time. Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

This section and state personnel system act, § 24-50-101 et seq., are liberally construed so as to accomplish their purpose, which is to promote efficiency in the state personnel system by appointing or employing those only who, upon examination, have shown their qualification for the office or position. Shinn v. People ex rel. Rush, 59 Colo. 509, 149 P. 623 (1915); Roberts v. People ex rel. Dunbar, 81 Colo. 338, 255 P. 461 (1927).

This section is not repugnant to § 9 of art. IX, Colo. Const., relating to the terms of the state board of land commissioners. People ex rel. Murphy v. Field, 66 Colo. 367, 181 P. 526 (1919).

And not applicable to judicial branch employees. The provisions of this section as to the terms and conditions of employment of the employees of the executive branch of Colorado's government do not apply to those who work in the judicial department. Hamm v. Scott, 426 F. Supp. 950 (D. Colo. 1977).

Amendment to this section in 1970 replaced "rule of one" with "rule of three" so that appointments are to be filled by one of three top ranked persons on the eligible list rather than automatically by the top ranked person. Haines v. Colo. State Pers. Bd., 39 Colo. App. 459, 566 P.2d 1088 (1977).

Personnel rule adopted for filling multiple vacancies valid. Rule 4-7-2(b) of the Colorado state personnel system, adopted for filling multiple vacancies, whereby the Colorado state personnel board added another individual to the eligible list as each position was filled, thereby providing a list of three applicants for each of the positions, was not in conflict with subsection (5) of this section, and was valid. Haines v. Colo. State Pers. Bd., 39 Colo. App. 459, 566 P.2d 1088 (1977).

Department heads make determination as to what is needed and the state personnel board cannot substitute its judgment for that of other departmental heads as to what positions should be filled. Vessa v. Johnson, 135 Colo. 284, 310 P.2d 564 (1957).

If request from proper officials is made, the state personnel board fills such position from an eligible list if such exists; if such list does not exist, it then holds a competitive examination for the position, and in the meantime, may make a provisional appointment until the results of the examination are obtained. Vessa v. Johnson, 135 Colo. 284, 310 P.2d 564 (1957).

Promotions result only from competitive examinations. This section makes it imperative that promotions shall result only from competitive examinations and shall be according to seniority. Schmidt v. Hurst, 109 Colo. 207, 124 P.2d 235 (1942).

Under this section a promotion is invalid without a competitive test, in which the person ascertained to be the most fit and of the highest excellence is entitled to appointment, notwithstanding any rule to the contrary. Schmidt v. Hurst, 109 Colo. 207, 124 P.2d 235 (1942).

And may not be made under name of transfers. Attempts to make promotions under the name of transfers are in conflict with the state personnel regulations. Transfers, without any requirements as to examinations, can only be made when they do not in fact constitute promotions. Schmidt v. Hurst, 109 Colo. 207, 124 P.2d 235 (1942).

Mode of examination discretionary. The fact that a hearing officer was appointed on the basis of an oral examination does not invalidate his appointment, because the mode of examination is discretionary with the state personnel board. Campbell v. State, 176 Colo. 202, 491 P.2d 1385 (1971).

Close familial relationship between an employment applicant and a prospective supervisor properly relates to that applicant's fitness for the position. Butero v. Dept. of Hwys., 772 P.2d 633 (Colo. App. 1988).

General assembly may not avoid this section by abolishing office and creating new one with duties substantially the same, to which new officers are appointed. People ex rel. Kelly v. Milliken, 74 Colo. 456, 223 P. 40 (1924); Colo. State Civil Serv. Employees Ass'n v. Love, 167 Colo. 436, 448 P.2d 624 (1968).

A certified position may not be abolished and the incumbent employee terminated if a new position is created with substantially the same duties and responsibilities as the old position but filled by another employee. Bardsley v. Dept. of Pub. Safety, 870 P.2d 641 (Colo. App. 1994).

And change in nomenclature from "officer" to "commissioner" does not change essence of position nor thereby destroy the validity of the person's qualification or appointment. Campbell v. State, 176 Colo. 202, 491 P.2d 1385 (1971).

But subsection (8) does not prohibit payment of identical salaries to persons performing dissimilar functions. The requirement that state employees performing "like" or similar services be graded and compensated according to the same standard neither expressly nor impliedly prohibits identical compensation to state employees performing unlike or dissimilar services. Dempsy v. Romer, 825 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

Personnel provisions relating to university of Colorado's university hospital held unconstitutional under this section where employees could keep their jobs at reorganized hospital only by giving up rights and guarantees of state personnel system. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Bd. of Regents, 804 P.2d 138 (Colo. 1990) (decided prior to the 1991 repeal of § 23-21-401 et seq.).

Substantially equivalent employment. In determining if the university's unconditional offer to re-employ a former public safety sergeant who was laid off due to reorganization as a public officer is substantially equivalent employment, a comparison must be made between the unarmed guard position he would have occupied if there had been no contracting out and the public safety position that was offered. Sutton v. Univ. of S. Colo., 870 P.2d 650 (Colo. App. 1994).

Agreement between office of youth services and metropolitan state college (Metro) to provide educational services at a juvenile corrections facility does not violate this section because the teachers are fundamentally employees of Metro and because no classified employees were separated involuntarily from their protected positions. Each teacher was given the option of remaining within the classified system with no adverse impact on pay, status, seniority, or benefits. Every former teacher at the facility could have remained within the civil service system. Those who decided to remain were transferred--a step wholly within the administrative authority of the department of human services. Dept. of Human Servs. v. May, 1 P.3d 159 (Colo. 2000).

Temporary appointment ceases upon certification of permanent appointment. A temporary appointment to office under the state personnel system ceases on the date upon which the board certifies to the appointing power a person for permanent appointment upon completion of an eligible list. Roberts v. People ex rel. Dunbar, 81 Colo. 338, 255 P. 461 (1927).

Section 24-50-114 (2), which provides for temporary appointments in its entirety, is constitutional. Temporary appointment for a period of time exceeding six months was not unconstitutional under subsections (7) and (9) of this section. Neoplan USA Corp. v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 778 P.2d 312 (Colo. App. 1989).

Section 24-50-115 (6) establishing probationary periods for new employees, those transferred to different positions at their request, and those reallocated to a higher pay grade is constitutional and consistent with subsection (10) of this section, which mandates probationary periods for newly appointed employees. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Lamm, 677 P.2d 1350 (Colo. 1984) (decided prior to 1984 amendment to § 24-50-115 (6)).

Exception in subsection (9) permitting temporary appointments of up to six months cannot be given a strained construction, and § 24-50-114 (2) is unconstitutional to the extent that it purports to allow employment beyond six months when the employee works no more than 1040 hours, the number of hours an employee working full time for six months would work. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Lamm, 677 P.2d 1350 (Colo. 1984).

Secretary of state did not violate subsection (9) in hiring temporary workers to examine a large number of ballot petitions. The secretary of state's actions were justified because she was inundated with a large number of petitions that her office was statutorily required to review in a limited number of days. McClellan v. Meyer, 900 P.2d 24 (Colo. 1995).

Section 24-50-128, is not in conflict with the constitution. Neoplan USA Corp. v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 778 P.2d 312 (Colo. App. 1989).

Contracts with private sector vendors for services pursuant to § 24-50-128 violate this section which sets forth the state personnel system structure, including provision for terminating positions historically performed by state employees. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Emp. v. Dept. of Hwys., 809 P.2d 988 (Colo. 1991).

Hiring of private contractors to obtain services previously performed by classified state employees implicates this section. An agency's attempt thereby to circumvent the protections accorded state personnel system employees, in the absence of applicable statutory or regulatory standards, is invalid. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Dept. of Hwys., 809 P.2d 988 (Colo. 1991); Horrell v. Dept. of Admin., 861 P.2d 1194 (Colo. 1993).

The decision to eliminate a public safety sergeant position and to replace armed public safety officers with unarmed guards on a university police force had an adverse effect on complainants' working conditions, but the layoffs were due to the overall reorganization, not the decision to contract out some of the police work. Therefore, the complainants' injuries are not measured by the pay and benefits they would have received in the same positions but by the pay and benefits they would have received if they had continued employment in the available positions. Sutton v. Univ. of S. Colo., 870 P.2d 650 (Colo. App. 1994).

Public safety sergeant who is laid off from a university police force due to a reorganization is not entitled to reinstatement to the position of public safety officer, unless complainant shows that had there been no contracting out, complainant reasonably could have expected to be advanced to the position of public safety officer. Sutton v. Univ. of S. Colo., 870 P.2d 650 (Colo. App. 1994).

Conditions of state employment, or election to state office, are to be limited to those either prescribed in the constitution, enumerated in applicable statutes, or implemented, where applicable, by the state personnel board. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

But imposition of tax upon state employees does not interfere with or add additional qualifications for state employment, for payment of the tax is not a prerequisite to being appointed or elected, nor does continuation to the state position depend on payment of the tax. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Power to fix compensation remains in general assembly. The power to fix compensation within the classified state personnel system still abides in the general assembly. Vivian v. Bloom, 115 Colo. 579, 177 P.2d 541 (1947); Dempsy v. Romer, 825 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

But power is limited by this section. While authority of the assembly to fix compensation has not been transferred by the amendment from the assembly to the board, its authority has been limited thereby. Under this amendment the assembly can no longer fix the salary of an individual employee, but only the salary of each class and grade as established by the state personnel board. Thus equal salaries for all persons having like classification are assured. Vivian v. Bloom, 115 Colo. 579, 177 P.2d 541 (1947); Dempsy v. Romer, 825 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

Thus assembly has no authority to discriminate in regard to salaries between members of any class and grade as established by the state personnel board. Vivian v. Bloom, 115 Colo. 579, 177 P.2d 541 (1947); Dempsy v. Romer, 825 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

Authority under this section and § 14 of the state personnel director to classify state employees does not deprive the general assembly of the ultimate authority for establishing maximum monthly salary levels for employees. Dempsy v. Romer, 825 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

To accord status of certified state employee to surgeon acting as chief of surgery at state hospital while receiving compensation exceeding that authorized by law would violate an express requirement of the constitution under subsection (8) of this section. This would thwart mandate that state employees performing similar duties receive the same compensation. Fogel v. Colo. State Hospital, 778 P.2d 318 (Colo. App. 1989).

Although authority may be delegated. In the fixing of salaries the assembly has the power of delegation of its authority, but to whomever the authority may be delegated, it is still subject to the limitation imposed by this amendment. Vivian v. Bloom, 115 Colo. 579, 177 P.2d 541 (1947).

Constitutionality of § 24-50-104 (3) (g). State personnel director's authority under § 24-50-104 (3)(f) and (3)(g), regarding allocation of individual positions, derives from director's duty under section 14 of this article to administer day-to-day activities of state personnel system and is distinctly separate from personnel board's authority under this section to hear appeals from disciplinary decisions. Therefore, paragraph (g) does not intrude upon the board's exclusive jurisdiction. Renteria v. State Dept. of Pers., 811 P.2d 797 (Colo. 1991).

Order of dismissal where funds are insufficient to be based on seniority. In case of failure of the assembly to appropriate sufficient funds for the account of any department for payment of the employees at the rate to which they are legally entitled for a full biennium, the proper salary shall nevertheless be paid to all who are employed so long as funds are available and employees shall be dismissed, on failure of appropriations, in accordance with the assembly's restrictions on its appropriation, and the order of seniority rights. Vivian v. Bloom, 115 Colo. 579, 177 P.2d 541 (1947).

State personnel are entitled to longevity pay based on time spent in state service rather than in a particular grade. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Colo. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 31 Colo. App. 369, 505 P.2d 54 (1972).

City of Denver has authority to determine term or tenure of service of its employees, agents and officers, and it follows that it may establish a mandatory retirement age for its firemen without contravening provisions of state personnel system legislation requiring that firemen can only be removed for cause and then only after following the requisite procedure of giving notice and holding a hearing. Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

One holding office unlawfully was not retained upon adoption of merit system. People ex rel. Beach v. Chew, 68 Colo. 158, 187 P. 513 (1920).

The failure of hearing officer to take oath of office is not fatal to the effective performance of his duties. Campbell v. State, 176 Colo. 202, 491 P.2d 1385 (1971).

Constitutionality of § 24-50-101 (3)(a). Statute elaborates the constitutional requirement that employment decisions be based on merit and fitness as established by competitive tests and as such cleaves to the constitutional standard for state employee selection. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Lamm, 677 P.2d 1350 (Colo. 1984).

Section 24-50-104 (3)(g) unconstitutional under subsection (1) of this section because the statute's wording of "upward allocation of a position" read together with "movement of the incumbent employee with his position" is nothing but a euphemistic description of a promotion and as such must comply with the requirements of this section for competitive tests, etc. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Lamm, 677 P.2d 1350 (Colo. 1984) (decided prior to 1984 repeal and reenactment of § 24-50-104 (3)(g)).

For review of historical background relative to appointment of state personnel, see Haines v. Colo. State Pers. Bd., 39 Colo. App. 459, 566 P.2d 1088 (1977).

II. OFFICERS TO WHOM SECTION APPLICABLE.

Merit system in government is generally limited so as to exclude from its operation certain classes of public officers and employees; such as those made by law subject to confirmation by legislative bodies, heads of departments, professional experts, positions of a confidential nature, and those involving the exercise of judgment and discretion in important matters, as well as judges, their clerks and confidential employees. Bd. of Educ. v. Spurlin, 141 Colo. 508, 349 P.2d 357 (1960).

This section applies only to officers and employees of state, the word "state" being used in the sense of employer, or the entity for whom the service is performed, rather than as a territorial limitation. People ex rel. Walker v. Higgins, 67 Colo. 441, 184

P. 365 (1919); People ex rel. Riordan v. Hersey, 69 Colo. 492, 196 P. 180 (1921).

This section embraces officers and employees of the state only. Although legislative officers are constitutional officers, they are not state officers. Officers of the court are not state officers. This section applies only to officers and employees of the executive branch of state government. Colo. State Civil Serv. Employees Ass'n v. Love, 167 Colo. 436, 448 P.2d 624 (1968).

Officers and employees of court are not within terms of this section, unless the supreme court so directs. People ex rel. Riordan v. Hersey, 69 Colo. 492, 196 P. 180 (1921); In re Interrogatory of the Governor, 162 Colo. 188, 425 P.2d 31 (1967).

Clerk of court and his deputies are not state officers and are not under the state personnel system. People ex rel. Fisher v. Luxford, 71 Colo. 442, 207 P. 477 (1922).

Jury commissioner is not state officer. He is an officer of the court, exercising judicial functions. People ex rel. Riordan v. Hersey, 69 Colo. 492, 196 P. 180 (1921).

Court bailiffs are officers of court, not state officers and are not within the terms of this section. People ex rel. Clifford v. Morley, 67 Colo. 331, 184 P. 386 (1919).

Public trustee is not appointive state officer and is not subject to the provisions of the state personnel system contained in this section. Chambers v. People ex rel. Storer, 70 Colo. 496, 202 P. 1081 (1921).

Employees in county departments of public welfare are not state employees in the classified state personnel system as provided by this section. However, the state department of public welfare may provide for the selection, retention, and promotion of all such employees on a basis of merit and fitness. In re Employees in County Welfare Dep'ts, 106 Colo. 475, 106 P.2d 464 (1940).

Also educators excluded. It was the intention in adopting this section to exclude from the classified state personnel system all educators except those who teach in institutions reformatory or charitable in character. The officials of the department of education involved are trained educators. They are teachers by training and although they do not practice their profession in classrooms but are for the most part engaged in research, planning and promulgation of plans, it is impossible to draw a distinction between them and teachers whose activities are devoted directly to the classroom. Bd. of Educ. v. Spurlin, 141 Colo. 508, 349 P.2d 357 (1960).

"Educational institution" is subject to both narrow and broad interpretation and its particular meaning depends not alone on definitions but also on the history of the amendment as a whole, including the intent of the framers, the context in which it appears, together with the applicable facts. Bd. of Educ. v. Spurlin, 141 Colo. 508, 349 P.2d 357 (1960).

But commissioner of insurance is within this section. He is a state officer, and is not appointed to perform judicial functions, and is within the personnel system of the state. Wilson v. People ex rel. Cochrane, 71 Colo. 456, 208 P. 479 (1922).

And water commissioner. Considering that the water commissioner is a peace officer, authorized by statute to arrest and take before the magistrate, anyone interfering with him in his duties, or disobeying his orders; that his duties concern the whole state; that he is part of the system prescribed by the statute for the distribution of water for irrigation -- one principal purpose of which is the preservation of the public peace -- and is controlled only by state authority, held that he is an officer of the state. People ex rel. Walker v. Higgins, 67 Colo. 441, 184 P. 365 (1919).

And chief inspector of coal mines. From the time of the passage of this section a chief inspector of coal mines, theretofore appointed for a four-year term, held his office thereunder and not under his original appointment. His salary having been thereafter increased by legislative enactment, and that increase approved by the state personnel board, the presumption is that it was so increased "according to standards of efficient service", and there is no constitutional prohibition barring him from receiving the benefit thereof. People ex rel. Dalrymple v. Stong, 67 Colo. 599, 189 P. 27 (1920).

And office of state bank commissioner is under classified state personnel system. People ex rel. Beardsley v. Harl, 109 Colo. 223, 124 P.2d 233 (1942).

And chief of Colorado state patrol is to be appointed by the head of the state department of highways and the appointment must be made from a list of three persons ranking highest on the eligible list for such position as determined from a competitive test of competence administered by the Colorado state personnel board. Schippers v. Colo. State Pers. Bd., 178 Colo. 154, 496 P.2d 307 (1972).

III. POWER OF REMOVAL.

Employee of state who is within this section cannot be discharged without hearing on the charges preferred against him. Bd. of Capitol Managers v. Rusan, 72 Colo. 197, 210 P. 328 (1922).

But provisional employee not entitled to such hearing. A provisional employee in the service of the state, who has not been appointed according to merit and fitness as ascertained by competitive examination, is not in the classified service, and is not entitled to a hearing before removal. Wilson v. People ex rel. Cochrane, 71 Colo. 456, 208 P. 479 (1922); Getty v. Witter, 107 Colo. 302, 111 P.2d 636 (1941).

A provisional appointee is not entitled either to notice or a hearing as a condition precedent to removal. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Cummings, 83 Colo. 379, 265 P. 687 (1928).

Public employee entitled to fair process for determining employment violations. A public employee is entitled to fair process for determining whether he or she violated the substantive conditions of their employment. Chiappe v. State Pers. Bd., 622 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1981).

But he cannot redefine the substance of rules which the public agency adopts in order to accomplish its legitimate objectives. Chiappe v. State Pers. Bd., 622 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1981).

State personnel board has power to remove employees upon charges of inefficiency being filed and after a hearing, if the evidence supports the charge. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hoag, 88 Colo. 169, 293 P. 338 (1922).

And courts cannot interfere if evidence sufficient. If the evidence at any hearing is sufficient to justify the state personnel board in the exercise of its discretionary power of removal, the courts are powerless to interfere with such exercise of discretion. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hoag, 88 Colo. 169, 293 P. 338 (1922); State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hazlett, 119 Colo. 173, 201 P.2d 616 (1948).

The scope of review in certiorari proceedings, and the authority of courts to interfere with the findings of tribunals vested with exclusive jurisdictions to determine particular issues, have been judicially defined. The supreme court cannot consider herein whether the board's findings are right or wrong, substitute its judgment for that of the board, or interfere in any manner with the board's findings if there is any competent evidence to support the same. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hazlett, 119 Colo. 173, 201 P.2d 616 (1948).

In absence of abuse of personnel board's discretion the supreme court cannot interfere with the judgment of the board. Meredith v. Smith, 166 Colo. 256, 443 P.2d 975 (1968).

However, in some instances courts have power of review. Where a complaint has been made that no sufficient evidence was introduced to support the charges made, the court undoubtedly has the jurisdiction and power to review such proceedings. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hoag, 88 Colo. 169, 293 P. 338 (1930).

Employee given sufficient notice by letter that informed the employee that he would have to defend himself against incidents which occasioned corrective action, in addition to more recent conduct, at meeting to determine final disposition of corrective action taken against employee. McLaughlin v. Levine, 727 P.2d 410 (Colo. App. 1986).

Prior conduct of public employee which was subject of prior corrective action can be considered to determine penalty to be imposed upon determination that disciplinary action was warranted, where prior corrective action letter warned employee that corrective action remained in effect until specific date, and that disciplinary action would be taken in event another serious violation occurred. McLaughlin v. Levine, 727 P.2d 410 (Colo. App. 1986).

Once a person becomes a state employee, he is presumed to be member of classified personnel system with a right to the benefits of that system and a right to be notified and given an opportunity for a hearing before any determination that he is exempt from that system. Salas v. State Pers. Bd., 775 P.2d 57 (Colo. App. 1988).

Probationary employees entitled to predisciplinary meeting regarding unsatisfactory job performance. Where the state promulgates a regulation that imposes on government departments a more stringent standard than that required by the constitution or statutes, due process of law requires that departments adhere to the standard in discharging employees. Dept. of Health v. Donahue, 690 P.2d 243 (Colo. 1984).

But probationary employee of state has no constitutional or statutory right to appeal a dismissal from employment for unsatisfactory performance. Williams v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 926 P.2d 110 (Colo. App. 1996).

Maximum 12-month probationary period may be extended for the length of time an employee is off the payroll for any reason. Zurek v. Dept. of State, 754 P.2d 390 (Colo. App. 1987).

Liberty of public employee may be subjected to comprehensive and substantial governmental restrictions. The liberty of the public employee -- as distinguished from that of the ordinary citizen -- may, under some circumstances, be subjected to comprehensive and substantial governmental restrictions which impede activities at the very core of specifically guaranteed constitutional rights. Chiappe v. State Pers. Bd., 622 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1981).

And public agency decisions presumed regular and constitutional. A presumption of administrative regularity and constitutionality attaches to the multitude of personnel decisions made daily by public agencies. Chiappe v. State Pers. Bd., 622 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1981).

Liberty interest in personal appearance asserted by public employee is not constitutional right. Chiappe v. State Pers. Bd., 622 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1981).

University of Colorado did not act arbitrarily in enforcing a no-beard policy and in making it a condition of continued employment. Chiappe v. State Pers. Bd., 622 P.2d 527 (Colo. 1981).

Probationary employee is entitled to a hearing on an appeal to the board of a dismissal for any disciplinary grounds other than unsatisfactory job performance. Where employee was discharged for making false or deceptive statements on his employment application regarding both his reasons for leaving his previous employment and his criminal record and for failing to report having been charged with the same crime after beginning employment with the department and the employee appealed his discharge, the employee is entitled to a full evidentiary hearing on the merits of his appeal. Maurello v. Dept. of Corrs., 804 P.2d 280 (Colo. App. 1990).

Willful misconduct is not limited only to the violation of written or stated agency rules and no error was made by the state board of personnel in affirming state employee's termination. Bishop v. Dept. of Insts., 831 P.2d 506 (Colo. App. 1992).

Section 14. State personnel board - state personnel director. (1) There is hereby created a state personnel board to consist of five members, three of whom shall be appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate, and two of whom shall be elected by persons certified to classes and positions in the state personnel system in the manner prescribed by law. Each member appointed or elected prior to January 1, 2013, shall serve for a term of five years. Each member appointed or elected on or after January 1, 2013, shall serve for a term of three years. No member shall serve more than two terms of office, regardless of whether a term is a full term or a partial term filling a vacancy. Each member of the board shall be a qualified elector of the state, but shall not be otherwise an officer or employee of the state or of any state employee organization, and shall receive such compensation as shall be fixed by law.

(2) (a) Two of the appointed members of the state personnel board serve at the pleasure of the governor. Both elected members of the board and the appointed member specified in paragraph (b) of this subsection (2) may be removed by the governor for willful misconduct in office, willful failure or inability to perform his or her duties, final conviction of a felony or of any other offense involving moral turpitude, or by reason of permanent disability interfering with the performance of his or her duties, which removal shall be subject to judicial review. Any vacancy in office shall be filled in the same manner as the selection of the person vacating the office, and for the unexpired term.

(b) The member of the board who is appointed for a term commencing on July 1, 2013, and the successors to that position do not serve at the pleasure of the governor.

(3) The state personnel board shall adopt, and may from time to time amend or repeal, rules to implement the provisions of this section and sections 13 and 15 of this article, as amended, and laws enacted pursuant thereto, including but not limited to rules concerning standardization of positions, determination of grades of positions, standards of efficient and competent service, grievance procedures, appeals from actions by appointing authorities, and conduct of hearings by hearing officers where authorized by law.

(4) There is hereby created the department of personnel, which shall be one of the principal departments of the executive department, the head of which shall be the state personnel director, who shall be appointed under qualifications established by law. The state personnel director shall be responsible for the administration of the personnel system of the state under this constitution and laws enacted pursuant thereto and the rules adopted thereunder by the state personnel board.

(5) Adequate appropriations shall be made to carry out the purposes of this section and section 13 of this article.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since this section is similar to former § 13 of art. XII, Colo. Const., as it existed prior to its 1970 amendment, relevant cases construing that former section have been included in the annotations to this section. The provisions of former § 13 of art. XII, Colo. Const., dealt with the civil service commission, the predecessor of the state personnel board.

State personnel board has power to adopt standards of efficient service. State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hoag, 88 Colo. 169, 293 P. 338 (1930).

In making rules, state personnel board is merely exercising one of its constitutional functions. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 111 Colo. 406, 141 P.2d 899 (1943).

But rules inconsistent with constitutional provisions void. Rules of the state personnel board which are inconsistent with the express provisions of the sections in the constitution dealing with the state personnel system are void and of no effect. Schmidt v. Hurst, 109 Colo. 207, 124 P.2d 235 (1942).

State personnel board and the state department of personnel are distinct entities with separate powers and responsibilities. Spahn v. State Dept. of Pers., 44 Colo. App. 446, 615 P.2d 66 (1980); Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Lamm, 677 P.2d 1350 (Colo. 1984).

State department of personnel does not oversee the state personnel board's activities. Rather, the board reviews the actions of the head of the personnel department. Spahn v. State Dept. of Pers., 44 Colo. App. 446, 615 P.2d 66 (1980).

State personnel director's authority under § 24-50-104 (3)(f) and (g), regarding allocation of individual positions, derives from director's duty under this section to administer day-to-day activities of state personnel system and is distinctly separate from personnel board's authority under section 13 of this article to hear appeals from disciplinary decisions. Therefore, paragraph (g) does not intrude upon the board's exclusive jurisdiction. Renteria v. State Dept. of Pers., 811 P.2d 797 (Colo. 1991).

Constitutional for state personnel director to establish administrative procedures under §§ 24-50-101 (3)(c) and (3)(d), 24-50-112 (3), 24-50-113, and 24-50-118 (1) and

(2) to carry into effect rules promulgated by the state personnel board. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Lamm, 677 P.2d 1350 (Colo. 1984) (decided prior to 1984 amendments to §§ 24-50-101 (3)(c) and 24-50-112 (3)).

Authority of hearing officer with respect to hearing procedures is established by the State Administrative Procedures Act in accordance with this section. Weiss v. Dept. of Pub. Safety, 847 P.2d 197 (Colo. App. 1992).

Exclusive grant of authority under subsection (3) to state personnel director to classify state employees does not expressly or impliedly give the director the authority to establish levels of compensation for state employees during a fiscal year and there is no express limitations on the general assembly to appropriate funds for the purpose of compensating state employees. Dempsy v. Romer, 825 P.2d 44 (Colo. 1992).

Applied in People ex rel. Clay v. Bradley, 66 Colo. 186, 179 P. 871 (1919); People ex rel. Dalrymple v. Stong, 67 Colo. 599, 189 P. 27 (1920); State Civil Serv. Comm'n v. Hazlett, 119 Colo. 173, 201 P.2d 616 (1948); MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971); State Pers. Bd. v. District Court, 637 P.2d 333 (Colo. 1981); Zurek v. Dept. of State, 754 P.2d 390 (Colo. App. 1987).

Section 15. Veterans' preference. (1) (a) (I) The minimum requirements for a candidate to be placed on an eligible list for a position shall be the same for each candidate for appointment or employment in the state personnel system or in any comparable civil service or merit system of any agency or political subdivision of the state, including any municipality chartered or to be chartered under article XX of this constitution.

(II) If a numerical method is used for the comparative analysis based on objective criteria, applicants entitled to preference under this section shall be given preference in accordance with paragraphs (b) to (e) of this subsection (1). If a nonnumerical method is used, applicants entitled to preference under this section shall be added to the interview eligible list.

(b) Five points shall be added to the comparative analysis score of each candidate who is separated under honorable conditions and who, other than for training purposes, (i) served in any branch of the armed forces of the United States during any period of any declared war or any undeclared war or other armed hostilities against an armed foreign enemy, or (ii) served on active duty in any such branch in any campaign or expedition for which a campaign badge is authorized.

(c) Ten points shall be added to the comparative analysis score of any candidate who has so served, other than for training purposes, and who, because of disability incurred in the line of duty, is receiving monetary compensation or disability retired benefits by reason of public laws administered by the department of defense or the veterans administration, or any successor thereto.

(d) Five points shall be added to the comparative analysis score of any candidate who is the surviving spouse of any person who was or would have been entitled to additional points under paragraph (b) or (c) of this subsection (1) or of any person who died during such service or as a result of service-connected cause while on active duty in any such branch, other than for training purposes.

(e) No more than a total of ten points shall be added to the comparative analysis score of any such candidate pursuant to this subsection (1).

(2) The certificate of the department of defense or of the veterans administration, or any successor thereto, shall be conclusive proof of service under honorable conditions or of disability or death incurred in the line of duty during such service.

(3) (a) When a reduction in the work force of the state or any such political subdivision thereof becomes necessary because of lack of work or curtailment of funds, employees not eligible for preference under subsection (1) of this section shall be separated before those so entitled who have the same or more service in the employment of the state or such political subdivision, counting both military service for which such preference is given and such employment with the state or such political subdivision, as the case may be, from which the employee is to be separated.

(b) In the case of such a person eligible for preference who has completed twenty or more years of active military service, no military service shall be counted in determining length of service in respect to such retention rights. In the case of such a person who has completed less than twenty years of such military service, no more than ten years of service under subsection (1) (b) (i) and (ii) shall be counted in determining such length of service for such retention rights.

(4) The state personnel board and each comparable supervisory or administrative board of any such civil service or merit system of any agency of the state or any such political subdivision thereof shall implement the provisions of this section to assure that all persons entitled to preference in a comparative analysis and retention shall enjoy their full privileges and rights granted by this section.

(5) No person shall receive preference pursuant to this section with respect to a promotional opportunity. Any promotional opportunity that is also open to persons other than employees for whom such appointment would be a promotion, shall be considered a promotional opportunity for the purposes of this section.

(6) Repealed.

(7) This section shall be in full force and effect on and after July 1, 1971, and shall grant veterans' preference to all persons who have served in the armed forces of the United States in any declared or undeclared war, conflict, engagement, expedition, or campaign for which a campaign badge has been authorized, and who meet the requirements of service or disability, or both, as provided in this section. This section shall apply to all public employment opportunities, except as set forth in subsection (5) of this section, conducted on or after such date, and it shall be in all respects self-executing.

repealed, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 2013, p. , January 1, 2013.

ANNOTATION

Annotator's note. Since this section is substantially the same as former § 14 of art. XII, Colo. Const., as it existed prior to its amendment in 1970, relevant cases construing that former section have been included in the annotations to this section.

Purpose of this section is manifest, and that purpose was to add five points to the passing grade of any honorably discharged veteran as provided, and the section should be so construed as to give it that effect without assault on the words employed. Perry v. O'Farrell, 120 Colo. 561, 212 P.2d 848 (1949).

And this section should be liberally construed. Perry v. O'Farrell, 120 Colo. 561, 212 P.2d 848 (1949).

There is no distinction between enlistees and draftees expressed in this section. Hanebuth v. Patton, 115 Colo. 166, 170 P.2d 526 (1946).

Manner of claiming preference. Where an applicant for a state personnel examination listed his military service on the application form and submitted his honorable discharge with his application, it was evident that the applicant was claiming his veterans' preference. People ex rel. Metzger v. Watrous, 121 Colo. 282, 215 P.2d 344 (1950).

Demand made prior to appointment of other persons deemed timely. An honorably discharged veteran, whose name was on an existing promotional eligibility list, does not waive the veterans' preference, as provided in this section, if he makes no specific demand for such preference prior to the certification of others upon such list, but does make such demand prior to the appointment of the other persons certified. Perry v. O'Farrell, 120 Colo. 561, 212 P.2d 848 (1949).

Where preference not waived in application. Where the form provided an applicant to answer questions in connection with a state personnel examination was arranged so that all of the questions relating to service with the armed forces could not be answered, the applicant could not be deemed to have waived his veterans' preference by reason of his manner of filling in the form. People ex rel. Metzger v. Watrous, 121 Colo. 282, 215 P.2d 344 (1950).

Certificate of service conclusive. A certificate from the United States veterans administration or from the department of defense that certifies certain facts with reference to that candidate's service is conclusive. Bingham v. Bach, 151 Colo. 332, 377 P.2d 741 (1963).

This section contains no language limiting its application to percentage of disability. Bingham v. Bach, 151 Colo. 332, 377 P.2d 741 (1963).

Constitutionality of state personnel director's authority to separate certified employees for lack of work according to procedures set by the director under § 24-50-124 (1) is upheld; however, the veterans' preference provision of this section is read into the statute as an implied limitation. Colo. Ass'n of Pub. Employees v. Lamm, 677 P.2d 1350 (Colo. 1984) (decided prior to 1984 amendment to § 24-50-124 (1)).

Where the status of the plaintiff's position with the county is at issue in regards to veteran's preference, and the issue cannot be decided as a matter of law, the granting of summary judgment is inappropriate. Kennedy v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 776 P.2d 1159 (Colo. App. 1989).

Because the Colorado constitution's grant of preference points is premised on federal military service, the definition of qualifying service in the federal veterans' preference statute is the most persuasive authority in construing this constitutional provision. Arthur v. City & County of Denver, 198 P.3d 1285 (Colo. App. 2008).

"Veterans" as defined in 5 U.S.C. § 2108(1)(D) are construed to be among those who were intended to benefit from the veterans' preference and therefore those persons are construed to include those who fought in a period of undeclared war or other armed hostilities, within the meaning of this section. Arthur v. City & County of Denver, 198 P.3d 1285 (Colo. App. 2008).

The veterans' preference is intended to be flexibly interpreted to give veterans of future armed conflicts a hiring preference as a reward for their service. Arthur v. City & County of Denver, 198 P.3d 1285 (Colo. App. 2008).

Applied in Freed v. Baldi, 166 Colo. 344, 443 P.2d 716 (1968); MacManus v. Love, C.A. no. C-24520 (D.C. Denver, Colo., filed Nov. 24, 1971).

ARTICLE XIII
Impeachments

Section 1. House impeach - senate try - conviction - when chief justice presides. The house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment. The concurrence of a majority of all the members shall be necessary to an impeachment. All impeachments shall be tried by the senate, and when sitting for that purpose, the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice according to law and evidence. When the governor or lieutenant-governor is on trial, the chief justice of the supreme court shall preside. No person shall be convicted without a concurrence of two-thirds of the senators elected.

Senate sits as court in impeachment trials. In impeachment trials under this section and the two following sections, the senate sits as a court and, of course, exercises judicial powers. People v. Swena, 88 Colo. 337, 296 P. 271 (1931); Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

Section 2. Who liable to impeachment - judgment - no bar to prosecution. The governor and other state and judicial officers, shall be liable to impeachment for high crimes or misdemeanors or malfeasance in office, but judgment in such cases shall only extend to removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust or profit in the state. The party, whether convicted or acquitted, shall, nevertheless, be liable to prosecution, trial, judgment and punishment according to law.

This section is plain and unambiguous and speaks for itself. Roberts v. People ex rel. Hicks, 77 Colo. 281, 235 P. 1069 (1925).

State personnel director subject to removal only by impeachment. The governor has no authority to remove a state personnel director, such an officer being subject to removal only by impeachment under this section. Roberts v. People ex rel. Hicks, 77 Colo. 281, 235 P. 1069 (1925).

But speaker of house of representatives not liable to such removal. The speaker of the house of representatives is not a state officer, and is not liable to removal by impeachment. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Provisions of sections 2 and 3 of this article are mutually exclusive: the contention that a state officer can be impeached under this section or, in the alternative, can be removed according to the provisions of a legislative statute contradicts the specific language of section 3 and is inconsistent with the plain and unambiguous language of the article. People ex rel. Losavio v. Gentry, 199 Colo. 212, 606 P.2d 856 (1980).

Applied in Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

Section 3. Officers not subject to impeachment subject to removal. All officers not liable to impeachment shall be subject to removal for misconduct or malfeasance in office in such manner as may be provided by law.

"As may be provided by law", when applied to an elective officer whose term of office is definitely fixed, can have no other reference than to constitutional or statutory law. Trimble v. People ex rel. Phelps, 19 Colo. 187, 34 P. 981 (1893); Burkholder v. People ex rel. Nazarene, 59 Colo. 99, 147 P. 347 (1915).

It is obvious that the words "as may be provided by law" must be held to include something more than statutory law, or else some limit must be placed upon the words "all other officers", as used in this section, for, the house of representatives is authorized to choose its other officers as well as the speaker; and it certainly cannot be maintained that the subordinate officers of the house, having once been chosen, and not being liable to impeachment, cannot be removed, however unworthy or unfit they may be, simply because no statute has been provided for their removal. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Speaker of house of representatives is not included in "officers", as used in this section, and hence the power of removal can in no way be affected thereby. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P.

But he is removable at will and pleasure of house. Conceding that the speaker is included in this section, nevertheless, the common parliamentary law, as it existed in this country at the time of the adoption of this constitution, provided that the speaker might be removed at the will and pleasure of the house; and such law, not having been repealed or superseded by any constitutional or statutory enactment, still exists as an adequate provision for the removal of the speaker in conformity to this section. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890).

Police commissioner may be removed under this section, if a statute provides the basis for such action. Trimble v. People ex rel. Phelps, 19 Colo. 187, 34 P. 981 (1893).

Mayor can be removed only for grounds specified in constitution. In re Speakership of House of Representatives, 15 Colo. 520, 25 P. 707 (1890); Trimble v. People ex rel. Phelps, 19 Colo. 187, 34 P. 981 (1893); Bd. of Trustees v. People ex rel. Keith, 13 Colo. App. 553, 59 P. 72 (1899).

Provisions of sections 2 and 3 of this article are mutually exclusive: the contention that a state officer can be impeached under section 2 or, in the alternative, can be removed according to the provisions of a legislative statute contradicts the specific language of this section and is inconsistent with the plain and unambiguous language of the article. People ex rel. Losavio v. Gentry, 199 Colo. 212, 606 P.2d 856 (1980).

Power of recall is cumulative to power of removal. The power to remove public officials pursuant to this article and the power of recall under art. XXI, Colo. Const., are cumulative and concurrent rather than exclusive remedies available to the people. Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

ARTICLE XIV
Counties

Section 1. Counties of state. The several counties of the territory of Colorado as they now exist, are hereby declared to be counties of the state.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 66.
Cross references: For counties generally, see title 30.

ANNOTATION

A county is a political subdivision of the state but cannot be characterized as a division of the state in the same manner as is an administrative department of the executive branch of state government as the two have separate and distinct functions. Nat. Advertising Co. v. Dept. of Highways, 718 P.2d 1038 (Colo. 1986).

Municipalities and counties exist for convenient administration of government and are merely instruments of the state, created to carry out the will of the state. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

And are not protected against state action by fourteenth amendment. The equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment of the United States constitution was not designed to protect state instrumentalities such as municipalities and counties against state action, much less against the constitutional right of the people to alter and abolish their constitution and form of government whenever they may deem it necessary to their safety and happiness. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

A municipal corporation, created by a state for the better ordering of government, has no privileges or immunities under the federal constitution which it may invoke in opposition to the will of its creator. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Counties have only such powers as are delegated to them. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

Applied in Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

Section 2. Removal of county seats. The general assembly shall have no power to remove the county seat of any county, but the removal of county seats shall be provided for by general law, and no county seat shall be removed unless a majority of the registered electors of the county, voting on the proposition at a general election vote therefor; and no such proposition shall be submitted oftener than once in four years, and no person shall vote on such proposition who shall not have resided in the county six months and in the election precinct ninety days next preceding such election.

Cross references: For location and removal of county seats, see article 8 of title 30.

ANNOTATION

This section requires passage of general law on the subject, the evident purpose of the requirement being that such law shall provide the regulations and prescribe the qualifications and requirements necessary and proper for the exercise of the right under consideration. Alexander v. People ex rel. Schoolfield, 7 Colo. 155, 2 P. 894 (1883).

But limits power of general assembly in respect to such law. The plain, common sense import of the language used in this section indicates an intention to restrict or limit the power of the general assembly in respect to the general law which it was required to pass on the subject. Alexander v. People ex rel. Schoolfield, 7 Colo. 155, 2 P. 894 (1883).

There are four principal limitations upon power of general assembly over the subject of removal of county seats: First, the power to remove a county seat without a vote of the people is taken away. Second, the minimum vote necessary to effect a removal is prescribed. Third, a minimum limit is fixed as to the number of years that must elapse between successive submissions of the question. Fourth, the power of the general assembly is limited as to the qualifications of the voters. Alexander v. People ex rel. Schoolfield, 7 Colo. 155, 2 P. 894 (1883).

Rule as to residence in location of county seat question for general assembly. Whether the same rule as to residence should be adopted in elections for the location of a county seat as in one for the removal of a county seat is a question for the general assembly. Town of Sugar City v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 57 Colo. 432, 140 P. 809 (1914).

The clause, "The general assembly shall have no power to remove a county seat of any county", has not the remotest relation to the question whether the general assembly may fix the vote, or whether it has been unalterably fixed in the constitution. Its effect is to prohibit the general assembly from removing a county seat without submitting the matter to a vote of the citizens interested. Alexander v. People ex rel. Schoolfield, 7 Colo. 155, 2 P. 894 (1883).

"Qualified electors". Without any accompanying explanation or limitation the term "qualified electors" means those qualified to vote at elections for public officers. Bd. of Comm'rs v. People ex rel. Love, 26 Colo. 297, 57 P. 1080 (1899).

Applied in Bd. of Comm'rs v. People ex rel. Love, 26 Colo. 297, 57 P. 1080 (1899); People ex rel. Roberg v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 86 Colo. 249, 281 P. 117 (1929).

Section 3. Striking off territory - vote. Except as otherwise provided by statute, no part of the territory of any county shall be stricken off and added to an adjoining county, without first submitting the question to the registered electors of the county from which the territory is proposed to be stricken off; nor unless a majority of all the registered electors of said county voting on the question shall vote therefor.

ANNOTATION

This section does not restrict power of general assembly to create new counties from territory embraced in one or more existing counties. Frost v. Pfeiffer, 26 Colo. 338, 58 P. 147 (1899).

And there is no vested right in existence of a county. Parties claiming to be aggrieved by the detachment of land from a county are not denied due process or equal protection of the law under the federal constitution, since they have no vested right in the existence of the county, which, being an adjunct of the state for administrative purposes, may be increased or diminished in size by the people by constitutional amendment, or under this section of the Colorado constitution. City & County of Denver v. Miller, 151 Colo. 444, 379 P.2d 169 (1963).

The people of the entire state have been and are free to increase or decrease the size of a county, or abolish it altogether by a constitutional amendment or proper legislative act consistent with this section. City & County of Denver v. Miller, 151 Colo. 444, 379 P.2d 169 (1963).

This section is modified and limited by art. XX, Colo. Const. People ex rel. Simon v. Anderson, 112 Colo. 558, 151 P.2d 972 (1944).

Section 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., modifies and limits this section, insofar as a proposed annexation of territory to the city and county of Denver is concerned, and such annexation can be effected without the consenting vote of a majority of qualified voters of the county from which the annexed territory is detached. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Even if there existed some constitutional restraint in the maintenance of county boundaries, the fact that the annexation provisions of § 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., apply to the city and county of Denver to the exclusion of other counties would not, on that basis alone, constitute a denial of equal protection of the laws to the people of a neighboring county. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Proceedings for annexation of city to city and county of Denver are not governed by this section. Simon v. Arapahoe County, 80 Colo. 445, 252 P. 811 (1927).

Applied in Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City and County of Denver, 714 P.2d 1352 (Colo. App. 1986).

Section 4. New county shall pay proportion of debt. In all cases of the establishment of any new county, the new county shall be held to pay its ratable proportion of all then existing liabilities, of the county or counties from which such new county shall be formed.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 67.

ANNOTATION

Distinction between this and following section. While this and the following section relate to a common subject, viz., the pro rata payment of existing liabilities upon a subdivision of a county or counties, yet they relate to this subject under wholly different circumstances and conditions. A distinct and different rule is likewise provided for each case. This section refers to the liabilities of a new county created out of a part or parts of one or more existing counties. Section 5 has no reference to the formation of a new county, but to the division of an existing county, whereby a portion of its territory is stricken off and added to another existing county. In the first case, the new county, as a distinct organization, is "held to pay its ratable proportion of all then existing liabilities of the county or counties from which such new county shall be formed"; in the second, the original liability of the part stricken off is continued. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 639, 21 P. 478 (1886).

This construction of this section and the following section is not inconsistent with § 25 of art. II, Colo. Const., and the provisions of this section, being special provisions for specified objects, are not affected by § 12 of art. XV, Colo. Const. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 639, 21 P. 478 (1886).

General assembly may delegate determination of ratable proportion of existing liability. The general assembly may, should it see fit so to do, "ascertain or determine" the ratable proportion of existing liability to be assumed by the new county. But such ascertainment or determination involves a careful and thorough investigation of the various matters necessarily relating to the subject. And while the general assembly may enter into such investigation, it is eminently proper to remit the same to the appropriate local authorities under suitable legislation. In re House Bill No. 231, 9 Colo. 624, 21 P. 472 (1886).

There is no provision as to distribution of assets of old county. This section contains a provision requiring that each new county, upon the establishment thereof, shall be made responsible for a ratable proportion of the "then existing liabilities of the county or counties from which such new county shall be formed", but is wholly silent as to the distribution of the assets belonging to the old corporation. Washington County v. Weld County, 12 Colo. 152, 20 P. 273 (1882).

New county not entitled to part of surplus funds of old county. This section requires that each new county, on its establishment, shall be made responsible for a ratable proportion of the "then existing liabilities of the county or counties from which such new county shall be formed". Two counties were carved out of an old one, under acts providing for the enforcement of this mandate, and that "all county records and other property" theretofore belonging to the old county should remain its property. They further provided for a tribunal to adjust and settle all matters of revenue proper to be done on account of the formation of the new county, and to apportion the indebtedness of the old county. Held, that the new counties were not entitled to any part of the surplus funds of the old county. Washington County v. Weld County, 12 Colo. 152, 20 P. 273 (1888).

In the absence of restrictive constitutional or statutory provision, a new county carved from an existing county receives none of the assets and assumes none of the burdens of the parent county. Washington County v. Weld County, 12 Colo. 152, 20 P. 273 (1888).

Section 5. Part stricken off - pay proportion of debt. When any part of a county is stricken off and attached to another county, the part stricken off shall be held to pay its ratable proportion of all then existing liabilities of the county from which it is taken.

COUNTY OFFICERS

Section 6. County commissioners - election - term. In each county having a population of less than seventy thousand there shall be elected, for a term of four years each, three county commissioners who shall hold sessions for the transaction of county business as provided by law; any two of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Two of said commissioners shall be elected at the general election in the year nineteen hundred and four, and at the general election every four years thereafter; and the other one of said commissioners shall be elected at the general election in the year nineteen hundred and six, and at the general election every four years thereafter; provided, that when the population of any county shall equal or exceed seventy thousand, the board of county commissioners may consist of five members, any three of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Three of said commissioners in said county shall be elected at the general election in the year nineteen hundred and four, and at the general election every four years thereafter; and the other two of said commissioners in such county shall be elected at the general election in the year nineteen hundred and six and every four years thereafter; and all of such commissioners shall be elected for the term of four years.

This section shall govern, except as hereafter otherwise expressly directed or permitted by constitutional enactment.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For comment, "Maximum Utilization Collides With Prior Appropriation in A-B Cattle Co. v. United States, 196 Colo. 539, 589 P.2d 57 (1978)", see 57 Den. L.J. 103 (1979).

This section is mandatory as to number of commissioners of counties of less than 70,000. Uzzell v. Anderson, 38 Colo. 32, 89 P. 785 (1906).

The provision of this section adopted at the general election in 1902, by which the number of commissioners in counties of less than 70,000 population was limited to three, did not operate to prevent commissioners elected at that election in counties of less than 70,000, having five commissioners, from qualifying and serving out their terms. Such commissioners were entitled to serve out their terms which by the amendment were extended so as to expire January, 1907, instead of January, 1906. People ex rel. Lankford v. Long, 32 Colo. 486, 77 P. 251 (1904); Long v. People ex rel. Low, 33 Colo. 159, 79 P. 1132 (1905).

But optional as to counties exceeding 70,000. This section, while mandatory as to the number of county commissioners of counties of less than 70,000, by the use of the word "may", when the population of any county shall exceed 70,000, leaves it optional with such counties to have three or five commissioners. Uzzell v. Anderson, 38 Colo. 32, 89 P. 785 (1906).

Language in section is sufficient to provide for county officers named. The language in this section and sections 8 and 11 of this article has been recognized (since its adoption in 1876) as sufficient to provide for the county officers named. Thrush v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 544, 127 P. 937 (1912).

Powers and duties of county commissioners are statutory. County commissioners are constitutional officers. Their duties and powers as a board, are statutory. The board possesses only such powers as are by the constitution and statutes expressly conferred upon it, and, in addition, such implied powers as are reasonably necessary to the proper execution of its express powers. Robbins v. Hoover, 50 Colo. 610, 115 P. 526 (1911); Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

The well-established rule of law is that county commissioners are officers with only delegated powers. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

Broader powers must be conferred by proper authority. If broader powers are desirable for county officers, they must be conferred by the proper authority. They cannot be merely assumed by administrative officers; nor can they be created by the courts in the proper exercise of their judicial functions. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

No consideration of public policy can properly induce a court to reject the statutory definition of the powers of a county officer. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

County judge is not county officer. The proposal and adoption of this section and sections 8 and 11 of this article, art. XX, Colo. Const., dealing with the city and county of Denver, and §§ 21 and 22 of art. VI, Colo. Const., dealing with district attorneys and county judges, as they now stand, evidence a legislative intent to exclude from the operation of art. XX, Colo. Const., as a county officer, that of county judge. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

Sections providing for election of county officers do not apply to city and county of Denver. This section and sections 8 and 11 of this article provide, in effect, that they shall not apply to the city and county of Denver, as the power is therein granted to the people of the city and county of Denver to designate the agencies to perform such functions within that territory. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

Applied in People ex rel. Stidger v. Horan, 34 Colo. 304, 86 P. 252 (1905); Sherlock v. District Court, 39 Colo. 41, 88 P. 396 (1906).

Section 7. Officers compensation. (Repealed)

Section 8. County officers - election - term - salary. There shall be elected in each county, at the same time at which members of the general assembly are elected, commencing in the year nineteen hundred and fifty-four, and every four years thereafter, one county clerk, who shall be ex officio recorder of deeds and clerk of the board of county commissioners; one sheriff; one coroner; one treasurer who shall be collector of taxes; one county surveyor; one county assessor; and one county attorney who may be elected or appointed, as shall be provided by law; and such officers shall be paid such salary or compensation, either from the fees, perquisites and emoluments of their respective offices, or from the general county fund, as may be provided by law. The term of office of all such officials shall be four years, and they shall take office on the second Tuesday in January next following their election, or at such other time as may be provided by law.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "County Sheriffs in Colorado: Beyond the Myth", see 38 Colo. Law. 19 (February 2009).

Courts may not confer or limit powers of county officers. In general, the powers and duties of county officers such as the treasurer, are prescribed by the constitution or by statute, or both, and they are measured by the terms and necessary implication of the grant, and must be executed in the manner directed and by the officers specified. If broader powers are desirable, they must be conferred by the proper authority. They cannot be merely assumed by administrative officers; nor can they be created by the courts in the proper exercise of their judicial functions. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

No consideration of public policy can properly induce a court to reject the statutory definition of the powers of a county officer. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

It is not a proper function of the judiciary to add to, detract from, or impose other conditions governing actions of treasurers. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

County treasurers are constitutional officers. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

But they have no constitutional duties to perform or constitutional authority to do any particular act such as commencing a suit. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

Their authority is limited to that expressly delegated by general assembly. County treasurers being only administrative agents of the state, their authority is limited to that expressly delegated by the general assembly. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

County treasurers do not have inherent power to sue taxpayers. Enactments of the general assembly relating to taxation negate any suggestion that county treasurers have inherent, implied or general powers to sue taxpayers for delinquent real estate taxes. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

County treasurer is collector of taxes. The election of a county assessor and a county treasurer in each county is provided for by this section, and the treasurer is thereby expressly made the collector of taxes. Chase v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 37 Colo. 268, 86 P. 1011 (1906).

The general assembly is without authority to specify qualifications for the office of county assessor in addition to those specified in section 10 of this article. Thus, §§ 12-61-706 and 12-61-714, C.R.S., requiring county assessors to obtain a real estate appraisers license, are unconstitutional. Reale v. Bd. of Real Estate Appraisers, 880 P.2d 1205 (Colo. 1994).

This section does not prescribe duties of county assessors. The constitution creates many offices, the duties of which it does not prescribe, but places no limitation upon the creation of others. Among the former is that of county assessor. State Bd. of Equalization v. Bimetallic Inv. Co., 56 Colo. 512, 138 P. 1010 (1914), aff'd, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

Under this section, a county assessor is a constitutional officer, and though his duties are left unprescribed, the essential duties of an assessor must be presumed to have been contemplated. People v. Lothrop, 3 Colo. 428 (1877).

Such duties are prescribed by legislative acts. The office of county assessor in each county is created by the constitution, but the duties thereof are prescribed by legislative acts. Weidenhaft v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 432, 283

P.2d 164 (1955); Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

The general assembly may adopt a plan whereby the work of assessors may be corrected, supplemented, added to or changed. Weidenhaft v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 432, 283 P.2d 164 (1955).

Duties of county assessors. It not only is the duty of the assessor to see to it that all property within his county is returned for tax assessment, and to finally fix the valuation upon each item for that purpose, but he further is obligated to undertake, so far as within his power and judgment, to see to it that taxes shall be uniformly assessed within his county. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

No authority is conferred by the constitution upon assessors to perform duties other than the duties of county assessors. These duties he must perform within his county, and must assess all of the taxable property in his county, unless that power is taken away and lodged elsewhere by virtue of some legislation enacted under express authority of the constitution. The only power so conferred is that which authorizes the state and county boards of equalization to perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. No authority whatever is found in the constitution empowering an assessor to perform the duties of his office outside of the county for which he was elected. The general assembly was wholly without power or authority to clothe the assessors of the state as a body with the right to select and appoint 13 of their number to do an act which they could not do by virtue of their office as county assessors under the provisions of the constitution. Union P. R. R. v. Alexander, 113 F. 347 (D. Colo. 1901).

Control of property valuation may not be taken from assessors. In view of this provision and of other constitutional limitations it may be gravely doubted whether it is competent for the legislative authority to take from county assessors the substantial control of valuations of property for state taxation, and vest it in a central authority. People v. Lothrop, 3 Colo. 428 (1877).

The duty of listing and valuing all taxable property devolves upon the assessor, and him alone. Bartlett & Co. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 152 Colo. 388, 382 P.2d 193 (1963).

But railroad property may be assessed by board other than county assessor. This section in merely providing for the election of county assessors in each county does not inhibit the general assembly from passing a law authorizing the assessment of railroad property by some other tribunal or board if, in its wisdom, it determines that thereby a just valuation of this class of property may best be secured, and if the act on its face is not palpably ineffectual to accomplish that object. Ames v. People ex rel. Temple, 26 Colo. 83, 56 P. 656 (1899); Chase v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 37 Colo. 268, 86 P. 1011 (1906).

And tax commission may assess certain classes of property. The tax commission has authority to make original assessment of certain classes of property and can require the proper officials to make like assessments of all other property. Weidenhaft v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 432, 283 P.2d 164 (1955).

The constitutionality of the statutes pursuant to which the tax commission functions have been established with respect to this section. Weidenhaft v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 432, 283 P.2d 164 (1955).

Because assessor does not have sole authority to assess property. While the office of assessor is stipulated by the constitution, the general assembly is not inhibited from passing a law placing the fixing of valuation for assessment of certain properties under another authority. Generally, control of matters of taxation is plenary to the legislative branch of the government, unless restricted by some constitutional provision; this section is not such a limitation, and the assessor is not thereby clothed with the sole authority of assessing property. Weidenhaft v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 131 Colo. 432, 283 P.2d 164 (1955).

Section does not make office of county attorney either elective or appointive. This section created the office of county attorney, but it did not determine whether it was to be an elective or an appointive office, the purpose being simply to provide for the time of the election, if the general assembly made it an elective office. There is no act of the general assembly upon the subject, and, in the absence of legislation, there is no means provided for filling the office. Therefore, there is, until the general assembly determines whether the office is elective or appointive, in effect no such office as that of county attorney proper, and the statute which authorizes county commissioners to employ counsel has not been superseded by this section. People v. Lindsley, 37 Colo. 476, 86 P. 352 (1906).

Issuance of permits for concealed weapons not within police chief's inherent powers. The issuance of permits for concealed weapons does not fall within the category of inherent powers of a police chief or a sheriff, who can fully perform his functions without this power. Douglass v. Kelton, 199 Colo. 446, 610 P.2d 1067 (1980).

Deputy sheriff is not a county officer but a county employee serving under the sheriff. Soeley v. Bd. of Co. Comm's, 654 F. Supp. 1309 (D. Colo. 1987).

When the general assembly enacted the original sheriff training statute in 1990, § 30-10-101.5, it lacked authority to impose any qualifications on the constitutionally created office of county sheriff. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

Because the original sheriff training statute sought to impose qualifications for the job of sheriff in the form of certification requirements, it was unconstitutional. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

The training and certification requirements contained in the reenacted sheriff training statute passed by the general assembly in 1996 could not be applied to county sheriff during a term of office that began before the effective date of the new requirements. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

Applied in Mannix v. Selbach, 3l Colo. 502, 74 P. 460 (1903); People ex rel. Stidger v. Horan, 34 Colo. 304, 86 P. 252 (1905); People ex rel. Smith v. Crissman, 41 Colo. 450, 92 P. 949 (1907); City & County of Denver v. Pitcher, 54 Colo. 203, 129 P. 1015 (1913); People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Section 8.5. Sheriff - qualifications. The general assembly shall have the authority to establish by law qualifications for the office of county sheriff, including but not limited to training and certification requirements.

When the general assembly enacted the original sheriff training statute in 1990, § 30-10-101.5, it lacked authority to impose any qualifications on the constitutionally created office of county sheriff. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

The training and certification requirements contained in the reenacted sheriff training statute passed by the general assembly in 1996 could not be applied to county sheriff during a term of office that began before the effective date of the new requirements. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

Section 8.7. Coroner - qualifications. The general assembly shall have the authority to establish by law qualifications for the office of county coroner, including but not limited to training and certification requirements.

Section 9. Vacancies - how filled. In case of a vacancy occurring in the office of county commissioner a vacancy committee of the same political party as the vacating commissioner constituted as provided by law shall, by a majority vote, fill the vacancy by appointment within ten days after occurrence of the vacancy. If the vacancy committee fails to fill the vacancy within ten days after occurrence of the vacancy, the governor shall fill the same by appointment within fifteen days after occurrence of the vacancy. The person appointed to fill a vacancy in the office of county commissioner shall be a member of the same political party, if any, as the vacating commissioner. In case of a vacancy in any other county office, or in any precinct office, the board of county commissioners shall fill the same by appointment. Any person appointed pursuant to this section shall hold the office until the next general election, or until the vacancy is filled by election according to law.

ANNOTATION

This section refers only to elected officers. Walsh v. People ex rel. McClenahan, 72 Colo. 406, 211 P. 646 (1922).

It is self-executing. This section empowers the governor to make designated appointments in case of vacancies, which appointees, in turn, are authorized to fill all others in county and precinct offices, a provision which is self-executing, and can be resorted to independent of any statutory provision. Frost v. Pfeiffer, 26 Colo. 338, 58 P. 147 (1899).

It applies to county treasurers. The power to fill a vacancy in the office of county treasurers is lodged in the board of county commissioners by this section. In re House Bill No. 38, 9 Colo. 631, 21 P. 474 (1886).

And to assessors and coroners. This section provides, in effect, that in case of a vacancy in the office of assessor or coroner, the board of county commissioners shall fill such vacancy by appointment, and that the persons so appointed shall hold office until the next "general election", when, according to the plain intendment of the law, the terms of such appointees expire and their successors must be elected. Mannix v. Selbach, 31 Colo. 502, 74 P. 460 (1903).

Vacancy applies to term or office or both. Vacancy applies not to the incumbent, but to the term, or to the office, or both, whether to the term, or to the office, or both, depending generally upon the context. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

A new vacancy exists when one term expires and new term of office begins. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Appointee holds until next general election if no new term intervenes. An appointee to fill a vacancy under this section holds until the next general election, if no new term intervenes between the time of his appointment and the time of such election. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

But if new term commences during interval, term of appointee ends. If a new term commences during the interval between the time of appointment to fill a vacancy and the time of the next general election the term of the appointee ends and the one entitled to the new term has a right thereto. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Term of appointee does not extend beyond term in which vacancy occurred. Where a county commissioner is re-elected to a new four-year term and dies following his election, an appointment by the governor to fill the vacancy "until the next general election" does not extend beyond the term in which the vacancy occurred. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Death before qualification of one entitled to new term leaves vacancy. If one entitled to the new term on the arrival of the term does not appear and qualify, though the reason thereof be death, there is a vacancy in the office for the term. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

The county clerk elect, dying before qualification, a vacancy in the office occurs on the expiration of the term of the then incumbent, to be filled by appointment of the county commissioners. Gibbs v. People ex rel. Watts, 66 Colo. 414, 182 P. 894 (1919).

Until appointment is made, incumbent of previous term holds over. Where there is a vacancy in an office for the term, until an appointment is made, the incumbent of the previous term holds over. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110 (1909); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

But when appointment is made and appointee qualifies, rights of incumbent are ended. When an appointment is made, and the appointee qualifies, the previous term, and the rights of the incumbent to the office, are ended. People ex rel. Callaway v. DeGuelle, 47 Colo. 13, 105 P. 1110

(1909); People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Right to office is contingent upon qualifying. Considering together this section and § 10 of art. XII, Colo. Const., and giving to each the meaning which the language necessarily implies, it is clear that when a person is elected to a term, under the constitution, a contingent or inchoate right to the office is vested in him, which becomes absolute upon his qualification. He is elected to the term and no one else can enter therein until he is ousted therefrom, which can never be until the commencement of the term. When he does not qualify, the contingent right is gone. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963)

There is no one legally entitled to a term, and when the date of the term arrives there is a vacancy under the Colorado constitution, though there be some one actually and legally performing the duties of the office. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Appointee has same rights as predecessor. A person elected or appointed to fill a vacancy in an unexpired term of a public office, such as sheriff, holds precisely as his predecessor would have held had he continued in office, and in no other way; and has the same rights, and none other, that such predecessor would have had. People v. Quimby, 152 Colo. 231, 381 P.2d 275 (1963).

Applied in People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455 (1877); People v. Wright, 6 Colo. 92 (1881).

Section 10. Elector only eligible to county office. No person shall be eligible to any county office unless he shall be a qualified elector; nor unless he shall have resided in the county one year preceding his election.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 68.

"Eligible" refers to capacity of holding office. The word "eligible" as used in constitutions and statutes has reference to the capacity not of being elected to office, but of holding office, and that, therefore, if qualified at the time of commencement of the term or induction into office, disqualification of the candidate at the time of election or appointment is immaterial. Cox v. Starkweather, 128 Colo. 89, 260 P.2d 587 (1953).

The general assembly is without authority to specify qualifications for the office of county assessor in addition to those specified in this section. Thus, §§ 12-61-706 and 12-61-714, C.R.S., requiring county assessors to obtain a real estate appraisers license, are unconstitutional. Reale v. Bd. of Real Estate Appraisers, 880 P.2d 1205 (Colo. 1994).

Notary public is county officer within meaning of section. This section makes ineligible to hold any county office every person who is not a qualified elector. A notary public, while holding his office by the appointment of the governor, can exercise the functions thereof only in the county for which he is appointed. In this sense he is a county officer. In re House Bill No. 166, 9 Colo. 628, 21 P. 473 (1895).

When the general assembly enacted the original sheriff training statute in 1990, § 30-10-101.5, it lacked authority to impose any qualifications on the constitutionally created office of county sheriff. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

Because the original sheriff training statute sought to impose qualifications for the job of sheriff in the form of certification requirements, it was unconstitutional. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

The training and certification requirements contained in the reenacted sheriff training statute passed by the general assembly in 1996 could not be applied to county sheriff during a term of office that began before the effective date of the new requirements. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

ANNOTATION

Powers and duties of county officers are prescribed by constitution or by statute, or both, and they are measured by the terms and necessary implication of the grant, and must be executed in the manner directed and by the officer specified. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

Broader powers must be conferred by proper authority. If broader powers are desirable for county officers, they must be conferred by the proper authority. They cannot be merely assumed by administrative officers; nor can they be created by the courts in the proper exercise of their judicial functions. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

No consideration of public policy can properly induce a court to reject the statutory definition of the powers of a county officer. Skidmore v. O'Rourke, 152 Colo. 470, 383 P.2d 473 (1963).

General assembly has plenary power to create municipal offices. Municipal corporations are created by law, partly as the agents of the state, but chiefly to administer the local affairs of the territory incorporated; and the general assembly, in the absence of constitutional limitations, has plenary power to adopt for their government such measures as, in its judgment, best accomplish the purpose for which they are created, including the creation and manner of filling municipal offices, as provided by this section. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908).

There is no constitutional provision expressly withholding from the general assembly power to authorize the appointment by the governor of such municipal officers as are contemplated by an act providing for the creation of a board of public works for the city of Denver. In re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 188, 21 P. 481 (1888).

"Municipal", as used in this section, is not confined to counties, townships and the like. In re Senate Bill, 12 Colo. 188, 21 P. 481 (1888).

"Corporate authorities". Under the provisions of this section, the term "corporate authorities" includes appointees to municipal offices. Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, P. 649 (1922), aff'd 262 U.S. 710, 43 S. Ct. 694, 67 L. Ed. 1194 (1923).

Public trustee is county officer since the powers and duties of public trustees are all the same and are performed within his county and relate solely to property situated therein. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912); Walsh v. People ex rel. McClenahan, 72 Colo. 406, 211 P. 646 (1922); People ex rel. Fairall v. Sabin, 75 Colo. 545, 227 P. 565 (1924).

Applied in Union P. R. R. v. Alexander, 113 F. 347 (D. Colo. 1901); People ex rel. Smith v. Crissman, 41 Colo. 450, 92 P. 949 (1907); Chambers v. People ex rel. Starer, 70 Colo. 496, 202 P. 1081 (1921); People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d (1938).

Section 13. Classification of cities and towns. The general assembly shall provide, by general laws, for the organization and classification of cities and towns. The number of such classes shall not exceed four; and the powers of each class shall be defined by general laws, so that all municipal corporations of the same class shall possess the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Annexation in Colorado", see 37 Dicta 259 (1960).

Intent of section. This section indicates intent to preserve state sovereignty over cities and towns. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

The object to be attained by this section was to prevent the granting by the general assembly of any special charters to cities and towns, to provide for a classification of all existing cities and towns, and to provide a uniform municipal code of laws for the government of all such corporations of the same class. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908).

"Powers" and "restrictions". The "powers" and "restrictions" contemplated by this section are manifestly such powers and restrictions as relate to subjects pertaining to local self-government, such as may be designated as strictly corporate municipal subjects, as distinguished from such subjects as involve the relations of the citizens or the cities and towns to the state. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908).

General assembly may exercise almost plenary power over cities and towns. By this and the following section the whole subject of towns and cities is, with two slight limitations, relegated to the general assembly. In connection with such municipal corporations, that body is, by these provisions, left to exercise almost plenary power. It determines the mode of organization, and provides for all matters pertaining to government, including the number and kind of officers, their election or appointment, and duties. It may or may not, at its option, create the office of mayor. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

Statutory cities and towns derive their sole powers from constitutional authority which must be defined by general law. City of Aurora v. Bogue, 176 Colo. 198, 489 P.2d 1295 (1971).

As do incorporated towns. Incorporated towns derive their sole powers from constitutional authority, and these must be defined by general laws. Eckley v. Meyers, 116 Colo. 536, 181 P.2d 1014 (1947); Town of Eaton v. Bouslog, 133 Colo. 130, 292 P.2d 343 (1956).

Statutes granting powers to cities and towns must be strictly construed and no powers may be exercised except those which are expressly conferred, or which exist by necessary implication. City of Aurora v. Bogue, 176 Colo. 198, 489 P.2d 1295 (1971); City of Sheridan v. City of Englewood, 199 Colo. 348, 609 P.2d 108 (1980).

If a doubt exists as to a municipality's power, that doubt must be resolved against the municipality. City of Aurora v. Bogue, 176 Colo. 198, 489 P.2d 1295 (1971).

Cities and towns classified. The general assembly, pursuant to this provision, classified cities and towns into cities of the first and second class and incorporated towns; cities of the first class having a population of 15,000 inhabitants and upwards; cities of the second class having a population exceeding 2,000 and less than 15,000; and incorporated towns having less than 2,000 population. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908).

Different powers and restrictions may be granted to different classes of municipal cities. And there is clear constitutional authority for bestowing upon one class, within certain limits, exclusive legislative control over a given subject pertaining to local self-government, while another class is allowed only concurrent power in connection therewith. Rogers v. People, 9 Colo. 450, 12 P. 843 (1886).

General assembly cannot fix municipal boundaries by general law. The general assembly cannot, by general law, fix the boundaries of towns and cities that may be thereafter incorporated under it. The operation of such general law must necessarily be made to depend upon contingencies, and the power to take the initiative steps to bring the law into operation upon the happening of the contingent event must be delegated to some body or persons. This power arises under the general rule that when a constitution gives a general power, or enjoins a duty, it also gives, by implication, every particular power necessary for the exercise of the one or the performance of the other. People ex rel. Rhodes v. Fleming, 10 Colo. 553, 16 P. 298 (1887).

The passing of a general law is the limit of the power expressly conferred upon the general assembly for the organization of cities and towns, and, in passing such law, it has exercised all the legislative authority it can exercise at that time; but, in providing for the means for carrying the law into effect, it must of necessity confer upon some bodies or individuals the power to do such acts as could not be done by it. The fixing of the boundaries of such cities and towns is among the acts that must be performed by and through such conferred power. People ex rel. Rhodes v. Fleming, 10 Colo. 553, 16 P. 298 (1887).

The power to fix boundaries conferred upon the petitioners and the county court, and the clerk of said court, and upon the electors of the territory within the limits of the proposed city or town, is not a delegation of legislative authority, because it can in no sense be said to confer upon such individuals the power to make laws, in that it does not confer upon them the power to do that which the constitution requires of the general assembly to do. People ex rel. Rhodes

v. Fleming, 10 Colo. 553, 16 P. 298 (1887).

Special laws as to organization of towns and cities are prohibited. By virtue of this section it is determined by the sovereign power that a general law for the organization of cities and towns can be made applicable, and it necessarily follows that all special laws upon that subject are prohibited. People ex rel. Rhodes v. Fleming, 10 Colo. 553, 16 P. 298 (1887).

It is apparent from this and the following section and the inhibition against special laws, § 25 of art. V, Colo. Const., first, that the general assembly is prohibited from granting a special charter to any city or town; second, it is required to provide by general law for the incorporation of cities and towns. In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill No. 293, 21 Colo. 38, 39 P. 522 (1895).

Unless city not subject to general law relating to corporations. This and the folowing section do not prohibit the passing of a special act to amend a city charter, granted by a local act passed prior to the adoption of the constitution, where such city has not elected to become subject to, and to be governed by, the general law relating to corporations. Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884).

In view of this section it was no doubt the intention of the framers of the constitution that cities and towns, organized after its adoption, should be organized under general and not special laws. But that it was not intended to interfere with the city of Denver, and other cities and towns acting under special charters previously granted by the territorial legislature, is apparent from the following section. Brown v. City of Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 P. 455 (1884).

This section does not prohibit dissolution of towns and cities organized by any appropriate exercise of legislative power. Mayor of Valverde v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 104, 34 P. 947 (1893).

The object being to free all towns and cities from local or special legislation, it is clear that the inhibition of this section must be held to extend to the disincorporation, as well as the incorporation of such cities and towns. In re Extension of Boundaries, 18 Colo. 288, 32 P. 615 (1893).

Applied in McInerney v. City of Denver, 17 Colo. 302, 29 P. 516 (1892); City of Denver v. Coulehan, 20 Colo. 471, 39 P. 425 (1894); Kirkpatrick v. People ex rel. Stanley, 66 Colo. 100, 179 P. 338 (1919); Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922), aff'd, 262 U.S. 710, 43 S. Ct. 694, 67 L. Ed. 1194 (1923); Georgetown v. Bank of Idaho Springs, 99 Colo. 519, 64 P.2d 132 (1936); People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938).

Section 14. Existing cities and towns may come under general law. The general assembly shall also make provision, by general law, whereby any city, town or village, incorporated by any special or local law, may elect to become subject to and be governed by the general law relating to such corporations.

ANNOTATION

General assembly may exercise almost plenary power over cities and towns. By this and the preceding section the whole subject of towns and cities is, with two slight limitations, relegated to the general assembly. In connection with such municipal corporations, that body is, by these provisions, left to exercise almost plenary power. It determines the mode of organization, and provides for all matters pertaining to government, including the number and kind of officers, their election or appointment, and duties. It may or may not, at its option, create the office of mayor. People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889).

The classification and powers of incorporated towns are governed by general laws. Town of Eaton v. Bouslog, 133 Colo. 130, 292 P.2d 343 (1956).

Town not under general law limited to charter powers. Where a town does not elect to become subject to laws passed under section 13 of this article, its original charter is the sole measure of its powers, rights and liabilities except insofar as the charter has been amended or is in conflict with the constitution. Georgetown v. Bank of Idaho Springs, 99 Colo. 519, 64 P.2d 132 (1936).

This section neither abrogates special charters nor exempts them from amendments. The city of Denver was organized and existing under and by virtue of a special charter long before and at the time of the adoption of our state constitution. The constitution did not abrogate such charters, nor does it exempt them from legislative amendments. Brown v. City of Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 P. 455 (1884); City of Denver v. Coulehan, 20 Colo. 471, 39 P. 425 (1894).

This section has been construed as an express constitutional recognition of the right to amend as well as to retain existing special charters. Brown v. City of Denver, 7 Colo. 305, 3 P. 455 (1884); Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884); Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 426, 8 P. 924 (1885); People ex rel. Barton v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 P. 764 (1889); In re Extension of Boundaries, 18 Colo. 288, 32 P. 615 (1893).

Applied in People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, 94 P. 294 (1908); Kirkpatrick v. People ex rel. Stanley, 66 Colo. 100, 179 P. 338 (1919); People ex rel. Rogers v. Letford, 102 Colo. 284, 79 P.2d 274 (1938).

Section 15. Compensation and fees of county officers. The general assembly shall fix the compensation of county officers in this state by law, and shall establish scales of fees to be charged and collected by such county officers. All such fees shall be paid into the county general fund.

When fixing the compensation of county officers, the general assembly shall give due consideration to county variations, including population; the number of persons residing in unincorporated areas; assessed valuation; motor vehicle registrations; building permits; military installations; and such other factors as may be necessary to prepare compensation schedules that reflect variations in the workloads and responsibilities of county officers and in the tax resources of the several counties.

The compensation of any county officer shall be increased or decreased only when the compensation of all county officers within the same county, or when the compensation for the same county officer within the several counties of the state, is increased or decreased.

County officers shall not have their compensation increased or decreased during the terms of office to which they have been elected or appointed.

Annotator's note. Cases relevant to § 15 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., decided prior to its amendment in 1968 have been included in the annotations to § 15 of art. XIV, Colo. Const.

"Law". The word "law", as used in this section, is not synonymous with "act". The "law" means here law in a general sense -- whatever has been enacted by the general assembly, whether it is embodied in one act or in any number of acts; and so far as the use of the term "law" in this section is concerned, it cannot be construed as compelling the general assembly to embody in one act provisions for fees and salaries. Airy v. People, 21 Colo. 144, 40 P. 362 (1895).

Authority to fix compensation for county officers is vested exclusively in general assembly. Van Cleave v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 33 Colo. App. 227, 518 P.2d 1371 (1973).

Any attempt to alter a sheriff's salary during his or her term of office contravenes the mandate of the Colorado Constitution. Jackson v. State, 966 P.2d 1046 (Colo. 1998).

This section is not self-executing. Legislation was required to give it effect. Glaister v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 22 Colo. App. 326, 123 P. 955 (1912).

Elimination of illegal housing allowance not violative of section. Because housing allowance paid to sheriff-jailer was unauthorized and illegal, its elimination did not violate constitutional prohibitions against salary or compensation reduction during the term of office of a public official. Van Cleave v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 33 Colo. App. 227, 518 P.2d 1371 (1973).

Judge of county court is liable to account to county for fees received by him under the authority of the acts of congress, for oaths administered, affidavits taken, and proofs made before him, in his official capacity, relating to the entry of public lands, even though such services could not have been compelled, nor the officer required to exact or collect the fee. That the fee prescribed by the act of congress is less than that prescribed by the statute of the state is not material. Glaister v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 22 Colo. App. 326, 123 P. 955 (1912).

Section 16. County home rule. (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, and 15 of this article, the registered electors of each county of the state are hereby vested with the power to adopt a home rule charter establishing the organization and structure of county government consistent with this article and statutes enacted pursuant hereto.

(2) The general assembly shall provide by statute procedures under which the registered electors of any county may adopt, amend, and repeal a county home rule charter. Action to initiate home rule may be by petition, signed by not less than five percent of the registered electors of the county in which home rule is sought, or by any other procedure authorized by statute. No county home rule charter, amendment thereto, or repeal thereof, shall become effective until approved by a majority of the registered electors of such county voting thereon.

(3) A home rule county shall provide all mandatory county functions, services, and facilities and shall exercise all mandatory powers as may be required by statute.

(4) A home rule county shall be empowered to provide such permissive functions, services, and facilities and to exercise such permissive powers as may be authorized by statute applicable to all home rule counties, except as may be otherwise prohibited or limited by charter or this constitution.

(5) The provisions of sections 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, and 15 of article XIV of this constitution shall apply to counties adopting a home rule charter only to such extent as may be provided in said charter.

Section 17. Service authorities. (1) (a) The general assembly shall provide by statute for the organization, structure, functions, services, facilities, and powers of service authorities pursuant to the following requirements:

(b) A service authority may be formed only upon the approval of a majority of the registered electors voting thereon in the territory to be included.

(c) The territory within a service authority may include all or part of one county or home rule county or all or part of two or more adjoining counties or home rule counties, but shall not include only a part of any city and county, home rule city or town, or statutory city or town at the time of formation of the service authority. No more than one service authority shall be established in any territory and, in no event, shall a service authority be formed in the metropolitan area composed of the city and county of Denver, and Adams, Arapahoe, and Jefferson counties which does not include all of the city and county of Denver and all or portions of Adams, Arapahoe, and Jefferson counties.

(d) The boundaries of any service authority shall not be such as to create any enclave.

(e) No territory shall be included within the boundaries of more than one service authority.

(2) (a) The general assembly shall also provide by statute for:

(b) The inclusion and exclusion of territory in or from a service authority;

(c) The dissolution of a service authority;

(d) The merger of all or a part of two or more adjacent service authorities, except that such merger shall require the approval of a majority of the registered electors voting thereon in each of the affected service authorities;

and,

(e) The boundaries of any service authority or any special taxing districts therein or the method by which such boundaries are to be determined or changed; and

(f) The method for payment of any election expenses.

(3) (a) The general assembly shall designate by statute the functions, services, and facilities which may be provided by a service authority, and the manner in which the members of the governing body of any service authority shall be elected from compact districts of approximately equal population by the registered electors of the authority, including the terms and qualifications of such members. The general assembly may provide that members of the governing body may be elected by a vote of each compact district or by an at-large vote or combination thereof. Notwithstanding any provision in this constitution or the charter of any home rule city and county, city, town, or county to the contrary, mayors, councilmen, trustees, and county commissioners may additionally hold elective office with a service authority and serve therein either with or without compensation, as provided by statute.

(b) A service authority shall provide any function, service, or facility designated by statute and authorized as provided in paragraphs (c) and (d) of this subsection.

(c) All propositions to provide functions, services, or facilities shall be submitted, either individually or jointly, to the registered electors in the manner and form prescribed by law.

(d) Each such function, service, or facility shall be authorized if approved by a majority of the registered electors of the authority voting thereon; but if the service authority includes territory in more than one county, approval shall also require a majority of the registered electors of the authority voting thereon in those included portions of each of the affected counties.

(e) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of this subsection, where, upon formation of a service authority, any function, service, or facility is already being provided in at least four counties or portions thereof by a single special district, regional planning commission or metropolitan council, or an association of political subdivisions, the general assembly may provide, without a vote of the registered electors, for assumption by one or more service authorities of such function, service, or facility.

(f) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of this subsection, a service authority may contract with any other political subdivision to provide or receive any function, service, or facility designated by statute; but a service authority shall not be invested with any taxing power as a consequence of such contract.

(4) (a) A service authority shall be a body corporate and a political subdivision of the state.

(b) Any other provision of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, any service authority formed under this article and the statutes pursuant thereto may exercise such powers to accomplish the purposes and to provide the authorized functions, services, and facilities of such authority as the general assembly may provide by statute.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of article XX of this constitution, any authorized function, service, or facility may be provided exclusively by the authority or concurrently with other jurisdictions as may be prescribed by statute, subject to the provisions of subsections (3) (c), (3) (d), (3) (e), and (3) (f) of this section.

Section 18. Intergovernmental relationships. (1) (a) Any other provisions of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding:

(b) The general assembly may provide by statute for the terms and conditions under which one or more service authorities may succeed to the rights, properties, and other assets and assume the obligations of any other political subdivision included partially or entirely within such authority, incident to the powers vested in, and the functions, services, and facilities authorized to be provided by the service authority, whether vested and authorized at the time of the formation of the service authority or subsequent thereto; and,

(c) The general assembly may provide by statute for the terms and conditions under which a county, home rule county, city and county, home rule city or town, statutory city or town, or quasi-municipal corporation, or any combination thereof may succeed to the rights, properties, and other assets and assume the obligations of any quasi-municipal corporation located partially or entirely within its boundaries.

(d) The general assembly may provide by statute procedures whereby any county, home rule county, city and county, home rule city or town, statutory city or town, or service authority may establish special taxing districts.

(2) (a) Nothing in this constitution shall be construed to prohibit the state or any of its political subdivisions from cooperating or contracting with one another or with the government of the United States to provide any function, service, or facility lawfully authorized to each of the cooperating or contracting units, including the sharing of costs, the imposition of taxes, or the incurring of debt.

(b) Nothing in this constitution shall be construed to prohibit the authorization by statute of a separate governmental entity as an instrument to be used through voluntary participation by cooperating or contracting political subdivisions.

(c) Nothing in this constitution shall be construed to prohibit any political subdivision of the state from contracting with private persons, associations, or corporations for the provision of any legally authorized functions, services, or facilities within or without its boundaries.

(d) Nothing in this constitution shall be construed to prohibit the general assembly from providing by statute for state imposed and collected taxes to be shared with and distributed to political subdivisions of the state except that this provision shall not in any way limit the powers of home rule cities and towns.

assembly shall provide by general laws for the organization of corporations hereafter to be created.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, "The Constitutionality of Industrial Development Acts", see 35 U. Colo. L. Rev. 556 (1963).

Subject matter of this article relates to private corporations. The reference to municipal and other corporations named in this section was for the purpose of excepting them from the operation of the provision respecting special legislation. Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1885).

But power to create municipal corporations by special charters is clearly given by this section, and absolute control over them, extending to the right to alter, revoke, or annul any charter, is given by section 3 of this article. Which powers may be granted and which withheld, and what restrictions shall be imposed in the exercise of the powers granted are clearly within legislative control, and the right to limit and circumscribe granted powers by repeal of former grants is unquestionably with the general assembly. Johnson v. People, 6 Colo. App. 163, 40 P. 576 (1895).

And general assembly may create public quasi-corporation. And also under this section and § 35 of art. V, Colo. Const., it is within the power of the general assembly to create a public quasi-corporation, which has for its object the discharge of the specific public, or municipal, duty of supplying water, as a part of the municipal machinery, even for municipal corporations. Donahue v. Morgan, 24 Colo. 389, 50 P. 1038 (1897).

Distinction between municipal and quasi-municipal corporation. There is a broad distinction between the legal signification of the term municipal corporation, employed in this section, and the term quasi-municipal corporation. A municipal corporation, such as a city or incorporated town, is created by the consent of the people composing it, for their advantage and convenience, and is invested with the power of local self-government. Quasi-corporations, on the other hand, rank low down in the scale of corporate existence, are endowed with but few corporate functions, and are merely auxiliaries of the state. Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884).

Corporations enumerated in this section include both classes, according to the primary import and natural signification of the words employed. The substitution of the words, "quasi-municipal corporation" for the words "municipal corporations", excludes from the section a whole class of corporations specifically named therein. There is no necessity whatever for such a construction. Both classes are "under the control of the state" -- that is, under its legislative control, which is a broader and more natural signification of the words employed than ministerial control. The former is applicable to all the classes named in the section, while the latter is not, it being conceded that municipal corporations proper are not under the ministerial control of the state. Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1885).

This section does not abrogate previously existing special charters. The city of Denver was organized and existing under and by virtue of a special charter long before and at the time of the adoption of our state constitution. The constitution did not abrogate such charters, nor does it exempt them from legislative amendments. City of Denver v. Coulehan, 20 Colo. 471, 39 P. 425 (1894).

Applied in In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill No. 69, 15 Colo. 601, 26 P. 157 (1890); Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922).

Section 3. Power to revoke, alter or annul charter. The general assembly shall have the power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation now existing and revocable at the adoption of this constitution, or any that may hereafter be created, whenever in their opinion it may be injurious to the citizens of the state, in such manner, however, that no injustice shall be done to the corporators.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Highlights of the 1955 Legislative Session -- Corporations", see 28 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 60 (1955).

Section does not control exercise of police power in regulating transaction of corporate business. This section recognizes a legislative right to alter, revoke, or annul upon condition just to the corporation, any part or all of the corporate charter; but it does not control the exercise of the police power in regulating the transaction of corporate business. Platte & Denver Canal & Milling Co. v. Dowell, 17 Colo. 376, 30 P. 68 (1892), appeal dismissed, 154 U.S. 512, 14 S. Ct. 1150, 38 L. Ed. 1079 (1893).

Section 4. Railroads - common carriers - construction - intersection. All railroads shall be public highways, and all railroad companies shall be common carriers. Any association or corporation organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad between any designated points within this state, and to connect at the state line with railroads of other states and territories. Every railroad company shall have the right with its road to intersect, connect with or cross any other railroad.

ANNOTATION

Right of road to join onto another declared for protection of public. The regulations of the constitution respecting railroad corporations are, in general, limitations of the powers of those corporations for the protection of the public interests, and to facilitate the transportation business of the country. The right of a road to join onto another is declared, certainly, for the protection of the public rather than to enable corporations to perform their agreement. To say that it is an enabling act only, is to divest it of any useful purpose. It is more reasonable to believe that by the union of tracks it was intended to make the roads practically continuous for all that may come in the usual course of business between companies friendly to each other; that the companies are to be brought into harmony when they fail or refuse to agree in the due and proper exercise of their public function as common carriers. Denver & N. O. R. R. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R., 13 F. 546 (D. Colo. 1882).

With due regard for rights of interested corporations. The constitution requiring that railroad tracks shall be connected, it follows necessarily that some use is to be made of the roads so united, and this we interpret to be such as is usual and customary with connecting lines throughout the country, and may be said to stand with the public convenience and a due regard for the rights of the corporations interested. Denver & N. O. R. R. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R., 13 F. 546 (D. Colo. 1882).

Roads to be connected physically, as distinguished from business connection always existing between roads which have approximate termini. It is a union of tracks admitting of the passage of cars from one road to the other, and not a mere meeting of roads which may admit of continuous traffic in some form. Denver & N. O. R. R. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R., 13 F. 546 (D. Colo. 1882).

As constitutional right to connect railroad with railroad does not itself imply right of connecting business with business. The railroad companies are not to be connected, but their roads. A connection of roads may make a connection in business convenient and desirable, but the one does not necessarily carry with it the other. The language of the constitution is that railroads may "intersect, connect with, or cross" each other. This clearly applies to the road as a physical structure, not to the corporation or its business. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R. v. Denver & N. O. R. R., 110 U.S. 667, 4 S. Ct. 185, 28 L. Ed. 291 (1884).

"Designated points". As to where one of the "designated points" is within the corporate limits of some city or town, see Denver & S. F. R. R. v. Domke, 11 Colo. 247, 17 P. 777 (1888).

Character of railroad may be determined in condemnation proceeding. This section does not prohibit the determining of the character of a railroad in a proceeding by it to condemn land under § 15 of art. II, Colo. Const. Denver R. R. Land & Coal Co. v. Union Pac. Ry., 34 F. 386 (D. Colo. 1888).

Moffat tunnel not road or highway within meaning of section. The nearest the Moffat tunnel will come to being a railroad is that one of the uses to which it will be put, not the only use, is that of a right of way for a railroad. Even if it can be said that the tunnel, when completed, will be a road, highway, or railroad, it will not be such a "road or highway" as is contemplated by this constitutional provision. Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922), aff'd, 262 U.S. 710, 43 S. Ct. 694, 67 L. Ed. 1194 (1923).

Applied in Colo. & S. Ry. v. State Rd. Comm'n, 54 Colo. 64, 129 P. 506 (1912).

Section 5. Consolidation of parallel lines forbidden. No railroad corporation, or the lessees or managers thereof, shall consolidate its stock, property or franchises with any other railroad corporation owning or having under its control a parallel or competing line.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 69.

Section 6. Equal rights of public to transportation. All individuals, associations and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported over any railroad in this state, and no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges or in facilities for transportation of freight or passengers within the state, and no railroad company, nor any lessee, manager or employee thereof, shall give any preference to individuals, associations or corporations in furnishing cars or motive power.

ANNOTATION

This section is but declaration of common law. Bayles v. Kansas Pac. Ry., 13 Colo. 181, 22 P. 341 (1889).

And section imposes no greater obligations upon company than common law would have. Every common carrier must carry for all to the extent of his capacity, without undue or unreasonable discrimination either in charges or facilities. The constitution has taken from the general assembly the power of abolishing this rule as applied to railroad companies. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. R. v. Denver & N. O. R. R., 110 U.S. 667, 4 S. Ct. 185, 28 L. Ed. 291 (1884).

By this provision railway companies are left at liberty to regulate rates of transportation, and are not answerable for their conduct, in this respect, unless such charges are unreasonable, and by "undue and unjust" discrimination tend to create exclusive privileges, to the detriment of other shippers or the public-at-large. Bayles v. Kansas Pac. Ry., 13 Colo. 181, 22 P. 341 (1889).

And may discriminate if not unduly or unjustly. By fair intendment it is clear that railway companies, under this provision, may discriminate, so long as such discrimination is neither "undue nor unjust". Bayles v. Kansas Pac. Ry., 13 Colo. 181, 22 P. 341 (1889); Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Whan, 39 Colo. 230, 89 P. 39 (1907).

Applied in Colo. & S. Ry. v. State Rd. Comm'n, 54 Colo. 64, 129 P. 506 (1912).

Section 8. Eminent domain - police power - not to be abridged. The right of eminent domain shall never be abridged nor so construed as to prevent the general assembly from taking the property and franchises of incorporated companies, and subjecting them to public use, the same as the property of individuals; and the police power of the state shall never be abridged or so construed as to permit corporations to conduct their business in such manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals or the general well-being of the state.

ANNOTATION

Colorado has recognized broad power of general assembly in area of police power. People ex rel. Dunbar v. Gym of Am., Inc., 177 Colo. 97, 493 P.2d 660 (1972).

But legislative regulations must bear reasonable relationship to public health, safety, etc. In the exercise of the police powers, legislative regulations, restraints and proscriptions must bear a reasonable relation to the public health, safety, morals and welfare. People ex rel. Orcutt v. Instantwhip Denver, Inc., 176 Colo. 396, 490 P.2d 940 (1971).

And legislation must have real and substantial relation to accomplishment of objectives which form the basis of the police regulation. People ex rel. Orcutt v. Instantwhip Denver, Inc., 176 Colo. 396, 490 P.2d 940 (1971).

Governmental purpose may not be achieved by unnecessarily broad means. A governmental purpose to control or prevent certain activities, which may be constitutionally subject to state or municipal regulation under the police power, may not be achieved by means which sweep unnecessarily broadly. People v. Von Tersch, 180 Colo. 295, 505 P.2d 5 (1973).

Police power of regulation does not include absolute prohibition of trade in useful and harmless articles of commerce; where prohibitory, the act must be declared to be invalid. People ex rel. Orcutt v. Instantwhip Denver, Inc., 176 Colo. 396, 490 P.2d 940 (1971).

Police power relates to public physical, mental, and financial safety. Police power relates not only to the public's physical or mental health and safety, but also to public financial safety. People ex rel. Dunbar v. Gym of Am., Inc., 177 Colo. 97, 493 P.2d 660 (1972).

Power to take property already devoted to public use. This section does not change or modify the general rule that property already devoted to public use cannot be taken for another in such manner or to such extent that the use to which it is devoted is wholly defeated or superseded, unless the power to so take be granted expressly or by necessary implication. Denver Power & Irrigation Co. v. Denver & R. G. R. R., 30 Colo. 204, 69 P. 568 (1902).

Particular business, etc., practices may be subject to state control. If the power to regulate activities which are affected with a public interest is a legitimate function of the police power, it follows that if particular business, commercial, or trade practices affect the public interest, they in turn may be subject to state control. People ex rel. Orcutt v. Instantwhip Denver, Inc., 176 Colo. 396, 490 P.2d 940 (1971); People ex rel. Dunbar v. Gym of Am., Inc., 177 Colo. 97, 493 P.2d 660 (1972); Dixon v. Zick, 179 Colo. 278, 500 P.2d 130 (1972).

Applied in City & County of Denver v. Stenger, 277 F. 865 (8th Cir. 1921); Pub. Serv. Co. v. City of Loveland, 79 Colo. 216, 245 P. 493 (1926); Union Rural Elec. Ass'n v. Town of Frederick, 629 P.2d 1093 (Colo. App. 1981).

Section 9. Fictitious stock, bonds - increase of stock. No corporation shall issue stocks or bonds, except for labor done, service performed, or money or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock of corporations shall not be increased except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding a majority of the stock, first obtained at a meeting held after at least thirty days' notice given in pursuance of law.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For note, "Consideration for Stock Under the Colorado Constitution and Cases", see 29 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 112 (1956). For article, "The New Colorado Corporation Act", see 35 Dicta 317 (1958). For note, "Discount, Bonus and Watered Stock in Colorado", see 33 Rocky Mt. L. Rev. 197 (1961). For comment on Burch v. Exploration Data Consultants, Inc. appearing below, see 46 U. Colo. L. Rev. 125 (1974).

"Issuance" determined upon substance of transaction. In determining whether an "issuance" occurred, a court will look to the substance of the transaction rather than its technical form. Burch v. Exploration Data Consultants, Inc., 33 Colo. App. 155, 518 P.2d 288 (1973).

Shares not "issued" within meaning of this section. See Burch v. Exploration Data Consultants, Inc., 33 Colo. App. 155, 518 P.2d 288 (1973).

Both this section and § 7-4-105 aim at preventing watering of corporate stock. Their purpose is to prevent corporations from issuing stock without receiving full value, and so to prevent the diluting of the holdings of innocent stockholders, and the reliance by creditors on false or nonexistent capital resulting from the issuance of watered stock. Haselbush v. Alsco of Colo., Inc., 161 Colo. 138, 421 P.2d 113 (1966).

Policy behind § 7-4-105 (2) and this section is to protect other stockholders of the corporation, creditors, and good faith future stockholders from the dilution of their investment by "watered" stock. Burch v. Exploration Data Consultants, Inc., 33 Colo. App. 155, 518 P.2d 288 (1973).

Stock issued in violation of this section and former § 7-4-105 is ipso facto invalid. Arkansas River Land Co. v. Farmers' Loan Co., 13 Colo. 587, 22 P. 954 (1889); In re Dreiling, 233 Bankr. 848 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1999).

Section not available as defense in action brought on promissory note given for stock of corporation. If a corporation is prohibited by this section from delivering its stock in return for promissory notes, it would constitute no defense to an action on the notes where the transaction was consummated in good faith. Boldt v. Motor Sec. Co., 74 Colo. 55, 218 P. 743 (1923); Haselbush v. Alsco of Colo., Inc., 161 Colo. 138, 421 P.2d 113 (1966).

The purpose of this section and § 7-4-105 would not be served by holding that these provisions may be used to defeat an action by the corporation seeking to enforce payment on a promissory note given for the issuance of stock when the transaction has been made in good faith. Haselbush v. Alsco of Colo., Inc., 161 Colo. 138, 421 P.2d 113 (1966).

As shares bought with promissory notes not void. The fact that this section and § 7-4-105 (2) may prohibit execution and delivery of share certificates in exchange for promissory notes does not render the shares void. Burch v. Exploration Data Consultants, Inc., 33 Colo. App. 155, 518 P.2d 288 (1973).

Applied in Lilylands Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Wood, 56 Colo. 130, 136 P. 1026 (1913); Pueblo Foundry & Mach. Co. v. Lannon, 68 Colo. 131, 187 P. 1031 (1920).

Section 10. Foreign corporations - place - agent. No foreign corporation shall do any business in this state without having one or more known places of business, and an authorized agent or agents in the same, upon whom process may be served.

Section 11. Street railroads - consent of municipality. No street railroad shall be constructed within any city, town, or incorporated village, without the consent of the local authorities having the control of the street or highway proposed to be occupied by such street railroad.

ANNOTATION

Section intended as restraint on power of general assembly. In the absence of constitutional restraint, the general assembly of the state could have granted directly the authority to construct, maintain, and operate street railroads within cities, towns, or incorporated villages, upon such terms as the general assembly might impose, without reference to the wish or consent of the inhabitants of such city, town, or incorporated village. This section was intended simply as a restraint upon the power of the general assembly in this respect, that the general assembly could not directly grant authority for the construction, maintenance, or operation of a street railroad in such municipalities, without the consent of the municipality. It did not, however, withhold from the general assembly the power to prohibit municipalities from granting to street railroads authority to occupy the public streets of the municipality except on terms which the general assembly should see fit to impose, but it gave to municipalities authority to impose other and additional terms from those prescribed by the general assembly, or to withhold consent entirely. City of Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co., 201 F. 790 (8th Cir. 1912).

Section 12. Retrospective laws not to be passed. The general assembly shall pass no law for the benefit of a railroad or other corporation, or any individual or association of individuals, retrospective in its operation, or which imposes on the people of any county or municipal subdivision of the state, a new liability in respect to transactions or considerations already past.

ANNOTATION

Section does not affect § 4 of art. XIV, Colo. Const. The provisions of § 4 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., being special provisions for specified objects, they are not affected by this section. In re House Bill No. 122, 9 Colo. 639, 21 P. 478 (1886).

Act authorizing annexation not retrospective. A legislative act whereby one municipal corporation becomes annexed to another, forming one consolidated town or city, the surviving municipality assuming all the corporate debts and taking all the corporate property of the annexed municipality, together with the authority to levy and collect taxes throughout the enlarged municipality, is not an act retrospect in its operation; nor does it impose on the people of either municipality a new liability in respect to transactions or considerations already past. The benefit accruing to the people of the surviving city is a present and prospective consideration, and is based upon a present and not upon a past transaction. So, too, there is a present consideration accruing to the people of the annexed territory; they receive and enjoy the greater privileges and protection which the larger municipality affords, and at the same time are relieved from the burdens of an independent municipal government. Mayor of Valverde v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 104, 34 P. 947 (1893).

Procedural or remedial change not retroactive. Application of a statute to a subsisting claim for relief does not violate the prohibition of retroactive legislation where the statute effects a change that is only procedural or remedial in nature. Continental Title Co. v. District Court, 645 P.2d 1310 (Colo. 1982); Davis v. Bd. of Psychologist Exam'rs, 791 P.2d 1198 (Colo. App. 1989).

Application of a statute is not rendered retroactive and unlawful merely because the facts upon which it operates occurred before adoption of the statute. Continental Title Co. v. District Court, 645 P.2d 1310 (Colo. 1982).

Pension reform act unconstitutionally imposes on cities a "new liability", to the extent that the act requires cities to contribute an amount in excess of that which could be collected based on an assessment of one mill for any year up to January 1, 1979. City of Colo. Springs v. State, 626 P.2d 1122 (Colo. 1980).

Section 40-3-106 (4) does not impermissibly impose a new liability upon a city's residents in violation of this constitutional provision as the statute does not require that municipal customers be surcharged for the amount surcharged to and paid by rural customers for franchise fees prior to adoption of the statute, and an increase in surcharges after statutory enactment is not a new liability within the meaning of this provision. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Municipality may create own liability. Charter amendment providing for police pensions and payments in lieu of sick leave. An amendment to the charter of the city and county of Denver, providing for police pensions and authorizing the payment of a lump sum in lieu of sick leave to those members of the department who, upon retirement, have exhausted none or only a portion of their sick leave allowance, does not violate this section of the constitution, since this section does not prevent a municipality from creating its own liability. McNichols v. Police Protective Ass'n, 121 Colo. 45, 215

P.2d 303 (1949).

The provisions of this section do not apply to municipal corporations or governmental subdivisions of the state or county. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. E-470 Pub. Hwy., 881 P.2d 412 (Colo. App. 1994), aff'd in part and rev'd in part sub nom. Nicholl v. E-470 Pub. Hwy. Auth., 896 P.2d 859 (Colo. 1995).

Applied in Sch. Dist. No. 1 v. Sch. Dist. No. 7, 33 Colo. 43, 78 P. 690 (1904); Colo. Fuel & Iron Corp. v. Indus. Comm'n, 148 Colo. 557, 367 P.2d 597 (1961); Cox v. District Court, 160 Colo. 437, 417 P.2d 792 (1966); Jackson v. Colo., 294 F. Supp. 1065 (D. Colo. 1968).

Section 13. Telegraph lines - consolidation. Any association or corporation, or the lessees or managers thereof, organized for the purpose, or any individual, shall have the right to construct and maintain lines of telegraph within this state, and to connect the same with other lines, and the general assembly shall, by general law, of uniform operation, provide reasonable regulations to give full effect to this section. No telegraph company shall consolidate with, or hold a controlling interest in, the stock or bonds of any other telegraph company owning or having the control of a competing line, or acquire, by purchase or otherwise, any other competing line of telegraph.

ANNOTATION

Applied in Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. People ex rel. Wilson, 68 Colo. 487, 190 P. 513 (1920).

Section 14. Railroad or telegraph companies - consolidating with foreign companies. If any railroad, telegraph, express or other corporation organized under any of the laws of this state, shall consolidate, by sale or otherwise, with any railroad, telegraph, express or other corporation organized under any laws of any other state or territory or of the United States, the same shall not thereby become a foreign corporation, but the courts of this state shall retain jurisdiction over that part of the corporate property within the limits of the state in all matters which may arise, as if said consolidation had not taken place.

Source: Entire article added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, p. 71.

ANNOTATION

Only effect of this section is to retain in Colorado the citizenship of a corporation originally organized under its laws, which enters into a consolidation, and to retain jurisdiction over the property which it has in that state, for the purpose of securing the rights of its creditors and stockholders. The provision of this section is that the corporation originally organized under the laws of Colorado shall not become a foreign corporation, and not that its successor, organized under the laws of another state, or any other foreign corporation, shall become a corporation of Colorado. Rust v. United Waterworks Co., 70 F. 129 (8th Cir. 1895).

Section 15. Contracts with employees releasing from liability - void. It shall be unlawful for any person, company or corporation to require of its servants or employees, as a condition of their employment or otherwise, any contract or agreement, whereby such person, company or corporation shall be released or discharged from liability or responsibility on account of personal injuries received by such servants or employees while in the service of such person, company or corporation, by reason of the negligence of such person, company or corporation, or the agents or employees thereof, and such contracts shall be absolutely null and void.

ANNOTATION

This section indicates public policy of this state as to contracts of this nature. Denver Pub. Whse. Co. v. Munger, 20 Colo. App. 56, 77 P. 5 (1894).

Conductor in charge of sleeping car, hauled by a railroad company under a contract with a sleeping car company, which includes the transportation of such employee, is not a passenger; and the limitation, by the terms of such contract, of the railroad company's liability for injuries to him, is not void as against public policy, nor as being in contravention of this section. Denver & R. G. R. R. v. Whan, 39 Colo. 230, 89 P. 39 (1931).

Applied in Ferrara v. Auric Mining Co., 43 Colo. 496, 95 P. 952 (1934).

ARTICLE XVI
Mining and Irrigation

MINING

Section 1. Commissioner of mines. There shall be established and maintained the office of commissioner of mines, the duties and salaries of which shall be prescribed by law. When said office shall be established, the governor shall, with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint thereto a person known to be competent, whose term of office shall be four years.

ANNOTATION

Mining commissioner deemed member of government. The office of mining commissioner was created in pursuance of this section, and when a party is appointed he becomes, by virtue of this section, a member of one of the three departments of the government, and as such is entitled to have his salary, and those of his assistants, paid by the state, as part of the expenses of such departments, without reference to the date at which the act took effect. Parks v. Commissioners of Soldiers' & Sailors' Home, 22 Colo. 86, 43 P. 542 (1896).

Section 2. Ventilation - employment of children. The general assembly shall provide by law for the proper ventilation of mines, the construction of escapement shafts, and such other appliances as may be necessary to protect the health and secure the safety of the workmen therein; and shall prohibit the employment in the mines of children under twelve years of age.

This section and three following sections comprise all of constitution that deals with subject of water rights, a subject second to none in its importance and intricacy. In re Senate Resolution, 9 Colo. 620, 21 P. 470 (1886); Archuleta v. Boulder & Weld County Ditch Co., 118 Colo. 43, 192 P.2d 891 (1948).

This section guarantees right to appropriate, not a right to speculate, and the right to appropriate is for use, not merely for profit. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. Vidler Tunnel Water Co., 197 Colo. 413, 594 P.2d 566 (1979).

And this section was intended to preserve historical appropriation system of water rights upon which the irrigation economy in Colorado was founded, rather than to assure public access to waters for purposes other than appropriation. People v. Emmert, 198 Colo. 137, 597 P.2d 1025 (1979).

As rights of water appropriation are reserved to the people. Central Colo. Water Conservancy Dist. v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 186 Colo. 193, 526 P.2d 302 (1974).

The rivers and streams and the right to appropriate the waters therefrom belong to the people. Central Colo. Water Conservancy Dist. v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 186 Colo. 193, 526 P.2d 302 (1974).

State justified in asserting ownership of all natural streams. The natural streams of Colorado are nonnavigable. Their entire volume is made up of the rains and snow which fall upon its surface. The state was therefore justified in asserting by virtue of this section its ownership of all these natural streams. Congress in the enabling act, and the president in proclaiming the admission of the state must be assumed to have been aware of the situation, and to have consented to the assertion of title so made by the state. Stockman v. Leddy, 55 Colo. 24, 129 P. 220 (1912).

To the extent that Stockman v. Leddy conflicts with the determination of the existence of federal reserved water rights, it is overruled by United States v. City & County of Denver, 656 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1982).

And general assembly has power and is charged with duty to protect interest of state in natural streams. The public moneys may be appropriated for the protection and defense of the rights of the state, and its citizens, in these waters. Stockman v. Leddy, 55 Colo. 24, 129 P. 220 (1912).

So it is highly questionable whether general assembly can give town permission to befoul and contaminate public streams by discharging raw and unpurified sewage therein. Mack v. Town of Craig, 68 Colo. 337, 191 P. 101 (1920).

"Not heretofore appropriated", in this section, is a mere recognition of the rights acquired by appropriations then already existing. Colo. Milling & Elevator Co. v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 26 Colo. 47, 56 P. 185 (1899); Fort Collins Milling & Elevator Co. v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 61 Colo. 45, 156 P. 140 (1916).

The use of the words "not heretofore appropriated", in this section, and "unappropriated waters", in section 6 of this article, clearly indicates an intention to limit the application of these provisions to the future. Strickler v. City of Colo. Springs, 16 Colo. 61, 26 P. 313 (1891).

"Public" and "people" in this section are synonymous, and the declaration that the unappropriated waters are "the property of the public", and "dedicated to the use of the people of the state, subject to appropriation", does not mean that the ownership of water should remain inalienable in the public, but that it should pass to the people by the first appropriation to a beneficial use. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

Public interest in preserving water resources. Under the inferences in this section and under the many cases of the supreme court, the public has a vital interest in preserving the water resources of this state and adhering to correct rules for the allotment and administration of water. In re Wadsworth, 193 Colo. 95, 562 P.2d 1114 (1977).

Waters of natural streams of Colorado are, under constitution, property of public, not any segment thereof or any geographical portion of the state, and the right to appropriate water and put it to beneficial use at any place in the state is no longer open to question. Metro. Sub. Water Users Ass'n v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 148 Colo. 173, 365 P.2d 273 (1961).

Water administration provisions provide framework for diverting unappropriated waters. The Water Right Determination and Administration Act of 1969, §§ 37-92-101 to 37-92-602, provides the statutory framework for implementing the constitutional right to divert the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial uses. State ex rel. Danielson v. Vickroy, 627 P.2d 752 (Colo. 1981).

And title to unappropriated waters is vested in public, with perpetual right to its use in the people. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887); Strickler v. City of Colo. Springs, 16 Colo. 61, 26 P. 313 (1891).

Such waters subject to appropriation as private property. By this and the following section the people of Colorado dedicated to the public all unappropriated waters of every natural stream within its borders, and made them subject to appropriation as private property. Cascade Town Co. v. Empire Water & Power Co., 181 F. 1011 (D. Colo. 1910), rev'd on other grounds, 205 F. 123 (8th Cir. 1913); People ex rel. Park Reservoir Co. v. Hinderlider, 98 Colo. 505, 57 P.2d 894 (1936); Metro. Sub. Water Users Ass'n v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 148 Colo. 173, 365 P.2d 273 (1961).

All unappropriated waters in the streams belong to the state, the public, the people. Any person wishing to divert (appropriate) any unappropriated water for a beneficial use has a constitutional right to do so that cannot be denied. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

And appropriators are owners of use of such waters. The title, right, property, and ownership to unappropriated water remains in the state, in the public generally, until some person diverts it, appropriates it, segregates it from the volume of the stream and applies it to a beneficial use by some legal method. The title of the state, of the public, as to the water so appropriated, is then divested. The appropriator becomes the proprietor of the water or the use of the water -- it is immaterial which term is used, they are in effect the same -- and he remains the proprietor, owner of the use, so long as the beneficial use to which it was appropriated is continued. While it so remains it is the subject of exclusive ownership and control, the property of the appropriator in every legal aspect. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893); Gossard Breeding Estates, Inc. v. Texas Co., 76 F. Supp. 20 (D. Colo. 1946), rev'd and remanded pursuant to stipulation, 166 F.2d 571 (10th Cir. 1948).

Right to appropriate and divert water is not absolute. City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 517 F. Supp. 155 (D. Colo. 1981), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 695 F.2d 465 (10th Cir. 1982).

Decree of abandonment terminates the water right and divests the owner of any interest in it, thereby rendering the water once again subject to appropriation by the public under this section. Gardner v. State, 200 Colo. 221, 614 P.2d 357 (1980).

Consent to use stream necessary from property owner. Individuals do not have a right under this section to float and fish on a nonnavigable natural stream as it flows through, across and within the boundaries of privately owned property without first obtaining the consent of the property owner. People v. Emmert, 198 Colo. 137, 597 P.2d 1025 (1979).

Vested rights to water may be acquired. Under this section and §§ 6 to 8 of this article, and the legislation enacted pursuant thereto, vested rights to waters in natural streams may be acquired. Archuleta v. Boulder & Weld County Ditch Co., 118 Colo. 43, 192 P.2d 891 (1948).

But appropriation applies only to water in natural streams. This and the following section recognize the doctrine of appropriation as applicable only to the water in "natural streams". Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

Only that portion of underground water which supplies a natural stream is subject to the doctrine of appropriation in like manner as surface waters. Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

"Natural stream" used in its broadest sense. Considering that from the beginning of settlement in Colorado irrigation has been the declared public policy; that the precipitation is small, and that many natural streams always have been dry during a portion of every year, held that the phrase "natural stream", in this and the following section was used in the broadest sense and intended to include all tributaries, and the streams draining into other streams. In re German Ditch Reservoir Co., 56 Colo. 252, 139 P. 2 (1914).

Including ground water. Ground water, in Colorado's century of water use development is regarded as property of the public, except in such instances where it is not tributary to a natural stream. Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

If ground water is in motion so as to be tributary to a natural stream, or part of the stream water table, it has always been subject to priorities of appropriation on the natural stream. But unless it is tributary to the natural stream, it is not subject to the law of appropriation. Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

Act regarding the obtainment of well permits and augmentation plans by owners and operators of sand and gravel pits does not violate this section. While the provisions of the act alter the manner in which senior and junior water right appropriators may obtain relief from injury, they do not create a new class of water rights not subject to the principles of appropriation. Central Colo. Water v. Simpson, 877 P.2d 335 (Colo. 1994).

Such as underground flowing, seepage, and percolation waters. All underground waters which by flowage, seepage, or percolation will eventually, if not intercepted, reach and become a part of some natural stream either on or beneath the surface, are governed and controlled by the terms of the constitution and statutes relative to appropriation, the same as the surface waters of such stream. City of Colo. Springs v. Bender, 148 Colo. 458, 366 P.2d 552 (1961).

Tributary underground waters are public waters; they are subject to appropriation because they belong to the river and therefore to the people of the state by this section. Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

Since seepage and percolation waters belong to the river they belong to the people of the state by virtue of this section. Nevius v. Smith, 86 Colo. 178, 279 P. 44 (1929).

Reservoir seepage which would be tributary to a natural stream, if allowed to flow unarrested, is a part of that natural stream and thus the property of the people of the state of Colorado under this section, subject to decreed priorities. This water is subject to appropriation in the same manner as other water in a natural stream; it is not the property of the reservoir and is distinguishable from irrigation waste water or natural seepage. Lamont v. Riverside Irrigation Dist., 179 Colo. 134, 498 P.2d 1150 (1972).

And spring waters. Once spring waters have been established as tributary to a stream, they cannot be interrupted in their course and diverted from the stream; they belong to the creek, which in turn belongs to the people of the state by this section. Cline v. Whitten, 150 Colo. 179, 372 P.2d 145 (1962).

Nontributary ground water is not subject to appropriation under this section and § 6 of this article. State, Dept. of Natural Res. v. Southwestern Colo. Water Conservation Dist., 671 P.2d 1294 (Colo. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 944, 104 S. Ct. 1929, 80 L. Ed. 2d 474 (1984).

An importer of foreign water is not required to meet the requirements for appropriation, including intent and beneficial use, to acquire a right of reuse. City of Thornton v. Bijou Irrigation Co., 926 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1996).

There is presumption that all water is tributary to some natural stream. Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

The natural presumption is that all flowing water finds its way to a stream. Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

But that presumption is prima facie only and is therefore rebuttable. Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

Burden of proof on issue of whether water is or is not tributary to a stream is upon the party asserting it is not tributary, not upon the one asserting that it is. Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

Reduction of consumptive use of tributary water cannot provide basis for water right that is independent of the system of priorities on the stream. R.J.A., Inc. v. Water Users Ass'n of Dist. 6, 690 P.2d 823 (Colo. 1984).

Streams independently appropriated remain independent under doctrine of prior appropriation unless the water of those streams becomes subject to equitable apportionment by compact, in which case the streams must be administered as mandated by the compact or statutory provisions for priority administration of water rights. Alamosa-La Jara Water Users Prot. Ass'n v. Gould, 674 P.2d 914 (Colo. 1983).

State engineer's authority to apply tributary rule of compact abolished. A compact requiring administration of the Rio Grande mainstem and Conejos river according to delivery schedules that did not include the contributions of three creeks as significant to the delivery obligation did away with the state engineer's authority to apply the tributary rule of the compact to the three creeks. Alamosa-La Jara Water Users Prot. Ass'n v. Gould, 674 P.2d 914 (Colo. 1983).

Ground water management act is not unconstitutional in violation of this section and section 6 of this article insofar as said act applies to tributary ground water. Kuiper v. Lundvall, 187 Colo. 40, 529 P.2d 1328 (1974), appeal dismissed, 421 U.S. 996, 95 S. Ct. 2391, 44 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1975).

This section abolishes common-law doctrine of continuous flow. The common-law doctrine of continuous flow of a natural stream is inapplicable to conditions in this state, and, by necessary construction of our local customs, statutes and constitution, it is abolished. Sternberger v. Seaton Mt. Elec. Light, Heat & Power Co., 45 Colo. 401, 102 P. 168 (1909).

Colorado has rule of priority of appropriation as distinguished from the rule of riparian rights. Nebraska v. Wyoming, 325 U.S. 589, 65 S. Ct. 1332, 89 L. Ed. 1815 (1945).

Colorado applies the doctrine of prior appropriation in establishing rights to the use of water. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1976).

Under the doctrine of prior appropriation, one acquires a right to water by diverting it from its natural source and applying it to some beneficial use. Continued beneficial use of the water is required in order to maintain the right. In periods of shortage, priority among confirmed rights is determined according to the date of initial diversion. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1976).

Evidence insufficient to demonstrate intent to put water to beneficial use. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. Vidler Tunnel Water Co., 197 Colo. 413, 594 P.2d 566 (1979).

Time provisions for appropriations not limit on constitutional right. The ground water management act's time provisions, including the portions which authorize extensions upon good cause shown, do not prohibit nor impermissibly limit the constitutional right to appropriate the unappropriated waters of this state's natural streams, but rather, regulate the manner of effecting an appropriation in the designated ground water context. Kuiper v. Warren, 195 Colo. 541, 580 P.2d 32 (1978).

And right of appropriators to use in perpetuity. Contract between a water district to sell and deliver water to a city outside the district's boundaries in perpetuity was not null and void since the state grants the right to appropriators to the use of water in perpetuity. Cherokee Water Dist. v. Colo. Springs, 184 Colo. 161, 519 P.2d 339 (1974).

Appropriations of water prior to adoption of constitution stand upon same footing as appropriations subsequently made. They are tested by the same principles, and controlled by the same rules and regulations, save as affected by the classification made in the constitution. Fort Collins Milling & Elevator Co. v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 61 Colo. 45, 156 P. 140 (1916).

But this and following section do not authorize interference with rights of prior appropriators for irrigating purposes, whose rights vested before the adoption of the constitution, in order to supply later comers with water for domestic uses. Armstrong v. Larimer County Ditch Co., 1 Colo. App. 49, 27 P. 235 (1891).

Thus owners of prior vested rights entitled to compensation. This and the following section were not intended to affect, and do not affect, prior vested rights, but all owners of such rights are entitled to compensation therefor before the same can be taken or injuriously affected. Strickler v. City of Colo. Springs, 16 Colo. 61, 26 P. 313 (1891).

This section and following section are self-executing. People ex rel. Park Reservoir Co. v. Hinderlider, 98 Colo. 505, 57 P.2d 894 (1936).

This and following section are so plain that no construction whatever is needed. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

This section and following section must be construed so as to harmonize with § 15 of art. II, Colo. Const. The right to the use of water secured by legal appropriation is property, and a proper construction of this and the following section harmonizes these provisions with the declaration of § 15 of art. II, Colo. Const., "that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation". Armstrong v. Larimer County Ditch Co., 1 Colo. App. 49, 27 P. 235 (1891).

As neither public waters nor beds or channels of public streams can be condemned and taken under eminent domain. Mack v. Town of Craig, 68 Colo. 337, 191 P. 101 (1920).

And section not to subvert bed owner's exclusive control of surface use. Constitutional provisions historically concerned with appropriation such as this section should not be applied to subvert a riparian bed owner's common-law right to the exclusive surface use of waters bounded by his lands. Without permission, the public cannot use such waters for recreation. People v. Emmert, 198 Colo. 137, 597 P.2d 1025 (1979).

Adjudication of federal reserved water rights. Whatever rights the United States has to water can be recognized and adjudicated by the federal district courts just as adequately as in any other forum. No adequate reason exists to withhold reserved rights from adjudication. United States v. District Court, 169 Colo. 555, 458 P.2d 760 (1969), aff'd, 401 U.S. 520, 91 S. Ct. 998, 28 L. Ed. 2d (1971).

Congress in the McCarran amendment, 43 U.S.C. § 666 (1970), intended to include the water adjudicative procedure of Colorado among the suits in which sovereign immunity of the United States would be waived. United States v. District Court, 169 Colo. 555, 458 P.2d 760 (1969), aff'd, 401 U.S. 520, 91 S. Ct. 998, 28 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1971).

Priorities with respect to water rights are decreed under state laws, but any water rights of the United States in Colorado remain largely uncatalogued and unrelated to decreed water rights. This creates an undesirable, impractical and chaotic situation which the McCarran amendment, 43 U.S.C. § 666 (1970), was designed to remedy. United States v. District Court, 169 Colo. 555, 458 P.2d 760 (1969), aff'd, 401 U.S. 520, 91 S. Ct. 998, 28 L. Ed. 2d 278 (1971).

States' disputes over use of interstate stream governed by equitable apportionment. Equitable apportionment is the doctrine of federal common law that governs disputes between states concerning their rights to use the water of an interstate stream. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

Each state through which rivers pass has a right to the benefit of the water, but it is for the United States supreme court, as a matter of discretion, to measure their relative rights and obligations and to apportion the available water equitably. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982) (concurring opinion), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

Equitable apportionment is a flexible doctrine which calls for the exercise of an informed judgment on a consideration of many factors to secure a just and equitable allocation. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

In an equitable apportionment of interstate waters, it is proper to weigh the harms and benefits to competing states. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

Applied in Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889); Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892); Lamborn v. Bell, 18 Colo. 346, 32 P. 989 (1893); Belknap Sav. Bank v. Lamar Land & Canal Co., 28 Colo. 326, 64 P. 212 (1901); Mohl v. Lamar Canal Co., 128 F. 776 (D. Colo. 1904); Fort Lyon Canal Co. v. Arkansas Valley Sugar Beet & Irrigated Land Co., 39 Colo. 332, 90 P. 1023 (1907); Model Land & Irrigation Co. v. Baca Irrigating Ditch Co., 83 Colo. 131, 262 P. 517 (1927); La Plata River & Irrigation Ditch Co. v. Hinderlider, 93 Colo. 128, 25 P.2d 187 (1933); In re A-B Cattle Co. v. United States, 196 Colo. 539, 589 P.2d 57 (1978).

Section 6. Diverting unappropriated water - priority preferred uses. The right to divert the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial uses shall never be denied. Priority of appropriation shall give the better right as between those using the water for the same purpose; but when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient for the service of all those desiring the use of the same, those using the water for domestic purposes shall have the preference over those claiming for any other purpose, and those using the water for agricultural purposes shall have preference over those using the same for manufacturing purposes.

Purpose of this article is to maintain and establish the wise principle of appropriation and continual use, which was fully understood by the makers of the constitution. Schwab v. Beam, 86 F. 41 (D. Colo. 1898).

This section was designed to prevent waste of a most valuable but limited natural resource, and to confine the use to needs. Empire Water & Power Co. v. Cascade Town Co., 205 F. 123 (8th Cir. 1913).

Maximum utilization of state water implicit in section. It is implicit in this section that, along with vested rights, there shall be maximum utilization of the water of this state. Fellhauer v. People, 167 Colo. 320, 447 P.2d 986 (1968); Kuiper v. Well Owners Conservation Ass'n, 176 Colo. 119, 490 P.2d 268 (1971); In re A-B Cattle Co. v. United States, 196 Colo. 539, 589 P.2d 57 (1978); Denver v. Consolidated Ditches Co., 807 P.2d 23 (Colo. 1991).

But right to water does not give right to waste it. Kuiper v. Well Owners Conservation Ass'n, 176 Colo. 119, 490 P.2d 268 (1971).

Common law of diversion unchanged. Nothing in the constitution or in the law relating to irrigation in any way modifies or changes the rules of the common law in respect to the diversion of streams for manufacturing, mining, or mechanical purposes. In Colorado, as elsewhere in the United States, the law is now, as it has been at all times, that for such purposes each riparian owner may use the waters of running streams on his own premises, allowing such waters to go down to subjacent owners in their natural channel. Schwab v. Beam, 86 F. 41 (D. Colo. 1898).

As section rejects common law of riparian ownership. By rejecting the common law of riparian this section denies the right of the landowner to have the stream run in its natural way without diminution. He cannot hold to all the water for the scant vegetation which lines the banks but must make the most efficient use by applying it to his land. Empire Water & Power Co. v. Cascade Town Co., 205 F. 123 (8th Cir. 1913).

The reason and thrust for this section is to negate any thought that Colorado would follow the riparian doctrine in the acquisition and use of water. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. Colo. Water Conservation Bd., 197 Colo. 469, 594 P.2d 570 (1979).

This section and preceding section are self-executing. People ex rel. Park Reservoir Co. v. Hinderlider, 98 Colo. 505, 57 P.2d 894 (1936).

And this section and preceding section are so plain that no construction is needed. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

Water right is a legal right to use water; often, it is characterized as a property right. Gardner v. State, 200 Colo. 221, 614 P.2d 357 (1980).

"Divert" must be interpreted in connection with "appropriation", and with other language used in the remaining sections of this article referring to the subject of irrigation. Larimer County Reservoir Co. v. People ex rel. Luthe, 8 Colo. 614, 9 P. 794 (1885).

Use of "unappropriated waters", in this section and "not heretofore appropriated", in section 5 of this article clearly indicates an intention to limit the application of these provisions to the future. Strickler v. City of Colo. Springs, 16 Colo. 61, 26 P. 313 (1891).

As rights to use of water acquired prior to adoption of constitution are not affected by the provisions of this section. Colo. Milling & Elevator Co. v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 26 Colo. 47, 56 P. 185 (1899).

"Beneficial uses", as used in this section, has not been definitely fixed and limited in its meaning. Cascade Town Co. v. Empire Water & Power Co., 181 F. 1011 (D. Colo. 1910), rev'd on other grounds, 205 F. 123 (8th Cir. 1913).

"Milling" held synonymous with "manufacturing". Lamborn v. Bell, 18 Colo. 346, 32 P. 989 (1893).

And owners of placer-mining claims are of manufacturing class, within the meaning of this section. Schwab v. Beam, 86 F. 41 (D. Colo. 1898).

Delegation of water adjudication jurisdiction. Although in Colorado jurisdiction for water adjudication has traditionally been in the courts, there is nothing in the Colorado constitution--and particularly nothing in this section--to prevent the general assembly from placing such jurisdiction in a different agency, such as the ground water commission in the case of designated ground water, considering that such determinations are appealable to the courts. In re Water Rights in Irrigation Div. No. 1, Irrigation Dist. No. 1, 181 Colo. 395, 510 P.2d 323 (1973).

The exclusive authority granted to the Colorado water conservation board by § 37-92-102 to appropriate minimum stream flows does not detract from the right to divert and to put to beneficial use unappropriated waters by removal or control. City of Thornton v. City of Fort Collins, 830 P.2d 915 (Colo. 1992).

Act regarding the obtainment of well permits and augmentation plans by owners and operators of sand and gravel pits does not violate this section. While the provisions of the act alter the manner in which senior and junior water right appropriators may obtain relief from injury, they do not create a new class of water rights not subject to the principles of appropriation. Central Colo. Water v. Simpson, 877 P.2d 335 (Colo. 1994).

Ground water management act is not unconstitutional in violation of section 5 of this article and of this section insofar as said act applies to tributary ground water. Kuiper v. Lundvall, 187 Colo. 40, 529 P.2d 1328 (1974), appeal dismissed, 421 U.S. 996, 95 S. Ct. 2391, 44 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1975).

Time provisions for appropriations not limit on constitutional right. The ground water management act's time provisions, including the portions which authorize extensions upon good cause shown, do not prohibit nor impermissibly limit the constitutional right to appropriate the unappropriated waters of this state's natural streams, but rather, regulate the manner of effecting an appropriation in the designated ground water context. Kuiper v. Warren, 195 Colo. 541, 580 P.2d 32 (1978).

States' disputes over use of interstate stream governed by equitable apportionment. Equitable apportionment is the doctrine of federal common law that governs disputes between states concerning their rights to use the water of an interstate stream. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

Each state through which rivers pass has a right to the benefit of the water, but it is for the United States supreme court, as a matter of discretion, to measure their relative rights and obligations and to apportion the available water equitably. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982) (concurring opinion), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

Equitable apportionment is a flexible doctrine which calls for the exercise of an informed judgment on a consideration of many factors to secure a just and equitable allocation. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

In an equitable apportionment of interstate waters, it is proper to weigh the harms and benefits to competing states. Colo. v. New Mexico, 459 U.S. 176, 103 S. Ct. 539, 74 L. Ed. 2d 348 (1982), reh'g denied, 459 U.S. 1229, 103 S. Ct. 1418, 75 L. Ed. 2d 471 (1983).

If a state may equitably apportion interstate waters by means of an interstate compact, such state may also agree that a sister state which is also governed by the interstate compact will have exclusive authority to determine an applicant's right to divert water and to administer any such decreed water right. Frontier Ditch v. S.E. Colo. Water Cons., 761 P.2d 1117 (Colo. 1988).

II. APPROPRIATION.

A. In General.

This section guarantees right of diversion and appropriation for beneficial uses. With certain qualifications it recognizes and protects a prior right of user, acquired through priority of appropriation. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigating Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

By this section and laws of Colorado, state and territorial, from the earliest times, rights to the beneficial use of water from natural streams have been acquired by diversion through prior appropriation rather than by grant. Platte Water Co. v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 12 Colo. 525, 21 P. 711 (1889).

Unappropriated waters of natural streams may be appropriated. The unappropriated waters of every natural stream belong to the public, and are subject to appropriation by the people to beneficial use. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

This and the preceding section recognize the doctrine of appropriation as applicable only to the water in "natural streams". Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

The waters of the natural streams of Colorado are, under the constitution, the property of the public, not any segment thereof or any geographical portion of the state, and the right to appropriate water and put it to beneficial use at any place in the state is no longer open to question. Metro. Sub. Water Users Ass'n v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 148 Colo. 173, 365 P.2d 273 (1961).

Including ground, as well as surface, waters. The Colorado courts have gone further than those of any other western state in applying the doctrine of appropriation to ground waters, as well as to surface waters. It has been frequently held by Colorado appellate courts, from a very early date down to the present time, that all underground waters which by flowage, seepage, or percolation will eventually, if not intercepted, reach and become a part of some natural stream either on or beneath the surface, are governed and controlled by the terms of the constitution and statutes relative to appropriation, the same as the surface waters of such stream. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953).

The doctrine of prior appropriation of water to beneficial use is applicable to underground waters which are tributary to any natural stream. Whitten v. Coit, 153 Colo. 157, 385 P.2d 131 (1963).

Not irrigation waters only. The trial court erred in concluding that the doctrine of appropriation of water applied to irrigation waters only. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953).

Thus vested rights to waters in natural streams may be acquired. Under sections 5 to 8 of this article, inclusive, and the legislation enacted pursuant thereto, vested rights to waters in natural streams may be acquired. Archuleta v. Boulder & Weld County Ditch Co., 118 Colo. 43, 192 P.2d 891 (1948).

Capture and storage of flood waters may be a "beneficial use" underlying an appropriation of water. Pueblo West Metro. Dist. v. Southeastern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist., 689 P.2d 594 (Colo. 1984).

General assembly cannot prohibit but may regulate manner of appropriation or diversion. While the general assembly cannot prohibit the appropriation or diversion of unappropriated water for useful purposes from natural streams upon the public domain, that body has the power to regulate the manner of effecting such appropriation or diversion. Larimer County Reservoir Co. v. People ex rel. Luthe, 8 Colo. 614, 9 P. 794 (1885).

Regulation of appropriation of water. The right conferred by this section, to divert and appropriate unappropriated water of the state, is not absolute. The manner and method of appropriation of water may be reasonably regulated. City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 517 F. Supp. 155 (D. Colo. 1981), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 695 F.2d 465 (10th Cir. 1982); City & County of Denver v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 760 P.2d 656 (Colo. App. 1988).

Water administration provisions provide framework for diverting unappropriated waters. The Water Right Determination and Administration Act of 1969, §§ 37-92-101 to 37-92-602, provides the statutory framework for implementing the constitutional right to divert the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial uses. State ex rel. Danielson v. Vickroy, 627 P.2d 752 (Colo. 1981).

State engineer's authority to apply tributary rule of compact abolished. A compact requiring administration of the Rio Grande mainstem and Conejos river according to delivery schedules that did not include the contributions of three creeks as significant to the delivery obligation did away with the state engineer's authority to apply the tributary rule of the compact to the three creeks. Alamosa-La Jara Water Users Prot. Ass'n v. Gould, 674 P.2d 914 (Colo. 1983).

After appropriation paramount right to use of water, unless forfeited, continues in appropriator. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigating Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

Right to water by appropriation and diversion is property. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

Water rights in this state, where agriculture is almost exclusively carried on by means of irrigation, are valuable properties. Loshbaugh v. Benzel, 133 Colo. 49, 291 P.2d 1064 (1956); Saunders v. Spina, 140 Colo. 317, 344 P.2d 469 (1959).

Water is a valuable property right, subject to sale and conveyance. Sherwood Irrigation Co. v. Vandewark, 138 Colo. 261, 331 P.2d 810 (1958).

And it is property in every legal aspect. While the title of the public or the state to the unappropriated waters in the streams can only be divested as to the portions thereof segregated and appropriated to beneficial uses, when this has been legally done the appropriator becomes the proprietor of the water appropriated and diverted, or of the use thereof, which is the same thing, and as long as the beneficial use thereof is continued the water remains the subject of exclusive ownership and control, and is the property of the appropriator in every legal aspect. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

Fully protected by constitution. A priority to the use of water for irrigation or domestic purposes is a property right and as such is fully protected by the constitutional guaranties relating to property in general. Strickler v. City of Colo.

Springs, 16 Colo. 61, 26 P. 313 (1891); Farmers Irrigation Co. v. Game & Fish Comm'n, 149 Colo. 318, 369 P.2d 557 (1962).

Title to use of water vests as of date of appropriation. The right to the use of water is property; the title accrues by legal appropriation, and becomes vested as of the date of such appropriation. Armstrong v. Larimer County Ditch Co., 1 Colo. App. 49, 27 P. 235 (1891).

However, owners of priority of rights to divert water from stream are not owners of water in stream so as to maintain action for partition of the water of the stream. Crippen v. White, 28 Colo. 298, 64 P. 184 (1901).

Effect of decree adjudicating right to specific appropriation. The appropriation of water for a specific purpose, and a decree adjudicating the right to such appropriation, not only limits the use to the amount appropriated, but also to the quantity necessary for the purpose for which it is appropriated. Colo. Milling & Elevator Co. v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 26 Colo. 47, 56 P. 185 (1899).

Right to divert does not apply where water has been appropriated for placer claim. The provision of this section which declares: "The right to divert the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial uses shall never be denied", is applicable to the unappropriated waters of a natural stream and not to case where the water has been appropriated for a placer claim. Schwab v. Beam, 86 F. 41 (D. Colo. 1898).

Abandoned water rights return to stream. Where an appropriator abandons his right to water from a stream, such right returns to the stream. Kaess v. Wilson, 132 Colo. 443, 289 P.2d 636 (1955).

Where decreed rights have been abandoned the water so decreed returns to the stream and is available for subsequent appropriation. Rocky Mt. Power Co. v. White River Elec. Ass'n, 151 Colo. 45, 376 P.2d 158 (1962).

Carrier may sell, transfer, or deliver appropriated water. A carrier who completes a constitutional appropriation becomes the proprietor or owner of the water diverted to, and as such, may sell, transfer and deliver it to be used by those who require it for irrigation, and such rights can only be divested by a subsequent failure to apply the water, or to cause it to be applied to a beneficial use. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

Transporting water for hire sanctioned by this section. The constitution unquestionably contemplates and sanctions the business of transporting water for hire from natural streams to distant consumers. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigating Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

As water need not be retained for use at origin. There is nothing in the constitution which even intimates that waters should be retained for use in the watershed where originating. Metro. Sub. Water Users Ass'n v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 148 Colo. 173, 365 P.2d 273 (1961).

Noninjurious use of stream bed as reservoir permitted. The act of utilizing as a reservoir a natural depression, which includes the bed of a stream, or which is found at the source thereof, is not in and of itself unlawful where no injury results. But the privilege so recognized is, of course, qualified by the condition that no injury to others shall result through its invocation. He who attempts to appropriate water in this way does so at his peril. He must see to it that no legal right of prior appropriators, or of other persons, is in any way interefered with by his acts. He cannot lessen the quantity of water, seriously impair its quality, or impede its natural flow, to the detriment of others who have acquired legal rights therein superior to his. And he must respond in proper actions for all injuries resulting to them by reason of his acts in the premises. He cannot, in any event, interfere with the flow of even the surplus water to a greater extent than is requisite for the beneficial use designed. Larimer County Reservoir Co. v. People ex rel. Luthe, 8 Colo. 614, 9 P. 794 (1885).

Streams independently appropriated remain independent under doctrine of prior appropriation unless the water of those streams becomes subject to equitable apportionment by compact, in which case the streams must be administered as mandated by the compact or statutory provisions for priority administration of water rights. Alamosa-La Jara Water Users Prot. Ass'n v. Gould, 674 P.2d 914 (Colo. 1983).

Nontributary ground water is not subject to appropriation under § 5 of this article and this section. State, Dept. of Natural Res. v. Southwestern Colo. Water Conservation Dist., 671 P.2d 1294 (Colo. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 944, 104 S. Ct. 1929, 80 L. Ed. 2d 474 (1984).

B. Acts Necessary.

Act of appropriation consists of diversion and application thereof to beneficial use. The appropriation of water within the meaning of this section consists of two acts -- first, the diversion of the water from the natural stream, and second, the application thereof to beneficial use. These two acts may be performed by the same or different persons; but the appropriation is not complete until the two are conjoined. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

Appropriation requires actual diversion and use. City & County of Denver v. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist., 130 Colo. 375, 276 P.2d 992 (1954).

Act of diversion must have reference to natural stream. To constitute an appropriation such as is recognized and protected by this section, the essential act of diversion, with which is coupled the essential act of use, must have reference to the natural stream. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

True test of appropriation is successful application of water to beneficial use designed, and the method of diverting or carrying the same or making such application, is immaterial. Thomas v. Guiraud, 6 Colo. 530 (1883); Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889); Cash v. Thornton, 3 Colo. App. 475, 34 P. 268 (1893); People ex rel. Park Reservoir Co. v. Hinderlider, 98 Colo. 505, 57 P.2d 894 (1936).

To be valid, an appropriation must be manifested by the successful application of the water to the beneficial use designed, or accompanied by some open, physical demonstration of intent to take the same for such use. Platte Water Co. v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 12 Colo. 525, 21 P. 711 (1889).

The construction of a ditch and the application of water to a beneficial use completes an appropriation. Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

In order to have a valid appropriation there must be an application of water to a beneficial use, and failure to so use available water for an unreasonable time, coupled with an intent, expressed or implied, to abandon, work a forfeiture or abandonment. Lengel v. Davis, 141 Colo. 94, 347 P.2d 142 (1959).

Thus mere diversion of water not appropriation within meaning of section; there must be an application of the water to beneficial use within a reasonable time or the diversion is unlawful. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889); Combs v. Argricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Diversion of spring water and its storage in a reservoir, even though sanctioned by decree, is not an appropriation of such water. Cline v. Whitten, 150 Colo. 179, 372 P.2d 145 (1962).

And diversion must be for beneficial and not speculative use. The privilege of diversion is granted only for uses truly beneficial, and not for purposes of speculation. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Land reclamation and dust control are proper beneficial uses for appropriations of tributary and nontributary water. State, Dept. of Natural Res. v. Southwestern Colo. Water Conservation Dist., 671 P.2d 1294 (Colo. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 944, 104 S. Ct. 1929, 80 L. Ed. 2d 474 (1984).

In irrigation, "beneficial use" means actual application of water to land. To make any diversion of water from a natural stream an appropriation, within the meaning of this section, it must be applied to some beneficial use, and in case of irrigation it must be actually applied to the land. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

And excessive diversion of water cannot be regarded as diversion to beneficial use within the meaning of this section. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

A landowner may rely upon an efficient application of water by nature, and need do no more than affirmatively avail himself of it, but the use in that way should not be unnecessarily or wastefully excessive. Empire Water & Power Co. v. Cascade Town Co., 205 F. 123 (8th Cir. 1913).

At his own point of diversion on a natural water course, each diverter must establish some reasonable means of effectuating his diversion. He is not entitled to command the whole or a substantial flow of the stream merely to facilitate his taking the fraction of the whole flow to which he is entitled. This principle applied to diversion of underflow or underground water means that priority of appropriation does not give a right to an inefficient means of diversion, such as a well which reaches to such a shallow depth into the available water supply that a shortage would occur to such senior even though diversion by others did not deplete the stream below, where there would be an adequate supply for the senior's lawful demand. Fellhauer v. People, 167 Colo. 320, 447 P.2d 986 (1968).

Water diverted must be applied within reasonable time to some beneficial use. To constitute a legal appropriation, the water diverted must be applied within a reasonable time to some beneficial use. That is to say, the diversion ripens into a valid appropriation only when the water is utilized by the consumer. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

Those who construct ditches and divert water for general purposes of irrigation must within a reasonable time apply the water to beneficial use; or else, upon proper application and for proper consideration, they must dispose of the same to those who are ready to make beneficial use of it. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

The initial act of diversion must be followed up with reasonable diligence by an act evidencing the intention to appropriate, and the purpose must be consummated without unnecessary delay; there may be a constitutional appropriation of water without its being at the instant taken from the bed of the stream. Larimer County Reservoir Co. v. People ex rel. Luthe, 8 Colo. 614, 9 P. 794 (1885).

Water rights may be created without written instrument. Greeley & Loveland Irrigation Co. v. McCloughan, 140 Colo. 173, 342 P.2d 1045 (1959).

Compliance with statutory requirements is not strictly part of act of appropriation; the appropriation is completed when a ditch or conduit is constructed and the water is diverted therethrough and applied to a beneficial use. Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

Adjudication decree confirms preexisting rights. A decree in a water adjudication is confirmatory of preexisting rights; the decree does not create or grant any rights; it serves as evidence of rights previously acquired. Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959); Saunders v. Spina, 140 Colo. 317, 344 P.2d 469 (1959).

But decree of priority not essential. It is not essential to acquisition of a water right that a claimant participate in water adjudications, and secure a decree of priority. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953); Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

As adjudication only confirms that which already accomplished. The right to the use of water accrues by virtue of acts in putting the water to beneficial use, or in producing and developing nontributary water, and adjudication only confirms that which has already been accomplished. Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

A judicial decree confirming a conditional or absolute water right is not the source of the right but simply a determination that the right has been established. Abandonment of a right precludes reliance on the acts and intent that gave rise to that right as a basis for establishing a new right. Purgatoire River Water Conservancy v. Witte, 859 P.2d 825 (Colo. 1993).

Water rights not based on filings of maps or statements. Such filings do not constitute appropriations nor lack thereof invalidate them. The statute providing that appropriators shall file map and statement nowhere declares such filings are essential to a valid appropriation; it declares only that a map and statement so filed shall be prima facie evidence in any court of intent to appropriate. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953); Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

Whether any map and statement is actually filed, is a matter of evidence only and does not constitute the substance of an appropriation. Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

Carrier's diversion ripens into perfect appropriation. The carrier makes a diversion both in fact and in law. This diversion is accomplished through an agency (the carrier). It would undoubtedly become unlawful were the water diverted not applied to beneficial uses within a reasonable time; but, when thus applied, the diversion unquestionably ripens into a perfect appropriation. When a canal company constructs its channel for the transportation of unappropriated water from a stream to arid lands, for the purpose of irrigating them, -- diverts, conveys and delivers the water for such purpose, it satisfies the requirements of this section, and by its own acts completes the appropriation. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

When united with consumer's use. The carrier's diversion from the natural stream must unite with the consumer's use in order that there may be a complete appropriation within the meaning of our fundamental law. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

But consumer himself makes no diversion from the natural stream. The act of turning water from the carrier's canal into his lateral cannot be regarded as a diversion within the meaning of this section; nor can this act of itself, when combined with the use, create a valid constitutional appropriation. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

Citizenship alone cannot be made basis of priority. Users of water from a canal, obtaining their supply under contracts with the canal company, having themselves made no appropriations from the natural stream, nor having asserted a right to the water prior to the appropriation of the canal company, have no constitutional or statutory rights to the water by virtue of citizenship which can be enforced against the corporation. Having acquired no proprietary interest in the canal or to the water appropriated by the company, except the quantity agreed to be delivered, their only rights to equitable relief in the matter are such as arise upon the construction of their contracts with the corporation. Wyatt v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 P. 906 (1892), rev'd on other grounds, 18 Colo. 298, 33 P. 144 (1893).

Acts demonstrate intention to appropriate. Neither plaintiffs nor their predecessors in interest were necessarily required to make formal announcement concerning their intention to make beneficial use of the water diverted, carried and applied to domestic purposes. Their acts themselves were a demonstration of this intention. After the lapse of many years, the existence of this intention cannot successfully be denied because another beneficial result, namely, reclamation of boggy ground, also was accomplished. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953).

Large expenditures indicate good faith effort to appropriate and put to beneficial use unappropriated waters. Empire Water & Power Co. v. Cascade Town Co., 205 F. 123 (8th Cir. 1913); Metro. Sub. Water Users Ass'n v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 148 Colo. 173, 365 P.2d 273 (1961).

C. Priorities.

Colorado has rule of priority of appropriation as distinguished from the rule of riparian rights. Nebraska v. Wyoming, 325 U.S. 589, 65 S. Ct. 1332, 89 L. Ed. 1815 (1945).

Colorado applies the doctrine of prior appropriation in establishing rights to the use of water. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1976).

Under doctrine of prior appropriation, one acquires a right to water by diverting it from its natural source and applying it to some beneficial use. Continued beneficial use of the water is required in order to maintain the right. In periods of shortage, priority among confirmed rights is determined according to the date of initial diversion. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 96 S. Ct. 1236, 47 L. Ed. 2d 483 (1976).

Priority of right to water by priority of appropriation is older than constitution itself, and has existed from the date of the earliest appropriations of water within the boundaries of Colorado. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889); People ex rel. Park Reservoir Co. v. Hinderlider, 98 Colo. 505, 57 P.2d 894 (1936).

Hence rule cannot be changed by legislative enactment. If the prorating of the water actually received into an irrigating ditch in time of scarcity between all the consumers can be effected by legislative enactment, then the superiority of right acquired by priority of appropriation is without protection or security; and houses and other permanent improvements of prior appropriators may be rendered comparatively valueless. Hence, the rule that priority of appropriation shall give the better right as between those using water for the same purpose cannot be changed by legislative enactment. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

Section recognizes priorities only among those taking water from natural streams. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

The priority of appropriation which gives the better right under the Colorado constitution is priority on a stream rather than on a project. City & County of Denver v. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist., 130 Colo. 375, 276 P.2d 992 (1954).

Actual use of prior right must be made within reasonable time. Those who by labor or by the payment of money, actually construct an irrigating ditch may thereby acquire a prior right to the water which may be diverted therein, provided they apply the same to beneficial use within a reasonable time after such diversion. But they cannot postpone the exercise of such right for an unreasonable time, so as to prevent others from acquiring a right to the water; nor can they thus acquire a right to dispose of the water contrary to the priority rule. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Neither a company nor any stockholder of the company can withold water from beneficial use, nor reserve it for the future use of junior appropriators to the prejudice of prior appropriators nor to the exclusion of those who in the meantime may undertake, in good faith, to make a valid appropriation thereof. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Priorities depend upon dates of respective application to use. All priorities are to be accurately determined as well as impartially protected. They depend upon the dates of the respective applications to use, and these dates must be ascertained with reference not merely to years nor to months, nor even to weeks, but also with reference to days. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

Or when act evidencing intent performed. While a diversion must of necessity take place before the water is actually applied to the irrigation of the soil, the appropriation thereof is, in legal contemplation, made when the act evidencing the intent is performed. Larimer County Reservoir Co. v. People ex rel. Luthe, 8 Colo. 614, 9 P. 794 (1885).

Right to appropriation may date from first step taken to secure it. Although the appropriation is not deemed complete until the actual diversion or use of the water, if such work be prosecuted with reasonable diligence, the right relates to the time when the first step was taken to secure it. Sieber v. Frink, 7 Colo. 148, 2 P. 901 (1883).

The priority of appropriation may date, proper diligence having been used after diversion to apply the water to a beneficial use, from the commencement of the canal or ditch. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

Doctrine of relation back strictly construed. The doctrine of relation back is a legal fiction in derogation of the constitution for the benefit of claimants under larger and more difficult projects and should be strictly construed. City & County of Denver v. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist., 130 Colo. 375, 276 P.2d 992 (1954).

In order to date back, intent must have been to divert definite volume as evidenced by the capacity of the ditch and at a definite point evidenced by location of the headgate so that other appropriators could know the nature and extent of the claim. City & County of Denver v. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist., 130 Colo. 375, 276 P.2d 992 (1954).

No relation back where plan abandoned for another. The priority of a water right may not be dated back to the date of surveys or the filing of a plat of a diversion proposal which has been abandoned in favor of another and very different plan. City & County of Denver v. Northern Colo. Water Conservancy Dist., 130 Colo. 375, 276 P.2d 992 (1954).

Prior appropriator entitled to quantity of water covered by his appropriation as against all later appropriators. The protection awarded in connection with a consumer's constitutional priority extends to controversies between him and all his co-consumers, though their number be legion; but the assertion of his rights cannot be limted to such controversies. He is necessarily entitled to the quantity of water covered by his appropriation as against all others obtaining water at a later period, directly or indirectly, from the same natural stream. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

The doctrine of prior appropriation protects senior appropriators from injury by junior appropriators. Application of Hines Highlands P'ship, 929 P.2d 718 (Colo. 1996).

In times of scarcity those having earlier priorities need not prorate with those having later priorities. Appropriators of water from the same stream through the same ditch may have different priorities of right to the use of the water, and in times of scarcity of water, consumers having the earlier priorities may not be compelled to prorate the water of the ditch with other consumers having later priorities of rights. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. White, 32 Colo. 114, 75 P. 415 (1903).

But prior appropriator may not waste water. The constitutional rule of distribution, "first come, first served", does not imply that the prior appropriator may be extravagantly prodigal in dealing with this peculiar bounty of nature. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

And prior appropriators cannot extend or enlarge use of water to prejudice of later appropriators. An appropriator of water from a stream already partly appropriated acquires a right to the surplus or residuum he appropriates, and those in whom prior rights in the same stream are vested, cannot extend or enlarge their use of water to his prejudice, but are limited to their rights as they existed when he acquired his, because, in such case, each with respect to his particular appropriation is prior in time and exclusive in right. Colo. Milling & Elevator Co. v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 26 Colo. 47, 56 P. 185 (1899).

But may change use of appropriation. An appropriation of water for irrigation purposes may be changed to a use for storage, but such change cannot be made to the detriment of other appropriators whose rights are subsequent to the appropriation for irrigation, but prior to the appropriation for storage. When the water in the stream is needed by the subsequent appropriators, the diversion of the prior appropriator for storage purposes would be limited to what he was entitled to divert for irrigation purposes, both as to amount and time of diversion. Colo. Milling & Elevator Co. v. Larimer & Weld Irrigation Co., 26 Colo. 47, 56 P. 185 (1899).

Rule "first in time first in right" applies as between users for same purpose. And junior appropriators may not infringe the right of seniors. People ex rel. Park Reservoir Co. v. Hinderlider, 98 Colo. 505, 57 P.2d 894 (1936).

Two basic principles applicable to all appropriations of water are: (1) He who is first in time is first in right, and (2) and appropriator of water from a stream may insist that conditions on the stream remain substantially as when he made his original appropriation and he may prevent interference therewith by others to his detriment. Reagle v. Square S Land & Cattle Co., 133 Colo. 392, 296 P.2d 235 (1956).

And rule applies to rights of different parties claiming same interest adversely. Bloom v. West, 3 Colo. App. 212, 32 P. 846 (1893).

Consumers using same ditch may have different priorities of right. The appropriations of water by consumers who receive the same through the same ditch do not necessarily relate to the same time; but, on the contrary, such consumers may have different priorities of right. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028, 4 L.R.A. 767 (1889).

The same irrigating ditch may have two or more priorities belonging to the same or different parties. Saunders v. Spina, 140 Colo. 317, 344 P.2d 469 (1959).

Whether water received from artificial or natural streams. The "better right", acquired by priority of appropriation, is applicable to individual consumers as between themselves when they receive the water through the agency of an artificial stream, as well as when they receive the same direct from the natural stream. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

Corporation cannot by bylaws exempt itself or stockholders from operation of rule or priority of appropriations. A ditch company diverting water for general purposes of irrigation cannot by any provision of its bylaws, rules, or regulations exempt itself or its stockholders from the operation of the constitution in respect to priority of appropriation. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

A ditch company carrying water for general purposes of irrigation cannot arbitrarily refuse to supply water to an actual and bona fide consumer making seasonable application and offering proper compensation therefor. The rule of this section that "priority of appropriation shall give the better right as between those using the water for the same purpose" must never be overlooked. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Nor can rule be evaded by compelling purchase of stock as condition precedent to use. The constitutional right of individual consumers, upon tender of the carriage fee, to water diverted by a carrier and not already applied to beneficial uses, can no more be evaded or qualified by a regulation compelling the purchase of stock as a condition precedent to use, than it can by a regulation fixing a sum in excess of the price charged for carriage, to be thus paid for the constitutional right of user. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Nor does mere title to stock, without beneficial use, give title to priority. A stockholder in an irrigating company who makes an actual application of water from the company's ditch to beneficial use may, by means of such use, acquire a prior right thereto; but his title to the stock without such use gives him no title to the priority. He may transfer his stock to whom he will; but he can only transfer his priority to someone who will continue to use the water. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Priority of appropriation to actual beneficial use, and not mere ownership of stock in a ditch company, gives the better right to such use. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

As between parties whose rights to use of water never have been formally adjudicated, neither can claim an advantage over the other by reason of the absence of any decreed priorities in connection with the water in controversy. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953); Cresson Consol. Gold Mining & Milling Co. v. Whitten, 139 Colo. 273, 338 P.2d 278 (1959).

Carrier ditch company, by diverting water from natural streams, may acquire prior right to put diverted water to beneficial use; however, the water must be put to beneficial use within reasonable period of time after diversion. City of Westminster v. City of Broomfield, 769 P.2d 490 (Colo. 1989).

Carrier ditch company may satisfy requirement of putting diverted water to beneficial use by contracting with third parties subject to constitutional and statutory requirements. City of Westminster v. City of Broomfield, 769 P.2d 490 (Colo. 1989).

Carrier ditch company properly allocated to its owners water previously decreed to ditch and declared forfeited because of nonpayment of assessment charges and company had no fiduciary duty to make forfeited water available to all contract consumers. City of Westminster v. City of Broomfield, 769 P.2d 490 (Colo. 1989).

Postponement doctrine provides that water rights adjudicated in a previous decree are senior to water rights adjudicated in a subsequent decree on the same stream, regardless of their dates of appropriation. Because the North and South Forks of the South Platte River are separated by a high mountain range, there can be no conflict between the North and South Fork users, and therefore it would be improper to use the postponement doctrine to treat a 1913 adjudication of North Fork rights as supplemental to an 1889 adjudication of South Fork water rights. South Adams County v. Broe Land Co., 812 P.2d 1161 (Colo. 1991).

Water court properly considered the more than seventy years of consistent administration by state water officials of the North Fork of the South Platte River water rights according to their date of appropriation. South Adams County v. Broe Land Co., 812 P.2d 1161 (Colo. 1991).

D. Preference for Domestic Purposes.

This section relates to preferences when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient to supply all appropriators. The uses are classified as domestic purposes, agricultural purposes and manufacturing purposes. This classification becomes important when preferences are involved. City & County of Denver v. Sheriff, 105 Colo.

193, 96 P.2d 836 (1939).

There can be no doubt concerning right to appropriate water for domestic purposes and the interpretation to be given the constitutional preference relating to such appropriations. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953).

Meaning of "domestic use". The "domestic use" protected by this section is such use as the riparian owner has at common law to take water for himself, his family or his stock, and the like. Montrose Canal Co. v. Loutsenhizer Ditch Co., 23 Colo. 233, 48 P. 532 (1896); Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953).

Domestic preference not limited to towns and cities. That water cannot be diverted from a stream for domestic use, except by towns and cities, by one not a riparian owner, is not tenable. The right to water appropriated for domestic purposes does not depend upon the locus of its use for those purposes. Town of Sterling v. Pawnee Ditch Extension Co., 42 Colo. 421, 94 P. 339 (1908); Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953).

This section and preceding section do not authorize interference with rights of prior appropriators for irrigating purposes, whose rights vested before the adoption of the constitution, in order to supply later comers with water for domestic uses. Armstrong v. Larimer County Ditch Co., 1 Colo. App. 49, 27 P. 235 (1891).

Domestic user must gain right to water by consent of prior appropriator or by condemnation. This section gives no right to a domestic user over an appropriator for another purpose without either the latter's consent or condemnation. Town of Sterling v. Pawnee Ditch Extension Co., 42 Colo. 421, 94 P. 339 (1908); Nevius v. Smith, 86 Colo. 178, 279 P. 44 (1929).

And must pay just compensation to prior appropriator. This provision does not entitle one desiring to use water for domestic purposes, to take it from another who has previously appropriated it for some other purpose, without just compensation. Town of Sterling v. Pawnee Ditch Extension Co., 42 Colo. 421, 94 P. 339 (1908); People ex rel. Park Reservoir Co. v. Hinderlider, 98 Colo. 505, 57 P.2d 894 (1936).

If the term "domestic use" is to be given a different or greater meaning than the common-law definition, then, as between such enlarged use and those having prior rights for agricultural and manufacturing purposes, it is subject to section 7 of this article, requiring just compensation to those whose rights are affected thereby. Montrose Canal Co. v. Loutsenhizer Ditch Co., 23 Colo. 233, 48 P. 532 (1896).

A domestic water user cannot be preferred over a prior appropriator for irrigation purposes without fully compensating the senior appropriator for the loss sustained by invoking the preference. Black v. Taylor, 128 Colo. 449, 264 P.2d 502 (1953).

"Better right" attaches to priority primarily intended for consumer rather than carrier. The "better right" which attaches to the priority of appropriation was primarily intended for the benefit of those who apply the water to the cultivation of the soil or other beneficial use, rather than for the benefit of those engaged in diverting and carrying it to be used by others. Farmers' High Line Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, 21 P. 1028 (1889).

Diversion of water for domestic use cannot be wasteful. The appropriators of water for domestic uses undertook to convey a very small volume through a ditch of great capacity. It is a matter of common knowledge that in doing so necessarily a very great proportion of such volume would be lost by seepage and evaporation before it was conveyed any considerable distance. The law contemplates an economical use of water. It will not countenance the diversion of a volume from a stream which, by reason of the loss resulting from the appliances used to convey it, is many times that which is actually consumed at the point where it is utilized. Town of Sterling v. Pawnee Ditch Extension Co., 42 Colo. 421, 94 P. 339 (1908).

Thus, diversion of water for domestic use cannot be effected by means of large canals. While it is true that this section recognizes a preference in those using water for domestic purposes over those using it for any other purpose, it is not intended thereby to authorize a diversion of water for domestic use from the public streams of the state, by means of large canals. Montrose Canal Co. v. Loutsenhizer Ditch Co., 23 Colo. 233, 48 P. 532 (1896).

Section 7. Right-of-way for ditches, flumes. All persons and corporations shall have the right-of-way across public, private and corporate lands for the construction of ditches, canals and flumes for the purpose of conveying water for domestic purposes, for the irrigation of agricultural lands, and for mining and manufacturing purposes, and for drainage, upon payment of just compensation.

Section complete in itself and precludes legislative action. This section does not merely declare principles. On the contrary, it is complete in itself, and by its own terms, confers a right and prescribes the rules and conditions by means of which such right may be enforced. It employs no language to indicate that the subject with which it deals is to be referred to the general assembly for action. Town of Lyons v. City of Longmont, 54 Colo. 112, 129 P. 198 (1912).

And is self-executing. This section confers a right and prescribes the rule by means of which, in an appropriate action in a court of competent jurisdiction, that right may be enforced without further legislation, and is, therefore, self-executing. Town of Lyons v. City of Longmont, 54 Colo. 112, 129 P. 198 (1912).

Although does not provide for assessment of compensation. This section is not self-executing in the sense that it does not provide the manner in which compensation can be assessed; it nevertheless does confer the right in express terms. Lamborn v. Bell, 18 Colo. 346, 32 P. 989 (1893).

Assessment of compensation is expressly provided for by statute. See Lamborn v. Bell, 18 Colo. 346, 32 P. 989 (1893).

Ultimate sources of the right of condemnation are § 14 of art. II and this section. Bubb v. Christensen, 200 Colo. 21, 610 P.2d 1343 (1980).

Section confers right-of-way upon all persons and corporations. Manifestly, the intent of this section was to confer upon all persons and corporations the right-of-way across lands, either public or private, by whomsoever owned, through which to carry water for domestic purposes, and necessarily embraces a municipal corporation seeking a right-of-way for such purposes. Town of Lyons v. City of Longmont, 54 Colo. 112, 129 P. 198 (1912).

Under this provision of the constitution and §§ 37-86-104 to 37-86-106, dealing with the construction of ditches on rights-of-way through private property, a plaintiff is entitled to possession, under the eminent domain laws, of the lands of a defendant of such dimensions as are necessary to convey his irrigation water to his own property. Mott v. Coleman, 132 Colo. 306, 287 P.2d 655 (1955).

Right to appropriate and divert water is not absolute. City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 517 F. Supp. 155 (D. Colo. 1981), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 695 F.2d 465 (10th Cir. 1982).

It covers every form in which water is used, domestic, irrigation, mining and manufacturing, and its object is to be ascertained from its language and not from the title or heading the compiler of the constitution has given the article in which it is found. Town of Lyons v. City of Longmont, 54 Colo. 112, 129 P. 198 (1912).

Right of condemnation not dependent upon source of supply. The right of condemnation for purposes of obtaining a right-of-way to a point of diversion of a water right is not dependent upon whether the source of supply is characterized as a well or a spring. Bubb v. Christensen, 200 Colo. 21, 610 P.2d 1343 (1980).

When water transportation facility constructed without easement, landowner's remedy limited to temporary relief. When a facility for the transportation of water is constructed or utilized by one having the right of eminent domain, without prior acquisition of an easement, the remedy of the landowner is limited to temporary relief, pending conduct of the eminent domain proceedings by the owners of the water right. Bubb v. Christensen, 200 Colo. 21, 610 P.2d 1343 (1980).

And right to spill waste water is part of right to transport water where essential to the maintenance of the ditch. Hitti v. Montezuma Valley Irrigation Co., 42 Colo. App. 194, 599 P.2d 918 (1979).

Right-of-way for ditch to convey water to operate electric light plant may be condemned-- that being a manufacturing purpose within the meaning of this and the preceding section. Lamborn v. Bell, 18 Colo. 346, 32 P. 989 (1893).

Section covers milling of ore. This section, § 14 of art. II, Colo. Const., and sections 38-1-101 and 38-2-101 cover the milling of ore. Pine Martin Mining Co. v. Empire Zinc Co., 90 Colo. 529, 11 P.2d 221 (1932).

As "milling" is synonymous with "manufacturing". Lamborn v. Bell, 18 Colo. 346, 32 P. 989 (1893).

Section contemplates use of pipelines in permitting right-of-way. This section does not mention a pipeline, but its evident object was to permit a right-of-way for a conduit through which to convey water for the purposes designated, and hence, the kind of conduit employed and utilized is of no material moment, so far as any question in the case at bar is involved. Town of Lyons v. City of Longmont, 54 Colo. 112, 129 P. 198 (1912).

Section 8. County commissioners to fix rates for water, when. The general assembly shall provide by law that the board of county commissioners in their respective counties, shall have power, when application is made to them by either party interested, to establish reasonable maximum rates to be charged for the use of water, whether furnished by individuals or corporations.

ANNOTATION

Purpose of this section. The evident purpose of this section is that actual and beneficial consumers of water may not be subjected to extortionate demands. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

The primary objects of this section were to encourage and protect the beneficial use of water, and, while recognizing the carrier's right to reasonable compensation for its carriage, collectible in a reasonable manner, the constitution also unequivocally asserts the consumer's right to its use upon payment of such compensation. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

"To be charged for the use of water", relating to the carrier's compensation, does not recognize a like ownership in such use. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

Section forbids enforcement of unreasonable payment demands. By fair implication, this section forbids the carrier's enforcement of unreasonable and oppressive demands in relation to the time and manner of collecting rates. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

The constitutional right of individual consumers, upon tender of the carriage fee, to water diverted by a carrier and not already applied to beneficial uses, can no more be evaded or qualified by a regulation compelling the purchase of stock as a condition precedent to use, than it can by a regulation fixing a sum in excess of the price charged for carriage, to be thus paid for the constitutional right of user. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 P. 966 (1892).

Power to fix rate vested exclusively in county commissioners. Under this section neither the general assembly nor any court has power to fix a maximum rate for the delivery of water. The power is vested exclusively in the boards of county commissioners. The board can act only on the petition for an interested party. The rate fixed by the board, when acting within its jurisdiction, is binding upon all persons affected thereby until vacated by the decree of some court of competent jurisdiction. The board is not charged with the duty of seeing that the prescribed rate is observed by the carriers of water. McCracken v. Montezuma Water & Land Co., 25 Colo. App. 280, 137 P. 903 (1914).

No stipulation of the parties and no decree of the trial court can have any validity as to the rates to be charged by a ditch company to users who are neither stockholders nor coowners of such ditch company, the authority to set reasonable rates for the carriage and delivery of such water being vested exclusively in the board of county commissioners. Farmers Water Dev. Co. v. Barrett, 151 Colo. 140, 376 P.2d 693 (1962).

And ratemaking power cannot be delegated to others. Farmers Water Dev. Co. v. Barrett, 151 Colo. 140, 376 P.2d 693 (1962).

General assembly cannot confer power to fix rates on carrier. This section expressly commands the general assembly to provide by law that county commissioners shall have the power to fix rates for the use of water; it is not a divisible power and the general assembly cannot divest itself thereof and confer it upon the carrier. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 95 Colo. 555, 38 P.2d 889 (1934); Farmers Water Dev. Co. v. Barrett, 151 Colo. 140, 376 P.2d 693 (1962).

Contract fixing rate between carrier and consumer not binding. A contract between the carrier and the consumer, whereby the carrier attempts to fix and collect the rate for carrying and delivering water to the consumer, is not binding on the latter because this section of the constitution and section 37-85-103 et seq., which provide for the fixing of reasonable maximum rates charged for water, have conferred upon and vested in the county commissioners of the respective counties the exclusive power to fix the rate for such service. Farmers Water Dev. Co. v. Barrett, 151 Colo. 140, 376 P.2d 693 (1962).

County commissioners may only establish maximum amount of rate. They cannot be empowered to dictate the exact rate that shall be collected, or to fix the time or conditions of payment. The time and conditions of payment are proper subjects for legislation. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

This section provides for a tribunal to fix the maximum rate in case of disagreement. Wheeler v. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, 17 P. 487 (1887).

With maximum rates subject to judicial control. The maximum reasonable rates fixed by the board of county commissioners are subject to judicial control. Montezuma Water & Land Co. v. McCracken, 62 Colo. 394, 163 P. 286 (1917).

When courts may interfere with rate making. The only time the courts can interfere with rate making is after the board of county commissioners either acts or fails to act, and then only to determine whether what was done or not done was unreasonable, arbitrary or an abuse of discretion. Farmers Water Dev. Co. v. Barrett, 151 Colo. 140, 376 P.2d 693 (1962).

However, court lacks jurisdiction to fix rates. Where section 37-85-103 et seq. enacted pursuant to this section, provides that the board of county commissioners shall have power to establish reasonable maximum rates to be charged for the use of water, the trial court erred in enjoining the board from fixing rates in excess of 20 dollars per cubic foot for carriage and delivery of such water pursuant to prior decree of district court, that court being without jurisdiction to fix such rates. Farmers Water Dev. Co. v. Barrett, 151 Colo. 140, 376 P.2d 693 (1962).

Assessment provided for by court decree not rate fixing. An assessment provided for by a court decree directing a ditch company to assess and plaintiff to pay a reasonable rate for carrying extra water for plaintiff is not a rate to be charged for use of water to be determined by the county commissioners, and the court's decree does not usurp the rate power of the county commissioners. Zoller v. Mail Creek Ditch Co., 31 Colo. App. 99, 498 P.2d 1169 (1972).

Irrigation company must provide service for reasonable maximum rate established. A corporation operating a canal or ditch for conveying water for irrigation to the proprietors of the land thereunder is bound to carry and deliver water to the class of consumers named in its certificate of incorporation, and the service must be performed for a reasonable maximum charge, to be fixed by the board of county commissioners, upon proper application made. Northern Colo. Irrigation Co. v. Pouppirt, 22 Colo. App. 563, 127 P. 125 (1912).

And cannot complain if rate fixed gives adequate return. An irrigation company has nothing of which to complain, if the rate fixed by the board provided for by this section is an adequate return for its services and on the value of its property, even if the county board erred in the method of arriving at the rate. Pioneer Irrigation Co. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 251 F. 264 (8th Cir. 1918).

Carrying ditch is not given power to appropriate water for sale and hence cannot by the purchase of water acquire any right or title to it. Pioneer Irrigation Co. v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 236 F. 790 (D. Colo. 1916), aff'd, 251 F. 264 (8th Cir. 1918).

Mutual ditch companies do not charge for use of water. Zoller v. Mail Creek Ditch Co., 31 Colo. App. 99, 498 P.2d 1169 (1972).

But consumers, who are sole owners of ditch and diversion works, share costs of operation without profit. Zoller v. Mail Creek Ditch Co., 31 Colo. App. 99, 498 P.2d 1169 (1972).

Section applicable only to private persons. The framers intended, and the general assembly understood, that this section was applicable only to private persons or corporations engaged in the business of storage, carriage, and sale of water for irrigation, mining, milling, manufacturing, or domestic purposes. Matthews v. Tri-County Water Conservancy Dist., 200 Colo. 202, 613 P.2d 889 (1980).

And not applicable to political subdivision. The language of this section and of article 85 of title 37 is not applicable to a political subdivision of the state of Colorado. Matthews v. Tri-County Water Conservancy Dist., 200 Colo. 202, 613 P.2d 889 (1980).

Water conservancy districts not subject to jurisdiction of boards of commissioners. Water conservancy districts, when fixing rates for the sale of water, are not subject to the jurisdiction of the boards of county commissioners. Matthews v. Tri-County Water Conservancy Dist., 200 Colo. 202, 613 P.2d 889 (1980).

Applied in Golden Canal Co. v. Bright, 8 Colo. 144, 6 P. 142 (1884); Post Printing & Publishing Co. v. Shafroth, 53 Colo. 129, 124 P. 176 (1912).

ARTICLE XVII
Militia

Section 1. Persons subject to service. The militia of the state shall consist of all able-bodied male residents of the state between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years; except, such persons as may be exempted by the laws of the United States, or of the state.

Section 2. Lotteries prohibited - exceptions. (1) The general assembly shall have no power to authorize lotteries for any purpose; except that the conducting of such games of chance as provided in subsections (2) to (4) of this section shall be lawful on and after January 1, 1959, and the conducting of state-supervised lotteries pursuant to subsection (7) of this section shall be lawful on and after January 1, 1981.

(2) No game of chance pursuant to this subsection (2) and subsections (3) and (4) of this section shall be conducted by any person, firm, or organization, unless a license as provided for in this subsection (2) has been issued to the firm or organization conducting such games of chance. The secretary of state shall, upon application therefor on such forms as shall be prescribed by the secretary of state and upon the payment of an annual fee as determined by the general assembly, issue a license for the conducting of such games of chance to any bona fide chartered branch or lodge or chapter of a national or state organization or to any bona fide religious, charitable, labor, fraternal, educational, voluntary firemen's or veterans' organization which operates without profit to its members and which has been in existence continuously for a period of five years immediately prior to the making of said application for such license and has had during the entire five-year period a dues-paying membership engaged in carrying out the objects of said corporation or organization, such license to expire at the end of each calendar year in which it was issued.

(3) The license issued by the secretary of state shall authorize and permit the licensee to conduct games of chance, restricted to the selling of rights to participate and the awarding of prizes in the specific kind of game of chance commonly known as bingo or lotto, in which prizes are awarded on the basis of designated numbers or symbols on a card conforming to numbers or symbols selected at random and in the specific game of chance commonly known as raffles, conducted by the drawing of prizes or by the allotment of prizes by chance.

(4) Such games of chance shall be subject to the following restrictions:

(a) The entire net proceeds of any game shall be exclusively devoted to the lawful purposes of organizations permitted to conduct such games.

(b) No person except a bona fide member of any organization may participate in the management or operation of any such game.

(c) No person may receive any remuneration or profit for participating in the management or operation of any such game.

(5) Subsections (2) to (4) of this section are self-enacting, but laws may be enacted supplementary to and in pursuance of, but not contrary to, the provisions thereof.

(6) The enforcement of this section shall be under such official or department of government of the state of Colorado as the general assembly shall provide.

(7) Any provision of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, the general assembly may establish a state-supervised lottery. Unless otherwise provided by statute, all proceeds from the lottery, after deduction of prizes and expenses, shall be allocated to the conservation trust fund of the state for distribution to municipalities and counties for park, recreation, and open space purposes.

ANNOTATION

Legislative power of state may not be used to authorize lotteries, whether or not that exercise of legislative power is ratified directly by the people through a referendum. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Sweepstakes Races Act, 196 Colo. 353, 585 P.2d 595 (1978).

All gambling not lottery. It unquestionably is true that all lotteries are forms of gambling, but it does not follow that all gambling is a "lottery" as those terms are defined in law. Ginsberg v. Centennial Turf Club, 126 Colo. 471, 251 P.2d 926 (1952).

Valuable consideration must be paid, directly or indirectly, for chance to draw prize by lot, to bring the transaction within the class of lotteries or gift enterprises that the law prohibits as criminal. Ginsberg v. Centennial Turf Club, 126 Colo. 471, 251 P.2d 926 (1952).

Statutes authorizing pari-mutuel betting on racing events are valid against the contention that such betting constitutes a lottery. Ginsberg v. Centennial Turf Club, 126 Colo. 471, 251 P.2d 926 (1952).

Since element of chance does not control races. While an element of chance no doubt enters into horse and dog races, it does not control them. The bettor makes his own choice of the animal he believes will finish the race in first, second or third place. In making that selection he has available the previous records of the animal and the jockey, and various other facts which he may take into consideration in choosing the animal upon which he places a wager. Ginsberg v. Centennial Turf Club, 126 Colo. 471, 251 P.2d 926 (1952).

And section violated when chance controlling factor in award. A lottery is present when consideration is paid for the opportunity to win a prize awarded by chance and this section is violated if chance is the controlling factor in award. In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Sweepstakes Races Act, 196 Colo. 353, 585 P.2d 595 (1978).

Section 3. Arbitration laws. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass such laws as may be necessary and proper to decide differences by arbitrators, to be appointed by mutual agreement of the parties to any controversy who may choose that mode of adjustment. The powers and duties of such arbitrators shall be as prescribed by law.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Trial by Lawyer Panel: A Solution to Trial Court Backlogs?", see 37 Dicta 115 (1960).

State policy to encourage arbitration. It is the policy of this state to foster and encourage the use of arbitration as a method of dispute resolution. Judd Constr. Co. v. Evans Joint Venture, 642 P.2d 922 (Colo. 1982); Cohen v. Quiat, 749 P.2d 453 (Colo. App. 1987).

All doubts as to whether a dispute is arbitrable are to be resolved in favor of arbitration. Huizar v. Allstate Ins. Co., 932 P.2d 839 (Colo. App. 1996).

Binding grievance arbitration of disputes arising under the terms of a public employment collective bargaining agreement is not per se unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative authority. City & County of Denver v. Denver Firefighters Local 858, 663 P.2d 1032 (Colo. 1983).

This section does not require arbitration. This section neither contemplates nor admits of a law providing for the compulsory submission of differences to arbitration.

In re Bill Relating to Compulsory Arbitration, 9 Colo. 629, 21 P. 474 (1886).

But agreements to arbitrate are enforceable, and actions based on disputes subject to arbitration may be dismissed for failure to comply with the condition precedent. Ellis v. Rocky Mt. Empire Sports, Inc., 43 Colo. App. 166, 602 P.2d 895 (1979).

A submission of differences to the decision of arbitrators must be by mutual agreement of the parties to the controversy, who choose that mode of adjustment. In re Bill Relating to Compulsory Arbitration, 9 Colo. 629, 21 P. 474 (1886).

The Colorado mandatory arbitration act does not violate this section because the act provides for non-binding arbitration with de novo review by the district court. Firelock Inc. v. District Court, 776 P.2d 1090 (Colo. 1989).

This section does not expressly prohibit mandatory, binding arbitration. Arbitration requirements of "no fault" motor vehicle insurance law in § 10-4-708 (1.5) does not contravene this section. State Farm v. Broadnax, 827 P.2d 531 (Colo. 1992) (decided under law in effect prior to 1991 amendment to section 10-4-708 (1.5)).

Where clause of an uninsured motorist policy permits either party to demand trial on merits after the completion of arbitration if amount awarded exceeds specified amount, clause violates public policy favoring fair, adequate, and timely resolution of uninsured motorist claims. Huizar v. Allstate Ins. Co., 952 P.2d 342 (Colo. 1998).

Provision allowing trial de novo if automobile insurance arbitration award is above the limits of the state financial responsibility law is not void as against public policy. Although the public policy of Colorado strongly favors arbitration, there is no stated public policy requirement that arbitration be made mandatory or binding by agreement. Huizar v. Allstate Ins. Co., 932 P.2d 839 (Colo. App. 1996).

Applied in Sandefer v. District Court, 635 P.2d 547 (Colo. 1981).

Section 4. Felony defined. The term felony, wherever it may occur in this constitution, or the laws of the state, shall be construed to mean any criminal offense punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary, and none other.

Supreme court has recognized this section as definition of "felony". Smalley v. People, 134 Colo. 360, 304 P.2d 902 (1956).

Felony determined by punishment prescribed. The test by which to determine whether an offense is a felony is by the punishment prescribed. Smalley v. People, 134

Colo. 360, 304 P.2d 902 (1956).

The test by which to determine whether an offense shall be deemed a felony or a misdemeanor is made to depend upon whether the same is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary or in the county jail. People v. Enlow, 135 Colo. 249, 310 P.2d 539 (1957); People v. Green, 734 P.2d 616 (Colo. 1987).

Although actual sentence to penitentiary requisite. While this section defines the term "felony" wherever it may occur in the constitution or laws to mean a criminal offense, punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary and none other, it does not follow, in the absence of language in the constitution to that effect, that everyone convicted of felony must, of necessity, be sentenced to the penitentiary. The constitution does not thus provide, and such has never been the uniform practice in this state. Martin v. People, 69 Colo. 60, 168 P. 1171 (1917).

That offense may be visited alternatively, by imprisonment or fine, does not change rule. People v. Godding, 55 Colo. 579, 136 P. 1011 (1913).

"Punishable", as used in this section, is identical in meaning with "liable to punishment". People v. Godding, 55 Colo. 579, 136 P. 1011 (1913).

Meaning of "the penitentiary". "The penitentiary" does not mean a penitentiary or any penitentiary; it means the penitentiary of this state. Whether infamous or not, an offense is a felony if punishable by death or imprisonment in the state penitentiary. The word "the" is a word of limitation--a word used before nouns, with a specifying or particularizing effect, opposed to the indefinite or generalizing force of "a" or "any". People v. Enlow, 135 Colo. 249, 310 P.2d 539 (1957).

"And none other" means no other offense; that is it relates to the word "offense", and not to the character or mode of punishment. Martin v. People, 69 Colo. 60, 168 P. 1171 (1917).

General assembly has no power to depart from classification of section. Every offense which may be punished by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary is a felony, even though in the discretion of the court a lesser penalty may be inflicted. And though the general assembly may expressly denominate the offense a high misdemeanor, or the like, it is still in law felony, the general assembly having no power to depart from this constitutional classification. People v. Godding, 55 Colo. 579, 136 P. 1011 (1913).

Penitentiary sentence is more severe than reformatory sentence because it carries the stigma of a felony. Petsche v. Clingan, 273 F.2d 688 (10th Cir. 1960).

Defendant between ages of 16 and 21 usually sentenced to reformatory. A defendant between the ages of 16 and 21, convicted of a felony for the first time, with certain exceptions, must be sentenced to the state reformatory, the court having no discretion in the matter. Barrett v. People, 136 Colo. 144, 315 P.2d 192 (1957).

And, sentence to reformatory will not answer requirements for felony conviction. Barrett v. People, 136 Colo. 144, 315 P.2d 192 (1957).

A reformatory sentence does not suffice for a felony conviction under the habitual criminal act, and where a court has imposed a life sentence under such circumstances the judgment will be set aside. Smalley v. People, 134 Colo. 360, 304 P.2d 902 (1956).

Incorrigible reformatory inmates transferable to penitentiary though not convicted of felony. The statute authorizing the governor to order the transfer of incorrigible inmates does not provide that the power can be exercised by him only if the reformatory inmate involved has been convicted of a felony. Tinsley v. Crespin, 137 Colo. 302, 324 P.2d 1033 (1958).

Military conviction. A military conviction for an offense that would be punishable as a felony under the law of Colorado is admissible for impeachment under § 13-90-101. People v. Apodaca, 668 P.2d 941 (Colo. App. 1982), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 712 P.2d 467 (Colo. 1985).

Physician's conviction for wanton assault in the first degree in Kentucky was a conviction of a felony for purposes of § 12-36-117 (1)(f) where the conviction was punishable by imprisonment for ten years in the Kentucky penitentiary. Colo. Bd. of Med. Exam'rs v. Boyle, 924 P.2d 1113 (Colo. App. 1996).

"Felony" distinguished from "feloniously". Feloniously no longer possesses the distinctive or restricted meaning it had at the common law. Under this section, a felony is any criminal offense punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary; and an act that is done feloniously is one that is done with a more or less deliberate purpose or intent to commit a crime of the nature of a felony. Williams v. People, 26 Colo. 272, 57 P. 701 (1899).

Section 18-8-210.1 does not reclassify adjudicated delinquents as felons. Therefore, there is no conflict with this section of the Colorado Constitution. People v. M.B., 90 P.3d 880 (Colo. 2004).

Section 9. Limited gaming permitted. (1) Any provisions of section 2 of this article XVIII or any other provisions of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, limited gaming in the City of Central, the City of Black Hawk, and the City of Cripple Creek shall be lawful as of October 1, 1991.

(2) The administration and regulation of this section 9 shall be under an appointed limited gaming control commission, referred to in this section 9 as the commission; said commission to be created under such official or department of government of the state of Colorado as the general assembly shall provide by May 1, 1991. Such official or the director of the department of government shall appoint the commission by July 1, 1991. The commission shall promulgate all necessary rules and regulations relating to the licensing of limited gaming by October 1, 1991, in the manner authorized by statute for the promulgation of administrative rules and regulations. Such rules and regulations shall include the necessary defining of terms that are not otherwise defined.

(3) Limited gaming shall be subject to the following:

(a) Limited gaming shall take place only in the existing Colorado cities of: the City of Central, county of Gilpin, the City of Black Hawk, county of Gilpin, and the City of Cripple Creek, county of Teller. Such limited gaming shall be further confined to the commercial districts of said cities as said districts are respectively defined in the city ordinances adopted by: the City of Central on October 7, 1981, the City of Black Hawk on May 4, 1978, and the City of Cripple Creek on December 3, 1973.

(b) Limited gaming shall only be conducted in structures which conform, as determined by the respective municipal governing bodies, to the architectural styles and designs that were common to the areas prior to World War I and which conform to the requirements of applicable respective city ordinances, regardless of the age of said structures.

(c) No more than thirty-five percent of the square footage of any building and no more than fifty percent of any one floor of such building, may be used for limited gaming.

(d) Limited gaming operations shall be prohibited between the hours of 2:00 o'clock a.m. and 8:00 o'clock a.m., unless such hours are revised as provided in subsection (7) of this section.

(e) Limited gaming may occur in establishments licensed to sell alcoholic beverages.

(4) As certain terms are used in regards to limited gaming:

(a) "Adjusted gross proceeds" means the total amount of all wagers made by players on limited gaming less all payments to players; said payments to players being deemed to include all payments of cash premiums, merchandise, tokens, redeemable game credits, or any other thing of value.

(b) "Limited gaming" means the use of slot machines and the card games of blackjack and poker, each game having a maximum single bet of five dollars, unless such games or single bets are revised as provided in subsection (7) of this section.

(c) "Slot machine" means any mechanical, electrical, video, electronic, or other device, contrivance, or machine which, after insertion of a coin, token, or similar object, or upon payment of any required consideration whatsoever by a player, is available to be played or operated, and which, whether by reason of the skill of the player or application of the element of chance, or both, may deliver or entitle the player operating the machine to receive cash premiums, merchandise, tokens, redeemable game credits, or any other thing of value other than unredeemable free games, whether the payoff is made automatically from the machines or in any other manner.

(5) (a) Up to a maximum of forty percent of the adjusted gross proceeds of limited gaming shall be paid by each licensee, in addition to any applicable license fees, for the privilege of conducting limited gaming. Subject to subsection (7) of this section, such percentage shall be established annually by the commission according to the criteria established by the general assembly in the implementing legislation to be enacted pursuant to paragraph (c) of this subsection (5). Such payments shall be made into a limited gaming fund that is hereby created in the state treasury.

(b) (I) From the moneys in the limited gaming fund, the state treasurer is hereby authorized to pay all ongoing expenses of the commission and any other state agency, related to the administration of this section 9. Such payment shall be made upon proper presentation of a voucher prepared by the commission in accordance with statutes governing payments of liabilities incurred on behalf of the state. Such payment shall not be conditioned on any appropriation by the general assembly.

(II) At the end of each state fiscal year, the state treasurer shall distribute the balance remaining in the limited gaming fund, except for an amount equal to all expenses of the administration of this section 9 for the preceding two-month period, according to the following guidelines and subject to the distribution criteria provided in subsection (7) of this section: fifty percent shall be transferred to the state general fund or such other fund as the general assembly shall provide; twenty-eight percent shall be transferred to the state historical fund, which fund is hereby created in the state treasury; twelve percent shall be distributed to the governing bodies of Gilpin county and Teller county in proportion to the gaming revenues generated in each county; the remaining ten percent shall be distributed to the governing bodies of the cities of: the City of Central, the City of Black Hawk, and the City of Cripple Creek in proportion to the gaming revenues generated in each respective city.

(III) Of the moneys in the state historical fund, from which the state treasurer shall also make annual distributions, twenty percent shall be used for the preservation and restoration of the cities of: the City of Central, the City of Black Hawk, and the City of Cripple Creek, and such moneys shall be distributed, to the governing bodies of the respective cities, according to the proportion of the gaming revenues generated in each respective city. The remaining eighty percent in the state historical fund shall be used for the historic preservation and restoration of historical sites and municipalities throughout the state in a manner to be determined by the general assembly.

(c) and (d) Repealed.

(e) The general assembly shall enact provisions for the special licensing of qualifying nonprofit charitable organizations desiring to periodically host charitable gaming activities in licensed gaming establishments.

(f) If any provision of this section 9 is held invalid, the remainder of this section 9 shall remain unimpaired.

(6) Local vote on legality of limited gaming - election required. (a) Except as provided in paragraph (e) of this subsection (6), limited gaming shall not be lawful within any city, town, or unincorporated portion of a county which has been granted constitutional authority for limited gaming within its boundaries unless first approved by an affirmative vote of a majority of the electors of such city, town, or county voting thereon. The question shall first be submitted to the electors at a general, regular, or special election held within thirteen months after the effective date of the amendment which first adds such city, county, or town to those authorized for limited gaming pursuant to this constitution; and said election shall be conducted pursuant to applicable state or local government election laws.

(b) If approval of limited gaming is not obtained when the question is first submitted to the electors, the question may be submitted at subsequent elections held in accordance with paragraph (d) of this subsection (6); except that, once approval is obtained, limited gaming shall thereafter be lawful within the said city, town, or unincorporated portion of a county so long as the city, town, or county remains among those with constitutional authority for limited gaming within their boundaries.

(c) Nothing contained in this subsection (6) shall be construed to limit the ability of a city, town, or county to regulate the conduct of limited gaming as otherwise authorized by statute or by this constitution.

(d) (I) The question submitted to the electors at any election held pursuant to this subsection (6) shall be phrased in substantially the following form: "Shall limited gaming be lawful within _____?"

(II) The failure to acquire approval of limited gaming in the unincorporated portion of a county shall not prevent lawful limited gaming within a city or town located in such county where such approval is acquired in a city or town election, and failure to acquire such approval in a city or town election shall not prevent lawful limited gaming within the unincorporated area of the county in which such city or town is located where such approval is acquired in an election in the unincorporated area of a county.

(III) If approval of limited gaming is not acquired when the question is first submitted in accordance with this subsection (6), the question may be submitted at subsequent elections so long as at least four years have elapsed since any previous election at which the question was submitted.

(e) Nothing contained in this subsection (6) shall be construed to affect the authority granted upon the initial adoption of this section at the 1990 general election, or the conduct and regulation of gaming on Indian reservations pursuant to federal law.

(f) For purposes of this subsection (6), a "city, town, or county" includes all land and buildings located within, or owned and controlled by, such city, town, or county or any political subdivision thereof. "City, town, or county" also includes the city and county of Denver.

(7) Local elections to revise limits applicable to gaming - statewide elections to increase gaming taxes. (a) Through local elections, the voters of the cities of Central, Black Hawk, and Cripple Creek are authorized to revise limits on gaming that apply to licensees operating in their city's gaming district to extend:

(I) Hours of limited gaming operation;

(II) Approved games to include roulette or craps, or both; and

(III) Single bets up to one hundred dollars.

(b) Limited gaming tax revenues attributable to the operation of this subsection (7) shall be deposited in the limited gaming fund. The commission shall annually determine the amount of such revenues generated in each city.

(c) From gaming tax revenues attributable to the operation of this subsection (7), the treasurer shall pay:

(I) Those ongoing expenses of the commission and other state agencies that are related to the administration of this subsection (7);

(II) Annual adjustments, in connection with distributions to limited gaming fund recipients listed in subsection (5)(b)(II) of this section, to reflect the lesser of six percent of, or the actual percentage of, annual growth in gaming tax revenues attributable to this subsection (7); and

(III) Of the remaining gaming tax revenues, distributions in the following proportions:

(A) Seventy-eight percent to the state's public community colleges, junior colleges, and local district colleges to supplement existing state funding for student financial aid programs and classroom instruction programs; provided that such revenue shall be distributed to institutions that were operating on and after January 1, 2008, in proportion to their respective full-time equivalent student enrollments in the previous fiscal year;

(B) Ten percent to the governing bodies of the cities of Central, Black Hawk, and Cripple Creek to address local gaming impacts; provided that such revenue shall be distributed based on the proportion of gaming tax revenues, attributable to the operation of this subsection (7), that are paid by licensees operating in each city; and

(C) Twelve percent to the governing bodies of Gilpin and Teller Counties to address local gaming impacts; provided that such revenue shall be distributed based on the proportion of gaming tax revenues, attributable to the operation of this subsection (7), that are paid by licensees operating in each county.

(d) After July 1, 2009, the commission shall implement revisions to limits on gaming as approved by voters in the cities of Central, Black Hawk, or Cripple Creek. The general assembly is also authorized to enact, as necessary, legislation that will facilitate the operation of this subsection (7).

(e) If local voters in one or more cities revise any limits on gaming as provided in paragraph (a) of this subsection (7), any commission action pursuant to subsection (5) of this section that increases gaming taxes from the levels imposed as of July 1, 2008, shall be effective only if approved by voters at a statewide election held under section 20(4)(a) of article X of this constitution.

(f) Gaming tax revenues attributable to the operation of this subsection (7) shall be collected and spent as a voter-approved revenue change without regard to any limitation contained in section 20 of article X of this constitution or any other law.

This section and section 20 of article X of the Colorado Constitution are not in direct conflict. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

This section prohibits the general assembly from enacting limitations on revenues collected by the Colorado Limited Gaming Commission in order to comply with section 20 of article X of the Colorado Constitution, and insofar as revenues generated by limited gaming might tend in a given year to violate the spending limits imposed by that section, the general assembly may comply by decreasing revenues collected elsewhere, or if that is impossible after the fact, by refunding the surplus to taxpayers. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1, (Colo. 1993).

Casino's promotional slot club payouts are not deductible as "payments to players" for computing taxable adjusted gross proceeds where a player receives a bonus point for every dollar he or she spends on a machine that may then be redeemed in 200 point increments and player receives one dollar for every 200 points redeemed. Tivolino Teller House, Inc. v. Fagan, 926 P.2d 1208 (Colo. 1996).

Section 9a. U.S. senators and representatives - limitations on terms. (1) In order to broaden the opportunities for public service and to assure that members of the United States Congress from Colorado are representative of and responsive to Colorado citizens, no United States Senator from Colorado shall serve more than two consecutive terms in the United States Senate, and no United States Representative from Colorado shall serve more than three consecutive terms in the United States House of Representatives. This limitation on the number of terms shall apply to terms of office beginning on or after January 1, 1995. Any person appointed or elected to fill a vacancy in the United States Congress and who serves at least one half of a term of office shall be considered to have served a term in that office for purposes of this subsection (1). Terms are considered consecutive unless they are at least four years apart.

(2) The people of Colorado hereby state their support for a nationwide limit of twelve consecutive years of service in the United States Senate and six consecutive years of service in the United States House of Representatives and instruct their public officials to use their best efforts to work for such a limit.

(3) The people of Colorado declare that the provisions of this section shall be deemed severable from the remainder of this measure and that their intention is that federal officials elected from Colorado will continue voluntarily to observe the wishes of the people as stated in this section in the event any provision thereof is held invalid. The severability provisions of Section 10 of Article XVIII of the Colorado Constitution apply to this Section 9a.

Section 10. Severability of constitutional provisions. If any provision of any section of any article in this constitution is found by a court of competent jurisdiction to be unconstitutional, the remaining provisions are valid unless the court holds that the valid provisions are so essentially and inseparably connected with, and so dependent upon, the void provision that it cannot be presumed the enactment of the valid provisions would have occurred without the void one; or unless the court determines that the valid provisions, standing alone, are incomplete and not capable of being executed.

Section 11. Elected government officials - limitation on terms. (1) In order to broaden the opportunities for public service and to assure that elected officials of governments are responsive to the citizens of those governments, no nonjudicial elected official of any county, city and county, city, town, school district, service authority, or any other political subdivision of the State of Colorado, no member of the state board of education, and no elected member of the governing board of a state institution of higher education shall serve more than two consecutive terms in office, except that with respect to terms of office which are two years or shorter in duration, no such elected official shall serve more than three consecutive terms in office. This limitation on the number of terms shall apply to terms of office beginning on or after January 1, 1995. For purposes of this Section 11, terms are considered consecutive unless they are at least four years apart.

(2) The voters of any such political subdivision may lengthen, shorten or eliminate the limitations on terms of office imposed by this Section 11. The voters of the state may lengthen, shorten, or eliminate the limitations on terms of office for the state board of education or the governing board of a state institution of higher education imposed by this Section 11.

(3) The provisions of this Section 11 shall apply to every home rule county, home rule city and county, home rule city and home rule town, notwithstanding any provision of Article XX, or Sections 16 and 17 of Article XIV, of the Colorado Constitution.

Source: Initiated 94: Entire section added, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 95, p. 1436, January 19, 1995.

ANNOTATION

The term limits established in this section apply to district attorneys. District attorneys belong to the executive branch of government and are elected, and a judicial district is a political subdivision. A district attorney is thus a nonjudicial elected official of a political subdivision and is subject to term limits. Davidson v. Sandstrom, 83 P.3d 648 (Colo. 2004).

This section is self-executing. Absent clarifying legislation that specifies the governing body that may call elections for a judicial district, it is thus appropriate for the county commissioners of a county that shares the same territory as a judicial district to refer to the voters of the district a ballot question to exempt the district attorney of the district from term limits. Davidson v. Sandstrom, 83 P.3d 648 (Colo. 2004).

Section 12a. Congressional Term Limits Declaration. (1) Information for voters about candidates' decisions to term limit themselves is more important than party labeling, therefore, any candidate seeking to be elected to the United States Congress shall be allowed, but not required, to submit to the secretary of state an executed copy of the Term Limits Declaration set forth in subsection (2) of this section not later than 15 days prior to the certification of every congressional election ballot to each county clerk and recorder by the secretary of state. The secretary of state shall not refuse to place a candidate on any ballot due to the candidate's decision not to submit such declaration.

(2) The language of the Term Limits Declaration shall be as set forth herein and the secretary of state shall incorporate the applicable language in square brackets "[ ]" for the office the candidate seeks:

Congressional Term Limits Declaration

Term Limits Declaration One

Part A: I, _____, voluntarily declare that, if elected, I will not serve in the United States [House of Representatives more than 3 terms] [Senate more than 2 terms] after the effective date of the Congressional Term Limits Declaration Act of 1998.

_____

Signature by candidate executes Part A Date

Part B: I, _____, authorize and request that the secretary of state place the applicable ballot designation, "Signed declaration to limit service to no more than [3 terms] [2 terms]" next to my name on every election ballot and in all government-sponsored voter education material in which my name appears as a candidate for the office to which Term Limit Declaration One refers.

_____

Signature by candidate executes Part B Date

If the candidate chooses not to execute any or all parts of Term Limits Declaration One, then he or she may execute and submit to the secretary of state any or all parts of Term Limits Declaration Two.

Term Limits Declaration Two

Part A: I, _____, have voluntarily chosen not to sign Term Limits Declaration One. If I had signed that declaration, I would have voluntarily agreed to limit my service in the United States [House of Representatives to no more than 3 terms] [Senate to no more than 2 terms] after the passage of the congressional Term Limits Declaration Amendment of 1998.

_____

Signature by candidate executes Part A Date

After executing Part A, a candidate may execute and submit the voluntary statement in Part B.

Part B: I, _____, authorize and request that the secretary of state place the ballot designation, "Chose not to sign declaration to limit service to [3 terms] [2 terms]" next to my name on every official election ballot and in all government-sponsored voter education material in which my name appears as a candidate for the office to which Term Limits Declaration Two refers.

_____

Signature by candidate executes Part B Date

(3) In the ballot designations in this section, the secretary of state shall incorporate the applicable language in brackets for the office the candidate seeks. Terms shall be calculated without regard to whether the terms were served consecutively.

(4) The secretary of state shall allow any candidate who at any time has submitted an executed copy of Term Limits Declaration One or Two, to timely submit an executed copy of Term Limits Declaration One or Two at which time all provisions affecting that Term Limits Declaration shall apply.

(5) The secretary of state shall place on that part of the official election ballot and in all government-sponsored voter education material, immediately following the name of each candidate who has executed and submitted Parts A and B of Term Limits Declaration One, the words, "Signed declaration to limit service to [3 terms] [2 terms]" unless the candidate has qualified as a candidate for a term that would exceed the number of terms set forth in Term Limits Declaration One. The secretary of state shall place on that part of the official election ballot and in all government-sponsored voter education material, immediately following the name of each candidate who has executed and submitted Parts A and B of Term Limits Declaration Two the words, "Chose not to sign declaration to limit service to [3 terms] [2 terms]".

(6) For the purpose of this section, service in office for more than one-half of a term shall be deemed as service for a full term.

(7) No candidate shall have more than one declaration and ballot designation in effect for any office at the same time and a candidate may only execute and submit Part B of a declaration if Part A of that declaration is or has been executed and submitted.

(8) The secretary of state shall provide candidates with all the declarations in this section and promulgate regulations as provided by law to facilitate implementation of this section as long as the regulations do not alter the intent of this section.

(9) If any portion of this section be adjudicated invalid, the remaining portion shall be severed from the invalid portion to the greatest possible extent and be given the fullest force and application.

Section 12b. Prohibited methods of taking wildlife. (1) It shall be unlawful to take wildlife with any leghold trap, any instant kill body-gripping design trap, or by poison or snare in the state of Colorado.

(2) The provisions of subsection (1) of this section shall not prohibit:

(a) The taking of wildlife by use of the devices or methods described in subsection (1) of this section by federal, state, county, or municipal departments of health for the purpose of protecting human health or safety;

(b) The use of the devices or methods described in subsection (1) of this section for controlling:

(I) wild or domestic rodents, except for beaver or muskrat, as otherwise authorized by law; or

(II) wild or domestic birds as otherwise authorized by law;

(c) The use of non-lethal snares, traps specifically designed not to kill, or nets to take wildlife for scientific research projects, for falconry, for relocation, or for medical treatment pursuant to regulations established by the Colorado wildlife commission; or

(d) The use of traps, poisons or nets by the Colorado division of wildlife to take or manage fish or other non-mammalian aquatic wildlife.

(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of this section 12, the owner or lessee of private property primarily used for commercial livestock or crop production, or the employees of such owner or lessee, shall not be prohibited from using the devices or methods described in subsection (1) of this section on such private property so long as:

(a) such use does not exceed one thirty day period per year; and

(b) the owner or lessee can present on-site evidence to the division of wildlife that ongoing damage to livestock or crops has not been alleviated by the use of non-lethal or lethal control methods which are not prohibited.

(4) The provisions of this section 12 shall not apply to the taking of wildlife with firearms, fishing equipment, archery equipment, or other implements in hand as authorized by law.

(5) The general assembly shall enact, amend, or repeal such laws as are necessary to implement the provisions of this section 12, including penalty provisions, no later than May 1, 1997.

(6) As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) The term "taking" shall be defined as provided in section 33-1-102 (43), C.R.S., on the date this section is enacted.

(b) The term "wildlife" shall be defined as provided in section 33-1-102 (51), C.R.S., on the date this section is enacted.

ANNOTATION

Although plaintiff established standing, denial of mandamus and injunctive relief was appropriate regarding proposed requirements to take reasonable steps to minimize the effects of the poisoning on nontargeted wildlife and prosecution of alleged violations, because no plain duty to impose the requirements and no plain right to such relief existed. Rocky Mtn. Animal Def. v. Div. of Wildlife, 100 P.3d 508 (Colo. App. 2004).

This amendment does not protect particular species but rather restricts certain methods of controlling wildlife; therefore, the general prohibition on the use of poisons, which is subject to an exception for use on rodents, does not prohibit the poisoning of nontargeted wildlife that is purely incidental to poisoning prairie dogs for purposes of rodent control. The voters were informed that poisoning of nontargeted wildlife would sometimes occur although the poisoner intended to control only rodents; hence, the ambiguity in the text is best resolved by allowing incidental poisoning. Rocky Mtn. Animal Def. v. Div. of Wildlife, 100 P.3d 508 (Colo. App. 2004).

This section does not expressly or implicitly create a private cause of action and therefore a non-state plaintiff lacks standing to enforce it. Additionally, this section expressly does not apply to rodents, including prairie dogs. Prairie Dog Advocates v. City of Lakewood, 20 P.3d 1203 (Colo. App. 2000).

Section 14. Medical use of marijuana for persons suffering from debilitating medical conditions. (1) As used in this section, these terms are defined as follows:

(a) "Debilitating medical condition" means:

(I) Cancer, glaucoma, positive status for human immunodeficiency virus, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or treatment for such conditions;

(II) A chronic or debilitating disease or medical condition, or treatment for such conditions, which produces, for a specific patient, one or more of the following, and for which, in the professional opinion of the patient's physician, such condition or conditions reasonably may be alleviated by the medical use of marijuana: cachexia; severe pain; severe nausea; seizures, including those that are characteristic of epilepsy; or persistent muscle spasms, including those that are characteristic of multiple sclerosis; or

(III) Any other medical condition, or treatment for such condition, approved by the state health agency, pursuant to its rule making authority or its approval of any petition submitted by a patient or physician as provided in this section.

(b) "Medical use" means the acquisition, possession, production, use, or transportation of marijuana or paraphernalia related to the administration of such marijuana to address the symptoms or effects of a patient's debilitating medical condition, which may be authorized only after a diagnosis of the patient's debilitating medical condition by a physician or physicians, as provided by this section.

(c) "Parent" means a custodial mother or father of a patient under the age of eighteen years, any person having custody of a patient under the age of eighteen years, or any person serving as a legal guardian for a patient under the age of eighteen years.

(d) "Patient" means a person who has a debilitating medical condition.

(e) "Physician" means a doctor of medicine who maintains, in good standing, a license to practice medicine issued by the state of Colorado.

(f) "Primary care-giver" means a person, other than the patient and the patient's physician, who is eighteen years of age or older and has significant responsibility for managing the well-being of a patient who has a debilitating medical condition.

(g) "Registry identification card" means that document, issued by the state health agency, which identifies a patient authorized to engage in the medical use of marijuana and such patient's primary care-giver, if any has been designated.

(h) "State health agency" means that public health related entity of state government designated by the governor to establish and maintain a confidential registry of patients authorized to engage in the medical use of marijuana and enact rules to administer this program.

(i) "Usable form of marijuana" means the seeds, leaves, buds, and flowers of the plant (genus) cannabis, and any mixture or preparation thereof, which are appropriate for medical use as provided in this section, but excludes the plant's stalks, stems, and roots.

(j) "Written documentation" means a statement signed by a patient's physician or copies of the patient's pertinent medical records.

(2) (a) Except as otherwise provided in subsections (5), (6), and (8) of this section, a patient or primary care-giver charged with a violation of the state's criminal laws related to the patient's medical use of marijuana will be deemed to have established an affirmative defense to such allegation where:

(I) The patient was previously diagnosed by a physician as having a debilitating medical condition;

(II) The patient was advised by his or her physician, in the context of a bona fide physician-patient relationship, that the patient might benefit from the medical use of marijuana in connection with a debilitating medical condition; and

(III) The patient and his or her primary care-giver were collectively in possession of amounts of marijuana only as permitted under this section.

This affirmative defense shall not exclude the assertion of any other defense where a patient or primary care-giver is charged with a violation of state law related to the patient's medical use of marijuana.

(b) Effective June 1, 1999, it shall be an exception from the state's criminal laws for any patient or primary care-giver in lawful possession of a registry identification card to engage or assist in the medical use of marijuana, except as otherwise provided in subsections (5) and (8) of this section.

(c) It shall be an exception from the state's criminal laws for any physician to:

(I) Advise a patient whom the physician has diagnosed as having a debilitating medical condition, about the risks and benefits of medical use of marijuana or that he or she might benefit from the medical use of marijuana, provided that such advice is based upon the physician's contemporaneous assessment of the patient's medical history and current medical condition and a bona fide physician-patient relationship; or

(II) Provide a patient with written documentation, based upon the physician's contemporaneous assessment of the patient's medical history and current medical condition and a bona fide physician-patient relationship, stating that the patient has a debilitating medical condition and might benefit from the medical use of marijuana.

No physician shall be denied any rights or privileges for the acts authorized by this subsection.

(d) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, no person, including a patient or primary care-giver, shall be entitled to the protection of this section for his or her acquisition, possession, manufacture, production, use, sale, distribution, dispensing, or transportation of marijuana for any use other than medical use.

(e) Any property interest that is possessed, owned, or used in connection with the medical use of marijuana or acts incidental to such use, shall not be harmed, neglected, injured, or destroyed while in the possession of state or local law enforcement officials where such property has been seized in connection with the claimed medical use of marijuana. Any such property interest shall not be forfeited under any provision of state law providing for the forfeiture of property other than as a sentence imposed after conviction of a criminal offense or entry of a plea of guilty to such offense. Marijuana and paraphernalia seized by state or local law enforcement officials from a patient or primary care-giver in connection with the claimed medical use of marijuana shall be returned immediately upon the determination of the district attorney or his or her designee that the patient or primary care-giver is entitled to the protection contained in this section as may be evidenced, for example, by a decision not to prosecute, the dismissal of charges, or acquittal.

(3) The state health agency shall create and maintain a confidential registry of patients who have applied for and are entitled to receive a registry identification card according to the criteria set forth in this subsection, effective June 1, 1999.

(a) No person shall be permitted to gain access to any information about patients in the state health agency's confidential registry, or any information otherwise maintained by the state health agency about physicians and primary care-givers, except for authorized employees of the state health agency in the course of their official duties and authorized employees of state or local law enforcement agencies which have stopped or arrested a person who claims to be engaged in the medical use of marijuana and in possession of a registry identification card or its functional equivalent, pursuant to paragraph (e) of this subsection (3). Authorized employees of state or local law enforcement agencies shall be granted access to the information contained within the state health agency's confidential registry only for the purpose of verifying that an individual who has presented a registry identification card to a state or local law enforcement official is lawfully in possession of such card.

(b) In order to be placed on the state's confidential registry for the medical use of marijuana, a patient must reside in Colorado and submit the completed application form adopted by the state health agency, including the following information, to the state health agency:

(I) The original or a copy of written documentation stating that the patient has been diagnosed with a debilitating medical condition and the physician's conclusion that the patient might benefit from the medical use of marijuana;

(II) The name, address, date of birth, and social security number of the patient;

(III) The name, address, and telephone number of the patient's physician; and

(IV) The name and address of the patient's primary care-giver, if one is designated at the time of application.

(c) Within thirty days of receiving the information referred to in subparagraphs (3) (b) (I)-(IV), the state health agency shall verify medical information contained in the patient's written documentation. The agency shall notify the applicant that his or her application for a registry identification card has been denied if the agency's review of such documentation discloses that: the information required pursuant to paragraph (3) (b) of this section has not been provided or has been falsified; the documentation fails to state that the patient has a debilitating medical condition specified in this section or by state health agency rule; or the physician does not have a license to practice medicine issued by the state of Colorado. Otherwise, not more than five days after verifying such information, the state health agency shall issue one serially numbered registry identification card to the patient, stating:

(I) The patient's name, address, date of birth, and social security number;

(II) That the patient's name has been certified to the state health agency as a person who has a debilitating medical condition, whereby the patient may address such condition with the medical use of marijuana;

(III) The date of issuance of the registry identification card and the date of expiration of such card, which shall be one year from the date of issuance; and

(IV) The name and address of the patient's primary care-giver, if any is designated at the time of application.

(d) Except for patients applying pursuant to subsection (6) of this section, where the state health agency, within thirty-five days of receipt of an application, fails to issue a registry identification card or fails to issue verbal or written notice of denial of such application, the patient's application for such card will be deemed to have been approved. Receipt shall be deemed to have occurred upon delivery to the state health agency, or deposit in the United States mails. Notwithstanding the foregoing, no application shall be deemed received prior to June 1, 1999. A patient who is questioned by any state or local law enforcement official about his or her medical use of marijuana shall provide a copy of the application submitted to the state health agency, including the written documentation and proof of the date of mailing or other transmission of the written documentation for delivery to the state health agency, which shall be accorded the same legal effect as a registry identification card, until such time as the patient receives notice that the application has been denied.

(e) A patient whose application has been denied by the state health agency may not reapply during the six months following the date of the denial and may not use an application for a registry identification card as provided in paragraph (3) (d) of this section. The denial of a registry identification card shall be considered a final agency action. Only the patient whose application has been denied shall have standing to contest the agency action.

(f) When there has been a change in the name, address, physician, or primary care- giver of a patient who has qualified for a registry identification card, that patient must notify the state health agency of any such change within ten days. A patient who has not designated a primary care-giver at the time of application to the state health agency may do so in writing at any time during the effective period of the registry identification card, and the primary care-giver may act in this capacity after such designation. To maintain an effective registry identification card, a patient must annually resubmit, at least thirty days prior to the expiration date stated on the registry identification card, updated written documentation to the state health agency, as well as the name and address of the patient's primary care-giver, if any is designated at such time.

(g) Authorized employees of state or local law enforcement agencies shall immediately notify the state health agency when any person in possession of a registry identification card has been determined by a court of law to have willfully violated the provisions of this section or its implementing legislation, or has pled guilty to such offense.

(h) A patient who no longer has a debilitating medical condition shall return his or her registry identification card to the state health agency within twenty-four hours of receiving such diagnosis by his or her physician.

(i) The state health agency may determine and levy reasonable fees to pay for any direct or indirect administrative costs associated with its role in this program.

(4) (a) A patient may engage in the medical use of marijuana, with no more marijuana than is medically necessary to address a debilitating medical condition. A patient's medical use of marijuana, within the following limits, is lawful:

(I) No more than two ounces of a usable form of marijuana; and

(II) No more than six marijuana plants, with three or fewer being mature, flowering plants that are producing a usable form of marijuana.

(b) For quantities of marijuana in excess of these amounts, a patient or his or her primary care-giver may raise as an affirmative defense to charges of violation of state law that such greater amounts were medically necessary to address the patient's debilitating medical condition.

(5) (a) No patient shall:

(I) Engage in the medical use of marijuana in a way that endangers the health or well-being of any person; or

(II) Engage in the medical use of marijuana in plain view of, or in a place open to, the general public.

(b) In addition to any other penalties provided by law, the state health agency shall revoke for a period of one year the registry identification card of any patient found to have willfully violated the provisions of this section or the implementing legislation adopted by the general assembly.

(6) Notwithstanding paragraphs (2) (a) and (3) (d) of this section, no patient under eighteen years of age shall engage in the medical use of marijuana unless:

(a) Two physicians have diagnosed the patient as having a debilitating medical condition;

(b) One of the physicians referred to in paragraph (6) (a) has explained the possible risks and benefits of medical use of marijuana to the patient and each of the patient's parents residing in Colorado;

(c) The physicians referred to in paragraph (6) (b) has provided the patient with the written documentation, specified in subparagraph (3) (b) (I);

(d) Each of the patient's parents residing in Colorado consent in writing to the state health agency to permit the patient to engage in the medical use of marijuana;

(e) A parent residing in Colorado consents in writing to serve as a patient's primary care-giver;

(f) A parent serving as a primary care-giver completes and submits an application for a registry identification card as provided in subparagraph (3) (b) of this section and the written consents referred to in paragraph (6) (d) to the state health agency;

(g) The state health agency approves the patient's application and transmits the patient's registry identification card to the parent designated as a primary care-giver;

(h) The patient and primary care-giver collectively possess amounts of marijuana no greater than those specified in subparagraph (4) (a) (I) and (II); and

(i) The primary care-giver controls the acquisition of such marijuana and the dosage and frequency of its use by the patient.

(7) Not later than March 1, 1999, the governor shall designate, by executive order, the state health agency as defined in paragraph (1) (g) of this section.

(8) Not later than April 30, 1999, the General Assembly shall define such terms and enact such legislation as may be necessary for implementation of this section, as well as determine and enact criminal penalties for:

(a) Fraudulent representation of a medical condition by a patient to a physician, state health agency, or state or local law enforcement official for the purpose of falsely obtaining a registry identification card or avoiding arrest and prosecution;

(b) Fraudulent use or theft of any person's registry identification card to acquire, possess, produce, use, sell, distribute, or transport marijuana, including but not limited to cards that are required to be returned where patients are no longer diagnosed as having a debilitating medical condition;

(c) Fraudulent production or counterfeiting of, or tampering with, one or more registry identification cards; or

(d) Breach of confidentiality of information provided to or by the state health agency.

(9) Not later than June 1, 1999, the state health agency shall develop and make available to residents of Colorado an application form for persons seeking to be listed on the confidential registry of patients. By such date, the state health agency shall also enact rules of administration, including but not limited to rules governing the establishment and confidentiality of the registry, the verification of medical information, the issuance and form of registry identification cards, communications with law enforcement officials about registry identification cards that have been suspended where a patient is no longer diagnosed as having a debilitating medical condition, and the manner in which the agency may consider adding debilitating medical conditions to the list provided in this section. Beginning June 1, 1999, the state health agency shall accept physician or patient initiated petitions to add debilitating medical conditions to the list provided in this section and, after such hearing as the state health agency deems appropriate, shall approve or deny such petitions within one hundred eighty days of submission. The decision to approve or deny a petition shall be considered a final agency action.

(10) (a) No governmental, private, or any other health insurance provider shall be required to be liable for any claim for reimbursement for the medical use of marijuana.

(b) Nothing in this section shall require any employer to accommodate the medical use of marijuana in any work place.

(11) Unless otherwise provided by this section, all provisions of this section shall become effective upon official declaration of the vote hereon by proclamation of the governor, pursuant to article V, section (1) (4), and shall apply to acts or offenses committed on or after that date.

Primary care-giver must do more than merely supply a patient with marijuana for medical use in order to meet the constitutional requirement of having a significant responsibility for managing the well-being of a patient who has a debilitating medical condition. People v. Clendenin, 232 P.3d 210 (Colo. App. 2009).

Primary care-giver affirmative defense does not apply where the provision of marijuana is itself the substance of the relationship. People v. Clendenin, 232 P.3d 210 (Colo. App. 2009).

Presence of medical marijuana in an individual's system during working hours is a ground for disqualification from unemployment benefits under § 8-73-108. Medical use of marijuana by an employee holding a registry card under this section of the constitution does not constitute the use of "medically prescribed controlled substances" within the meaning of § 8-73-108 (5)(e)(IX.5). Beinor v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 262 P.3d 970 (Colo. App. 2011).

Although medical certification permitting the possession and use of marijuana may insulate claimant from state criminal prosecution, it does not preclude claimant from being denied unemployment benefits based on a separation from employment for testing positive for marijuana in violation of an employer's express zero-tolerance drug policy. Beinor v. Indus. Claim Appeals Office, 262 P.3d 970 (Colo. App. 2011).

"Cause" exists under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) for dismissal or conversion of debtor's chapter 11 bankruptcy case because debtor is engaged in an ongoing criminal violation of the federal Controlled Substances Act (CSA) by deriving roughly one quarter of its revenues from leasing warehouse space to tenants who are engaged in the business of growing marijuana, which, while legal under Colorado law, violates the CSA. Section 15. State minimum wage rate. Effective January 1, 2007, Colorado's minimum wage shall be increased to $6.85 per hour and shall be adjusted annually for inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index used for Colorado. This minimum wage shall be paid to employees who receive the state or federal minimum wage. No more than $3.02 per hour in tip income may be used to offset the minimum wage of employees who regularly receive tips.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "The Colorado Constitution in the New Century", see 78 U. Colo. L. Rev. 1265 (2007).

Plaintiffs failed to show beyond a reasonable doubt that this section is incomprehensible or impermissibly vague in all its applications, and therefore have not demonstrated that this section is facially unconstitutional. The department of labor did not exceed its authority and act in an arbitrary and capricious manner in applying the Denver-Boulder-Greeley consumer price index as the consumer price index used for Colorado. Table Servs. v. Hickenlooper, 257 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2011).

Section 16. Personal use and regulation of marijuana.

(1) Purpose and findings.

(a) In the interest of the efficient use of law enforcement resources, enhancing revenue for public purposes, and individual freedom, the people of the state of Colorado find and declare that the use of marijuana should be legal for persons twenty-one years of age or older and taxed in a manner similar to alcohol.

(b) In the interest of the health and public safety of our citizenry, the people of the state of Colorado further find and declare that marijuana should be regulated in a manner similar to alcohol so that:

(I) Individuals will have to show proof of age before purchasing marijuana;

(II) Selling, distributing, or transferring marijuana to minors and other individuals under the age of twenty-one shall remain illegal;

(III) Driving under the influence of marijuana shall remain illegal;

(IV) Legitimate, taxpaying business people, and not criminal actors, will conduct sales of marijuana; and

(V) Marijuana sold in this state will be labeled and subject to additional regulations to ensure that consumers are informed and protected.

(c) In the interest of enacting rational policies for the treatment of all variations of the cannabis plant, the people of Colorado further find and declare that industrial hemp should be regulated separately from strains of cannabis with higher delta-9 tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) concentrations.

(d) The people of the state of Colorado further find and declare that it is necessary to ensure consistency and fairness in the application of this section throughout the state and that, therefore, the matters addressed by this section are, except as specified herein, matters of statewide concern.

(2) Definitions. As used in this section, unless the context otherwise requires,

(a) "Colorado Medical Marijuana Code" means article 43.3 of title 12, Colorado Revised Statutes.

(b) "Consumer" means a person twenty-one years of age or older who purchases marijuana or marijuana products for personal use by persons twenty-one years of age or older, but not for resale to others.

(c) "Department" means the department of revenue or its successor agency.

(d) "Industrial hemp" means the plant of the genus cannabis and any part of such plant, whether growing or not, with a delta-9 tetrahydrocannabinol concentration that does not exceed three-tenths percent on a dry weight basis.

(e) "Locality" means a county, municipality, or city and county.

(f) "Marijuana" or "marihuana" means all parts of the plant of the genus cannabis whether growing or not, the seeds thereof, the resin extracted from any part of the plant, and every compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of the plant, its seeds, or its resin, including marihuana concentrate. "Marijuana" or "marihuana" does not include industrial hemp, nor does it include fiber produced from the stalks, oil, or cake made from the seeds of the plant, sterilized seed of the plant which is incapable of germination, or the weight of any other ingredient combined with marijuana to prepare topical or oral administrations, food, drink, or other product.

(g) "Marijuana accessories" means any equipment, products, or materials of any kind which are used, intended for use, or designed for use in planting, propagating, cultivating, growing, harvesting, composting, manufacturing, compounding, converting, producing, processing, preparing, testing, analyzing, packaging, repackaging, storing, vaporizing, or containing marijuana, or for ingesting, inhaling, or otherwise introducing marijuana into the human body.

(h) "Marijuana cultivation facility" means an entity licensed to cultivate, prepare, and package marijuana and sell marijuana to retail marijuana stores, to marijuana product manufacturing facilities, and to other marijuana cultivation facilities, but not to consumers.

(i) "Marijuana establishment" means a marijuana cultivation facility, a marijuana testing facility, a marijuana product manufacturing facility, or a retail marijuana store.

(j) "Marijuana product manufacturing facility" means an entity licensed to purchase marijuana; manufacture, prepare, and package marijuana products; and sell marijuana and marijuana products to other marijuana product manufacturing facilities and to retail marijuana stores, but not to consumers.

(k) "Marijuana products" means concentrated marijuana products and marijuana products that are comprised of marijuana and other ingredients and are intended for use or consumption, such as, but not limited to, edible products, ointments, and tinctures.

(l) "Marijuana testing facility" means an entity licensed to analyze and certify the safety and potency of marijuana.

(m) "Medical marijuana center" means an entity licensed by a state agency to sell marijuana and marijuana products pursuant to section 14 of this article and the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code.

(n) "Retail marijuana store" means an entity licensed to purchase marijuana from marijuana cultivation facilities and marijuana and marijuana products from marijuana product manufacturing facilities and to sell marijuana and marijuana products to consumers.

(o) "Unreasonably impracticable" means that the measures necessary to comply with the regulations require such a high investment of risk, money, time, or any other resource or asset that the operation of a marijuana establishment is not worthy of being carried out in practice by a reasonably prudent businessperson.

(3) Personal use of marijuana. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the following acts are not unlawful and shall not be an offense under Colorado law or the law of any locality within Colorado or be a basis for seizure or forfeiture of assets under Colorado law for persons twenty-one years of age or older:

(a) Possessing, using, displaying, purchasing, or transporting marijuana accessories or one ounce or less of marijuana.

(b) Possessing, growing, processing, or transporting no more than six marijuana plants, with three or fewer being mature, flowering plants, and possession of the marijuana produced by the plants on the premises where the plants were grown, provided that the growing takes place in an enclosed, locked space, is not conducted openly or publicly, and is not made available for sale.

(c) Transfer of one ounce or less of marijuana without remuneration to a person who is twenty-one years of age or older.

(d) Consumption of marijuana, provided that nothing in this section shall permit consumption that is conducted openly and publicly or in a manner that endangers others.

(e) Assisting another person who is twenty-one years of age or older in any of the acts described in paragraphs (a) through (d) of this subsection.

(4) Lawful operation of marijuana-related facilities. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the following acts are not unlawful and shall not be an offense under Colorado law or be a basis for seizure or forfeiture of assets under Colorado law for persons twenty-one years of age or older:

(a) Manufacture, possession, or purchase of marijuana accessories or the sale of marijuana accessories to a person who is twenty-one years of age or older.

(b) Possessing, displaying, or transporting marijuana or marijuana products; purchase of marijuana from a marijuana cultivation facility; purchase of marijuana or marijuana products from a marijuana product manufacturing facility; or sale of marijuana or marijuana products to consumers, if the person conducting the activities described in this paragraph has obtained a current, valid license to operate a retail marijuana store or is acting in his or her capacity as an owner, employee or agent of a licensed retail marijuana store.

(c) Cultivating, harvesting, processing, packaging, transporting, displaying, or possessing marijuana; delivery or transfer of marijuana to a marijuana testing facility; selling marijuana to a marijuana cultivation facility, a marijuana product manufacturing facility, or a retail marijuana store; or the purchase of marijuana from a marijuana cultivation facility, if the person conducting the activities described in this paragraph has obtained a current, valid license to operate a marijuana cultivation facility or is acting in his or her capacity as an owner, employee, or agent of a licensed marijuana cultivation facility.

(d) Packaging, processing, transporting, manufacturing, displaying, or possessing marijuana or marijuana products; delivery or transfer of marijuana or marijuana products to a marijuana testing facility; selling marijuana or marijuana products to a retail marijuana store or a marijuana product manufacturing facility; the purchase of marijuana from a marijuana cultivation facility; or the purchase of marijuana or marijuana products from a marijuana product manufacturing facility, if the person conducting the activities described in this paragraph has obtained a current, valid license to operate a marijuana product manufacturing facility or is acting in his or her capacity as an owner, employee, or agent of a licensed marijuana product manufacturing facility.

(e) Possessing, cultivating, processing, repackaging, storing, transporting, displaying, transferring or delivering marijuana or marijuana products if the person has obtained a current, valid license to operate a marijuana testing facility or is acting in his or her capacity as an owner, employee, or agent of a licensed marijuana testing facility.

(f) Leasing or otherwise allowing the use of property owned, occupied or controlled by any person, corporation or other entity for any of the activities conducted lawfully in accordance with paragraphs (a) through (e) of this subsection.

(5) Regulation of marijuana.

(a) Not later than July 1, 2013, the department shall adopt regulations necessary for implementation of this section. Such regulations shall not prohibit the operation of marijuana establishments, either expressly or through regulations that make their operation unreasonably impracticable. Such regulations shall include:

(I) Procedures for the issuance, renewal, suspension, and revocation of a license to operate a marijuana establishment, with such procedures subject to all requirements of article 4 of title 24 of the Colorado Administrative Procedure Act or any successor provision;

(II) A schedule of application, licensing and renewal fees, provided, application fees shall not exceed five thousand dollars, with this upper limit adjusted annually for inflation, unless the department determines a greater fee is necessary to carry out its responsibilities under this section, and provided further, an entity that is licensed under the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code to cultivate or sell marijuana or to manufacture marijuana products at the time this section takes effect and that chooses to apply for a separate marijuana establishment license shall not be required to pay an application fee greater than five hundred dollars to apply for a license to operate a marijuana establishment in accordance with the provisions of this section;

(III) Qualifications for licensure that are directly and demonstrably related to the operation of a marijuana establishment;

(IV) Security requirements for marijuana establishments;

(V) Requirements to prevent the sale or diversion of marijuana and marijuana products to persons under the age of twenty-one;

(VI) Labeling requirements for marijuana and marijuana products sold or distributed by a marijuana establishment;

(VII) Health and safety regulations and standards for the manufacture of marijuana products and the cultivation of marijuana;

(VIII) Restrictions on the advertising and display of marijuana and marijuana products; and

(IX) Civil penalties for the failure to comply with regulations made pursuant to this section.

(b) In order to ensure the most secure, reliable, and accountable system for the production and distribution of marijuana and marijuana products in accordance with this subsection, in any competitive application process the department shall have as a primary consideration whether an applicant:

(I) Has prior experience producing or distributing marijuana or marijuana products pursuant to section 14 of this article and the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code in the locality in which the applicant seeks to operate a marijuana establishment; and

(II) Has, during the experience described in subparagraph (I), complied consistently with section 14 of this article, the provisions of the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code and conforming regulations.

(c) In order to ensure that individual privacy is protected, notwithstanding paragraph (a), the department shall not require a consumer to provide a retail marijuana store with personal information other than government-issued identification to determine the consumer's age, and a retail marijuana store shall not be required to acquire and record personal information about consumers other than information typically acquired in a financial transaction conducted at a retail liquor store.

(d) The general assembly shall enact an excise tax to be levied upon marijuana sold or otherwise transferred by a marijuana cultivation facility to a marijuana product manufacturing facility or to a retail marijuana store at a rate not to exceed fifteen percent prior to January 1, 2017 and at a rate to be determined by the general assembly thereafter, and shall direct the department to establish procedures for the collection of all taxes levied. Provided, the first forty million dollars in revenue raised annually from any such excise tax shall be credited to the Public School Capital Construction Assistance Fund created by article 43.7 of title 22, C.R.S., or any successor fund dedicated to a similar purpose. Provided further, no such excise tax shall be levied upon marijuana intended for sale at medical marijuana centers pursuant to section 14 of this article and the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code.

(e) Not later than October 1, 2013, each locality shall enact an ordinance or regulation specifying the entity within the locality that is responsible for processing applications submitted for a license to operate a marijuana establishment within the boundaries of the locality and for the issuance of such licenses should the issuance by the locality become necessary because of a failure by the department to adopt regulations pursuant to paragraph (a) or because of a failure by the department to process and issue licenses as required by paragraph (g).

(f) A locality may enact ordinances or regulations, not in conflict with this section or with regulations or legislation enacted pursuant to this section, governing the time, place, manner and number of marijuana establishment operations; establishing procedures for the issuance, suspension, and revocation of a license issued by the locality in accordance with paragraph (h) or (i), such procedures to be subject to all requirements of article 4 of title 24 of the Colorado Administrative Procedure Act or any successor provision; establishing a schedule of annual operating, licensing, and application fees for marijuana establishments, provided, the application fee shall only be due if an application is submitted to a locality in accordance with paragraph (i) and a licensing fee shall only be due if a license is issued by a locality in accordance with paragraph (h) or (i); and establishing civil penalties for violation of an ordinance or regulation governing the time, place, and manner of a marijuana establishment that may operate in such locality. A locality may prohibit the operation of marijuana cultivation facilities, marijuana product manufacturing facilities, marijuana testing facilities, or retail marijuana stores through the enactment of an ordinance or through an initiated or referred measure; provided, any initiated or referred measure to prohibit the operation of marijuana cultivation facilities, marijuana product manufacturing facilities, marijuana testing facilities, or retail marijuana stores must appear on a general election ballot during an even numbered year.

(g) Each application for an annual license to operate a marijuana establishment shall be submitted to the department. The department shall:

(I) Begin accepting and processing applications on October 1, 2013;

(II) Immediately forward a copy of each application and half of the license application fee to the locality in which the applicant desires to operate the marijuana establishment;

(III) Issue an annual license to the applicant between forty-five and ninety days after receipt of an application unless the department finds the applicant is not in compliance with regulations enacted pursuant to paragraph (a) or the department is notified by the relevant locality that the applicant is not in compliance with ordinances and regulations made pursuant to paragraph (f) and in effect at the time of application, provided, where a locality has enacted a numerical limit on the number of marijuana establishments and a greater number of applicants seek licenses, the department shall solicit and consider input from the locality as to the locality's preference or preferences for licensure; and

(IV) Upon denial of an application, notify the applicant in writing of the specific reason for its denial.

(h) If the department does not issue a license to an applicant within ninety days of receipt of the application filed in accordance with paragraph (g) and does not notify the applicant of the specific reason for its denial, in writing and within such time period, or if the department has adopted regulations pursuant to paragraph (a) and has accepted applications pursuant to paragraph (g) but has not issued any licenses by January 1, 2014, the applicant may resubmit its application directly to the locality, pursuant to paragraph (e), and the locality may issue an annual license to the applicant. A locality issuing a license to an applicant shall do so within ninety days of receipt of the resubmitted application unless the locality finds and notifies the applicant that the applicant is not in compliance with ordinances and regulations made pursuant to paragraph (f) in effect at the time the application is resubmitted and the locality shall notify the department if an annual license has been issued to the applicant. If an application is submitted to a locality under this paragraph, the department shall forward to the locality the application fee paid by the applicant to the department upon request by the locality. A license issued by a locality in accordance with this paragraph shall have the same force and effect as a license issued by the department in accordance with paragraph (g) and the holder of such license shall not be subject to regulation or enforcement by the department during the term of that license. A subsequent or renewed license may be issued under this paragraph on an annual basis only upon resubmission to the locality of a new application submitted to the department pursuant to paragraph (g). Nothing in this paragraph shall limit such relief as may be available to an aggrieved party under section 24-4-104, C.R.S., of the Colorado Administrative Procedure Act or any successor provision.

(i) If the department does not adopt regulations required by paragraph (a), an applicant may submit an application directly to a locality after October 1, 2013 and the locality may issue an annual license to the applicant. A locality issuing a license to an applicant shall do so within ninety days of receipt of the application unless it finds and notifies the applicant that the applicant is not in compliance with ordinances and regulations made pursuant to paragraph (f) in effect at the time of application and shall notify the department if an annual license has been issued to the applicant. A license issued by a locality in accordance with this paragraph shall have the same force and effect as a license issued by the department in accordance with paragraph (g) and the holder of such license shall not be subject to regulation or enforcement by the department during the term of that license. A subsequent or renewed license may be issued under this paragraph on an annual basis if the department has not adopted regulations required by paragraph (a) at least ninety days prior to the date upon which such subsequent or renewed license would be effective or if the department has adopted regulations pursuant to paragraph (a) but has not, at least ninety days after the adoption of such regulations, issued licenses pursuant to paragraph (g).

(j) Not later than July 1, 2014, the general assembly shall enact legislation governing the cultivation, processing and sale of industrial hemp.

(6) Employers, driving, minors and control of property.

(a) Nothing in this section is intended to require an employer to permit or accommodate the use, consumption, possession, transfer, display, transportation, sale or growing of marijuana in the workplace or to affect the ability of employers to have policies restricting the use of marijuana by employees.

(b) Nothing in this section is intended to allow driving under the influence of marijuana or driving while impaired by marijuana or to supersede statutory laws related to driving under the influence of marijuana or driving while impaired by marijuana, nor shall this section prevent the state from enacting and imposing penalties for driving under the influence of or while impaired by marijuana.

(c) Nothing in this section is intended to permit the transfer of marijuana, with or without remuneration, to a person under the age of twenty-one or to allow a person under the age of twenty-one to purchase, possess, use, transport, grow, or consume marijuana.

(d) Nothing in this section shall prohibit a person, employer, school, hospital, detention facility, corporation or any other entity who occupies, owns or controls a property from prohibiting or otherwise regulating the possession, consumption, use, display, transfer, distribution, sale, transportation, or growing of marijuana on or in that property.

(7) Medical marijuana provisions unaffected. Nothing in this section shall be construed:

(a) To limit any privileges or rights of a medical marijuana patient, primary caregiver, or licensed entity as provided in section 14 of this article and the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code;

(b) To permit a medical marijuana center to distribute marijuana to a person who is not a medical marijuana patient;

(c) To permit a medical marijuana center to purchase marijuana or marijuana products in a manner or from a source not authorized under the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code;

(d) To permit any medical marijuana center licensed pursuant to section 14 of this article and the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code to operate on the same premises as a retail marijuana store; or

(e) To discharge the department, the Colorado Board of Health, or the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment from their statutory and constitutional duties to regulate medical marijuana pursuant to section 14 of this article and the Colorado Medical Marijuana Code.

(8) Self-executing, severability, conflicting provisions. All provisions of this section are self-executing except as specified herein, are severable, and, except where otherwise indicated in the text, shall supersede conflicting state statutory, local charter, ordinance, or resolution, and other state and local provisions.

(9) Effective date. Unless otherwise provided by this section, all provisions of this section shall become effective upon official declaration of the vote hereon by proclamation of the governor, pursuant to section 1(4) of article V.

Editor's note: (1) In subsection (4)(c), changed "vaild" to "valid"; in subsection (4)(f), changed "activites" to "activities"; and, in subsection (5)(b)(II), changed "consistantly" to "consistently" to correct the misspellings in the 2012 initiative (Amendment 64).

(2) In (5)(a)(II), reference to "at the time this section takes effect" refers to the proclamation date of the governor, December 12, 2012. In subsection (9), reference to "shall become effective date upon official proclamation of the vote hereon by proclamation of the governor" is December 12, 2012.

ANNOTATION

"Cause" exists under 11 U.S.C. § 1112(b) for dismissal or conversion of debtor's chapter 11 bankruptcy case because debtor is engaged in an ongoing criminal violation of the federal Controlled Substances Act (CSA) by deriving roughly one quarter of its revenues from leasing warehouse space to tenants who are engaged in the business of growing marijuana, which, while legal under Colorado law, violates the CSA. ARTICLE XIX
Amendments

Section 1. Constitutional convention - how called. The general assembly may at any time by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each house, recommend to the electors of the state, to vote at the next general election for or against a convention to revise, alter and amend this constitution; and if a majority of those voting on the question shall declare in favor of such convention, the general assembly shall, at its next session, provide for the calling thereof. The number of members of the convention shall be twice that of the senate and they shall be elected in the same manner, at the same places, and in the same districts. The general assembly shall, in the act calling the convention, designate the day, hour and place of its meeting; fix the pay of its members and officers, and provide for the payment of the same, together with the necessary expenses of the convention. Before proceeding, the members shall take an oath to support the constitution of the United States, and of the state of Colorado, and to faithfully discharge their duties as members of the convention. The qualifications of members shall be the same as of members of the senate; and vacancies occurring shall be filled in the manner provided for filling vacancies in the general assembly. Said convention shall meet within three months after such election and prepare such revisions, alterations or amendments to the constitution as may be deemed necessary; which shall be submitted to the electors for their ratification or rejection at an election appointed by the convention for that purpose, not less than two nor more than six months after adjournment thereof; and unless so submitted and approved by a majority of the electors voting at the election, no such revision, alteration or amendment shall take effect.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "The Colorado Constitution", see 22 Dicta 29 (1945).

This section and § 39 of art. V, Colo. Const., are not in pari materia. The last relates to ordinary legislation, and the first to the calling of a convention for the amendment of the constitution. They are of equal dignity, and neither can be invoked to interfere with the operation of the other. People ex rel. Stewart v. Ramer, 62 Colo. 128, 160 P. 1032 (1916).

As amendment of constitution legislative, not an executive function. That which the general assembly is authorized to do by this article, relative to initiating proceedings to amend or change the fundamental law, is its business solely, with which the executive has nothing whatever to do. People ex rel. Stewart v. Ramer, 62 Colo. 128, 160 P. 1032 (1916).

Applied in Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

Section 2. Amendments to constitution - how adopted. (1) Any amendment or amendments to this constitution may be proposed in either house of the general assembly, and, if the same shall be voted for by two-thirds of all the members elected to each house, such proposed amendment or amendments, together with the ayes and noes of each house thereon, shall be entered in full on their respective journals. The proposed amendment or amendments shall be published with the laws of that session of the general assembly. At the next general election for members of the general assembly, the said amendment or amendments shall be submitted to the registered electors of the state for their approval or rejection, and such as are approved by a majority of those voting thereon shall become part of this constitution.

(2) If more than one amendment be submitted at any general election, each of said amendments shall be voted upon separately and votes thereon cast shall be separately counted the same as though but one amendment was submitted; but each general assembly shall have no power to propose amendments to more than six articles of this constitution.

(3) No measure proposing an amendment or amendments to this constitution shall be submitted by the general assembly to the registered electors of the state containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title; but if any subject shall be embraced in any measure which shall not be expressed in the title, such measure shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Law reviews. For article, "The Colorado Constitution", see 22 Dicta 29 (1945).

Authority to propose amendments to constitution is vested in general assembly by virtue of this section. In re Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 10 of Forty-First Gen. Ass'y, 137 Colo. 491, 328 P.2d 103 (1958).

Amendment of the Colorado constitution can be accomplished, in addition to resort to the initiative and referendum device, through a majority vote of the electorate on an amendment proposed by the general assembly following a favorable vote thereon by two-thirds of all the members elected to each house of the Colorado general assembly, pursuant to this section. Lucas v. Forty-Fourth Gen. Ass'y, 377 U.S. 713, 84 S. Ct. 1459, 12 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1964).

Section must be strictly observed. Constitutional provisions are generally to be considered mandatory rather than directory, and those regulating the mode of making amendments to the constitution must, in general, be strictly observed. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894).

As section provides exclusive method of proposing amendments. The power of the general assembly to propose amendments to the constitution is not subject to the provisions of art. V, Colo. Const., regulating the introduction and passage of ordinary legislative enactments. This section prescribes the method of proposing amendments to the constitution, and no other rule controls. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894); People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

In proposing amendment to constitution, action of general assembly is initiatory, not final; a change in the fundamental law cannot be fully and finally consummated by legislative power. Before a proposed amendment can become a part of the constitution, it must receive the approval of a majority of the qualified electors of the state voting thereon at the proper general election. When thus approved it becomes valid as part of the constitution by virtue of the sovereign power of the people constitutionally expressed. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894); People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

This section does not confer jurisdiction on the courts to review proposed constitutional amendments before they are submitted to the electorate. Thus, the supreme court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to review a legislative referendum for compliance with the single-subject requirement until the referendum was approved by the voters. Polhill v. Buckley, 923 P.2d 119 (Colo. 1996).

Amendment may be proposed at special session of the general assembly. Pearce v. People ex rel. Tate, 53 Colo. 399, 127 P. 224 (1912).

And it may constitute new and separate article. An amendment to the constitution may be proposed by the general assembly and adopted, by the addition to the constitution of a new and separate article. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

General assembly has authority under this section to change and amend proposed amendment in special session prior to submission of said proposed amendment to the people. In re Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 10 of Forty-First Gen. Ass'y, 137 Colo. 491, 328 P.2d 103 (1958).

Clerical errors do not invalidate proposed amendments. Where a proposed amendment to the constitution was introduced in the senate and before final passage was amended by striking out certain words and inserting the word "and" but the amendment did not materially change the meaning, and as it passed the senate was transmitted to the house, and the house journal shows that no amendment was made or offered in the house and that it was not returned to the senate after its passage in the house, but when it was entered in full upon the house journal, by mistake it was entered as it was originally introduced in the senate, and the house journal itself shows that the difference between the entries of the two houses was due to a clerical error, and it was enrolled and signed by the presiding officers of both houses and published in the session laws as it was passed, the constitutional provision requiring proposed amendments to the constitution to be entered in full upon the journal of each house was satisfied and it is not invalid because of said difference in the journal entries of the two houses. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

But measure that is itself invalid cannot be regarded as amendment. A measure which, while in form and to all indicated purposes is a statute, contravenes the constitution is not to be regarded as an amendment to the constitution but is itself unconstitutional. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

Even grave emergencies cannot justify attempted amendment to the state constitution by city charter, nor an amendment of a city charter by a simple ordinance. McNichols v. People ex rel. Cook, 95 Colo. 235, 35 P.2d 863 (1934).

This section deemed sui generis and not in pari materia with art. V. It is not by the "legislative" article, but by the article entitled "amendments", that the legality of the action of the general assembly in proposing amendments to the constitution is to be tested. This article is sui generis; it provides for revising, altering, and amending the fundamental law of the state, and is not in pari materia with those provisions of art. V, Colo. Const., prescribing the method of enacting ordinary statutory laws. Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 P. 221 (1894); People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

Applied in Russell v. Courier Printing & Publishing Co., 43 Colo. 321, 95 P. 936 (1908); People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357 (1911); Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912); In re Interrogatories of Governor Regarding Sweepstakes Races Act, 196 Colo. 353, 585 P.2d 595 (1978); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

II. PUBLICATION.

Publication requirement relates to newspapers, not session laws. The publication for "four successive weeks", prescribed by the constitution, relates to the publication required to be made in the newspapers and not to that in the session laws. Pearce v. People ex rel. Tate, 53 Colo. 399, 127 P. 224 (1912).

"Of general circulation" is descriptive of character of newspaper. It must be one of general -- not special, or limited -- circulation. In re House Resolution No. 10, 50 Colo. 71, 114 P. 293 (1911).

Publication to be obtained at reasonable cost to people. True construction of this section contemplates that publication of proposed amendments shall be obtained at reasonable cost to the people, and flagrant departure from that construction is in violation of sound public policy. Oliver v. Wilder, 27 Colo. App. 337, 149 P. 275 (1915).

Time for publication in session laws not specified. Under this section, it is not required, for the effectual submission to the people of a proposed amendment to the constitution, that it should appear in the session laws for any certain time, or that such publication should occur previous to the election at which the amendment is to be submitted. Pearce v. People ex rel. Tate, 53 Colo. 399, 127 P. 224 (1912).

III. SUBMISSION OF SEVERAL AMENDMENTS.

Annotator's note. The following annotations include cases decided prior to the 1994 amendment of this section.

Last clause of proviso is for protection of people and was not written in the constitution for the benefit of the general assembly. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

Proviso applies only to express amendments. The provision of this section that amendments to not more than six articles of the constitution shall be proposed at the same session of the general assembly, applies to express amendments and not to implied or incidental amendments or modifications of other articles of the constitution than the one expressly amended. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

Constitutional amendment may embrace more than one subject. If the amendment embraces several subjects all of which are germane to the general subject or purpose of the amendment, the several subjects need not be separately submitted but the amendment may be submitted and voted upon as a single proposition. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903); People v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

There is no limitation on the number of subjects that may be included in a constitutional amendment. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960); Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

The inhibition against more than one subject in legislative enactments has no application to constitutional or organic law. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960);Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

Amendment with most votes prevails. In order to carry out the meaning and purpose of § 1 of art. V of this constitution if inconsistent amendments are submitted to the voters, the one which received the most votes must prevail. That, in the view of the supreme court, is what the "republican" form of government means with respect to the right of the people to amend the constitution. In re Interrogatories Propounded by Senate Concerning House Bill 1078, 189 Colo. 1, 536 P.2d 308 (1975).

ARTICLE XX
Home Rule Cities and Towns

Law reviews: For article, "The Colorado Constitution in the New Century", see 78 U. Colo. L. Rev. 1265 (2007).

Section 1. Incorporated. The municipal corporation known as the city of Denver and all municipal corporations and that part of the quasi-municipal corporation known as the county of Arapahoe, in the state of Colorado, included within the exterior boundaries of the said city of Denver as the same shall be bounded when this amendment takes effect, are hereby consolidated and are hereby declared to be a single body politic and corporate, by the name of the "City and County of Denver". By that name said corporation shall have perpetual succession, and shall own, possess, and hold all property, real and personal, theretofore owned, possessed, or held by the said city of Denver and by such included municipal corporations, and also all property, real and personal, theretofore owned, possessed, or held by the said county of Arapahoe, and shall assume, manage, and dispose of all trusts in any way connected therewith; shall succeed to all the rights and liabilities, and shall acquire all benefits and shall assume and pay all bonds, obligations, and indebtedness of said city of Denver and of said included municipal corporations and of the county of Arapahoe; by that name may sue and defend, plead and be impleaded, in all courts and places, and in all matters and proceedings; may have and use a common seal and alter the same at pleasure; may purchase, receive, hold, and enjoy or sell and dispose of, real and personal property; may receive bequests, gifts, and donations of all kinds of property, in fee simple, or in trust for public, charitable, or other purposes; and do all things and acts necessary to carry out the purposes of such gifts, bequests, and donations, with power to manage, sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the same in accordance with the terms of the gift, bequest, or trust; shall have the power, within or without its territorial limits, to construct, condemn and purchase, purchase, acquire, lease, add to, maintain, conduct, and operate water works, light plants, power plants, transportation systems, heating plants, and any other public utilities or works or ways local in use and extent, in whole or in part, and everything required therefore, for the use of said city and county and the inhabitants thereof, and any such systems, plants, or works or ways, or any contracts in relation or connection with either, that may exist and which said city and county may desire to purchase, in whole or in part, the same or any part thereof may be purchased by said city and county which may enforce such purchase by proceedings at law as in taking land for public use by right of eminent domain, and shall have the power to issue bonds upon the vote of the taxpaying electors, at any special or general election, in any amount necessary to carry out any of said powers or purposes, as may by the charter be provided.

The provisions of section 3 of article XIV of this constitution and the general annexation and consolidation statutes of the state relating to counties shall apply to the city and county of Denver. Any contiguous town, city, or territory hereafter annexed to or consolidated with the city and county of Denver, under any such laws of this state, in whatsoever county the same may be at the time, shall be detached per se from such other county and become a municipal and territorial part of the city and county of Denver, together with all property thereunto belonging.

The city and county of Denver shall alone always constitute one judicial district of the state.

Any other provisions of this constitution to the contrary notwithstanding:

No annexation or consolidation proceeding shall be initiated after the effective date of this amendment pursuant to the general annexation and consolidation statutes of the state of Colorado to annex lands to or consolidate lands with the city and county of Denver until such proposed annexation or consolidation is first approved by a majority vote of a six-member boundary control commission composed of one commissioner from each of the boards of county commissioners of Adams, Arapahoe, and Jefferson counties, respectively, and three elected officials of the city and county of Denver to be chosen by the mayor. The commissioners from each of the said counties shall be appointed by resolution of their respective boards.

No land located in any county other than Adams, Arapahoe, or Jefferson counties shall be annexed to or consolidated with the city and county of Denver unless such annexation or consolidation is approved by the unanimous vote of all the members of the board of county commissioners of the county in which such land is located.

All actions, including actions regarding procedural rules, shall be adopted by the commission by majority vote. Each commissioner shall have one vote, including the commissioner who acts as the chairman of the commission. All procedural rules adopted by the commission shall be filed with the secretary of state.

This amendment shall be self-executing.

Annotator's note. Prior to the enactment of this article of the constitution, the law incorporating the city of Denver and the several acts amendatory thereto were construed in a number of cases which are included mainly for historical purposes. Brown v. State, 5 Colo. 496 (1881); Beatty v. People, 6 Colo. 538 (1883); Carpenter v. People ex rel. Tilford, 8 Colo. 116, 5 P. 828 (1884); Huffsmith v. People, 8 Colo. 175, 6 P. 157 (1884); Darrow v. People ex rel. Norris, 8 Colo. 426, 8 P. 924 (1885); Phillips v. City & County of Denver, 19 Colo. 179, 34 P. 902 (1893); Denver Tramway Co. v. Londoner, 20 Colo. 150, 37 P. 723 (1894).

For history of section, see Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

This article by its terms is self-executing. Cook v. City of Delta, 100 Colo. 7, 64 P.2d 1257 (1937).

The provisions of this article are self-executing and the adoption of a charter was not required to give effect thereto. Ward v. Colo. E. R. R., 22 Colo. App. 332, 125 P. 567 (1912); Berman v. City & County of Denver, 120 Colo. 218, 209 P.2d 754 (1949).

With respect to annexation, state is supreme. The state at its pleasure may expand or contract the territorial area of a municipal corporation, unite the whole or a part of it with another municipality, repeal the charter and destroy the corporation. All this may be done, conditionally or unconditionally, with or without the consent of the citizens, or even against their protest. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Proceedings for annexation. Proceedings for the annexation of a city to the city and county of Denver are governed by this section and section 31-8-201, not by § 3 of art. XIV, Colo. Const. Simon v. Arapahoe County, 80 Colo. 445, 252 P. 811 (1927).

This section modifies and limits § 3 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., insofar as a proposed annexation of territory to the city and county of Denver is concerned, and such annexation can be effected without the consenting vote of a majority of qualified voters of the county from which the annexed territory is detached. People ex rel. Simon v. Anderson, 112 Colo. 558, 151 P.2d 972 (1944); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Inhabitants have no right to unaltered existence of municipality. Although the inhabitants and property owners may suffer inconvenience by annexation, and their property may be lessened in value by the burden of increased taxation or for any other reason, they have no right, by contract or otherwise, in the unaltered or continued existence of the municipal corporation or its powers. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

Annexation detaches territory. This section makes it clear that any annexation under any of the general laws of the state operates, per se, as a detachment of the annexed territory from the county in which it lies. People ex rel. Simon v. Anderson, 112 Colo. 558, 151 P.2d 972 (1944).

Section requires compliance with statutory procedures. Annexation is a special statutory proceeding, and this section requires compliance with such procedures by the city and county of Denver. People ex rel. City & County of Denver v. County Court, 137 Colo. 436, 326 P.2d 372 (1958).

Condemnation by a home rule municipality of property outside its territorial boundaries for open space and park purposes falls within the scope of the eminent domain power granted to such municipalities in this article. The eminent domain power granted to home rule municipalities in this article is not limited to the purposes specified in this section nor is the eminent domain power circumscribed when exercised extraterritorially. Rather, this article grants home rule municipalities the power to condemn property, within or outside of territorial limits, for any lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose. The extraterritorial condemnation of property need not be pursuant to a purpose that is purely local and municipal. As long as the condemnation is based on a lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose, it does not fall outside of the scope of this article merely because it potentially implicates competing state interests. Based upon statutory provisions authorizing statutory localities to condemn land for open space, parks, and recreation, as well as the traditional exercise of this power by the state's statutory and home rule municipalities, the extraterritorial condemnation of property for open space and parks is a lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose within the scope of this article. The condemnation of the landowner's property outside the territorial boundaries of the municipality was, therefore, lawful. Town of Telluride v. San Miguel Valley Corp.,185 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2008).

Section 38-1-101 (4)(b) abrogates constitutional powers granted to home rule municipalities by this article. Accordingly, the statutory provision is unconstitutional with respect to home rule municipalities. Court's inquiry need not extend beyond the question of whether the statute purports to deny home rule municipalities powers specifically granted by the constitution. No analysis of competing state and local interests is necessary where a statute purports to take away home rule powers granted by the constitution. The legislature cannot prohibit the exercise of constitutional home rule powers regardless of the state interests that may be implicated by the exercise of those powers. Town of Telluride v. San Miguel Valley Corp.,185 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2008).

Section 38-1-101 (4)(b) prohibits home rule municipalities from condemning property for parks and open space, thus denying them their constitutional power to condemn for any lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose. Section 38-1-101 (4)(b) curtails the condemnation power in this article by limiting it to the enumerated purposes in this section and also by removing certain enumerated purposes from the list. Accordingly, § 38-1-101 (4)(b) is an unconstitutional abrogation of the powers granted to home rule municipalities under this article. The general assembly has no power to enact a law that denies a right specifically granted by the constitution. Town of Telluride v. San Miguel Valley Corp.,185 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2008).

Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982).

II. PURPOSE OF ARTICLE.

To grant home rule. The purpose of this article is to grant home rule to Denver and other municipalities of the state. City & County of Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 P. 1066 (1905); Lehman v. City & County of Denver, 144 Colo. 109, 355 P.2d 309 (1960).

The subject matter of this article is home rule, or the right of self-government by Denver and other municipalities in the state relating to local and municipal matters. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

The purpose of this article is to extend to the other cities of the state the privilege of adopting charters in substantially the same manner as is provided for the adoption of the Denver charter, granting to such cities the same power as to real and personal property and public utilities as is granted to the city and county of Denver. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

It was intended to give as large a measure of home rule in municipal affairs as could be granted under a republican form of government which the state is obliged to maintain under its compact with the federal government, as evidenced by the enabling act. People ex rel. Parish v. Adams, 31 Colo. 476, 73 P. 866 (1903); Fishel v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 576, 108 P.2d 236 (1940); Toll v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 462, 340 P.2d 862 (1959).

The prime purpose of this article was to bestow upon the inhabitants of the city of Denver, and certain surrounding territory, a very greatly increased measure of home rule. Ward v. Colo. E. R. R., 22 Colo. App. 332, 125 P. 567 (1896); Berman v. City & County of Denver, 120 Colo. 218, 209 P.2d 754 (1949).

And to consolidate city and county powers. The purpose of this article was to consolidate the city of Denver and a portion of the county of Arapahoe into a new sort of municipality having the combined powers of city and county governments. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

The purpose of this article is to grant home rule to the city and county of Denver, subject to the conditions that the people establish such a government as would consolidate the functions of city and county affairs so as to be administered by one set of officers. Lindsley v. City & County of Denver, 64 Colo. 444, 172 P. 707 (1918).

And to enlarge their powers. Thus it was intended to enlarge the powers beyond those usually given by the general assembly. City & County of Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 P. 1066 (1905); Berman v. City & County of Denver, 120 Colo. 218, 209 P.2d 754 (1949); Lehman v. City & County of Denver, 144 Colo. 109, 355 P.2d 309 (1960).

The purpose of this article was to extend the powers of cities, not to impose further restrictions. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

III. CONSTITUTIONALITY.

This article is constitutional, and it is a part of the constitution of the state, not partially constitutional, but constitutional as a whole, throughout its entirety, and in full force and effect. Montclair v. Thomas, 31 Colo. 327, 73 P. 48 (1903); People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903); People ex rel. Parish v. Adams, 31 Colo. 476, 73 P. 866 (1903); McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903); Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904); City Council v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 33 Colo. 1, 77 P. 858 (1904); Boston & Colo. Smelting Co. v. Elder, 20 Colo. App. 96, 77 P. 258 (1904); Uzzell v. Anderson, 38 Colo. 32, 89 P. 785 (1906); People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911); People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

And is to be given force and effect according to its plain intent, purpose and meaning. When the whole people speak through a fundamental law, or by amendment thereto, not in conflict with the federal constitution, all should hear and heed, more especially the courts, whose function is to interpret, and, where possible, uphold and enforce, not nullify, overthrow, and destroy the law. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911).

And is not repugnant to state government or federal constitution. The home rule amendment is not subversive of the state government or repugnant to the constitution of the United States. The contention that the government proposed by the home rule amendment is not republican in form has been fully settled. It is a political question purely, over which courts have no jurisdiction. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

This article does not create a government unrepublican in form or involve any inhibition of the federal constitution, and was clearly within the powers reserved to the people of the state, upon entering into federal compact. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903); People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 233 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911).

The objection that this article is repugnant to § 4 of art. IV, U.S. Const., guaranteeing to the state a republican form of government, in that it takes from the state general assembly and vests directly in the people of the city legislative power over all subjects of purely municipal concern, was sufficiently covered and disposed of by a previous decision of the United States supreme court. City & County of Denver v. New York Trust Co., 229 U.S. 123, 33 S. Ct. 657, 57 L. Ed. 1101 (1913).

Since government provided may be withdrawn or modified at will. The government provided for the city and county of Denver by this article rests solely upon the will of the people of the whole state, and is the creature of such will. It is a full and complete answer to the contention that the government so provided is unrepublican in form, to show that it rests upon the will of the people of the entire state, and may be by the same authority either withdrawn or modified. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911).

Municipalities are not city-states. Colorado municipalities are creatures of either legislative enactment or constitutional provision or both and are not city-states. They have only powers expressly or impliedly granted to them. City of Golden v. Ford, 141 Colo. 472, 348 P.2d 951 (1960).

Clearly the federal system does not envisage as a part thereof city-states. It follows that home rule cities can be only an arm or branch of the state with delegated power. That is the kind of power granted by this article. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Since the power still resides with the people of the state to completely annul this article, or amend, alter, or set aside any one or more of its provisions providing a government for the city and county of Denver at will, a state within the state of Colorado has not been created. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911).

Every decision of the supreme court upholding this article of the constitution is based upon the proposition that it does not violate the federal law against the creation of a state within a state contained in § 3 of art. IV, U.S. Const. People v. Max, 70 Colo. 100, 198 P. 150 (1921).

Classification of Denver does not violate equal protection. The classification under this section is based upon geographical and historical conditions peculiar to Denver as a capital city and regional commercial center, and is neither arbitrary nor unreasonable. Bd. of County Comm'rs

v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed for want of substantial federal question, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 714 (1963); Francis v. County Court, 175 Colo. 308, 487 P.2d 375 (1971).

The classification under this section is not violative of equal protection merely because it is limited in the object to which it is directed or the territory within which it is to operate. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

The equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution is not in conflict with provisions granting the city and county of Denver annexation procedures unlike the provisions controlling other counties. Francis v. County Court, 175 Colo. 308, 487 P.2d 375 (1971).

Loss of public property upon consolidation does not violate due process. This article of the constitution is not unconstitutional on the ground that it violates the provisions of the constitution of the United States by taking property from existing towns and giving it to the city and county of Denver, without due process of law. The loss of public property by adjoining towns and the loss of shares of public buildings by people of other towns excluded from the city and county of Denver, are incidental and unavoidable conditions which exist whenever the boundaries of counties are changed or municipalities are consolidated. These municipalities exist for the public convenience, their property is the property of the public, and is held, not as private property, but subject to the changing conditions and requirements of local government. People ex rel. Ceder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903); Hazlet v. Gaunt, 126 Colo. 385, 250 P.2d 188 (1952).

Procedure does not violate individual rights. There is no constitutional violation of the rights of individual plaintiffs by the annexation procedure under this section. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed for want of substantial federal question, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 2d 714 (1963).

IV. CITY AND COUNTY OF DENVER.

A. In General.

City and county of Denver came into existence by virtue of this article of the constitution, and this article measures its powers. City of Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co., 201 F. 790 (8th Cir. 1912); City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919), dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 251 U.S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 219, 64 L. Ed. 407 (1920).

The moment the constitutional amendment took effect, the municipal corporation, known as the city of Denver, and the quasi-corporation, known as the county of Arapahoe, ceased to exist; a new body politic and corporate was created, called the city and county of Denver. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

It is but a reincorporation of city of Denver, with some extended territory. City of Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co., 201 F. 790 (8th Cir. 1912); McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

It was the purpose of the general assembly to provide in this article for disincorporating, and merging into a new one, all municipal bodies within the exterior boundaries of the former city of Denver as these boundaries were specifically described. Town of Montclair v. Thomas, 31

Colo. 327, 73 P. 48 (1903).

It is a change only in governmental form under a new name. Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912); City of Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co., 201 F. 790 (8th Cir. 1912).

Under this article the merger of the different municipal corporations into the city and county of Denver took effect upon the proclamation of the governor, December 1, 1902, and until that date the different municipal corporations continued, separate and independent, and the municipal officers continued in office with the same powers and duties that they had prior to the adoption of the amendment. Boston & Colo. Smelting Co. v. Elder, 20 Colo. App. 96, 77 P. 258 (1904).

City and county of Denver succeeded to all the rights of former city of Denver. Hallett v. City & County of Denver, 46 Colo. 487, 104 P. 1038 (1909); City of Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co., 201 F. 790 (8th Cir. 1912).

Such as right of municipal corporations to collect taxes. It also succeeded to the right to collect taxes levied by the municipal corporations merged into said city and county. Boston & Colo. Smelting Co. v. Elder, 20 Colo. App. 96, 77 P. 258 (1904).

And was vested with title to tax certificates of purchase. Title to tax certificates of purchase issued and held by Arapahoe county on lands which thereafter became a part of the city and county of Denver upon adoption of this article vested in the latter, and transfer of the same by it to another was valid. Nat'l Tax & Mtg. Co. v. Cartwright, 90 Colo. 16, 5 P.2d 878 (1931).

City and county of Denver assumed all liabilities of former city of Denver. The city of Denver did not cease to exist by virtue of this article and a motion to dismiss in a trial pending when this article went into effect was denied because the parties, in effect, agreed by their conduct that the suit should proceed in the name of the original parties. City of Denver v. Iliff, 38 Colo. 357, 89 P. 823 (1906); City of Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co., 201 F. 790 (8th Cir. 1912).

And became liable for obligations of former county of Arapahoe. This article conferred upon the city and county of Denver all the property belonging to, and made it liable for the obligations of, the county of Arapahoe, but made no specific provision for the payment to other new counties created out of said Arapahoe county of their proportion of the value of said county property. The city and county of Denver is liable to such other new counties for said proportional value and its city council may be compelled by mandamus to levy a tax to provide for the payment of such claims. City Council v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 33 Colo. 1, 77 P. 858 (1904).

Thus a claim against the former county of Arapahoe, was a liability against the county of Denver, not against the city and county. City & County of Denver v. Bottom, 44 Colo. 308, 98 P. 13 (1935).

"City and county of Denver" was proper party in suit to cancel tax certificates. In a suit to have tax sales held void and certificates of purchase cancelled, the city of Denver being primarily interested, the "city and county of Denver" held properly made a party to the action. Burton v. City & County of Denver, 99 Colo. 207, 61 P.2d 856 (1936).

It remains agency of state for purpose of government. The municipality of Denver, though created by a constitutional amendment by a direct vote of the people, and having the power to frame its own charter, is just as much an agency of the state for the purpose of government as if it was organized under a general law passed by the general assembly. The mode of its creation does not change the nature of its relation to the state. Like cities and towns organized under the general statutes, it is still a part of the state government. Keefe v. People, 37 Colo. 317, 87 P. 791 (1906).

Sovereign immunity from suit. Assertions of an unconstitutional deprivation of a right of action have no merit under the governmental immunity doctrine. In Colorado there is no "right" in the absence of a statute granting such, thus it cannot be taken away or damaged by the application of sovereign immunity to a tort claim. Abeyta v. City & County of Denver, 165 Colo. 58, 437 P.2d 67 (1968).

Charter provisions in conflict with article lost their effect upon its adoption. Upon the adoption of this article of the constitution every provision of the former charter of the city of Denver, and its ordinances, in conflict with the provisions of the new article, immediately lost their effect. Aichele v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 183, 120 P. 149 (1911).

Section did not amend general provisions of constitution. The powers of city and county municipalities being essentially different, in investing the new municipality of Denver with the powers of both by the adoption of § 1 of art. XX, Colo. Const., it became necessary to modify the provisions of the constitution relative to municipal affairs, by providing new ones applicable to such combined government; but this is not an amendment of those provisions such as was in contemplation by the framers of the constitution, because the constitutional provisions that are abrogated as to the city and county of Denver remain in force generally throughout the state. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

B. Form and Nature of Government.

Article affects only local or municipal government. This article does not affect state or county but only local or municipal government. City & County of Denver v. Bottom, 44 Colo. 308, 98 P. 13 (1908).

The general scheme of government contemplated in this article is restricted to that of the municipality proper, and does not entrench upon county or state government. It does not purport to nullify the constitution or general laws of the state insofar as they pertain to county or state government, or attempt to interfere with the power of the state in raising state revenue. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

Denver is granted special status as both city and county under this article. City & County of Denver v. Miller, 151 Colo. 444, 379 P.2d 169 (1963).

The city and county of Denver is still a county as well as a city. This new municipality is invested with the combined powers of both city and county municipalities, which powers are essentially different. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903); City Council v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 33 Colo. 1, 77 P. 858 (1904).

The new corporation of Denver is subject to the general provisions of art. XIV, Colo. Const., providing for counties and county officers, and of the state legislation enacted in pursuance of it, so that, although a city, it is a county equally with any other legal subdivision of the state to which the constitution and statutes have given the name of county. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

A county, and likewise state and county governmental functions and duties, exist in the territory known as the city and county of Denver, as they exist in other portions of the state. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

There are two governmental entities within municipality of Denver, a county, with all the duties of a county as prescribed by the general law, and a city, with duties wholly of local character. Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912).

And its municipal and county governments are distinct. County government and county offices remain in the city and county of Denver the same as in all other counties of the state, and its municipal and county government is distinct. City & County of Denver v. Bottom, 44 Colo. 308, 98 P. 13 (1908).

The city and county of Denver, insofar as the exercise of county functions is concerned, is a new county, created by the merger and consolidation of the municipalities and territory within the boundaries designated by this article, and, as such new county, comes within the purview of § 6 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., providing for the election of county commissioners. Uzzell v. Anderson, 38 Colo. 32, 89 P. 785, 1056 (1906).

But single set of municipal officers have all duties. All the duties of these governmental entities are imposed upon a single set of municipal officers. Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912); Lail v. City & County of Denver, 88 Colo. 362, 297 P. 512 (1931).

Such duties are fixed by constitution and general laws. Their duties, so far as they concern county government, are fixed by the constitution and general laws, and as to these, the people of the municipality have no power to legislate. Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912).

Inhabitants to designate agencies to perform county duties. The sole effect of this article in relation to county functions and duties is to impose upon the inhabitants of the territory of Denver the power and duty to designate the agencies which shall therein discharge the acts and duties required of county officers to be done by the constitution and general law. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

This article embodied radical changes by consolidating the city and county of Denver and allowing it to designate the persons therein who should perform the duties pertaining to county offices, as well as granting to it the right to make its own charter, a power theretofore resting in the general assembly. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

C. Powers Conferred.

Annotator's note. In view of the fact that § 6 of this article enumerates the specific powers granted cities operating under this article, the cases dealing with the powers granted the city and county of Denver have been treated in the annotations to § 6.

This article is a grant of power to the inhabitants of the city and county of Denver, and it authorizes them to do what it specifically states they can do and such other matters as must be necessarily implied from the language used. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55, 1914D Ann. Cas. 1154 (1913).

Listing of powers is not complete enumeration of powers conferred. The statement of powers contained in this section was not intended to be an enumeration of powers conferred, but simply the expression of a few of the more prominent powers which municipal corporations are frequently granted. City & County of Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 P. 1066 (1905); Londoner v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 15, 119 P. 156 (1911); Fishel v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 576, 108 P.2d 236 (1940).

The powers enumerated do not constitute a limitation on the powers conferred on the municipality. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

The people by this section enumerated broad powers which they conferred upon the city and county of Denver. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

"Water works", as used in this section, includes water and water rights. City of Thornton v. Farmers Reservoir & Irrigation Co., 194 Colo. 526, 575 P.2d 382 (1978).

Denver's creation and operation of a water works for the use of Denver and its residents does not offend this constitutional provision. Cottrell v. City & County of Denver, 636 P.2d 703 (Colo. 1981).

Denver has constitutional and statutory authority to appropriate and provide water for use outside its city limits. Denver v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 696 P.2d 730 (Colo. 1985).

"Public utilities" are those facilities necessary for the maintenance of life and occupation of the residents, the services of which are available to all, and with respect to which all have the right to demand service. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

The term "public utility" has come into use in the sense, not of a chattel or other property used for the benefit of the public, but of a system of works operated for public use, examples of which are telephone, street railway, water, electric light and power, gas works and other systems. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

Sewers are "public utilities". Although sewers are not expressly mentioned in the constitution, the necessary correlative to waterworks expressly granted in the constitution is a facility to carry off that same water. Thus, sewage lines and disposal facilities also are included in the general term "other public utilities". Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958); Toll v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 462, 340 P.2d 862 (1959).

Water project located outside boundaries. Denver is not immune from regulation by Grand county in the development of a water project without its local boundaries and on national forest lands within Grand county. City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 517 F. Supp. 155 (D. Colo. 1981), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 695 F.2d 465 (10th Cir. 1982).

Denver has constitutional and statutory authority to lease water for use outside its city limits. Cottrell v. City & County of Denver, 636 P.2d 703 (Colo. 1981).

Denver's water projects are matters of mixed local and state interest. Where Denver's charter conflicts with state act that authorizes local governments to designate projects as matters of state interests and to promulgate rules and regulations to administer such projects, the state act controls. City & County of Denver v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 760 P.2d 656 (Colo. App. 1988).

Power granted with respect to light plants concerned local or municipal matters or both. Cook v. City of Delta, 100 Colo. 7, 64 P.2d 1257 (1937).

Deficiency bond payment is not loan or new bond. The charter of the city of Denver in authorizing payment by the city of deficiencies in bond payments does not amount to the issuance of bonds or the creation of a loan within the meaning of this section. Montgomery v. City & County of Denver, 102 Colo. 427, 80 P.2d 434 (1938).

Section 2. Officers. The officers of the city and county of Denver shall be such as by appointment or election may be provided for by the charter; and the jurisdiction, term of office, duties and qualifications of all such officers shall be such as in the charter may be provided; but the charter shall designate the officers who shall, respectively, perform the acts and duties required of county officers to be done by the constitution or by the general law, as far as applicable. If any officer of said city and county of Denver shall receive any compensation whatever, he or she shall receive the same as a stated salary, the amount of which shall be fixed by the charter, or, in the case of officers not in the classified civil service, by ordinance within limits fixed by the charter; provided, however, no elected officer shall receive any increase or decrease in compensation under any ordinance passed during the term for which he was elected.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Section not in conflict with federal constitution and should be enforced. The people have sovereign capacity to make, alter, or change their constitution as they see fit, subject only to the federal compact. This section does not conflict with the federal constitution, and ought to be enforced. The supreme court does not agree with decisions holding this section inoperative and void. The fundamental error in such cases lies in the refusal to recognize and enforce this section, which is a part of the constitution, according to its clear, unmistakable, and unquestionable meaning. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357 (1911), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 622 (1911).

The warrant of authority given to the people of the city and county of Denver to merely designate the agency by which governmental duties therein shall be discharged is not obnoxious to any provision of the enabling act or of the federal constitution, and therefore it may be lawfully done. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357 (1911), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911); Reed v. Blakley, 115 Colo. 559, 176 P.2d 681 (1946).

Officers of Denver shall be as provided in the charter. People ex rel. McQuaid v. Pickens, 91 Colo. 109, 12 P.2d 349 (1932).

Section does not set aside governmental duties and functions as to state and county affairs. This section not only does not set aside governmental duties and functions as to state and county affairs in the city and county of Denver, it does not even pretend to do so, and by no stretch of the imagination can it be fairly held to do so. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357 (1911), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v.

Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 622 (1911); Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912).

But recognizes that such duties exist and must be discharged, and forthwith proceeds to provide and declare by whom they shall be performed. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 622 (1911); Reed v. Blakley, 115 Colo. 559, 176 P.2d 681 (1946).

Such duties are absolutely fixed. These duties are fixed, absolutely fixed, until changed by the same power which created them. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 622 (1911).

This article places duty of discharging local responsibilities on local officers. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

This section vests in Denver exclusive control over public officers, their powers and duties. Int'l. Bhd. of Police Officers Local 127 v. City & County of Denver, 185 Colo. 50, 521 P.2d 916 (1974).

Because this section grants Denver the power to control the qualifications, as well as the powers, duties, and terms or tenure, of its deputy sheriffs, it necessarily follows that the P.O.S.T. Act is in conflict with the constitution to the extent that it purports to require Denver deputy sheriffs to be certified by the P.O.S.T. board. Fraternal Order, No. 27 v. Denver, 914 P.2d 483 (Colo. App. 1995).

Duties to be performed by one set of officers. Under the provisions of this section it was intended ultimately, so far as practicable, that all the powers and duties pertaining to former county offices, as well as the powers and duties of municipal offices, should be performed by one set of officers each drawing one salary; the economy which could be thus secured was one of the chief factors in causing the adoption of this amendment. Aichele v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 183, 120 P. 149 (1911).

The terms "officer" and "employee" are not interchangeable, and the two are to be distinguished. City & County of Denver v. McNichols, 129 Colo. 251, 268 P.2d 1026 (1954); Evert v. Ouren, 37 Colo. App. 402, 549 P.2d 791 (1976).

"County officers". The words "county officers" in requiring that every charter shall designate the officers who shall "perform the acts and duties required of county officers to be done by the constitution or by the general law, as far as applicable", mean "county officers" that are such by reason of the provisions of art. XIV, Colo. Const., and none other. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

Employees of Denver department of social services are not "officers" of Denver for the purposes of this section. Evert v. Ouren, 37 Colo. App. 402, 549 P.2d 791 (1976).

Salaries of state personnel system officers. This section provides that the officers in the classified state personnel system of the city shall receive their compensation as a stated salary, the amount of which shall be fixed by the charter. Derby v. Police Pension & Relief Bd., 159 Colo. 468, 412 P.2d 897 (1966).

Applied in People ex rel. Parish v. Adams, 31 Colo. 476, 73 P. 866 (1903); McNichols v. Police Protective Ass'n, 121 Colo. 45, 215 P.2d 303 (1949); Smith v. City & County of Denver, 39 Colo. App. 421, 569 P.2d 329 (1977).

II. CITY AND COUNTY

OFFICERS.

A. In General.

Charter to designate officers to perform duties of county officers. This section requires that every charter designate the officers who shall perform the acts and duties required of county officers to be done by the constitution or by the general law, as far as applicable. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1893); Lail v. City & County of Denver, 88 Colo. 362, 297 P. 512 (1931); McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 109 Colo. 269, 124 P.2d 601 (1942).

By this article the people of Denver were given the right to name their own officers and to determine their selection, qualifications and tenure, subject only to the provision that acts and duties required by the constitution and statutory law of county officers be carried out by some officer designated by the charter. City & County of Denver v. Rinker, 148 Colo. 441, 366 P.2d 548 (1961); Meller v. Municipal Court, 152 Colo. 130, 380 P.2d 668 (1963).

Power to designate extends to statutory and constitutional officers. Power to designate county officers by charter is not limited to those created by the constitution, but includes those created by the general assembly. People ex rel. Fairall v. Sabin, 75 Colo. 545, 227 P. 565 (1924).

The power to designate by charter, given by this article, is not limited to county offices created by § 8 of art. XIV, Colo. Const., and does include the office of public trustee; it includes county offices to be created by the general assembly, to whom the necessary power is given by section 12 of that article. People ex rel. Fairall v. Sabin, 75 Colo. 545, 227 P. 565 (1924).

Mayor may be empowered to make designations. Under this section providing charters shall designate officials to perform the duties of county officers, the mayor may be empowered to make the designations. People ex rel. Fairall v. Sabin, 75 Colo. 545, 227 P. 565 (1924).

Such designation is not legislative act. The designation of officers under the provisions of a city charter pursuant to this section is not a legislative act. People ex rel. Fairall v. Sabin, 75 Colo. 545, 227 P. 565 (1924).

Power not delegated to city and county of Denver to create any county office, but to designate only the officers holding the offices which it had the right to create, who should respectively perform the acts and duties required of county officers to be done by the constitution and general laws. Thrush v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 544, 127 P. 937 (1912).

Charter cannot change duties of officers relating to state and county affairs. The people of the city and county of Denver have not been given, and do not have, the power by charter to in any way change the duties of governmental officers, so far as they relate to state and county affairs. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357 (1911), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911).

In prescribing the "jurisdiction, term of office, duties, and qualifications of all such officers", this section did not mean that the charter convention could so prescribe in cases where it would operate to hinder the performance of the acts and duties required of county officers to be done by the constitution or by the general law, as far as applicable to the changed conditions of the new municipality. People ex rel. Miller v. Johnson, 34 Colo. 143, 86 P. 233 (1905).

A consolidation of the office of district attorney, a state office, and of attorney of the city and county, a transitional local office established by section 3 of this article, was not a change which could be perpetuated by the people of Denver in their charter as contemplated by this article, because by this section their authority is limited to providing for city and county offices. Lindsley v. City & County of Denver, 64 Colo. 444, 172 P. 707 (1918).

General assembly retains exclusive control of such offices. All that this article purports to do relative to the county offices is to provide that the people of the city and county of Denver, through their charter, shall designate the agencies, which are to discharge the respective duties and functions which pertain to them. There is no warrant or authority in the article to the people of the city and county of Denver to alter, change, or dispense with such acts and duties. They remain, as before, subject to the constitution and general laws, and are exclusively under the control of the general assembly. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction sub nom. Cassiday v. Colo., 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 662 (1911); Reed v. Blakley, 115 Colo. 559, 176 P.2d 681 (1946).

The duties of judges of the district court, county judges, district attorneys, justices of the peace, and, generally, of county officers, are mainly governmental; and, so far as they are governmental, they may not be controlled by other than state agencies without undermining the very foundation of our government. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

Thus abolishing county offices did not abolish duties pertaining to them. This article, by the abolishment of county offices as such, did not abolish the duties pertaining to them, but they continued and it became the duty of someone to continue to perform all such duties just the same as it had been prior to the adoption of the article. Arnold v. Hilts, 52 Colo. 391, 121 P. 753 (1912).

Upon the adoption of this article and the charter the office of public trustee of Arapahoe county ceased to exist within the limits of the consolidated corporation, but there came into existence the office of public trustee of the city and county of Denver. Lail v. City & County of Denver, 88 Colo. 362, 297 P. 512 (1931).

Statutory duties of public trustee cannot be abolished by charter of the city and county of Denver either expressly or by a failure to obey the mandate of the constitution. Lail v. City & County of Denver, 88 Colo. 362, 297 P. 512 (1931).

Denver is subject to general constitutional provisions relating to counties. By this section the new corporation of Denver is made subject to the general provisions of art. XIV, Colo. Const., providing for counties and county officers, and of the state legislation enacted in pursuance of it; so that, although a city, it is a county equally with any other legal subdivision of the state to which the constitution and statutes have given the name of county. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

B. Particular Officers.

County judges are not included as "county officers". Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

Under the express authority of this section county judges may exercise not only state jurisdiction but also municipal jurisdiction, if provided by charter and ordinance. Blackman v. County Court, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969).

Sheriff. The office of sheriff is a county office and not a state office; thus, the method of selection and tenure of the officer designated to carry out the duties of the position became the concern of the people of Denver by authority expressly granted to them by all of the people of the state under this article even though those officers might be required to perform duties which were of statewide concern such as the duties imposed by constitution upon the county clerk and recorder, county sheriff, treasurer, or assessor. City & County of Denver v. Rinker, 148 Colo. 441, 366 P.2d 548 (1961).

Because the state's interest under the Peace Officers Standards and Training Act was not sufficient to outweigh Denver's home rule authority, the provisions of this section supersede the conflicting provisions of the POST Act. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

The qualification and certification of Denver deputy sheriffs is a local concern, specifically, where it was shown that there was no need for statewide uniformity of training that would include Denver deputy sheriffs; that the extraterritorial impact of Denver deputy sheriffs is, at best, de minimis; that Denver deputy sheriffs do not substantially impact public safety beyond the boundaries of Denver; and Denver's interest in the training and certification of its deputy sheriffs is substantial and has direct textual support in the Colorado constitution and in case law precedent. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

The holding regarding the training and certification under the POST Act is limited to Denver deputy sheriffs since Colorado constitution article XX, § 2, pertains only to the City and County of Denver. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

Policemen. Under charter provisions of the city and county of Denver, policemen are officers, and their salaries being fixed by the charter under constitutional mandate cannot be lawfully reduced by ordinance. McNichols v. People ex rel. Cook, 95 Colo. 235, 35 P.2d 863 (1934).

Members of fire department are also officers. McNichols v. People ex rel. Cook, 95 Colo. 235, 35 P.2d 863 (1934); Rogers v. City & County of Denver, 121 Colo. 484, 217 P.2d 865 (1950).

Mayor has sole power to appoint public trustee. Under the existing provisions of the charter of Denver, the mayor has the sole power to appoint the public trustee. People ex rel. Fairall v. Sabin, 75 Colo. 545, 227 P. 565 (1924).

But may not consolidate such office with other offices. The charter of the city and county of Denver did not consolidate the office of public trustee with that of the clerk and recorder and ex officio clerk; the mayor has no power to make such consolidation, and until the enactment of a charter provision authorizing a consolidation, the office of public trustee will continue to be a separate office. Lail v. City & County of Denver, 88 Colo. 362, 297 P. 512 (1931).

Only manager of safety and excise may issue licenses for sale of intoxicating liquors. The agency through which Denver shall perform and discharge the duty of licensing dispensers of intoxicating liquors is within the city and county's keeping, through appropriate charter enactment. Since Denver has designated an office or agency called manager of safety and excise, to the occupant of which it has assigned all licensing authority, only that official, and not the city council, has authority to issue, or refuse to grant, licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors in the city and county of Denver, and a statute passed by the general assembly authorizing the council of the city and county of Denver to issue licenses violates this section. Reed v. Blakley, 115 Colo. 559, 176 P.2d 681 (1946).

Section 3. Establishment of government civil service regulations. Immediately upon the canvass of the vote showing the adoption of this amendment, it shall be the duty of the governor of the state to issue his proclamation accordingly. Every charter shall provide that the department of fire and police and the department of public utilities and works shall be under such civil service regulations as in said charter shall be provided.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

Purpose of section. The manifest purpose of this section was to remedy the administration of the functions of the city and county governments in the same territory by two sets of officers by immediately setting in operation a temporary or provisional government which the people of the city and county could perpetuate in their charter. Lindsley v. City & County of Denver, 64 Colo. 444, 172 P. 707 (1918).

This section did away with all county offices and officers as such. This section by express provision, terminated, upon its adoption, the terms of office of all officers of the then city of Denver, of the included municipalities and of the old county of Arapahoe, a portion of which, together with the city of Denver and included municipalities, were then merged into the consolidated municipality of the city and county of Denver. It in effect did away with all county officers and offices, purely as such, in the consolidated territory, and provided a single set of officers or agencies to perform, in the new municipality, all duties of a local nature and all duties pertaining to governmental, state and county affairs as well. Since the adoption of the article, and the formation of the city and county of Denver, there has never been, within that territory, a county office or county officer, as such. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 622 (1911).

This section in effect did away with all county officers and offices purely as such. In the territory comprising the city and county of Denver no county office or county officer, as in other counties of the state, exists. This being the case and this article of the constitution being a grant of power, it follows that the only power granted to the city and county of Denver pertaining to the duties of county officers under the constitution and general laws was to designate the officers holding the offices properly created by the charter who should perform the acts and duties required of county officers. Thrush v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 544, 127 P. 937 (1912).

All county officers and offices as such were abolished subject only to the provisions that the duties and acts required of them by the constitution or by general law should be carried out by some officer so designated by the charter. City & County of Denver v. Rinker, 148 Colo. 441, 366 P.2d 548 (1961); Meller v. Municipal Court, 152 Colo. 130, 380

P.2d 668 (1963).

It was intended to establish a temporary or provisional government in which it is provided that governmental, as well as all municipal powers and duties referred to, should be assumed and discharged by one set of officers; for instance, it provides that the council shall perform the duties of the board of county commissioners. Aichele v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 183, 120 P. 149 (1911).

This section made certain existing officers of the former city and its boards officers and boards of the new municipality, to hold until their successors were elected and qualified. Hallett v. City & County of Denver, 46 Colo. 487, 104 P. 1038 (1909).

The mayor and the persons composing the council of the city of Denver became, by virtue of this provision, the mayor and council of the city and county of Denver. The mayor and members of the council, as well as all other officers of the new corporation, derive their title to office solely from the article; they have therefore such powers as it expressly confers, or are legitimately deducible from it and consistent with it, and no other. The council is clothed with all the powers of a board of county commissioners. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

To perform duties of county officers until new charter adopted. Without this section there would have been no one to perform the duties of county officers until the adoption of a new charter. This is apparent for the reason that the old county of Arapahoe had been abolished, its officers as such had ceased to exist, and it was necessary to provide someone to perform the duties of county officers under the constitution and general laws until the procedure provided for in the article had been carried into effect. Thrush v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 544, 127 P. 937 (1912).

Complete county and city government is furnished to corporation. The amendment provides it with a mayor, council and other city officers; and with a body having the authority of a board of county commissioners, a sheriff, clerk, recorder, county judge and all other county officers. The duties of city officers are prescribed by the charter, and the duties of county officers by the general laws of the state. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

And in the hands of the same persons. And the fact that the city government and the county government are in the hands of the same persons, is immaterial. The distinction between the functions pertaining to a city government and those pertaining to a county government, is not, and does not purport to be, affected by this article. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

This section must be construed with section 2 of this article, which provides that the officers of the city and county of Denver shall be such as by appointment or election may be provided for by charter. So construed, this section did not require that the district attorney should perform the duties of attorney until an attorney was "elected" by the people, but that the district attorney should perform the duties of attorney for the city and county until an attorney was "selected" in such manner as the charter might provide. People v. Lindsley, 37 Colo. 476, 86 P. 352 (1906).

Applied in Bratton v. Dice, 93 Colo. 593, 27 P.2d 1028 (1933); Hawkins v. Hunt, 113 Colo. 468, 160 P.2d 357 (1945); Cain v. Civil Serv. Comm'n, 159 Colo. 360, 411 P.2d 778 (1966).

II. PARTICULAR OFFICES AND OFFICERS.

Office of county assessor terminated. By the formation of the city and county of Denver, the office of county assessor immediately terminated. An incumbent maintained in office by a decision of the supreme court which was subsequently overruled was at best no more than a de facto official. Arnold v. Hilts, 61 Colo. 8, 155 P. 316 (1916).

As did office of county commissioner. By the plain, unambiguous language of this section the terms of office of county commissioners of Arapahoe county terminated immediately upon the canvass of the vote showing the adoption of this article and the proclamation of the governor to that effect. Uzzell v. Anderson, 38 Colo. 32, 89 P. 785 (1906).

And office of city clerk. Considering the purposes of this article, including the phraseology of this section, it is clear the intent was, during the interim period, that the office of city clerk as such should be abolished just the same as the offices of county commissioners were, and that the duties pertaining to this office should be transferred and attached to the office of clerk and recorder for the city and county of Denver the same as those of county commissioners were to the city council. Aichele v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 183, 120 P. 149 (1911).

But county clerk not entitled to salary as city clerk, during the period intervening between the adoption of the article, and the going into operation of the new charter adopted by the city, pursuant to its provisions. Aichele v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 183, 120 P. 149 (1911).

County office of sheriff terminated. This section terminated the county office of sheriff in Denver and, together with the enabling provisions of article XX, reposed in the people of Denver for later decision by adoption of their charter whether to create the office of sheriff. Int'l. Bhd. of Police Officers Local 127 v. City & County of Denver, 185 Colo. 50, 521 P.2d 916 (1974).

And replaced by police department. In lieu of office of sheriff, Denver established a police department by charter. Int'l. Bhd. of Police Officers Local 127 v. City & County of Denver, 185 Colo. 50, 521 P.2d 916 (1974).

Treasurer of city and county of Denver, though performing duties of county treasurer, was not entitled to a salary in the latter capacity. Elder v. City & County of Denver, 53 Colo. 496, 127 P. 949 (1912).

Fire and police board. Upon the adoption of this article, the fire and police board of the city of Denver became the fire and police board of the city and county of Denver until their successors were elected and qualified as should be provided in the charter, and the members thereof held their offices by virtue of the amendment to the constitution and not by appointment of the governor and the governor had no power to remove them from office and appoint their successors. People ex rel. Parish v. Adams, 31 Colo. 476, 73 P. 866 (1903).

District attorney and attorney of city and county of Denver. The language of the provision, "and the district attorney shall also be ex officio attorney of the city and county", plainly imports that plaintiff should hold two offices, namely, the office of district attorney under state government, and the office of attorney of the city and county under local government, which were separate and distinct offices, the tenures of which were different, terminating at different times and for different causes. Lindsley v. City & County of Denver, 64 Colo. 444, 172 P. 707 (1918).

As district attorney, duties and power were defined by the state constitution and general laws; as attorney for the city and county, by the city charter and ordinances. His responsibilities and duties in the two offices were not only separate and distinct, but of an entirely different character, having no possible relation to or connection with each other. In such circumstances, under all the authorities, the words, "and the district attorney shall also be ex officio attorney of the city and county of Denver", mean that plaintiff held separate and distinct offices. Lindsley v. City & County of Denver, 64 Colo. 444, 172 P. 707 (1918).

Deputy sheriffs and jailors. The people of Denver have the power under this article to include deputy sheriffs and jailors in a career service system. City & County of Denver v. Rinker, 148 Colo. 441, 366 P.2d 548 (1961).

Departmental rules and directives of manager of safety govern deputy sheriff's duties in Denver. Int'l. Bhd. of Police Officers Local 127 v. City & County of Denver, 185 Colo. 50, 521 P.2d 916 (1974).

No general police power in Denver deputy sheriffs. There is no authority, constitutional or statutory, granting to deputy sheriffs of the city and county of Denver the same general police powers given sheriffs and their deputies in other counties. Int'l. Bhd. of Police Officers Local 127 v. City & County of Denver, 185 Colo. 50, 521 P.2d 916 (1974).

Section 4. First charter. (1) The people of the city and county of Denver are hereby vested with and they shall always have the exclusive power in making, altering, revising or amending their charter.

(2) and (3) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2000, p. 2778, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 2001, p. 2391, December 28, 2000.)

(4) Any franchise relating to any street, alley, or public place of the said city and county shall be subject to the initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people under section 1 of article V of this constitution. Such referendum power shall be guaranteed notwithstanding a recital in an ordinance granting such franchise that such ordinance is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety. Not more than five percent of the registered electors of a home rule city shall be required to order such referendum. Nothing in this section shall preclude a home rule charter provision which requires a lesser number of registered electors to order such referendum or which requires a franchise to be voted on by the registered electors. If such a referendum is ordered to be submitted to the registered electors, the grantee of such franchise shall deposit with the treasurer the expense (to be determined by said treasurer) of such submission. The council shall have power to fix the rate of taxation on property each year for city and county purposes.

ANNOTATION

I. General Consideration.

II. Control of Franchises.

III. Power of Taxation.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

People are given exclusive right to amend charter. Under this and the following section the inhabitants of the city and county of Denver are given the exclusive power to amend their charter, and are entitled to demand the submission of anything which falls within the definition of an amendment. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55, (1913).

This article is not invalid on the ground that it is dependent on future contingencies. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

City and county of Denver invested with all power prior to adoption of charter. Under this section the city and county of Denver, during the interim between the adoption of the constitutional amendment and the adoption of the new charter, was invested with all the authority, which was not made or rendered inapplicable by the article itself, previously reposed in the city of Denver, including the power to create sidewalk districts and assess the cost of the sidewalk constructed therein upon the abutting properties. Hallett v. City & County of Denver, 46 Colo. 487, 104 P. 1038 (1909).

Council of city and county possesses powers conferred on old city council. The old charter of the city of Denver, insofar as it is the charter of the city and county of Denver, is to be considered in determining the extent of the council's authority, but the old charter is not the charter of the city and county except qualifiedly. It is such charter only insofar as it is applicable to the constitution of the new corporation. Subject to this qualification, the council of the city and county of Denver possesses all the powers conferred by the charter upon the city council of the city of Denver. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

Prior ordinances remain in effect. Ordinances in force at date of new charter, which were not inconsistent therewith, remain in force until repealed or amended by the council, or until they expire by their own limitations. To receive such prior ordinance in evidence, in an action for negligence founded on the disregard of the requirements of the ordinance, is not to give it retroactive effect. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Carson, 21 Colo. App. 604, 123 P. 680 (1912).

Courts to take judicial notice of charter. The courts will judicially notice the charter of the city of Denver, adopted under this article by the people of that municipality, to the same extent as the former charter granted by the general assembly. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Carson, 21 Colo. App. 604, 123 P. 680 (1912).

Charter election was governed as provided by general law. While the charter of the old corporation is made the charter of the new body corporate until after the election is determined, the requirement as to the election is that it shall be conducted, not as provided by that charter, but as provided by law. If it had been the intention to apply the charter to the election, the word "charter", instead of the word "law", would have been used. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

Canvass of returns of election for members of charter convention. It is the duty of the clerk of said city and county, assisted by two justices of the peace, and not of the city council, to canvass the returns of an election for members of the charter convention, and to issue certificates of election to the members elected thereto. McMurray v. Wright, 19 Colo. App. 17, 73 P. 257 (1903).

Successive charter elections are not required. The contention that successive charter elections must be held until a new charter has been approved, under this section and section 5 of this article was rejected by the supreme court. Mahood v. City & County of Denver, 118 Colo. 338, 195 P.2d 379 (1948).

Distinction between modes of amending or making new charter. This article, while investing the people of the city under this section with "exclusive power in the making, altering, revising, or amending their charter", makes a distinction between the modes of amending it and of revising it in extenso or making a new one, the difference being that an amendment may be initiated by petition and directly voted upon and adopted by the electors, while a revised or new charter requires the intervention of a charter convention. City & County of Denver v. New York Trust Co., 229 U.S. 123, 33 S. Ct. 657, 57 L. Ed. 1101 (1913).

Ordinance effecting amendment of charter held invalid. A Denver ordinance was invalid because in effect it would be an amendment of the charter, which power of amendment under this section is exclusively reserved to the people of Denver. McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 109 Colo. 269, 124 P.2d 601 (1942).

New charter cannot be framed and submitted by those not possessing qualifications prescribed in this section although initiatory steps with respect to matters prescribed in section 5 of this article may be taken by qualified electors, whether taxpayers or not, and without regard to the length of time they have been such electors. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Applied in People ex rel. Parish v. Adams, 31 Colo. 476, 73 P. 866 (1903); City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 629 P.2d 619 (Colo. 1981); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

II. CONTROL OF FRANCHISES.

"Franchise" is defined as the privilege of doing that which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right. It is a right, privilege, or power, of public concern, which ought not to be exercised by private individuals at their mere will and pleasure, but should be reserved for public control and administration. City of Englewood v. Crabtree, 157 Colo. 593, 404 P.2d 525, cert. dismissed, 382 U.S. 934, 86 S. Ct. 385, 15 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1965); Cmty. Tele-Communications v. Heather Corp., 677 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1984); City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

A "franchise" by definition is a special right or privilege granted by a government to an individual or corporation -- such a right as does not ordinarily belong to citizens in general. City of Englewood v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 163 Colo. 400, 431 P.2d 40 (1967).

The object of this provision relating to franchises is to give the taxpaying electors absolute control over the granting of franchises. Ward v. Colo. E. R. R., 22 Colo. App. 332, 125 P. 567 (1912); Berman v. City & County of Denver, 120 Colo. 218, 209 P.2d 754 (1949); Cmty. Tele-Communications v. Heather Corp., 677 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1984); City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

Power to grant franchises was transferred from city council to the qualified taxpaying electors when this article took effect. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906);

Ward v. Colo. E. R. R., 22 Colo. App. 332, 125 P. 567 (1912); Berman v. City & County of Denver, 120 Colo. 218, 209 P.2d 754 (1949).

Franchise must be approved by electors. Under this section the people of the new organization are vested with the exclusive power to make their own municipal charter, but, with this limitation, inter alia, that a franchise relating to any street, alley or public place of the city cannot be granted except upon the vote of its qualified taxpaying electors. Williams v. People, 38 Colo. 497, 88 P. 463 (1906).

The city council of Denver is without authority to grant to a street railway company a so-called revocable license, in effect a franchise, to use the streets of the city for street railway purposes, except upon a vote of the qualified taxpaying electors, under the provisions of this section. Baker v. Denver Tramway Co., 72 Colo. 233, 210 P. 845 (1922); Berman v. City & County of Denver, 120 Colo. 218, 209 P.2d 754 (1949).

City franchising power not applicable to party franchised by state. The constitutional provisions permitting home rule cities to grant franchises are applicable to situations where the individual or corporation does not have some type of a state franchise. City of Englewood v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 163 Colo. 400, 431 P.2d 40 (1967).

By its original city franchise, obtained before the city became a home rule city, the telephone company acquired what in law is a valid state franchise or right. This permitted it not only to maintain its facilities in the city's public ways, but also to construct and operate additional ones therein without obtaining a city franchise. City of Englewood v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 163 Colo. 400, 431 P.2d 40 (1967).

Provision for payment before vote is subordinate part of limitation. While this section provides that the question of granting a desired franchise shall be submitted to the electors upon the deposit with the city treasurer of the expense of the submission, it is a subordinate part of a limitation or restriction to the effect that no franchise to occupy or use the streets of the city shall be granted except upon an approving vote of the electors, and is evidently intended to be merely regulatory of the payment of the expense of taking the vote, and not to make such payment the only test of the right to have the vote taken. City & County of Denver v. New York Trust Co., 229 U.S. 123, 33 S. Ct. 657, 57 L. Ed. 1101 (1913).

Franchise election upheld. When the vast majority of the votes cast on a franchise matter were for the franchise, an election will not be voided on the basis of the claim that the limitation of votes on the franchise matter to qualified taxpaying electors was invalid, when the result would have been the same even if those who had not been permitted to vote were allowed to do so. DeMoulin v. City & County of Denver, 177 Colo. 129, 495 P.2d 203, cert. denied, 409 U.S. 934, 93 S. Ct. 232, 34 L. Ed. 2d 188 (1972).

Sports stadium is not street, alley or avenue requiring franchise vote any more than the auditorium, the arena, the coliseum or any other facility that the city from time to time leases to persons. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

Sale of land was not grant of franchise. The sale of a block in the city of Denver on which the courthouse was formerly located was not the grant of a franchise relating to a public place within the meaning of this section. Hall v. City & County of Denver, 115 Colo. 538, 177 P.2d 234 (1946).

The reverter provision of the contract for sale of land is nothing more than the reservation of a right in property which the owner thereof retains in itself upon conveyance of a major interest in that property to the city. The interest thus retained is not a franchise but is an interest in real property. City of Englewood v. Crabtree, 157 Colo. 593, 404 P.2d 525, cert. dismissed, 382 U.S. 934, 86 S. Ct. 385, 15 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1965).

Nor is lease. The user arrangement whereby the city leases a sports stadium for professional sports and other uses is a mere lease or rental arrangement and is not a franchise. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

But maintenance of telephone facilities on streets is. The right of a telephone or telegraph company to maintain its facilities on or in the streets is a franchised right. City of Englewood v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 163 Colo. 400, 431 P.2d 40 (1967).

Attempt to grant franchise privileges contrary to section invalid. An ordinance of the Denver city council adopted subsequent to this article and prior to the adoption of the charter thereunder, granting to a railway company the right to occupy certain streets and alleys, was without effect, either as a grant or as a mere permit or license; it conferred no right whatever. Ward v. Colo. E. R. R., 22 Colo. App. 332, 125 P. 567 (1912).

An ordinance granting to a tramway corporation authority to eliminate rail lines on certain streets and operate trolley coaches or motor busses and fixing maximum fares constituted an attempt to grant, extend and enlarge franchise privileges contrary to, and in violation of, this section. Berman v. City & County of Denver, 120 Colo. 218, 209 P.2d 754 (1949).

Grant of right to construct, operate, and maintain cable television system is a franchise. Since the right to use the streets and public ways of the city to construct, operate, and maintain a cable television system is a proper subject for the granting of a franchise, enacting an ordinance to grant company a permit to operate a cable system was unlawful. Cmty. Tele-Communications v. Heather Corp., 677 P.2d 330 (Colo. 1984).

Standing to challenge charter amendments. Qualified taxpaying electors have standing to challenge a charter amendment which confers authority conferred upon the council to act in the name and on behalf of the city and county of Denver on all matters pertaining to the installation and operation of a cable television system in the city and county of Denver and which provides that no additional authorization relating to such matters shall be required to be submitted to a vote at any election. People ex rel. Feld v. City & County of Denver, 673 P.2d 43 (Colo. App. 1983).

The public utilities commission cannot authorize a power company operating pursuant to a certificate of public convenience and necessity in an area annexed by a home rule municipality to expand its system and use city streets without obtaining a franchise from such municipality. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

The consent of both the municipality and the public utilities commission is necessary to operate a public utility within a home rule city, but neither the general assembly not the public utilities commission is empowered to grant a franchise to a public utility to use the streets, alleys, and public places of a home rule municipality without the municipality's consent. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

The right of home rule cities to grant franchises is not unconstitutionally interfered with by § 40-3-106 (4), which results in the customers within a municipality which has granted a franchise paying the cost of the franchise fee as part of the rates for the service. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Section 40-3-106 (4) does not affect either a home rule city's ability to negotiate and grant franchises and to collect franchise fees or a fixed utility's obligation to pay to a municipality the entire amount of the franchise fee negotiated and, therefore, does not violate this section or § 6 of this article or article XXV of this constitution. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

III. POWER OF TAXATION.

Duty of city council in fixing rate of taxation is purely ministerial. The power to fix the rate of taxation given the council is limited to the necessities of the case, and such rate must be based upon fixed charges, levies and estimated expenses. The duty of the council in that respect is neither legislative nor judicial, but is purely ministerial. Perkins v. People ex rel. McFarland, 59 Colo. 107, 147 P. 356 (1915).

And does not include power to determine validity of tax directed by people. The power to fix the rate of taxation granted the council in this section does not include the power to determine the necessity or validity of a tax arising from a fixed levy for the construction and maintenance of public improvements directed by the people, whether in the form of bonds, the interest and principal of which must be paid by the levy of a tax, or whether from any specific levy for a stated purpose. Such a power would enable the council to nullify every act of the people providing for a public improvement. Perkins v. People ex rel. McFarland, 59 Colo. 107, 147 P. 356 (1915).

But confers no power to limit the rate of taxation for county purposes. The provision of the charter adopted by the people of Denver, under authority of this article is construed to apply only to taxes levied for municipal purposes, and is of no effect upon the power and duty of the board of supervisors in fixing the rate of taxation for state and county purposes. Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912).

Since that is matter solely under state control. If by the charter of the city and county of Denver it is undertaken to legislate upon, or in any way control and fix, the method of making, or the amount of the levy, by way of limitation or otherwise, within the consolidated territory, for county purposes, such attempt is futile, because that is a matter solely under state control, and may not be interfered with in any way by local legislation. Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912).

And is performed by board of supervisors of city and county. The board of supervisors of the city and county of Denver, in levying taxes for county purposes, performs the same office as the board of county commissioners in other counties. They have authority, and are under an absolute duty to determine the amount to be levied. And this authority is not limited by the provision of this section. Hilts v. Markey, 52 Colo. 382, 122 P. 394 (1912).

Excise tax payable to milk producers upheld. Ordinance laying an excise tax of two cents per quart upon milk intended for human consumption in the city and county of Denver was held constitutional within the provisions of this section. Bowles v. Stapleton, 53 F. Supp. 336 (D. Colo. 1943).

Section 5. New charters, amendments or measures. The citizens of the city and county of Denver shall have the exclusive power to amend their charter or to adopt a new charter, or to adopt any measure as herein provided;

It shall be competent for qualified electors in number not less than five percent of the next preceding gubernatorial vote in said city and county to petition the council for any measure, or charter amendment, or for a charter convention. The council shall submit the same to a vote of the qualified electors at the next general election not held within thirty days after such petition is filed; whenever such petition is signed by qualified electors in number not less than ten percent of the next preceding gubernatorial vote in said city and county, with a request for a special election, the council shall submit it at a special election to be held not less than thirty nor more than sixty days from the date of filing the petition; provided, that any question so submitted at a special election shall not again be submitted at a special election within two years thereafter. In submitting any such charter, charter amendment or measure, any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to others. Whenever the question of a charter convention is carried by a majority of those voting thereon, a charter convention shall be called through a special election ordinance as provided in section four (4) hereof, and the same shall be constituted and held and the proposed charter submitted to a vote of the qualified electors, approved or rejected, and all expenses paid, as in said section provided.

The clerk of the city and county shall publish, with his official certification, for three times, a week apart, in the official newspapers, the first publication to be with his call for the election, general or special, the full text of any charter, charter amendment, measure, or proposal for a charter convention, or alternative article or proposition, which is to be submitted to the voters. Within ten days following the vote the said clerk shall publish once in said newspaper the full text of any charter, charter amendment, measure, or proposal for a charter convention, or alternative article or proposition, which shall have been approved by majority of those voting thereon, and he shall file with the secretary of state two copies thereof (with the vote for and against) officially certified by him, and the same shall go into effect from the date of such filing. He shall also certify to the secretary of state, with the vote for and against, two copies of every defeated alternative article or proposition, charter, charter amendment, measure or proposal for a charter convention. Each charter shall also provide for a reference upon proper petition therefor, of measures passed by the council to a vote of the qualified electors, and for the initiative by the qualified electors of such ordinances as they may by petition request.

The signatures to petitions in this amendment mentioned need not all be on one paper. Nothing herein or elsewhere shall prevent the council, if it sees fit, from adopting automatic vote registers for use at elections and references.

No charter, charter amendment or measure adopted or defeated under the provisions of this amendment shall be amended, repealed or revived, except by petition and electoral vote. And no such charter, charter amendment or measure shall diminish the tax rate for state purposes fixed by act of the general assembly, or interfere in any wise with the collection of state taxes.

The city council, or board of trustees, or other body in which the legislative powers of any home rule city or town may then be vested, on its own initiative, may submit any measure, charter amendment, or the question whether or not a charter convention shall be called, at any general or special state or municipal election held not less than 30 days after the effective date of the ordinance or resolution submitting such question to the voters.

Editor's note: The reference in the last sentence of the second paragraph to a charter convention being called through a special election ordinance as provided in section 4 of this article was deleted by amendment in senate concurrent resolution 00-005. Section 4 of article XX was amended to delete provisions for the first charter of the city and county of Denver calling for the adoption of the charter and specifying the procedures to be followed for a special election since the charter was adopted November 8, 1881. (See L. 2000, p. 2778.)

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

This section is not one of limitation. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

Construction of charter where it differs from constitution. If the charter differs from the constitution in any respect, it does not thereby diminish the power reserved by the constitution. If the powers reserved by the charter exceed those reserved in the constitution, the effect of the charter would be to give the people the additional powers there described. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

"Special elections" mentioned in this section are special municipal elections, although not specifically so designated. People ex rel. Austin v. Billig, 72 Colo. 209, 210 P. 324 (1922).

"General election". The term "general election" used in this section refers to a general municipal election, and does not include a general state election. People ex rel. Austin v. Billig, 72 Colo. 209, 210 P. 324 (1922).

Within the specific context of this section, a "general election" is a regularly scheduled election at which all qualified electors may participate. Election Comm'n v. McNichols, 193 Colo. 263, 565 P.2d 937 (1977).

Change in plan of government can only be effected by a charter convention. A measure proposed as an amendment, inasmuch as it changed the city council from a body composed of two houses, the members chosen from designated districts, to a single body of five commissioners chosen at large, so that all may come from one locality, denying to the mayor the veto of power now vested in him, reposing in the five commissioners all administrative powers which, by the existing charter, are vested in separate boards, commissions and officials, was not a mere amendment but an entire change in the plan of government which can only be effected by a charter convention. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Proposition held to be amendment, not new charter. A charter must be complete in itself, and a proposition for the amendment of twenty sections out of three hundred and sixty, for the repeal of twenty sections, and the addition of twenty sections, leaving approximately three hundred sections untouched; which is germane to the subject of municipal government; which fails to provide for the appointment or election of many officers and employees required in the existing charter, or their duties or salaries; which makes no provisions as to the civil service, the fire and police department, the management of municipal finance, public utilities, and the control thereof, the public health, franchises, and public improvements, must be regarded as amendatory to the charter, and not as a new charter. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

Prohibition against revival limited to particular measure. The prohibition in the next to last paragraph of this section lies against the reenactment or revival of the particular ordinance or measure defeated, and not against all legislation on the subject matter thereof. Hall v. City & County of Denver, 115 Colo. 538, 177 P.2d 234 (1946).

Such prohibition was amended by implication. That part of this section which states: "No charter, charter amendment, or measure adopted or defeated under the provisions of this amendment shall be amended, repealed, or revived except by petition and electoral vote", was amended by implication by a later constitutional amendment granting the city council the same power as held by the electorate to initiate such changes. Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

No charter or charter amendment can interfere with state taxes. There is nothing in this article, nor in the charter of the former city government under which the new municipality acts until it secures a new charter and new ordinances, which prohibits an act of the general assembly which imposes a license fee by a tax upon lawful occupations within the city of Denver for the purpose of securing state revenue. Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 P. 666 (1904).

Charter must include referendum and initiative provisions. The effect of this section is to require that referendum and initiative provisions be included in home rule charters. It does not specify as to the scope and extent of the power but the presence of this provision indicates the importance of this reservation. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

But scope and extent of provisions not specified. The Colorado constitution requires that referendum and initiative provisions be included in home rule charters, but includes no requirement as to the scope and extent that must be allowed. Witkin Homes, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 31 Colo. App. 410, 504 P.2d 1121 (1972).

Home rule charter is not subject to constitutional limitation on referendum. The limitation does not operate to restrict the referendum to the same boundaries existing at the state level, it not being a maximum limitation, but the minimum which must be reserved to the people of a locality. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

City may restrict or reserve full measure of referendum authority to voters. Inasmuch as the home rule city has the power to adopt its own charter and can within its sphere exercise as much legislative power as the general assembly, it follows that such a city has authority to either restrict the power of referendum by allowing its council to declare health and safety or it may validly reserve a full measure of referendum authority to the voters of the community by not restricting it -- by providing that it shall be exercisable with respect to any measure--even those measures which have become effective. Witkin Homes, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 31 Colo. App. 410, 504 P.2d 1121 (1972).

A home rule city may adopt a charter which reserves to the voters authority to refer all measures, and which withholds from the council power to thwart referendum by the expedient of declaring health and safety. Such a charter provision is valid and there is no reason for implied incorporation within it of the safety exception. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

Council may preclude referendum by petition through acceleration of effective date of ordinance based upon a determination and declaration that the ordinance is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public health and safety. Witkin Homes, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 31 Colo. App. 410, 504 P.2d 1121 (1972).

Power of referendum should be broadly construed. The interpretative approach to the power of referendum which gives broad effect to the reservation in the people and which refrains from implying or incorporating restrictions not specified in the constitution or the charter is supported by the terms of art. V, Colo. Const. Being a reservation of the people, it should not be narrowly construed, and there should be strict construction of the authority which would nullify the referendum. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

In construing a home rule charter, broad effect is given to the power granted a city council to submit a matter to a vote of the people, and any limitations on that power will be narrowly construed. Witkin Homes, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 31 Colo. App. 410, 504 P.2d 1121 (1972).

When ordinances are "adopted". Referendum provisions are negative in their operation and an ordinance submitted to referendum is not "adopted" by a subsequent favorable vote of the people, but on the contrary such had already been "adopted" by the earlier action of the city council. Interstate Trust Bldg. Co. v. Denver Urban Renewal Auth., 172 Colo. 427, 473 P.2d 978 (1970).

Council may amend ordinance adopted by council and approved by electors. Though this section and the corresponding Denver city charter provisions would appear to bar the Denver city council from amending initiated ordinances, nevertheless such constitutional and charter provisions do not contain any similar words of limitations as concerns the power of city council to amend an ordinance which it adopted and which was thereafter referred to a vote of the qualified electors and approved by them. Interstate Trust Bldg. Co. v. Denver Urban Renewal Auth., 172 Colo. 427, 473 P.2d 978 (1970).

Ordinances submitted for referendum not limited to certain types. Where the charter provision in question allows the city council to submit for a referendum "any ordinance passed by it in the same manner and with the same force and effect as hereinabove provided", the language is not limited to those types of ordinances allowed to be the subject of referendum initiated by petition, and thus, "any ordinance" includes an ordinance previously enacted and in effect, including zoning ordinances. Witkin Homes, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 31 Colo. App. 410, 504 P.2d 1121 (1972).

Applied in City of Englewood v. Crabtree, 157 Colo. 593, 404 P.2d 525 (1965); Int'l. Bhd. of Police Officers Local 127 v. City & County of Denver, 185 Colo. 50, 521 P.2d 916 (1974); In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo. 1982).

II. POWER TO AMEND OR TO ADOPT NEW CHARTER.

A. In General.

Home rule cities have power to amend charter. Home rule cities are vested with, and shall always have, power to make, amend, add to, or replace the charter of the city or town, which shall be its organic law and extend to all its local and municipal matters. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

Citizens of Denver have legislative power over municipal matters. Under this section the citizens of the municipality of Denver, so far as concerns municipal matters, have all the powers of the legislature. City & County of Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 P. 1066 (1905); Londoner v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 15, 119 P. 156 (1911); Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

The power to amend or adopt a new charter expressly granted to the citizens of Denver is a legislative one. The power thus granted is plainly not executive nor judicial. It is a power to make laws, to legislate, and cannot be other than legislative. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Power is granted not to citizens and city council, but to citizens only. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Such power is exclusive in citizens. As the power thus granted is expressly exclusive in the citizens, of necessity all other governmental agencies, departments, bodies, and officers are excluded from exercising it. This exclusion is direct, positive, and unequivocal. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

And includes power to initiate proposed charter amendments. The petition for an amendment is part of the act of legislation, and the petitioners, in submitting their petition, are exercising legislative power; they who thus initiate the measure, and the whole body of electors who vote upon it, constituting the legislature of the municipality. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Any matter germane to principal subject may be submitted as amendment. Where the word "amendment" is used without limitation as in this section, any matter which is germane to the principal subject, to wit, that of municipal government, is proper to be submitted as an amendment. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

New charter may not be submitted as amendment. The article does not authorize the submission to the people, as an amendment to the charter, of what is in effect a new charter. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Amendment need not be limited to single subject. This section does not require that a charter amendment be limited to a single subject or proposition. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

The use of the singular form "amendment" in this section is not to be construed as prohibiting more than one subject within a single amendment to the charter of a home rule city, the constitutional provision not being one of limitation. Several subjects can be constitutionally included within a single charter amendment. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143

Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

Where the several propositions in an amendment to the charter of a home rule city are related and deal with subjects within the power of the municipality there is no constitutional objection to such an amendment, even though it is multi-purposed. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

If the subjects submitted were germane to each other or if the subjects were so interconnected and dependent on each other that it is not desirable to adopt one without the others, it is unnecessary to submit to the voters each subject individually. Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

The inhibition against more than one subject in legislative enactments has no application to constitutional or organic law. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960); Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

Section 21 of art. V, Colo. Const., providing that no bill shall contain more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title, has no application to charter amendments made pursuant to this article by municipalities. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

But submission of many amendments as one not permitted. This section does not permit the submission, as one, of many amendments. If more than one be submitted, the voter must be enabled to approve or reject them separately. People ex rel. Walker v. Stapleton, 79 Colo. 629, 247 P. 1062 (1926); City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

A proposed amendment consisted of several distinct propositions, many of them entirely foreign to the proposed change in the form of government, all to be submitted as a single amendment where the elector was afforded no opportunity to vote for those which he favored, and against those of which he disapproved, was improper. The necessity of voting for or against all is in conflict with the letter as well as the spirit of our election laws, and condemned by an unbroken line of authority. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

A charter amendment proposal containing several unrelated propositions, submitted to the voters as a single amendment, and under which the voters have no opportunity to accept or reject each such proposal, is a "package deal", with the result that the ballot title used is in clear violation of the provisions of this section of the constitution. Any purported amendment adopted under such circumstance is of no force or effect. Howard v. City of Boulder, 132 Colo. 401, 290 P.2d 237 (1955).

B. Procedure.

The procedure outlined in this section is definite and complete. Cook v. City of Delta, 100 Colo. 7, 64 P.2d 1257 (1937).

General provisions for initiative and referendum do not apply to amendment. A charter amendment may be proposed only by petition of the electors and must be passed by a majority vote of the electorate before it becomes effective. It is in its very nature an initiated measure and the general constitutional and statutory provisions for initiative and referendum do not apply to a charter amendment. Cook v. City of Delta, 100 Colo. 7, 64 P.2d 1257 (1937).

Amendment may be initiated by petition or by ordinance. This section provides that a charter amendment may be initiated either by a petition signed by qualified electors in number not less than five percent of the next preceding gubernatorial vote, or by an ordinance passed by the council. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

Power to propose amendments is limited to authority prescribed and must be initiated in manner required. The authority of the people to initiate legislation by petition is limited to that prescribed, and must be initiated in the manner required. If they should undertake to initiate legislation which they have no authority to initiate, or do not follow the steps prescribed, their action would certainly be futile; consequently, it is only when they have acted within the authority conferred and in the manner prescribed, that their right to have proposed legislation submitted attaches. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325 122 P. 768 (1912).

Proceeding is analagous to that provided by constitution for amendment of fundamental law. The petitioners stand in the same relation to the proposed amendment as does the general assembly to any amendment proposed to the constitution. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

This article authorizes the city and county of Denver to make its charter, which in a sense is its constitution, concerning local affairs; the state constitution provides the method by which it can be amended. This does not include the restrictions placed upon the general assembly in the enactment of laws, or any restrictions other than the word "amendment" would imply. This makes the rules pertaining to amendments to constitutions more applicable to those under consideration, than amendments pertaining to general laws. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

Exact form of petition is governed by charter provisions. No form of petition, no procedure for the ascertainment of the sufficiency of the signatures, no form of submission of a proposed amendment or other necessary details are provided for in the constitution. These, therefore, are all proper subjects to be regulated and controlled by charter. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Purpose of publication is to prevent confusion. The purpose of a municipal charter provision that ordinances must be published and shall not be revised or amended by title only, is to prevent the confusion which results from amending ordinances by reference to the title, or by interpolating words without restating the part amended. This reasoning applies as well to the publication of ordinances under this section. Thiele v. City & County of Denver, 135 Colo. 442, 312 P.2d 786 (1957).

Object of title of amendment is to notify those concerned with the act as to what is being proposed in the body of the ordinance. Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965); Cottrell v. City & County of Denver, 636 P.2d 703 (Colo. 1981).

Charter may require ballot title to show nature of amendment. While the governing body of a home rule municipality may not circumvent or seek to avoid such constitutional requirements as the publication requirement, there is no illegality in a municipal charter requirement that the ballot title of an amendment be clear and comprehensive and show the nature of the amendment. The power to establish minimum standards for ballot titles is clearly expressed in both the general and specific provisions of section 6 of this article. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

Section does not provide for submission to electors by ordinance.

This section provides that whenever petitions providing for the submission of amendments to the charter are signed by qualified electors in number not less than ten percent, with a request for a special election, the council shall submit it at a special election to be held not less than 30 days nor more than 60 days from the date of filing the petition, but it does not state that it shall be by ordinance. People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913).

Submission of compiled code by referral numbering was proper. It was not improper to use the 1960 compilation of Denver city ordinances as referral numbering in submitting the questioned amendment to the voters. The city has the implied power to make periodically a compilation of its city charter, charter amendments and ordinances so that they are in some coherent and logical order. Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

Council to determine whether proposal is within constitutional prescription. The city council is vested with power to determine in the first instance whether what is proposed is within the constitutional prescription, and if not, to refuse to submit it to the electors, their action being subject to review by the courts. And the courts in determining the propriety of the action of the council in such case, are not invading the functions of the legislative department, or interfering with the formative stages of legislation. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Under this section before an election may be called by the Denver city council to amend the charter, it must determine that the petition therefor bears the specified number of signatures, that the same question has not been submitted within the two preceding years, and that the proposed legislation does not diminish the state tax rates or interfere with the collection of state taxes. People ex rel. Walker v. Stapleton, 79 Colo. 629, 247 P. 1062 (1926).

But cannot judge as to validity of proposed measure. An assumption by the city council of authority to judge of any legislation proposed by such petition, and to refuse to submit it to the electorate, as required by the constitution, because it would be invalid if enacted, is an attempted exercise of legislative power from which the council is excluded by the express terms of the constitution. The council has no such authority. It is no part of its duty to inquire into the validity of the proposed measure. Its only duty is the ministerial one expressly prescribed by the constitution, to submit the proposed measure to the vote of the electors. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Mandamus lies upon refusal of council to submit proposed measure. When the municipal council, or any section or body thereof, of a city having by the constitution power to enact their own charter and from time to time to amend it, refuses to submit to the electors an amendment proposed in the manner, and by the number of electors prescribed by the constitution, it is the duty of the courts by the writ of mandamus to compel the performance by the obstructive body of the ministerial duty which the constitution imposes. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Courts cannot pass upon effect of validity of proposed measure. While any proposed amendment of the charter of the city and county of Denver is pending, the courts have no power to inquire into or pass upon the effect or validity of the measure proposed. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Until after it is approved and placed in charter. When it has received the approval of the electors, and assumed a place in the charter, the courts may, when actual litigants whose rights are affected are before them, determine the validity and effect of the measure--and only then. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912).

Section 6. Home rule for cities and towns. The people of each city or town of this state, having a population of two thousand inhabitants as determined by the last preceding census taken under the authority of the United States, the state of Colorado or said city or town, are hereby vested with, and they shall always have, power to make, amend, add to or replace the charter of said city or town, which shall be its organic law and extend to all its local and municipal matters.

Such charter and the ordinances made pursuant thereto in such matters shall supersede within the territorial limits and other jurisdiction of said city or town any law of the state in conflict therewith.

Proposals for charter conventions shall be submitted by the city council or board of trustees, or other body in which the legislative powers of the city or town shall then be vested, at special elections, or at general, state or municipal elections, upon petition filed by qualified electors, all in reasonable conformity with section 5 of this article, and all proceedings thereon or thereafter shall be in reasonable conformity with sections 4 and 5 of this article.

From and after the certifying to and filing with the secretary of state of a charter framed and approved in reasonable conformity with the provisions of this article, such city or town, and the citizens thereof, shall have the powers set out in sections 1, 4 and 5 of this article, and all other powers necessary, requisite or proper for the government and administration of its local and municipal matters, including power to legislate upon, provide, regulate, conduct and control:

a. The creation and terms of municipal officers, agencies and employments; the definition, regulation and alteration of the powers, duties, qualifications and terms or tenure of all municipal officers, agents and employees;

b. The creation of police courts; the definition and regulation of the jurisdiction, powers and duties thereof, and the election or appointment of police magistrates therefor;

c. The creation of municipal courts; the definition and regulation of the jurisdiction, powers and duties thereof, and the election or appointment of the officers thereof;

d. All matters pertaining to municipal elections in such city or town, and to electoral votes therein on measures submitted under the charter or ordinances thereof, including the calling or notice and the date of such election or vote, the registration of voters, nominations, nomination and election systems, judges and clerks of election, the form of ballots, balloting, challenging, canvassing, certifying the result, securing the purity of elections, guarding against abuses of the elective franchise, and tending to make such elections or electoral votes non-partisan in character;

e. The issuance, refunding and liquidation of all kinds of municipal obligations, including bonds and other obligations of park, water and local improvement districts;

f. The consolidation and management of park or water districts in such cities or towns or within the jurisdiction thereof; but no such consolidation shall be effective until approved by the vote of a majority, in each district to be consolidated, of the qualified electors voting therein upon the question;

g. The assessment of property in such city or town for municipal taxation and the levy and collection of taxes thereon for municipal purposes and special assessments for local improvements; such assessments, levy and collection of taxes and special assessments to be made by municipal officials or by the county or state officials as may be provided by the charter;

h. The imposition, enforcement and collection of fines and penalties for the violation of any of the provisions of the charter, or of any ordinance adopted in pursuance of the charter.

It is the intention of this article to grant and confirm to the people of all municipalities coming within its provisions the full right of self-government in both local and municipal matters and the enumeration herein of certain powers shall not be construed to deny such cities and towns, and to the people thereof, any right or power essential or proper to the full exercise of such right.

The statutes of the state of Colorado, so far as applicable, shall continue to apply to such cities and towns, except insofar as superseded by the charters of such cities and towns or by ordinance passed pursuant to such charters.

All provisions of the charters of the city and county of Denver and the cities of Pueblo, Colorado Springs and Grand Junction, as heretofore certified to and filed with the secretary of state, and of the charter of any other city heretofore approved by a majority of those voting thereon and certified to and filed with the secretary of state, which provisions are not in conflict with this article, and all elections and electoral votes heretofore had under and pursuant thereto, are hereby ratified, affirmed and validated as of their date.

Any act in violation of the provisions of such charter or of any ordinance thereunder shall be criminal and punishable as such when so provided by any statute now or hereafter in force.

The provisions of this section 6 shall apply to the city and county of Denver.

This article shall be in all respects self-executing.

Construction of section. Narrow and technical reasoning is out of place in the interpretation of a constitution. This rule is not abrogated but rather enlarged by this section. City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919).

The rule was intended to reiterate unmistakably the will of the people that the power of a municipal corporation should be as broad as possible within the scope of a republican form of government of the state. City of Fort Collins v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 69 Colo. 554, 195 P. 1099 (1921).

This rule also confirms the power set out in §§ 1, 4, and 5 of this article and invests the people of the municipality with all other powers necessary, requisite, or proper for the government and administration of its local and municipal matters, including the power to amend, add to, or replace the charter of said city or town, which shall be its organic law and extend to all its local and municipal matters. City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 251 U.S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 219, 64 L. Ed. 407 (1920).

Home rule city is created and derives powers from this article. The home rule city does not derive its powers over local matters from the general assembly but is created and derives its powers from this article. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

The home rule city shares its powers with the state. By this article the sovereign power created a new agency, vesting it with some of the powers previously reposed in the general assembly. The two agencies are creatures of the same sovereign; neither has supreme power. Each may exercise the power conferred upon it but only in the manner and to the extent prescribed. City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 251 U.S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 219, 64 L. Ed. 407 (1920); City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

A home rule city created under this section is not an agency or subdivision of the state. Clark-Wine v. City of Colo. Springs, 556 F. Supp. 2d 1238 (D. Colo. 2008).

The overall effect of this section was to grant to home rule municipalities the power the legislature previously had and to limit the authority of the legislature with respect to local and municipal affairs in home rule cities. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

Powers of chartered municipality part of constitutional powers granted to home rule city. The powers granted to a municipality which is chartered under the provisions of this article, and not superseded by the charter of the home rule city, are incorporated as a part of the powers which are granted by the constitution to a home rule city. Pueblo Aircraft Serv., Inc. v. City of Pueblo, 498 F. Supp. 1205 (D. Colo. 1980), aff'd, 679 F.2d 805 (10th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1126, 103 S. Ct. 762, 74 L. Ed. 2d 977 (1983).

This section applies to city and county of Denver. People ex rel. McQuaid v. Pickens, 91 Colo. 109, 12 P.2d 349 (1932); City & County of Denver v. Henry, 95 Colo. 582, 38 P.2d 895 (1935).

The powers of the city and county of Denver are derived from this article and are limited thereby. McNichols v. People ex rel. Cook, 95 Colo. 235, 35 P.2d 863 (1934).

The authority of the city and county of Denver is conferred by constitutional grant. Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958).

The legislative jurisdiction of Denver derives from this article together with the charter adopted pursuant thereto, thus, in the area of local legislative jurisdiction, Denver is not limited by the statutes pertaining to powers of towns and cities. Lehman v. City & County of Denver, 144 Colo. 109, 355 P.2d 309 (1960).

Judiciary cannot alter article. Only by a vote of the people may this article be altered or repealed, it not being the function of the judiciary to do so by judicial decision. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

Jurisdictional powers of a home rule city are subject to change. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131 (1970).

A home rule city's powers under this article can be limited or altered by constitutional change or by a broadening of the concept of what constitutes a matter of statewide concern. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

The city and county of Denver has not been freed from the constitution but is as much subject thereto as any other part of the state, though portions of the constitution, as it existed prior to the adoption of this article, became inapplicable to such territory because of the express provision of the new article. People ex rel. Attorney Gen. v. Curtice, 50 Colo. 503, 117 P. 357, appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 223 U.S. 707, 32 S. Ct. 518, 56 L. Ed. 622 (1911); Mauff v. People, 52 Colo. 562, 123 P. 101 (1912); Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

The fact that the authority given by this article to the people of the city and county of Denver to legislate was confined and limited solely to local matters was the precise thing that made it possible for the courts to uphold and enforce it. If by this article it had been undertaken to free the people of the city and county of Denver from the state constitution, from statute law, and from the authority of the general assembly, respecting matters other than those purely of local concern, that article could not have been upheld. Mauff v. People, 52 Colo. 562, 123 P. 101 (1912).

Unless set aside by express words or necessary implication, the constitution and general laws are as much in force in home rule cities as in other portions of the state. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912); City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

No part of the constitution has been set aside unless directly so, or by necessary implication, through some one or more provisions of the article. Where the constitution and general laws of the state have not been, either by direct provision or necessary implication, set aside, they are as much in force in the city and county of Denver as they are in other portions of the state. Mauff v. People, 52 Colo. 562, 123 P. 101 (1912).

Even by constitutional amendment, the people cannot set apart any portion of the state in such manner that that portion of the state shall be freed from the constitution, or delegate the making of constitutional amendments concerning it to a charter convention, or give to such charter convention the power to prescribe the jurisdiction and duties of public officers with respect to state government as distinguished from municipal or city government. People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 369, 74 P. 167 (1903).

Cities operating under this article are subject to limitations of §§ 1 and 2 of art. XI, Colo. Const. Nowhere in this section can there be found express alteration or limit of the prohibition contained in §§ 1 and 2 of art. XI, Colo. Const., prohibiting the pledging of credit or aid to corporations by municipalities, and all municipalities operating under this article are clearly subject to such limitations. Lord v. City & County of Denver, 58 Colo. 1, 143 P. 284 (1914).

In addition, cities operating under this article are subject to limitations of fourteenth amendment. A state's political subdivisions must comply with the fourteenth amendment. The actions of local government are the actions of the state. A city, town, or county may no more deny the equal protection of the laws than it may abridge freedom of speech, establish an official religion, arrest without probable cause, or deny due process of the law. Hartman v. City & County of Denver, 165 Colo. 565, 440

P.2d 778 (1968).

Due process requirements of fairness are properly imposed on any lawful exercise of jurisdiction by the city council of a home rule city. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131 (1970).

Home rule town met requirements of due process when it substantially complied with its own procedures in adopting ordinance. Lot Thirty-Four Venture, L.L.C. v. Town of Telluride, 976 P.2d 303 (Colo. App. 1998), aff'd on other grounds, 3 P.3d 30 (Colo. 2000).

Towns may free themselves from jurisdiction of commissions. Under this section any town may free itself from the jurisdiction of any commission, special or otherwise, having power to interfere in local affairs. Town of Holyoke v. Smith, 75 Colo. 286, 226 P. 158 (1924).

Subsection (f) is intended to preserve existing political entities or at least provide that such existing political entities shall be terminated only at the behest of those who created them. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

Regulation of parks does not violate section. The adoption of a charter amendment providing for the regulation and support of parks and city improvements does not constitute a "consolidation" of park districts within the meaning of subsection (f) of this section, and the amendment does not violate this section of the constitution. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

Section does not apply to persons engaged in statewide activities. This section relates only to the establishment of conditions of employment for "municipal" officers or employees rather than persons engaged in activities of a statewide concern. Evert v. Ouren, 37 Colo. App. 402, 549 P.2d 791 (1976).

This section was properly submitted as single amendment. The provisions of this section are effectual to make the regulation of municipal elections, the levy and collection of taxes for municipal purposes, and special assessments matters of municipal concern. All the provisions of the amendment are germane to its general purpose, and it was properly submitted as a single amendment. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

"Consolidation". The word "consolidation" appears on its face to be one of rather narrow meaning and, when considered in light of the policy of this section, would appear to be a word that was consciously and carefully chosen by the framers of this section. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

"Termination" and "consolidation". There is a distinction between termination and consolidation; the latter is of concern because of the possibility of an adverse effect on bondholders in a park district consolidated with another, but there is no such concern when a park district is terminated as an administrative area. In such a case existing obligations and security would not be affected. City & County of Denver v. Mewborn, 143 Colo. 407, 354 P.2d 155 (1960).

"Officer" and "employee" are not interchangeable, and the two terms are to be distinguished. City & County of Denver v. McNichols, 129 Colo. 251, 268 P.2d 1026 (1954).

General grant of eminent domain power confers no specific condemnation powers over state-owned lands. Town and water and sanitation district were not authorized to condemn state-owned property to determine feasibility of recreation and water storage project. Town of Parker v. Colo. Div. of Parks, 860 P.2d 584 (Colo. App. 1993).

The condemnation by a home rule municipality of property outside its territorial boundaries for open space and park purposes falls within the scope of the eminent domain power granted to such municipalities in this article. The eminent domain power granted to home rule municipalities in this article is not limited to the purposes specified in this section nor is the eminent domain power circumscribed when exercised extraterritorially. Rather, this article grants home rule municipalities the power to condemn property, within or outside of territorial limits, for any lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose. The extraterritorial condemnation of property need not be pursuant to a purpose that is purely local and municipal. As long as the condemnation is based on a lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose, it does not fall outside of the scope of this article merely because it potentially implicates competing state interests. Based upon statutory provisions authorizing statutory localities to condemn land for open space, parks, and recreation, as well as the traditional exercise of this power by the state's statutory and home rule municipalities, the extraterritorial condemnation of property for open space and parks is a lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose within the scope of this article. The condemnation of the landowner's property outside the territorial boundaries of the municipality was, therefore, lawful. Town of Telluride v. San Miguel Valley Corp.,185 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2008).

Section 38-1-101 (4)(b) abrogates constitutional powers granted to home rule municipalities by this article. Accordingly, the statutory provision is unconstitutional with respect to home rule municipalities. Court's inquiry need not extend beyond the question of whether the statute purports to deny home rule municipalities powers specifically granted by the constitution. No analysis of competing state and local interests is necessary where a statute purports to take away home rule powers granted by the constitution. The legislature cannot prohibit the exercise of constitutional home rule powers regardless of the state interests that may be implicated by the exercise of those powers. Town of Telluride v. San Miguel Valley Corp.,185 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2008).

Section 38-1-101 (4)(b) prohibits home rule municipalities from condemning property for parks and open space, thus denying them their constitutional power to condemn for any lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose. Section 38-1-101 (4)(b) curtails the condemnation power in this article by limiting it to the enumerated purposes in this section and also by removing certain enumerated purposes from the list. Accordingly, § 38-1-101 (4)(b) is an unconstitutional abrogation of the powers granted to home rule municipalities under this article. The general assembly has no power to enact a law that denies a right specifically granted by the constitution. Town of Telluride v. San Miguel Valley Corp.,185 P.3d 161 (Colo. 2008).

Applied in Perkins v. People ex rel. MacFarland, 59 Colo. 107, 147 P. 356 (1915); Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922); People ex rel. Setters v. Lee, 72 Colo. 598, 213 P. 583 (1923); Kingsley v. City & County of Denver, 126 Colo. 194, 247 P.2d 805 (1952); Western Heights Land Corp. v. City of Fort Collins, 146 Colo. 464, 362 P.2d 155 (1961); City of Englewood v. Crabtree, 157 Colo. 593, 404 P.2d 525, cert. dismissed, 382 U.S. 934, 86 S. Ct. 385, 15 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1965); Associated Dry Goods Corp. v. City of Arvada, 197 Colo. 491, 593 P.2d 1375 (1979); Cmty. Commc'ns Co. v. City of Boulder, 485 F. Supp. 1035 (D. Colo. 1980); City of Sheridan v. City of Englewood, 199 Colo. 348, 609 P.2d 108 (1980); Pueblo Aircraft Serv., Inc. v. City of Pueblo, 679 F.2d 805 (10th Cir. 1982); Gold Star Sausage Co. v. Kempf, 653 P.2d 397 (Colo. 1982); Glennon Heights, Inc. v. Central Bank & Trust, 658 P.2d 872 (Colo. 1983).

II. STATE POWERS RESERVED.

State's power to declare public policy not relinquished. The people in adopting this article and the amendments thereto never intended to surrender or relinquish any portion of its police power to declare the public policy of the state; but, if it had so intended, it would have been an abortive effort. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925); People ex rel. Stokes v. Newton, 106 Colo. 61, 101 P.2d 21 (1940).

No provision in this article deprives the state of its unquestioned power in declaring what the public policy of the state shall be in matters of taxation as well as in other matters of statewide importance. People v. City & County of Denver, 90 Colo. 598, 10 P.2d 1106 (1932).

State laws apply except where superseded by charter or ordinance. Under this article charter provisions of home rule municipalities, and ordinances thereunder, supersede any law of the state in conflict therewith, but state laws still are applicable to such cities except insofar as superseded by charter or by ordinance passed under the charter. Horst v. City & County of Denver, 101 Colo. 284, 73 P.2d 388 (1937); Bd. of Trustees of Firemen's Pension Fund v. People ex rel. Behrman, 119 Colo. 301, 203 P.2d 490 (1949); City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958); City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958); Conrad v. City of Thornton, 191 Colo. 444, 553 P.2d 822 (1976).

This article does not preclude regulation by state agency of public utilities serving in areas of local and municipal concern. The operation of state law is ineffective in local and municipal matters in home rule cities only to the extent that charters or ordinances governing such matters are adopted by such cities and remain in effect therein. Zelinger v. Pub. Serv. Co., 164 Colo. 424, 435 P.2d 412 (1967).

In purely local and municipal matters, home rule cities may exercise exclusive jurisdiction by passing ordinances which supersede state statutes. Until they do so, however, the Colorado Constitution provides that state statutes shall continue to apply. Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971); People v. Hizhniak, 195 Colo. 427, 579 P.2d 1131 (1978).

In matters of exclusively statewide concern, state statutes will always supersede conflicting local enactments. DeLong v. City & County of Denver, 195 Colo. 27, 576 P.2d 537 (1978).

Factors for determining whether state interest is sufficient to preempt inconsistent home rule provisions include: (1) Need for statewide uniformity of regulation; (2) impact of municipal regulations on persons living outside municipality; and (3) whether particular matter is traditionally governed by state or local government. City & County of Denver v. State, 788 P.2d 764 (Colo. 1990); Lundvall Bros. Inc. v. Voss, 812 P.2d 693 (Colo. App. 1990), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, 830 P.2d 1061 (Colo. 1992); Town of Telluride v. Lot Thirty-Four Venture, L.L.C., 3 P.3d 30 (Colo. 2000); City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

Whether a matter is of local, state, or mixed concern determines whether state or local legislation controls in that area. Boulder County Apt. Ass'n v. City of Boulder, 97 P.3d 332 (Colo. App. 2004).

Whether a matter is of local, state, or mixed concern is determined on an ad hoc basis considering the totality of the circumstances. The factors to be considered include the need for statewide uniformity, whether the municipal legislation has an extraterritorial impact, whether the subject matter is traditionally one governed by state or local government, and whether the Colorado Constitution specifically identifies that the issue should be regulated by state or local legislation. City of Northglenn v. Ibarra, 62 P.3d 151 (Colo. 2003).

Home rule cities subject to state legislation. With respect to matters of statewide concern, home rule cities are subject to state legislation. City of Colo. Springs v. State, 626 P.2d 1122 (Colo. 1980).

In regard to matters of statewide concern, home rule cities may only act when authorized by the constitution or state statute. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992); Town of Telluride v. Lot Thirty-Four Venture, L.L.C., 3 P.3d 30 (Colo. 2000); City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001); Boulder County Apt. Ass'n v. City of Boulder, 97 P.3d 332 (Colo. App. 2004).

Thus, state may adopt uniform statewide legislative program, even though the subject has a local or municipal character, where the municipality has not acted. Rabinoff v. District Court, 145 Colo. 225, 360 P.2d 114 (1961).

All statutes of general nature are applicable within the cities. The language contained in this section providing for the application of general laws within the cities operating thereunder can have but one meaning, fixed and definite--that all statutes of a general nature shall have application within municipalities. It is the precise converse of the language of the grant to municipalities--of powers limited to local and municipal matters. There is perfect harmony between the language of the grant and the language of the reservation of power. The sum of the two equals the total of the state's inherent power in this respect. City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 251 U.S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 219, 64 L. Ed. 407 (1920).

Ordinance of home rule city in clear opposition to general state law is invalid. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958); Vick v. People, 166 Colo. 565, 445 P.2d 220 (1968).

Where the subject matter of a municipal ordinance is of statewide concern and the terms of the ordinance authorize what the general assembly has forbidden, or forbid what the general assembly has expressly authorized, the ordinance must fail. Bennion v. City & County of Denver, 180 Colo. 213, 504 P.2d 350 (1972).

While this provision established exclusive home rule over matters of local concern, statutes dealing with matters of statewide concern operate to the exclusion of conflicting local ordinances. Century Elec. Serv. & Repair, Inc. v. Stone, 193 Colo. 181, 564 P.2d 953 (1977).

Statute declaring rent control a matter of statewide importance preempted conflicting home rule town ordinance that mandated affordable housing mitigation. Lot Thirty-Four Venture, L.L.C. v. Town of Telluride, 976 P.2d 303 (Colo. App. 1998), aff'd on other grounds, 3 P.3d 30 (Colo. 2000).

Both home rule city and state may legislate on same subject. There is nothing basically invalid about legislation on the same subject by both a home rule city and the state. Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971); Bennion v. City & County of Denver, 180 Colo. 213, 504 P.2d 350 (1972); City of Aurora v. Martin, 181 Colo. 72, 507 P.2d 868 (1973).

Both the state and home rule cities may legislate in matters of local concern, however a local ordinance will supersede any conflicting state statute on a local matter. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992); Winslow Constr. Co. v. City and County of Denver, 960 P.2d 685 (Colo. 1998); Boulder County Apt. Ass'n v. City of Boulder, 97 P.3d 332 (Colo. App. 2004).

Factors to consider in determining whether the state's interest is sufficient to justify preemption of the inconsistent home rule provisions include: (1) The need for statewide uniformity of regulation; (2) the extraterritorial impact, i.e., the impact of the municipal regulation or home rule provision on persons living outside the municipal limits; (3) any other state interests; and (4) the asserted local interests in the municipal regulation contemplated by the home rule provision, e.g., does the Colorado constitution specifically commit a particular matter to state or local regulation. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

Test for determining whether municipal ordinance and statute conflict is whether the ordinance authorizes what the state forbids or forbids what the state has expressly authorized. City of Aurora v. Martin, 181 Colo. 72, 507 P.2d 868 (1973); R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992).

City has no preemptive right. Even where there is a demonstrable local interest, as well as a state interest, a home rule city does not by virtue of this article derive preemptive authority. Century Elec. Serv. & Repair, Inc. v. Stone, 193 Colo. 181, 564 P.2d 953 (1977).

State statute is not preemption of subject matter. The mere enactment of a state statute does not constitute a preemption by the state of the matter regulated so as to void municipal ordinances on the same subject matter. City of Aurora v. Martin, 181 Colo. 72, 507 P.2d 868 (1973).

Where a subject of statewide concern is involved, a state statute on the matter does not necessarily preempt the home rule city from adopting a city charter provision or ordinance. Conrad v. City of Thornton, 191 Colo. 444, 553 P.2d 822 (1976).

Difference in penalties in statute and ordinance does not necessarily establish conflict. Except in felony categories, mere difference in penalty provisions in a statute and municipal ordinance does not necessarily establish a conflict. City of Aurora v. Martin, 181 Colo. 72, 507 P.2d 868 (1973).

If a statute provides for a substantially greater penalty than does a similar municipal ordinance, this fact may be considered in ruling whether the general assembly intended, by enactment of the statute, to preempt that field of regulation. City of Aurora v. Martin, 181 Colo. 72, 507 P.2d 868 (1973).

Statute specifically delegating power of regulation to cities or towns would be useful in deciding that the state did not intend to preempt that field of regulation, but the absence of such a statute is not determinative of the issue. City of Aurora v. Martin, 181 Colo. 72, 507 P.2d 868 (1973).

State may reduce area of municipal authority. In the field of local and municipal matters, the authority granted home rule cities by this article may be taken away by subsequent amendments to the constitution or by legislative acts broadening the concept of what constitutes matters of statewide concern. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

The state may delegate additional power in areas of both local and state concern. The authority of the state to delegate police powers to the municipality in those areas where the subject matter, although predominantly general, is also to some extent municipal is an approved practice even though there be a state statute on the same subject. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

A state may grant legislative authority to a home rule municipality on a subject such as gambling which has both general and local attributes. Woolverton v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 247, 361 P.2d 982 (1961).

In such areas, home rule city has supplemental, not superseding, authority. In matters of both local and state interest, the home rule city does not have a superseding authority; it has a supplemental authority which permits its ordinance to coexist with the state statute, so long as they are not in conflict. Vick v. People, 166 Colo. 565, 445 P.2d 220 (1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 945, 89 S. Ct. 1273, 22 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1969); R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992).

Mutual exclusion doctrine is not applicable. Some subjects are neither strictly local nor exclusively statewide, and the mutual exclusion doctrine is not applicable to these intermediate subjects. Woolverton v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 247, 361 P.2d 982 (1961).

State interest in uniformity does not outweigh a home rule city's interest in preventing tax avoidance by purchasing outside the city. Although the general assembly has an interest in promoting the free flow of commerce between jurisdictions and preventing multiple taxation by local governments, a home rule city collecting a use tax of only the difference between what would have been collected in sales tax had the equipment been purchased in the home rule city and any sales or use tax previously paid to another municipality does not conflict with state interests. Winslow Constr. Co. v. City & County of Denver, 960 P.2d 685 (Colo. 1998).

Cities may regulate in areas where state has acted. In the absence of constitutional limitations, the general assembly may confer police power on a municipal corporation over subjects within the provisions of existing general state statutes, and, if there is no conflict with general law, municipal corporations, under their general police powers, may regulate on municipal subjects on which the state has acted. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

Where the charter or legislation confers on a municipality express power to legislate on a particular subject, both state and city may legislate thereon even though it is not a subject of local concern. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

City is state agency in matters of state control. There being no constitutional provision requiring that in matters of statewide interest the regulation thereof be conducted by the state alone to the exclusion of a home rule city, it follows that in matters beyond the scope of this article in the area of state control, a city is an agency of the state and subject to control by the general assembly. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

After the adoption of the article, the city and county of Denver, as a municipality, continued to be, as the city was before, an agency of the state for the purpose of government and as such amenable to state control in all matters of a public, as distinguished from matters of a local, character as are other municipalities. Keefe v. People, 37 Colo. 317, 87 P. 791 (1906); People ex rel. Hershey v. McNichols, 91 Colo. 141, 13 P.2d 266 (1932); Spears Free Clinic & Hosp. for Poor Children v.

State Bd. of Health, 122 Colo. 147, 220 P.2d 872 (1950).

A municipality is an agency of the state; to it the state delegates certain powers and duties. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958); Evert v. Ouren, 37 Colo. App. 402, 549 P.2d 791 (1976).

Constitutional exemptions cannot be changed by home rule cities. At the time of the adoption of this article, the public policy of the state provided for a constitutional exemption from general taxation of cemeteries not for profit, and a statutory exemption from local assessments, which applies to every portion of the state. It is just as applicable to the home rule cities now as it was and is to municipalities organized under general statutes. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

Denver is subject to the public policy of the state which expressly exempts cemeteries from special assessments for local improvements. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

State never relinquished power to enact laws to punish crimes and misdemeanors, and the operation of such laws embraces all of the people of the state, whether living in municipalities or counties created directly by the constitution or organized under general laws. Such legislation would not be valid if it expressly exempted the city and county of Denver from its operation. Keefe v. People, 37 Colo. 317, 87 P. 791 (1906).

Larceny being the subject of statute and of statewide concern is distinguished from a local and municipal matter in which municipalities may exercise jurisdiction, and a municipal ordinance purporting to cover such field is invalid. Gazotti v. City & County of Denver, 143 Colo. 311, 352 P.2d 963 (1960).

Shoplifting ordinance held not constitutionally applicable to petty theft. When a municipal shoplifting ordinance which does not limit shoplifting to goods not exceeding $100 in value and thereby goes beyond a municipal or local matter contains no severable operative provisions, and when plaintiff allegedly takes articles valued over $100, the ordinance cannot be constitutionally applied to petty theft. Quintana v. Edgewater Mun. Court, 178 Colo. 213, 496 P.2d 1009 (1972).

Prosecution and deterrence of juveniles who commit minor offenses such as shoplifting and unlawful concealment of a weapon is a matter of mixed local and state concerns. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992).

Registration of vital statistics. The general assembly has power to impose upon Denver a liability to pay the compensation of a local registrar of vital statistics, and the city cannot avoid the expense by failing to have such an officer of its own selection appointed. People ex rel. Hershey v. McNichols, 91 Colo. 141, 13 P.2d 266 (1932).

Section 25-2-101 et seq., concerning vital statistics, is a valid exercise of the police power of the state, and it operates in all parts of the state including Denver and other home rule cities. People ex rel. Hershey v. McNichols, 91 Colo. 141, 13 P.2d 266 (1932).

Regulation of traffic in intoxicating liquors. The collection of liquor license fees by a city is not a local and municipal matter, because art. XXII, Colo. Const., concerning intoxicating liquor, applies to the whole state. Walker v. People, 55 Colo. 402, 135 P. 794 (1913); City & County of Denver v. People, 103 Colo. 565, 88 P.2d 89, appeal dismissed sub nom. City & County of Denver v. Colo., 307 U.S. 615, 59 S. Ct. 1044, 83 L. Ed.

1496 (1939).

Art. XXII, Colo. Const., applies to the whole state and supersedes all possibility of authority in the city of Denver to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors contained in this article. People ex rel. Carlson v. City Council, 60 Colo. 370, 153 P. 690 (1915).

Small loans. The state has preempted small loans regulation by legislating upon it. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Public utility rates. The addition of art. XXV, Colo. Const., determined that all power to regulate rates of public utilities within a home rule city, as well as elsewhere in the state, should be vested in the public utilities commission. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131 (1970).

Where a city had regulatory power only as long as it saw fit to exercise it and withdrew from the field of the regulation of rates charged by public utilities by a charter amendment, thereupon the law of the state was automatically effective. The public utilities commission had jurisdiction to regulate the rates of the public service company from and after the date of the charter amendment without regard to the question of whether the company operations were of local and municipal or statewide concern. Zelinger v. Pub. Serv. Co., 164 Colo. 424, 435 P.2d 412 (1967).

Privately owned public utilities. The purpose of art. XXV, Colo. Const., was to grant to the general assembly the authority to regulate privately owned public utilities within home rule cities, and, without the grant of such power, the regulation of service among the inhabitants of the city was a local matter, and laws of the state in conflict with ordinances and charter provisions enacted pursuant to this article had no force and effect within the municipality. City & County of Denver v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 181 Colo. 38, 507 P.2d 871 (1973).

Municipally owned utility. A municipally owned public utility, as to service furnished consumers beyond its territorial jurisdiction, should be subject to the same regulation to which a privately owned public utility must conform in similar circumstances. City & County of Denver v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 181 Colo. 38, 507 P.2d 871 (1973).

Statewide telephone system, with its need for coordinated intra and interstate communications is a matter of statewide concern heavily outweighing any possible municipal interest. City of Englewood v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 163 Colo. 400, 431 P.2d 40 (1967); City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

A municipal ordinance that conflicts with the specific provisions of a state statute concerning telecommunications providers, which imposes express limitations on local regulation of telecommunications providers, is preempted and invalid. City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

Gas company franchise. A franchise ordinance adopted by a home rule city granting to a gas company the right to operate a gas plant in the city and to supply gas service to citizens of that city did not suspend the power of the state to regulate and did not intend to do so. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131 (1970).

Denver housing authority is an independent entity not subject to the charter of Denver even though the city forms a part of the district. Insofar as the exercise of any power granted to the Denver housing authority under applicable state statutes is concerned, this article has no application. People ex rel. Stokes v. Newton, 106 Colo. 61, 101 P.2d 21 (1940).

Urban renewal authority is a proper exercise of the police power of the state, and, if a city has not exercised the authority to legislate by amending its charter, the state law controls. Rabinoff v. District Court, 145 Colo. 225, 360 P.2d 114 (1961).

Regulation of state personnel employees. Under the charter of Colorado Springs, adopted under the authority of this article, classification affecting the position of persons in the classified service must be by the state personnel board; that body alone may properly determine the order of dismissal of employees, and the city council and manager of safety cannot justify unwarranted dismissals on the ground of effecting municipal economy or of promoting efficiency. Birdsall v. Sanders, 96 Colo. 275, 42 P.2d 194 (1935).

The determination of whether an employee is entitled to unemployment compensation benefits is a matter of statewide concern and state statutes supercede ordinances of home rule cities. Colo. Springs v. Indus. Comm'n, 720 P.2d 601 (Colo. App. 1985), aff'd, 749 P.2d 412 (Colo. 1988).

Social services system is a matter of statewide rather than local or municipal concern. Evert v. Ouren, 37 Colo. App. 402, 549 P.2d 791 (1976); Dempsey v. City & County of Denver, 649 P.2d 726 (Colo. App. 1982).

Firemen's pension act. Because the subject of firemen's pensions has statewide dimensions, inconsistent provisions of a city ordinance must fail insofar as they are inconsistent with the firemen's pension act, and the act must be enforced. Huff v. Mayor of Colo. Springs, 182 Colo. 108, 512 P.2d 632 (1973).

The establishment of pension plans for firemen is a matter of statewide concern. City of Colo. Springs v. State, 626 P.2d 1122 (Colo. 1980).

Licensing of electricians. The state has a clear concern in ensuring that Colorado electricians have free access to markets throughout the state in eliminating duplicative and expensive licensing and in establishing a statewide policy on the required competence of electricians, and therefore the licensing ordinance of a home-rule city could not supersede state law. Century Elec. Serv. & Repair, Inc. v. Stone, 193 Colo. 181, 564 P.2d 953 (1977).

Regulation of obscenity. The question of the regulation of obscenity is properly a matter of statewide concern under this section. Pierce v. City & County of Denver, 193 Colo. 347, 565 P.2d 1337 (1977).

Regulation of obscenity as a matter of statewide concern under this section is consistent with the community-based standards required by the first amendment of the United States Constitution. Pierce v. City & County of Denver, 193 Colo. 347, 565 P.2d 1337 (1977).

State's interest in efficient oil and gas development and production as manifested in the Oil and Gas Conservation Act preempts a home-rule city from totally excluding all drilling operations within city limits. Voss v. Lundvall Bros., Inc., 830 P.2d 1061 (Colo. 1992).

While the Oil and Gas Conservation Act does not totally preempt a home-rule city's exercise of land-use authority over oil and gas development and operations within the territorial limits of the city, the state-wide interest in the efficient development and production of oil and gas resources in a manner calculated to prevent waste, as well as in protecting the correlative rights of owners and producers in a common pool or source to a just and equitable share of the profits of production, prevents a home-rule city from exercising its land-use authority so as to totally ban the drilling of oil, gas, or hydrocarbon wells within the city. Voss v. Lundvall Bros., Inc., 830 P.2d 1061 (Colo.

Bond issuance. City charter provision that gives city power to issue bonds is not inconsistent with § 29-2-112, so the suppression doctrine of this section dooes not apply. Leek v. City of Golden, 870 P.2d 580 (Colo. App. 1993).

The protection of adjudicated delinquent children in need of state supervision and appropriate treatment is a matter of statewide concern and is sufficiently dominant to override a home rule city's interest in regulating the number of registered juvenile sex offenders who may live in one foster care family. City of Northglenn v. Ibarra, 62 P.3d 151 (Colo. 2003).

III. POWERS GRANTED TO CHARTER CITIES.

A. Control of Local and Municipal Matters.

Purpose of section. The purpose of this section is to give municipalities exclusive control in matters of local concern only. Speer v. People ex rel. Rush, 52 Colo. 325, 122 P. 768 (1912); Mauff v. People, 52 Colo. 562, 123 P. 101 (1912); City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925); People ex rel. Hershey v. McNichols, 91 Colo. 141, 13 P.2d 266 (1932); Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971).

Home rule cities under this section have exclusive control only over matters of truly local concern. City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216 (Colo. 1982); City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

A home rule city's police powers are supreme only in matters of purely local concern, and the fact that an ordinance is justified as a legitimate exercise of a city's police powers in no way establishes that its substance is purely a matter of local concerns and in no way alters its powers vis-a-vis state statutes in matters of mixed or statewide concern. City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

Even though an ordinance may be an otherwise legitimate exercise of a municipality's police powers, to the extent that it conflicts with a state statute concerning a matter of mixed statewide and local concern, it is invalid. City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

Under this section the city may assume exclusive control of all matters of local and municipal concern. Bd. of Comm'rs v. City of Colo. Springs, 66 Colo. 111, 180 P. 301 (1919); City & County of Denver v. Bossie, 83 Colo. 329, 266 P. 214 (1928).

The city and county of Denver is a municipal corporation created by this article as a home rule city with exclusive power to legislate on matters of local and municipal concern. Independent Dairymen's Ass'n v. City & County of Denver, 142 F.2d 940 (10th Cir. 1944).

The very essence of a home rule city is embodied in the constitutional mandate that, in its local and municipal affairs, it has full, complete, and exclusive authority and the general assembly is powerless to change such essential concept of home rule. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

Constitution confers upon home rule city legally protected interest in its local concerns. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

City's ordinance requiring a single subject to be expressed in ballot initiatives does not offend the Colorado constitution. Bruce v. City of Colo. Springs, 252 P.3d 30 (Colo. App. 2010).

How home rule city exercises exclusive jurisdiction.

Where purely local or municipal matters are involved, a home rule city may exercise exclusive jurisdiction by adopting a charter provision or by passing an ordinance which will supersede a state statute. Conrad v. City of Thornton, 191 Colo. 444, 553 P.2d 822 (1976).

This power equals that possessed by general assembly in granting charters. This article confers upon municipalities organized hereunder, and which have adopted such a charter, every power possessed by the general assembly in granting charters generally. Londoner v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 15, 119 P. 156 (1911); People ex rel. Moore v. Perkins, 56 Colo. 17, 137 P. 55 (1913); Watson v. City of Ft. Collins, 86 Colo. 305, 281 P. 355 (1929); Fishel v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 576, 108 P.2d 236 (1940); Lehman v. City & County of Denver, 144 Colo. 109, 355 P.2d 309 (1960); Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962); Roosevelt v. City of Englewood, 176 Colo. 576, 492 P.2d 65 (1971).

This article intended to confer not only the powers specially mentioned but to bestow upon the people of Denver every power possessed by the general assembly in the making of a charter for Denver. City & County of Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 P. 1066 (1905); City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958); Lehman v. City & County of Denver, 144 Colo. 109, 355 P.2d 309 (1960).

The power granted by this section is determined by ascertaining whether the general assembly in the absence of the article could have conferred upon the municipality the power in question. Londoner v. City & County of Denver, 52 Colo. 15, 119 P. 156 (1911); City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 251 U.S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 219, 64 L. Ed. 407 (1920); City & County of Denver v. Henry, 95 Colo. 582, 38 P.2d 895 (1934); Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

This article confers upon home rule cities all powers in local and municipal matters which the general assembly could grant. Laverty v. Straub, 110 Colo. 311, 134 P.2d 208 (1943).

Home rule city not inferior to general assembly concerning own affairs. By virtue of this article, a home rule city is not inferior to the general assembly concerning its own local and municipal affairs. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City of Thornton, 629 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1981); Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

With respect to purely local matters, the legislative power of special charter cities is, with exceptions not material here, as comprehensive as that of our general assembly over municipalities organized under the general statutes. Sanborn v. City of Boulder, 74 Colo. 358, 221 P. 1077 (1923).

For the government and administration of its local and municipal matters, the people of Denver are given the power to legislate to the same extent as the general assembly may with respect to statutory municipalities concerning their local and municipal matters. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

There is nothing in the charter which supports an argument that Denver, as a home rule city, is more restricted than a so-called legislative city. Lehman v. City & County of Denver, 144 Colo. 109, 355 P.2d 309 (1960).

This section grants home rule cities plenary legislative authority over matters exclusively local in nature. McNichols v. City & County of Denver, 101 Colo. 316, 74 P.2d 99 (1937); City & County of Denver v. Palmer, 140 Colo. 27, 342 P.2d 687 (1959); Kelly v. City of Fort Collins, 163 Colo. 520, 431 P.2d 785 (1967).

The city of Denver, pursuant to this article, adopted in 1904 what is known as a home rule charter. By this action of the city, the people within the territory of the city and county of Denver were vested, in virtue of said article, with the power to legislate for themselves as to all rightful subjects of legislation and were no longer subject to the legislative power of the state. City & County of Denver v. Stenger, 277 F. 865 (8th Cir. 1921).

As a general rule, the powers vested in home rule cities, not specifically limited by constitution or charter, may be exercised through their legislative authority. People ex rel. McQuaid v. Pickens, 91 Colo. 109, 12 P.2d 349 (1932); Fishel v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 576, 108 P.2d 236 (1940); Laverty v. Straub, 110 Colo. 311, 134 P.2d 208 (1943).

Under this article the city and county of Denver has implied authority to carry out its functions as a charter city which are not of statewide concern or prohibited by other constitutional provisions. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Home rule cities are granted every power possessed by the general assembly as to local and municipal matters, unless restricted by the terms of their charter. Serv. Oil Co. v. Rhodus, 179 Colo. 335, 500 P.2d 807 (1972).

General assembly is deprived of this power. By this section the general assembly has been deprived of only a part of its powers; namely, the power to legislate concerning matters of local and municipal concern, as distinguished from those of general, statewide concern. The amendment does not create a state within a state. As to matters of general, statewide concern, the powers of the general assembly remain unimpaired. City & County of Denver v. Henry, 95 Colo. 582, 38 P.2d 895 (1934); Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971).

After the adoption of this article, the general assembly had nothing to give in the way of power or authority to provide capital improvements to a new superstructure of government encompassing multiple counties, towns, and cities and was deprived of all power it might otherwise have had to legislate concerning matters of local and municipal concern. This is particularly true where a home rule city has adopted a charter or ordinances governing such matters. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

Home rule city cannot delegate exclusive power. When the people by constitutional provision have lodged exclusive power in a political subdivision of government such as a home rule city, that power may be exercised only by the entity to which it was granted, and the home rule city cannot delegate the power elsewhere. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

Elected officials responsible for performing legislative functions may not constitutionally delegate their ultimate decision-making authority to persons who are unaccountable to the electorate. City & County of Denver v. Denver Firefighters Local 858, 663 P.2d 1032 (Colo. 1983).

Grievance arbitration pursuant to existing contract. When an arbitrator is required to interpret the provisions of an existing agreement, he or she acts in a judicial capacity rather than in a legislative one. The authority to interpret an existing contract, therefore, does not constitute legislative authority, and the nondelegation principle is not implicated in grievance arbitration. City & County of Denver v. Denver Firefighters Local 858, 663 P.2d 1032 (Colo. 1983).

General assembly cannot confer power on other entity. The general assembly could not undertake to create by statute a super-municipal body politic superimposed over the city and county of Denver and surrounding cities and counties. Such enactment would clash with this provision of the constitution. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

"Local and municipal" is not a fixed expression that may be eternalized. What is local, as distinguished from general and statewide, depends somewhat upon time and circumstances. Technological and economic forces play their part in any such transition. People v. Graham, 107 Colo. 202, 110 P.2d 256 (1941); City & County of Denver v. Pike, 140 Colo. 17, 342 P.2d 688 (1959).

Classification of local concerns subject to change. What once was a matter of local or local and statewide concern may by constitutional amendment become a matter solely of statewide concern. The people have not surrendered their right to amend the constitution in any manner in which they see fit, and such amendments are always valid unless repugnant to the constitution of the United States. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Whether a particular business activity is a matter of municipal concern to a city under this article depends upon the inherent nature of the activity and the impact or effect which it may have or may not have upon areas outside of a municipality. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958); Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Activity of entity taxed is not controlling when testing whether Denver is acting in a purely local and municipal matter. Security Life & Accident Co. v. Temple, 177 Colo. 14, 492 P.2d 63 (1972).

Charter and ordinances on local concerns may supersede conflicting state statutes. This section empowers cities and towns of the state to adopt charters which shall be the organic law and extend to all local and municipal matters. Such charter and the ordinances made pursuant thereto in such matters supersede within the territorial limits and other jurisdiction any law of the state in conflict. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925); City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958); City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958); Gidley v. City of Colo. Springs, 160 Colo. 482, 418 P.2d 291 (1966).

Where home rule municipalities have properly adopted regulatory ordinances which are purely in the municipal domain, existing state laws upon the same subject are inapplicable because the local ordinance controls. Kelly v. City of Fort Collins, 163 Colo. 520, 431 P.2d 785 (1967); Vick v. People, 166 Colo. 565, 445 P.2d 220 (1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 945, 89 S. Ct. 1273, 22 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1969).

In purely local and municipal matters, home rule cities may exercise exclusive jurisdiction by passing ordinances which supersede state statutes. Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971); DeLong v. City & County of Denver, 195 Colo. 27, 576 P.2d 537 (1978); Boulder County Apt. Ass'n v. City of Boulder, 97 P.3d 332 (Colo. App. 2004).

Home rule cities may pass viable ordinances which supersede state statutes upon the same subject matter where the matters contained therein are matters of exclusively local concern. Bennion v. City & County of Denver, 180 Colo. 213, 504 P.2d 350 (1972).

Both the state and a home rule city may legislate in matters of local concern, however a local ordinance will supersede a conflicting state statute on a local matter. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992); City & County of Denver v. Qwest Corp., 18 P.3d 748 (Colo. 2001).

For state statute to be superseded by ordinance of home rule city, two requirements must be met. The state statute and the ordinance must be in conflict, and the ordinance must pertain to a purely local matter. Where both of these conditions exist, the state statute is clearly without effect within the jurisdiction of the home rule city. Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971).

Nonconflicting legislation by state and city may coexist. As to a home rule ordinance and a state statute, if neither piece of legislation permits or licenses what the other forbids and prohibits, the legislation is not in conflict, and both pieces of legislation may validly coexist. Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971); Boulder County Apt. Ass'n v. City of Boulder, 97 P.3d 332 (Colo. App. 2004).

It is not necessary that each legislative subject be classified and fitted into either a statewide or local and municipal category, with the result that either the home rule city or the state, but not both, is empowered to exercise exclusive authority. This section does not impose any such strict requirement. Woolverton v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 247, 361 P.2d 982 (1961).

The mere fact that the state, in the exercise of the police power, has made certain regulations does not prohibit a municipality from exacting additional requirements. So long as there is no conflict between the two and the requirements of the municipal bylaw are not in themselves pernicious as being unreasonable or discriminatory, both will stand. Woolverton v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 247, 361 P.2d 982 (1961).

If a subject matter is of both local and statewide concern, then a home-rule charter provision or ordinance and a state statute may coexist if they do not conflict. A home-rule city possesses what has been labeled a "supplemental authority" to legislate on a subject matter of concurrent concern. DeLong v. City & County of Denver, 195 Colo. 27, 576 P.2d 537 (1978).

In matters of local and state concerns, nonconflicting legislation enacted by the state and a home rule city may coexist, but if conflicting, state statute would supersede the local ordinance. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992).

Local, state, or mixed local and state concern analysis appropriate when considering a statute and a possibly conflicting municipal charter or ordinance. U S West Commc'ns v. City of Longmont, 948 P.2d 509 (Colo. 1997).

Local, state, or mixed local and state concern analysis not appropriate when considering a municipal charter or ordinance and a possibly conflicting filed tariff. U S West Commc'ns v. City of Longmont, 948 P.2d 509 (Colo. 1997).

Common law rule requiring utilities to pay relocation costs arises only when a future contract, franchise agreement, or state statute specifically requires a municipality to bear such costs. U S West Commc'ns v. City of Longmont, 948 P.2d 509 (Colo. 1997).

Where a home rule provision of the constitution conflicts with a statutory enactment of the general assembly and the respective authorities of the state legislature and the home rule municipality must therefore be reconciled, the court has recognized three broad categories of regulatory matters: (1) Matters of local concern; (2) matters of statewide concern; and (3) matters of mixed state and local concern. The determination that a matter is of local concern, statewide concern, or of mixed state and local concern controls the ultimate resolution of such a conflict. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

A counterpart ordinance is one which deals with a local and municipal matter, enactment of which supersedes the state statute on a subject within the boundaries of the municipality. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

Municipal ordinance on gambling valid despite existing state statute. Woolverton v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 247, 361 P.2d 982 (1961).

State statute as to disturbing peace not superseded by nonconflicting home rule ordinance. Vela v. People, 174 Colo. 465, 484 P.2d 1204 (1971).

Control of outdoor advertising signs. Control of outdoor advertising signs along the roads of state highway system within a home-rule municipality is a matter of mixed local and statewide concern which may be regulated by the home-rule municipality, but state law supersedes where municipal regulation conflicts. Nat. Advertising Co. v. State Dept. of Hwys., 751 P.2d 632 (Colo. 1988).

Municipal ordinance which provides that delinquent assessments for water or sewer services be certified to the county treasurer for collection may coexist with similar state legislation if there is no conflict. City of Craig v. Hammat, 809 P.2d 1034 (Colo. App. 1990).

Regulation of pesticides is a matter affecting the health and welfare of the people and therefore is within the legislative power of a home rule city. Coparr, Ltd. v. City of Boulder, 735 F. Supp. 363 (D. Colo. 1989).

Enumerated purposes of § 1 of this article were superseded by the general standard in this section of "local and municipal matters". Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

The limitation of "said powers and purposes" in § 1 upon home rule cities was removed by the grant of powers in local and municipal matters contained in this provision. Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

Specific grant of powers to provide water works for inhabitants of Denver in § 1 of this article does not prevent Denver from providing water to users outside its boundaries. Denver v. Colo. River Water Conservation Dist., 696 P.2d 730 (Colo. 1985).

Because the state's interest under the Peace Officers Standards and Training Act was not sufficient to outweigh Denver's home rule authority, the provisions of this section supersede the conflicting provisions of the POST Act. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

The qualification and certification of Denver deputy sheriffs is a local concern, specifically, where it was shown that there was no need for statewide uniformity of training that would include Denver deputy sheriffs; that the extraterritorial impact of Denver deputy sheriffs is, at best, de minimis; that Denver deputy sheriffs do not substantially impact public safety beyond the boundaries of Denver; and that Denver's interest in the training and certification of its deputy sheriffs is substantial and has direct textual support in the Colorado Constitution and in case law precedent. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

The holding regarding the training and certification under the POST Act is limited to Denver deputy sheriffs since Colorado Constitution article XX, § 2, pertains only to the city and county of Denver. Fraternal Order of Police, Lodge 27 v. Denver, 926 P.2d 582 (Colo. 1996).

Municipal policy equivalent of state action. The municipal policy exercised by a home rule city in Colorado is the equivalent of "state action" when exercised in connection with municipal affairs. Pueblo Aircraft Serv., Inc. v. City of Pueblo, 498 F. Supp. 1205 (D. Colo. 1980), aff'd, 679 F.2d 805 (10th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1126, 103 S. Ct. 762, 74 L. Ed. 2d 977 (1983).

As to state action exemptions under federal antitrust laws, see Cmty. Commc'ns Co. v. City of Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 102 S. Ct. 835, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982).

B. Specific Powers.

1. In General.

The object of this section and § 4 of article 20 is to give the taxpaying electors of home rule cities absolute control over the granting of franchises to use city streets, alleys, and public places. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

City council cannot enter into a contract which will bind succeeding city councils and thereby deprive them of the unrestricted exercise of the legislative power. Therefore, the city council could adopt a new pay plan for city employees. Keeling v. City of Grand Junction, 689 P.2d 679 (Colo. App. 1984).

The right of home rule cities to grant franchises is not unconstitutionally interfered with by § 40-3-106 (4), which results in the customers within a municipality which have granted a franchise paying the cost of the franchise fee as part of the rates for the service. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Section 40-3-106 (4) does not affect either a home rule city's ability to negotiate and grant franchises and to collect franchise fees or a fixed utility's obligation to pay to a municipality the entire amount of the franchise fee negotiated and, therefore, does not violate this section or § 4 of this article or article XXV of this constitution. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Municipal court. Under this article a municipal court for the city and county of Denver may be created by ordinance. People ex rel. McQuaid v. Pickens, 91 Colo. 109, 12 P.2d 349 (1932).

Home rule cities may not deny substantive rights of state citizens. This constitutional authority, broad as it is concerning the creation, organization, and administration of municipal courts, is limited in scope to those aspects of court organization and operation which are local and municipal in nature and does not empower home rule cities to deny substantive rights conferred upon all of the citizens of the state by the general assembly. Hardamon v. Municipal Court, 178 Colo. 271, 497 P.2d 1000 (1972).

Right to jury in petty offense cases. Since the right to a jury in petty offense cases is a substantive right granted to all of the citizens of the state, without regard to the place where the offense may have occurred or the court in which trial may be held, home rule cities do not have the power to deny such a right by reason of the authority constitutionally vested in home rule cities by this section. Hardamon v. Municipal Court, 178 Colo. 271, 497 P.2d 1000 (1972).

Jurisdiction of municipal court. A home rule city does not have the power to adopt and enforce in its municipal courts an ordinance concerning larceny which is not a matter of local and municipal concern in which a home rule city may exercise jurisdiction. Gazotti v. City & County of Denver, 143 Colo. 311, 352 P.2d 963 (1960).

Municipal courts are particularly adaptable to the handling of the crime of shoplifting of articles of relatively small value, and this type of theft should be combated not only by state authorities in state courts but by police departments in municipal courts. Quintana v. Edgewater Mun. Court, 178 Colo. 213, 496 P.2d 1009 (1972).

Where ordinances adopted pursuant to this article are violated which have counterparts in the statutory law of the state and the trial and determination of such violations has been in accordance with criminal procedure, the municipal courts have the power to impose consecutive sentences for such violations. Schooley v. Cain, 142 Colo. 485, 351 P.2d 389 (1960).

Municipal court judges. When acting pursuant to amended art. VI, Colo. Const., the court functions as a state court and the judge as a state judge; whereas, acting pursuant to this section, the court functions as a municipal or police court and the judge as a municipal or police judge. The validity of municipal judges functioning in a dual capacity, exercising jurisdiction under a municipal charter and ordinances and also under state laws as justices of the peace, has been expressly recognized. Blackman v. County Court ex rel. City & County of Denver, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969).

Appointment of municipal judges. Section 13-10-105 (1)(a), relating to appointment of municipal judges, read in context with this section makes it clear that the statute's unambiguous language offers home rule cities the opportunity to specify the terms under which a municipal judge holds his or her office. People ex rel. People of Thornton v. Horan, 192 Colo. 144, 556 P.2d 1217 (1976), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 966, 97 S. Ct. 2922, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1061 (1977); Artes-Roy v. City of Aspen, 856 P.2d 823 (Colo. 1993).

Police court. Subsection (b) authorizes the creation of police courts by home rule cities and grants power to define and regulate jurisdiction and appoint officers for these courts. Blackman v. County Court, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969); Huff v. Police Court, 173 Colo. 414, 480 P.2d 561 (1971).

When a home rule municipality grants its municipal court exclusive original jurisdiction over all matters arising under its charter, ordinances, and other enactments, the district court is deprived of subject matter jurisdiction over such matters. Town of Frisco v. Baum, 90 P.3d 845 (Colo. 2004); Olson v. Hillside Cmty. Church SBC, 124 P.3d 874 (Colo. App. 2005).

Ordinances for public health and safety. Under this section the city and the council have full authority to provide for public health and safety by ordinance. Averch v. City & County of Denver, 78 Colo. 246, 242 P. 47 (1925).

The enactment of adequate measures by municipalities to insure safe and healthful living conditions through housing codes designed to protect the health and welfare of the public is the exercise of the police power in its purest sense. Apple v. City & County of Denver, 154 Colo. 166, 390 P.2d 91 (1964).

Police power prevails. As between proprietary powers given to a special district and the police power to protect its citizens given to a home rule city, the police power prevails. Metro. Denver Sewage v. Commerce City, 745 P.2d 1041 (Colo. App. 1987).

Zoning under this section is a local and municipal matter. Roosevelt v. City of Englewood, 176 Colo. 576, 492 P.2d 65 (1971); City of Colo. Springs v. Securcare Self Storage, Inc., 10 P.3d 1244 (Colo. 2000).

A zoning ordinance adopted by a home rule city, aimed at establishing low-cost housing in a specific area within that city, is a matter of purely local concern, and the city derives its authority to enact zoning ordinances of this type and content under the home rule provisions of the constitution and not from state statute. Any alleged conflict, between the ordinance and state code provisions as to which controls, is resolved in favor of the local ordinance. Moore v. City of Boulder, 29 Colo. App. 248, 484 P.2d 134 (1971).

The general assembly has power to legislate zoning regulations applicable to statutory cities, but where, however, the charter of a home rule city exercises the power delegated to it by the Colorado Constitution as to matters of purely local concern, the general assembly has no power. Serv. Oil Co. v. Rhodus, 179 Colo. 335, 500 P.2d 807 (1972).

Where a city has adopted a home rule charter, the supreme court must look to the charter and ordinances of the city to determine the proper procedures to be followed in amending the zoning map to encompass the newly annexed land. McArthur v. Zabka, 177 Colo. 337, 494 P.2d 89 (1972).

Colorado Springs is a home rule city. As such, its zoning policies and authority are governed by its own charter and ordinances. City of Colo. Springs v. Smartt, 620 P.2d 1060 (Colo. 1980).

Where the zoning body has established requirements governing a particular use and the developer has met those requirements, the zoning body exceeded its jurisdiction when it rejected the developer's plan. Sherman v. City of Colo. Springs Planning Comm'n, 680 P.2d 1302 (Colo. App. 1983).

In the case of a home rule city, the legislative authority to adopt and implement zoning policies is governed and limited by constitutional limitations and the municipality's own charter and ordinances. City of Colo. Springs v. Securcare Self Storage, Inc., 10 P.3d 1244 (Colo. 2000).

Power to challenge county zoning. The constitution mandates that a home rule city be given the right to challenge in court the legality of a county's master plan and zoning ordinances which affect the value of city property. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City of Thornton, 629 P.2d 605 (Colo. 1981).

Capital improvements. The matter of financing a program of capital improvements by a home rule city is one dealing with a local and municipal matter. Davis v. City of Pueblo, 158 Colo. 319, 406 P.2d 671 (1965).

The city and county of Denver alone has the power to function in the field of capital improvements within its boundaries, to acquire needed personal property, and to provide capital improvements. By specific charter provision, it has accepted this exclusive grant of power from the people of Colorado. Four-County Metro. Capital Imp. Dist. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 149 Colo. 284, 369 P.2d 67 (1962).

Municipal corporations are not limited to providing public improvements for the material necessities of their citizens. Anything calculated to promote the education, the recreation, or the pleasure of the public is to be included within the legitimate domain of public purposes. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

Erection of city auditorium.

The city and county of Denver has the power to provide by charter for the erection of an auditorium, to purchase a site therefor, and to issue bonds to discharge the indebtedness. City & County of Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 P. 1066 (1905).

Erection and maintenance of Denver courthouse. The building and maintenance of a Denver courthouse is not such a matter of local and municipal concern as to exempt the municipality from the operation of a statute requiring the use of Colorado materials in public works. City & County of Denver v. Bossie, 83 Colo. 329, 266 P. 214 (1928); City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

A sports stadium is for the recreation of the public and hence is for a public purpose, although it is not a public "utility, work, or way". A public improvement or facility need not be a "public utility", and, having the power to lease a public building, the city has authority to agree by contract on the service charges to be collected from users of the stadium facility. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

User agreements, under which the company will make use of the public stadium facility in connection with the operation of the Bears and the Broncos professional sports teams, do not amount to an unlawful delegation of powers which can only be exercised by the city. Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

Power to erect waterworks. A self-chartered city under this article has constitutional power to erect waterworks, and there is no constitutional provision requiring a vote of the electors for this purpose. Newton v. City of Fort Collins, 78 Colo. 380, 241 P. 1114 (1925).

The general assembly has empowered municipalities to operate and maintain water facilities for the benefit of users within and without their territorial boundaries. Colo. Open Space Council, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 122, 543 P.2d 1258 (1975).

Sale of water. The general assembly has specifically defined selling water by a municipality both within and without its territorial boundaries to be a proper exercise of its powers. Colo. Open Space Council, Inc. v. City & County of Denver, 190 Colo. 122, 543 P.2d 1258 (1975).

Development of water project outside boundaries. Denver is not immune from regulation by Grand county in the development of a water project without its local boundaries and on national forest lands within Grand county. City & County of Denver v. Bergland, 517 F. Supp. 155 (D. Colo. 1981), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 695 F.2d 465 (10th Cir. 1982).

Denver's water projects are matters of mixed local and state interest. Where Denver's charter conflicts with state act that authorizes local governments to designate projects as matters of state interests and to promulgate rules and regulations to administer such projects, the state act controls. City & County of Denver v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 760 P.2d 656 (Colo. App. 1988), aff'd, 782 P.2d 753 (Colo. 1989).

Ordinances to alleviate severe local water drainage problems. The police power authorizes home-rule cities to pass ordinances to alleviate severe local water drainage problems, however, the authority granted by such ordinances may not be exceeded. Wood Bros. Homes, Inc. v. City of Colo. Springs, 193 Colo. 543, 568 P.2d 487 (1977).

Light plants. Power granted with respect to light plants concerned local or municipal matters or both. Cook v. City of Delta, 100 Colo. 7, 64 P.2d 1257 (1937).

The public utilities commission cannot authorize a power company operating pursuant to a certificate of public convenience and necessity in an area annexed by a home rule municipality to expand its system and use city streets without obtaining a franchise from such municipality. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

The consent of both the municipality and the public utilities commission is necessary to operate a public utility within a home rule city, but neither the general assembly nor the public utilities commission is empowered to grant a franchise to a public utility to use the streets, alleys, and public places of a home rule municipality without the municipality's consent. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

Eminent domain. The people delegated to Denver by this article have full power to exercise the right of eminent domain in the effectuation of any lawful, public, local, and municipal purpose. Fishel v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 576, 108 P.2d 236 (1940); Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958); Toll v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 462, 340 P.2d 862 (1959).

This article grants to home-rule municipalities ample power to acquire by condemnation property already devoted to a public use. City of Thornton v. Farmers Reservoir & Irrigation Co., 194 Colo. 526, 575 P.2d 382 (1978); Beth Medrosh Hagodol v. City of Aurora, 127 Colo. 267, 248 P.2d 732 (1952).

The city may condemn private property outside its boundaries for its local public use and also where such land is to be given to the United States to be used as the site for an Army school. Fishel v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 576, 108 P.2d 236 (1940).

Acquisition of land for Denver airport. Denver, as a charter city under this article, is not restricted by § 41-4-201 et seq., to the acquisition, construction, and operation of an airport to the territory within five miles of its boundaries. City & County of Denver v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 113 Colo. 150, 156 P.2d 101 (1945).

Denver does not need to first obtain the consent of Arapahoe county to the acquisition, for an airport, of lands already zoned for airport purposes by the Arapahoe county officials, which lands are traversed by county roads. City & County of Denver v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 113 Colo. 150, 156 P.2d 101 (1945).

Operating airport outside Pueblo city limits is exercise of home rule. Even though Pueblo airport is located outside the territorial limits of the city of Pueblo, Pueblo, in operating the airport, is exercising its home rule authority. Pueblo Aircraft Serv., Inc. v. City of Pueblo, 498 F. Supp. 1205 (D. Colo. 1980), aff'd, 679 F.2d 805 (10th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1126, 103 S. Ct. 762, 74 L. Ed. 2d 977 (1983).

Right-of-way for transportation of water. Denver is vested with ample authority under both the constitution and statutes to condemn flowage easements and channel improvement rights for transportation of diverted water to storage facilities. Toll v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 462, 340 P.2d 862 (1959).

Consent of incorporated town not required before acquiring rights-of-way. Under § 1 of this article the city and county of Denver is not required to obtain the consent of an incorporated town before acquiring title and possession of rights-of-way through such town by condemnation proceedings. Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958).

Denver may be required to comply with reasonable construction standards lawfully established by such town. Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958).

Denver cannot with impunity and without regard to local ordinances of a traversed municipality construct its sewer lines in its streets irrespective of water lines, water works, sewers, or wells in line of or in the vicinity of the proposed construction. At the point where the public health and safety become involved, a municipality traversed can withhold its consent unless proper, safe, and healthful construction methods are followed. Town of Glendale v. City & County of Denver, 137 Colo. 188, 322 P.2d 1053 (1958).

Power to impound animals. A city organized under this article has power to impound animals running at large, within its bounds, and to charge the owner a reasonable amount for discharging this duty. Such an imposition is a matter of local concern, and the amount thereof is not to be limited. City of Pueblo v. Kurtz, 66 Colo. 447, 182 P. 884 (1919); Thiele v. City & County of Denver, 135 Colo. 442, 312 P.2d 786 (1957).

Grant of right to use of city streets. The granting by the city to a corporation, of the rights to use the streets of the city, like a similar grant by the general assembly to use the highways of the state, is the exertion of the proprietary power of the sovereign. City & County of Denver v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 67 Colo. 225, 184 P. 604 (1919), appeal dismissed for want of jurisdiction, 251 U.S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 219, 64 L. Ed. 407 (1920).

Both state and local governments can alleviate urban blight, provided no statutory conflict. Both the general assembly and a local government can act to alleviate the problem of urban blight, provided the state and the local law do not conflict. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

Railroad crossings. This section does not prohibit the public utilities commission from abolishing railroad crossings in the interest of public safety pursuant to § 40-4-106. City of Craig v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 656 P.2d 1313 (Colo. 1983).

Power to accept gifts of charitable bequests. The city and county of Denver is, by express provision of § 1 of this article, authorized to accept gifts in the nature of charitable bequests and is capable of taking the property and executing the trust in accordance with the provisions of the will. Clayton v. Hallett, 30 Colo. 231, 70 P. 429 (1902); Haggin v. Int'l Trust Co., 69 Colo. 135, 169 P. 138 (1917).

Power to receive gift is discretionary. Section 1 of this article concerning gifts to the city and county of Denver confers upon the municipality a power to be exercised or not as it wills. Such grants of power have never been considered as a mandate that they be exercised. In re Nicholson's Estate, 104 Colo. 561, 93 P.2d 880 (1939).

Police powers. This article gives home rule cities the right to exercise police power as to local matters, possibly subject to the limitation that they may not exercise police power in such manner as to interfere with the state's exercise of its police power where it has elected to deal with the same subject matter. McCormick v. City of Montrose, 105 Colo. 493, 99 P.2d 969 (l940).

Courts will not interfere with the exercise of municipal power by enjoining any reasonable regulations in the interest of public safety and particularly where there is no interference with private rights. Heron

v. City of Denver, 131 Colo. 501, 283 P.2d 647 (1955).

Neither the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution nor any provision of the constitution of this state was designed to interfere with the police power to enact and enforce laws for the protection of the health, peace, safety, morals, or general welfare of the people. The same tests are applied to municipal ordinances. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

Issuing concealed weapons permits not inherent power of police. The issuance of permits for concealed weapons does not fall within the category of inherent powers of a police chief or a sheriff, who can fully perform such functions without this power. Douglass v. Kelton, 199 Colo. 446, 610 P.2d 1067 (1980).

Disturbances of the peace. No limitation is implied upon the traditional but statutory rights of municipalities to prevent disturbances of the peace and to maintain law and order by appropriate police action. It is only when the city's acts or regulations attempt to interfere with or cover a field preempted by the state or which is of statewide concern that they must fail. It makes no difference whether the attempted exercise of power by a city is reasonable or is wholly prohibitory. City of Golden v. Ford, 141 Colo. 472, 348 P.2d 951 (1960).

Vagrancy is a problem in populous areas. It is definitely a local and municipal concern. Being such, the city and county of Denver had authority under this article to adopt an appropriate ordinance to cope with the problem. Dominguez v. City & County of Denver, 147 Colo. 233, 363 P.2d 661 (1961).

As to city ordinance defining vagrancy, see Zerobnick v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 139, 337 P.2d 11 (1959).

Council has power to remove member. The power to remove a member or officer of a legislative body is a legislative power. The council of a home rule city has power to remove a member, including its president. Laverty v. Straub, 110 Colo. 311, 134 P.2d 208 (1943).

Limits of public officers' authority. City's power to determine limits of its public officers' authority, by charter or amendment to its charter, is exclusive. Int'l Bhd. of Police Officers Local 127 v. City & County of Denver, 185 Colo. 50, 521 P.2d 916 (1974).

Residency of municipal employees is a matter of local concern subject to legislation by charter provision or ordinance of home rule city. Section 8-2-120, which prohibits municipalities from imposing residency requirements for municipal employees, is preempted by a conflicting home rule provision. City & County of Denver v. State, 788 P.2d 764 (Colo. 1990).

Power to grant group health insurance benefits to spousal equivalents is a matter of local concern subject to limitation imposed by charter of home rule city. Schaefer v. City & County of Denver, 973 P.2d 717 (Colo. App. 1998).

Power to determine employees. The people of Denver by charter amendment have specifically determined that sheriffs' deputies and jail guards are "employees". This they had the power to do under this article. City & County of Denver v. Rinker, 148 Colo. 441, 366 P.2d 548 (1961).

Pension funds. A home rule city has authority to contract with its firemen and policemen to refund the employees' individual contributions to the respective pension funds on termination of employment prior to qualification for pension benefits. Conrad v. City of Thornton, 191 Colo. 444, 553 P.2d 822 (1976).

Policemen's and firemen's pensions are not a matter exclusively of local concern. Conrad v. City of Thornton, 191 Colo. 444, 553 P.2d 822 (1976).

Mandatory retirement provision of a charter amendment is not invalid because it allegedly is a question of statewide concern, since tenure is a subject over which constitution grants the power of regulation to home rule cities. Coopersmith v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 469, 399 P.2d 943 (1965).

Disposition of workmen's compensation benefits. While the subject of workmen's compensation may be a matter of statewide concern, the disposition made by a home rule city of benefits received is certainly a local and municipal matter. City and County of Denver v. Thomas, 176 Colo. 483, 491 P.2d 573 (1971).

Tortious acts of municipal police officers. Governmental immunity for tortious acts of municipal police officers is a matter of both statewide and local concern. DeLong v. City & County of Denver, 195 Colo. 27, 576 P.2d 537 (1978); Frick v. Abell, 198 Colo. 508, 602 P.2d 852 (1979); Brown v. Gray, 227 F.3d 1278 (10th Cir. 2000).

A municipality may provide greater monetary compensation to victims of torts committed by the municipality's own police officers than that provided by state statute. DeLong v. City & County of Denver, 195 Colo. 27, 576 P.2d 537 (1978); Frick v. Abell, 198 Colo. 508, 602 P.2d 852 (1979).

Whether a municipality provides its police officers with defense costs against tort actions is a matter of both state and local concern. Therefore, to the extent, if any, that the municipal charter conflicts with state law, § 39-5-111 supersedes the charter. Brown v. Gray, 227 F.3d 1278 (10th Cir. 2000).

Labor activities. No statute or constitutional provision has expressly given Colorado municipalities power to regulate labor disputes or picketing and soliciting by employees. Nor can it be said to be an implied power when the proper conduct of labor activities is a matter of statewide concern. City of Golden v. Ford, 141 Colo. 472, 348 P.2d 951 (1960).

Regulation of intoxicating liquor. The city could not enlarge on the state-provided hours of sale; however, where local conditions have been found to require reasonably fewer hours of dispensing fermented malt beverage, such action does not infringe upon the state's legislative prerogative or objectives. Kelly v. City of Fort Collins, 163 Colo. 520, 431 P.2d 785 (1967).

The subject of fermented malt beverages is a matter of statewide concern, and home rule municipalities have no constitutionally derived power generally to legislate on the subject as a matter of local concern, but a city may reasonably regulate the sale of 3.2 beer. Kelly v. City of Fort Collins, 163 Colo. 520, 431 P.2d 785 (1967).

Construction of and apportionment of costs for viaducts is a matter of mixed local and state-wide concern, and, where there is a conflict between a city charter and § 40-4-106(3)(b) (costs for grade separation projects), § 40-4-106 must supersede the charter. Denver & R. G. W. R. R. v. City & County of Denver, 673 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1983).

Weights and measures. The Denver weights and measures ordinance is a valid exercise of legislative power granted to it by the state, in a legitimate area of local concern, and such ordinance has not been rendered ineffective, null and void by the enactment of the weights and measures statute. Blackman v. County Court ex rel. City & County of Denver, 169 Colo. 345, 455 P.2d 885 (1969).

Educational complex. Since the issuance of general obligation bonds for the purchase of lands to be donated to the United States to be used for the purposes of an air corps technical school and bombing field has been held to be for a local and municipal purpose, an educational complex is even more definitely embraced within a local and municipal purpose. Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

2. Control of Municipal Elections.

Municipal elections are expressly made local matters. The people, by the adoption of the home rule amendment, have declared that municipal elections are local and municipal matters, upon which the people of municipalities have the power to legislate. People ex rel. Tate v. Prevost, 55 Colo. 199, 134 P. 129 (1913).

Qualification of voters in local and municipal elections is a matter of local concern. May v. Town of Mountain Vill., 969 P. 2d 790 (Colo. 1998).

General assembly cannot divest home rule city of its plenary power to deal with municipal elections. Gosliner v. Denver Election Comm'n, 191 Colo. 328, 552 P.2d 1010 (1976).

Such power is not restricted. The grant of power to home rule cities relative to municipal elections is not restrictive. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971); Gosliner v. Denver Election Comm'n, 19l Colo. 328, 552 P.2d 1010 (1976).

This section was designed to vest home rule cities with the authority to opt for partisan elections if they so desired. It was not intended to limit the home rule city to nonpartisan elections. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

Special elections to vote on issuance of municipal obligations. Under the provisions of this section of the constitution and the charter of Colorado Springs, that city is given full power to call special elections for voting for the issuance of all kinds of municipal obligations for public improvements. Clough v. City of Colo. Springs, 70 Colo. 87, 197 P. 896 (1921).

"Special election" and "general state election". The "special election" mentioned in this section, although not specifically so designated, is a special municipal election, and, where a general election is mentioned in this section, referring to a state election at which a municipal matter is to be determined, such general election is specifically designated as a "general state election". People ex rel. Austin v. Billig, 72 Colo. 209, 210 P. 324 (1922).

Special election may be held on the same day as general election. A municipal election charter provision which states that a special election shall not be held within 45 days before or after a general election does not prohibit the municipality from holding a special election on the same day and at the same time as a general election. Englewood Police Ben. Ass'n v. Englewood, 811 P.2d 464 (Colo. App. 1990).

Special election relating to income tax unauthorized. Where a home rule city has no power to levy an income tax, the city council has no authority to call a special election to submit to the electors a proposal to confer such power upon the council, and injunction is the proper remedy to prevent such submission. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Power to regulate and control form of ballots and to establish minimum standards for ballot titles is clearly expressed in both the general and specific provisions of this section. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

While the governing body of a home rule municipality may not circumvent or seek to avoid such constitutional requirements as the publication requirement, there is no illegality in a municipal charter requirement that the ballot title "show the nature of" the amendment. Hoper v. City & County of Denver, 173 Colo. 390, 479 P.2d 967 (1971).

Purchase of voting machines. While the right to use voting machines in general elections is a matter of state control, the purchase of such machines by a municipality is a local or municipal matter, and bonds issued under authority of § 8 of art. VII, Colo. Const., must also comply with the requirements of a charter adopted under authority of this section. Kingsley v. City & County of Denver, 126 Colo. 194, 247 P.2d 805 (1952).

Local election districts must be apportioned in accord with population. An apportionment plan pursuant to a charter mandate which is based on voter registration is not per se violative of the United States constitution, but its application must produce a distribution sufficiently comparable to that which would result from apportionment strictly in accord with population. Hartman v. City & County of Denver, 165 Colo. 565, 440 P.2d 778 (1968).

When the state apportions its general assembly, it must have due regard for the equal protection clause. Similarly, when the state delegates lawmaking power to local government and provides for the election of local officials from districts specified by statute, ordinance, or local charter, it must insure that those qualified to vote have the right to an equally effective voice in the election process. Hartman v. City & County of Denver, 165 Colo. 565, 440 P.2d 778 (1968).

Referendum and initiative reserved to voters of municipalities. The language in § 1 of art. V, Colo. Const., that "The initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people by this section are hereby further reserved to the legal voters of every city, town and municipality as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character" is not language of maximum limitation. Its only limiting effect is from the standpoint of the minimum referendum which must be reserved to the people of a locality. Burks v. City of Lafayette, 142 Colo. 61, 349 P.2d 692 (1960).

Charter may provide that ordinances are subject to referendum. A city charter can provide that all ordinances, with exceptions, are subject to a referendum provision. City of Fort Collins v. Dooney, 178 Colo. 25, 496 P.2d 316 (1972).

Residency requirement as eligibility for office unconstitutional. A five-year residency requirement in a city charter for eligibility for the offices of mayor or councilman is unconstitutional as a violation of equal protection. Bird v. City of Colo. Springs, 181 Colo. 141, 507 P.2d 1099 (1973).

Where an election to authorize a general obligation bond issue is required, the submission to the electorate of, and its vote upon, a charter amendment in fact constituted the election such that a delegation of power is not involved. Karsh v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 406, 490 P.2d 936 (1971).

Judicial review of grounds for recall may be limited. To avoid any conflict between the Boulder charter and the constitution, the limitation on judicial review of the grounds for recall found in the constitution is incorporated by implication in the Boulder charter. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

City may not allow recalled officer to succeed himself. Home-rule cities may not make it possible to frustrate the will of the majority by allowing a recalled officer to succeed himself. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

3. Power to Raise Revenue.

Power to levy taxes based on this section. The power to levy a tax in home rule cities, on those who live or sojourn there, for expenses of local and municipal government, stems from a grant by the people by constitutional provision and is not based upon the police power. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925); Berman v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 538, 400 P.2d 434 (1965).

The right of home rule municipalities to enact taxes applicable to local matters is not contested. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Exercise of such power may not be prohibited. The state, even when acting under its regulatory powers, cannot prohibit home rule cities from exercising a power essential to their existence, such as local taxation. Security Life & Accident Co. v. Temple, 177 Colo. 14, 492 P.2d 63 (1972).

Power to tax is not absolute or unrestricted. The people in adopting this article did not intend to confer upon municipalities organized thereunder the absolute and unrestricted power to tax or to make assessments for local improvements regardless of public policy. The people intended to confer such powers subject to existing or future constitutional and statutory provisions relating to exemptions of cemeteries from taxation and local assessments. City & County of Denver v. Tihen, 77 Colo. 212, 235 P. 777 (1925).

Assessments for local improvements. Under this article the powers of a municipal corporation with reference to assessments for local improvements are plenary. Bd. of Comm'rs v. City of Colo. Springs, 66 Colo. 111, 180 P. 301 (1919).

A municipality has power to levy special improvement taxes on county property both by the general law and by its charter under this article of the constitution. Bd. of Comm'rs v. City of Colo. Springs, 66 Colo. 111, 180 P. 301 (1919); Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Town of Castle Rock, 97 Colo. 33, 46 P.2d 747 (1935).

Assessment for improvement district does not violate this section. This section relates to assessments for local purposes. Assessments for the Moffat tunnel improvement district do not relate to purposes local to Denver but to the district. Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel Imp. Dist., 72 Colo. 268, 211 P. 649 (1922), aff'd, 262 U.S. 710, 43 S. Ct. 964, 67 L. Ed. 1194 (1923).

Assessment levied prior to amendment valid. The home rule amendment, although enacted after the levy of an assessment, ratifies and validates all that had been previously done by charter, and so, inasmuch as all that the city had done in the present matter was within the scope of local and municipal matters, it must be considered as ratified and validated. Bd. of Comm'rs v. City of Colo. Springs, 66 Colo. 111, 180 P. 301 (1919).

State taxation in the same field as that of a municipality can coexist. Berman v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 538, 400 P.2d 434 (1965).

Income taxation. A Colorado home rule city does not have the legal authority to enact a city income tax by council action or by vote of the qualified electors or by both council action and vote of the electors. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Ordinance imposing transportation utility fee invalid to extent it allows transfer of excess transportation utility revenues to be used for purpose of defraying general governmental expenses unrelated to maintenance of city streets. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo.

1989).

Occupational excise taxes. Municipal authority, in the absence of constitutional restrictions, to impose occupational excise taxes at a fixed rate purely for revenue for the support of its government no longer is open to serious question. City of Englewood v. Wright, 147 Colo. 537, 364 P.2d 569 (1961); City & County of Denver v. Duffy Storage & Moving Co., 168 Colo. 91, 450 P.2d 339, appeal dismissed for want of substantial federal question, 396 U.S. 2, 90 S. Ct. 23, 24 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1969).

Excise tax on privilege. A home rule city has the authority to levy an excise tax on a privilege within the city limits. This power has been found to be essential to the full exercise of the right to self-government granted to home rule cities by this section. Deluxe Theatres, Inc. v. City of Englewood, 198 Colo. 771, 596 P.2d 771 (1979).

State cannot prohibit taxes on privilege of doing business. With the grant of the taxing power to home rule cities, the state general assembly cannot, under the guise of its police power to regulate the insurance industry, prohibit a home rule city from taxing such businesses their share of the benefits enjoyed for the privilege of doing business therein. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins., Co. v. Temple, 176 Colo. 537, 491 P.2d 1371 (1971).

Nondiscriminatory tax on income earned for services rendered to or work done for government does not represent a legally recognizable interference with the activities of that government so as to constitute a tax upon that government. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Reasonable, nondiscriminatory taxes may be imposed by one governmental unit upon the employees of another where not precluded by applicable law. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Application of Denver "head tax" to members of an enumerated class in no way interferes with, or imposes a condition precedent to, employment by the state, for an employee is taxed because he is physically present within the taxing jurisdiction of Denver, which furnishes such employee the same facilities and services which are available to its permanent residents, and for which such employees are required to pay a reasonable share. Hamilton v. City & County of Denver, 176 Colo. 6, 490 P.2d 1289 (1971).

Sales and use taxes. Home rule cities have the power to adopt a sales and use tax under the grant of authority given by the constitution. The right to levy a tax to raise revenue for the affairs and business of the city is clearly within the constitutional grant of power. Berman v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 538, 400 P.2d 434 (1965).

The power to levy sales and use taxes for the support of the local home rule government is essential to the full exercise of the right of self-government granted to such cities. Security Life & Accident Co. v. Temple, 177 Colo. 14, 492 P.2d 63 (1972).

The complete autonomy of a home rule city such as Denver in the enactment of purely local excise taxes and the sales tax is set out in strong language. Security Life & Accident Co. v. Temple, 177 Colo. 14, 492 P.2d 63 (1972).

A home rule municipality formed pursuant to this section is constitutionally empowered to adopt a sales tax. Apollo Stereo Music v. City of Aurora, 871 P.2d 1206 (Colo. 1994); Leggett & Platt, Inc. v. Ostrom, 251 P.3d 1135 (Colo. App. 2010).

Municipal ordinance creating a lien for the collection of its sales taxes that is superior to a lien held by a bank was a proper exercise of the municipality's authority under this section and especially paragraph (g). The priority of local liens for unpaid sales taxes, at least with respect to their superiority over private commercial liens, is a local and municipal concern for which the municipality may legislate, even if such legislation were to conflict with a state statute. Given that the levy and collection of a local sales tax by a home-rule municipality is a local and municipal concern, it would be anomalous to conclude that, while the general assembly may grant priority to the sales tax liens of statutory cities and towns, a home rule municipality may not makes its sales tax lien superior to the commercial lien of a private lender. Town of Avon v. Weststar Bank, 151 P.3d 631 (Colo. App. 2006).

Revenue bonds. The limitations on the power of cities and towns to borrow money in § 8 of art. XI, Colo. Const., are not binding upon home rule cities. A home rule city which undertakes to issue bonds and finance a program of capital improvements, which is a matter of local and municipal concern, is not limited in its power to do so by that section. Berman v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 538, 400 P.2d 434 (1965); Davis v. City of Pueblo, 158 Colo. 319, 406 P.2d 671 (1965); Fladung v. City of Boulder, 165 Colo. 244, 438 P.2d 688 (1968).

The home rule amendment specifically empowers a home rule city to issue bonds. If there is no limitation on the bonds in question in the city charter, neither art. XI, Colo. Const., nor this article is violated. Davis v. City of Pueblo, 158 Colo. 319, 406 P.2d 671 (1965); Ginsberg v. City & County of Denver, 164 Colo. 572, 436 P.2d 685 (1968).

A bond issue authorized by municipal ordinance does not violate the limitations imposed by section 8 of this article concerning conflicting provisions of the constitution. Davis v. City of Pueblo, 158 Colo. 319, 406 P.2d 671 (1965).

Special improvement district does not create debt for city, and it is only when there is such a debt sought to be created that voter approval is necessary. Fladung v. City of Boulder, 165 Colo. 244, 438 P.2d 688 (1968).

Urban renewal tax allocation structure provides relationship between increased revenues and project financed. The tax allocation structure provided by § 31-25-107 (9)(e) has been carefully drafted so that there is a direct relationship between the increased valuation of property within the urban renewal project area, and thus increased ad valorem tax revenues, and the project financed by the bond issue. Denver Urban Renewal Auth. v. Byrne, 618 P.2d 1374 (Colo. 1980).

Transportation utility fee which was imposed by home-rule municipality on developed lots adjoining city streets for the purpose of providing revenues for maintenance of city streets and which was reasonably designed to defray the municipality's cost of providing the service is a valid charge within the legislative authority of the municipality. Bloom v. City of Ft. Collins, 784 P.2d 304 (Colo. 1989).

Municipality cannot compel state officials to collect municipal taxes. Even with all the powers granted home rule cities, a home rule city is still a subdivision of the state, and no municipality, absent statutory authority, can compel the state or its officials to collect municipal taxes. City of Boulder v. Regents of Univ. of Colo., 179 Colo. 420, 501 P.2d 123 (1972).

City admissions tax invalid as to university-sponsored public events. A city cannot, under its home rule powers, compel the regents of a state university to collect an admissions tax on charges for attendance at public events the university sponsors, because such duties would interfere with the regents' control of the university. City of Boulder v. Regents of Univ. of Colo., 179 Colo. 420, 501 P.2d 123 (1972).

The home rule authority of a city does not permit it to tax a person's acquisition of education furnished by the state, and therefore a city admissions tax is invalid when applied to university lectures, dissertations, art exhibitions, concerts, and dramatic performances. City of Boulder v. Regents of Univ. of Colo., 179 Colo. 420, 501 P.2d 123 (1972).

City admissions tax valid as to football games. Absent a showing that football is so related to the educational process that its devotees may not be taxed by a home rule city, the court will uphold the validity of a city admissions tax as applied to football games sponsored by a state university. City of Boulder v. Regents of Univ. of Colo., 179 Colo. 420, 501 P.2d 123 (1972).

Budgeting of anticipated revenue is matter of local concern. The people of each home rule city are vested with the power to make, amend, add to, or replace its charter, which shall be its organic law and extend to all its local and municipal matters, so the budgeting of its anticipated revenue for the operation of the city government is strictly a matter of local and municipal concern. City & County of Denver v. Blue, 179 Colo. 351, 500 P.2d 970 (1972).

It does not follow from the fact that the culmination of the budget process--the adoption of the budget, the appropriation of money to fund the budget, and the fixing of the tax levy--is legislative that the preparation of the budget is legislative. City & County of Denver v. Blue, 179 Colo. 351, 500 P.2d 970 (1972).

Responsibility for preparation of budget is on mayor. City & County of Denver v. Blue, 179 Colo. 351, 500 P.2d 970 (1972).

4. Regulation of Motor Vehicles.

Regulation of motor vehicles and traffic is mixed concern. As motor vehicle traffic in the state and between home rule municipalities becomes more and more integrated, it gradually ceases to be a "local" matter and becomes subject to general law. People v. Graham, 107 Colo. 202, 110 P.2d 256 (1941); City & County of Denver v. Pike, 140 Colo. 17, 342 P.2d 688 (1959); City of Commerce City v. State, 40 P.3d 1273 (Colo. 2002).

Even though the field of vehicle traffic control is generally considered to be local and municipal, there are some aspects wherein the police power of the state comes into play in order to bring about an integrated statewide policy governing violations which have general statewide character. City & County of Denver v. Pike, 140 Colo. 17, 342 P.2d 688 (1959); City of Commerce City v. State, 40 P.3d 1273 (Colo. 2002).

A city cannot contend that the licensing and regulation of vehicle operators is a matter exclusively local and municipal within this section, so that enactment of an ordinance would supersede a statute on the same subject. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

Regulation of vehicular traffic. A city having the power under this article to pass ordinances regulating vehicular traffic upon its streets cannot be deprived of that power by the passage of a state law. City & County of Denver v. Henry, 95 Colo. 582, 38 P.2d 895 (1934).

Regulation of traffic at street intersections is matter of local concern, and there being a conflict between a city ordinance and state statutes as to the right-of-way of automobiles at street intersections, the ordinance controls. City & County of Denver v. Henry, 95 Colo. 582, 38 P.2d 895 (1934); City & County of Denver v. Pike, 140 Colo. 17, 342 P.2d 688

(1959).

Questions of speed, right-of-way, parking, designation of one-way streets, and similar measures, all regulatory in scope, are matters of local and municipal concern. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958); City & County of Denver v. Pike, 140 Colo. 17, 342 P.2d 688 (1959); Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

Under this article, regulation of the speed of vehicles may be treated as a matter solely of local and municipal concern by charter cities. Wiggins v. McAuliffe, 144 Colo. 363, 356 P.2d 487 (1960).

An ordinance of the city of Denver prohibiting the parking of vehicles in any private driveway or on private property is within the legislative authority granted by this article. Lehman v. City & County of Denver, 144 Colo. 109, 355 P.2d 309 (1960).

The authority for a home-rule city to regulate traffic speeds and penalize offenders is not found in the laws of the general assembly but rather is a matter of state constitutional law under this section. People v. Hizhniak, 195 Colo. 427, 579 P.2d 1131 (1978).

Provision for stop at flashing red school lights. Under this section a city of Boulder traffic ordinance providing for a stop at flashing red school lights relates to a matter of local and municipal concern and its adoption a proper exercise of the legislative power of the city of Boulder. Pickett v. City of Boulder, 144 Colo. 387, 356 P.2d 489 (1960).

Careless driving ordinance. Where a careless driving ordinance is out of conformity with the state statute in a material particular, the state statute is inoperative within the territorial limits of the home rule city for the reason that the ordinance relates to a matter of local and municipal concern, and the statutes of the state have been superseded by the ordinance adopted by the city. People ex rel. City of Aurora v. Thompson, 165 Colo. 172, 437 P.2d 537 (1968).

State has right to regulate use of automobiles by license, even though they may never leave the city in which they are operated. Armstrong v. Johnson Storage & Moving Co., 84 Colo. 142, 268 P. 978 (1928).

The investigation and apprehension of a violator of requirements of §§ 42-4-1401 and 42-4-1403 requiring a driver involved in an accident to stop, render aid, and report is not exclusively a local matter. Infractions of these provisions are of general public concern. Moreover, these requirements do not necessarily relate to traffic control but provide certain necessary actions on the part of the motorist involved to be taken after an accident occurs to protect the life and property of the injured. When these offenses are charged they come under the general police power of the state and do not necessarily relate to regulation of motor vehicle traffic of a "local or municipal" nature although occurring in a municipality. People v. Graham, 107 Colo. 202, 110 P.2d 256 (1941).

Power to establish licensing system includes authority to revoke and to penalize the driving of a motor vehicle while the license of the operator has been suspended or revoked, and, the subject being predominately statewide and general, a municipal ordinance dealing with the identical subject is invalid. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959); City & County of Denver v. Palmer, 140 Colo. 27, 342 P.2d 687 (1959).

Statutes limiting "photo radar" and "photo red light" citations supersede conflicting provisions of municipal ordinances. Regulation of automated vehicle identification systems to enforce traffic laws is a matter of mixed local and state concern. In the event of conflict, state law prevails. City of Commerce City v. State, 40 P.3d 1273 (Colo. 2002).

Driving motor vehicle while under influence of intoxicating liquor is forbidden by state law, is a matter of statewide concern, and leaves nothing for a city to regulate. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958); City & County of Denver v. Pike, 140 Colo. 17, 342 P.2d 688 (1959).

Ordinance penalizing driving motor vehicle without license held ultra vires. A municipal ordinance imposing a jail sentence of 90 days upon conviction of driving a motor vehicle without a license in the face of a state statute imposing a sentence of six months for the same offense is ultra vires, and the general assembly having failed to consent to the exercise of such authority requires a finding that the ordinance is void. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

License fees. A state statute imposing additional state license fees on motor trucks is of no concern to a city even though such trucks operated exclusively upon streets of home rule cities. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Tax on gasoline. The general assembly has the power to tax gasoline used in propelling motor vehicles on the streets of home rule cities. People v. City & County of Denver, 90 Colo. 598, 10 P.2d 1106 (1932).

State regulation of freeway bisecting city. Where, by a contract between a city and the state highway department concerning a freeway bisecting the city, both city and state intend that the city would regulate the traffic thereon subject to a minimum speed regulation and parking restrictions, the state has a regulatory interest therein justifying the imposition of its policies. City & County of Denver v. Pike, 140 Colo. 17, 342 P.2d 688 (1959).

Non home rule cities may not enact or enforce ordinances superseding state statutes. Cities and towns not organized as home rule cities may not enact or enforce any ordinance or regulation relating to motor vehicles which supersedes or attempts to nullify comparable state statute on same subject matter. Vanatta v. Town of Steamboat Springs, 146 Colo. 356, 361 P.2d 441 (1961).

The ruling that a home rule city could consider the area of reckless and careless driving to be a matter of local and municipal concern does not apply to a city that is not a home rule city when these offenses occurred. City of Aurora v. Mitchell, 144 Colo. 526, 357 P.2d 923 (1960).

5. Violations of Municipal Ordinances.

Cities may impose fines and penalties. Among local and municipal matters upon which cities and towns may legislate is the imposition, enforcement, and collection of fines and penalties for the violation of any provisions of charters or of any ordinances adopted in pursuance to charters. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958).

Violations punishable by imprisonment are criminal. Violations of ordinances for which offenders could be punished by imprisonment are criminal offenses, hence should be tried as criminal cases. Geer v. Alaniz, 138 Colo. 177, 331 P.2d 260 (1958).

Although a civil action, enforcement of an ordinance is quasi-criminal or penal where imprisonment may be imposed. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958).

Home rule ordinance violations are criminal if there are counterpart state criminal statutes. Geer v. Alaniz, 138 Colo. 177, 331

P.2d 260 (1958).

Violation of an ordinance which is the counterpart of a criminal statute should be tried and punished under the protections applicable to criminal cases even though prosecuted in a municipal court. Zerobnick v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 139, 337 P.2d 11 (1959); City of Greenwood Vill. v. Fleming, 643 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1982); People v. Wade, 757 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1988).

Even though an ordinance effectually covers a local and municipal matter and it is a counterpart of a law of the state, its violation is triable and punishable as a crime where so designated by the statute. Such is the plain import of this section. Thereby, uniformity in treatment and disposition of an offense is achieved, whether the act is a statutory crime or a violation of an ordinance. Schooley v. Cain, 142 Colo. 485, 351 P.2d 389 (1960).

Such as driving motor vehicle under influence of intoxicating liquor. Whether driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor is a local and municipal matter or of statewide concern is immaterial. Since a statute makes such act a crime, its counterpart in the municipal law must be tried and punished as a crime. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958).

Where a city ordinance defining vagrancy is a counterpart of a state statute defining vagrancy and providing penalties therefor, the offense should be tried and punished under the protections applicable to criminal cases even though prosecuted in a municipal court. Zerobnick v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 139, 337 P.2d 11 (1959).

Proceedings by complaint before magistrate are criminal. When the method of procedure to enforce the payment of a fine or penalty is not by a suit at law, but by complaint before a municipal magistrate who is to determine the matter and impose a fine the proceedings have been sometimes deemed to be of a criminal or quasi-criminal nature. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958).

Defendant entitled to full protection of criminal law. One prosecuted for a violation of an ordinance promulgated under a home rule charter is entitled to the full protection afforded by the law in criminal cases. Pickett v. City of Boulder, 144 Colo. 387, 356 P.2d 489 (1960).

When the state has proscribed certain conduct as a criminal offense, the counterpart provisions of this section prohibit a home-rule city from removing such basic criminal safeguards as proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and the privilege against self-incrimination in a prosecution for violating a municipal ordinance proscribing the same conduct. City of Greenwood Vill. v. Fleming, 643 P.2d 511 (Colo. 1982).

Defendant under risk of imprisonment entitled to notice of charge. Where a judgment against a defendant may, under an ordinance, include imprisonment in the first instance, the failure to file a complaint giving adequate notice of the charge is inexcusable, especially where the violation of city ordinances are held to be in the nature of civil cases although of a quasi-criminal or penal nature where imprisonment may be inflicted. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958).

Notice of hearing and notice of withdrawal of counsel. Where a motion to reinstate a jail sentence imposed following conviction of vagrancy under a city ordinance, and the case is treated as a civil proceeding, it is incumbent upon a city to serve a copy of such motion or a written notice of hearing thereon upon the defendant personally or through his counsel, and where counsel has withdrawn such notice must be served upon the defendant personally under C.R.C.P. 7(b)(1). Zerobnick v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 139, 337 P.2d 11 (1959).

City cannot deny constitutional right to jury trial. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

A municipal charter provision that no party shall be entitled to a jury trial in a municipal court in any action arising under the ordinances and charter of the city and county of Denver is invalid wherever the ordinance violated has a counterpart in the criminal statutes of the state or the ordinance provides for imprisonment for its violation. Geer v. Alaniz, 138 Colo. 177, 331 P.2d 260 (1958).

A city cannot deny the statutory right of appeal. City & County of Denver v. Sweet, 138 Colo. 41, 329 P.2d 441 (1958).

Procedures of municipal courts involving violations of municipal ordinances are only required to afford constitutionally mandated procedures that protect due process rights of individuals. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992).

Suspension of sentence and probation may be granted. Where a city ordinance relating to vagrancy is a counterpart of a state statute and offenders are prosecuted thereunder as in criminal actions, the privileges of suspension of sentence and of probation may be granted. Zerobnick v. City & County of Denver, 139 Colo. 139, 337 P.2d 11 (1959).

"Uniformity in the treatment and disposition of an offense" does not require that a home rule city's sentencing scheme evidence "consistency of philosophy in sentencing" with the state's sentencing provisions. Even if state statutes preclude the imposition of probation for a term longer than the maximum imprisonment authorized for a particular offense, that limitation is not a constraint on a home rule city's right to impose its own system of punishments for violations of its ordinances. People v. Wade, 757 P.2d 1074 (Colo. 1988).

Rules of civil procedure are generally applicable in cases where fine or penalty is sought by a suit of law, and the proceeding is civil rather than criminal. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958).

Single act is punishable as state and municipal offenses. A single act, made punishable both by the general law of the state and by the ordinances of a town wherein it is committed, constitutes two distinct and several offenses, subject to punishment by the proper tribunals of the state and the municipality respectively. City of Canon City v. Merris, 137 Colo. 169, 323 P.2d 614 (1958).

Where an act is, in its nature, one which constitutes two offenses, one against the state and one against a municipal government, the latter may be constitutionally authorized to punish it, though it be also an offense under the state law; but the legislative intention that this may be done ought to be manifest and unmistakable, or the power in the corporation should be held not to exist. Davis v. City & County of Denver, 140 Colo. 30, 342 P.2d 674 (1959).

Single act subject to prohibition against double prosecution. The fact that the city has the power to legislate does not mean that there could ever be recognition of dual sovereignty or double prosecutions. The determination that there is nothing basically invalid about legislation on the same subject, for example, gambling, by both a home rule city and the state, does not affect the prohibition against double prosecution, nor does it undermine any basic safeguards. Woolverton v. City & County of Denver, 146 Colo. 247, 361

P.2d 982 (1961).

Prosecution of juveniles under municipal ordinance does not conflict with Colorado Children's Code, and, although municipalities are not prohibited from adopting same procedures as Children's Code, municipalities are not required to follow such procedures. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992).

Colorado Children's Code does not require that juvenile proceedings in municipal courts be civil in nature as Children's Code and ordinances of municipality on juvenile proceedings do not conflict. R.E.N. v. City of Colo. Springs, 823 P.2d 1359 (Colo. 1992).

City ordinance that regulates the number of adjudicated delinquent children that may reside in a particular foster home regulates a matter of statewide concern and is thus preempted. City of Northglenn v. Ibarra, 62 P.3d 151 (Colo. 2003).

Section 7. City and county of Denver single school district - consolidations. The city and county of Denver shall alone always constitute one school district, to be known as District No. 1, but its conduct, affairs and business shall be in the hands of a board of education consisting of such numbers, elected in such manner as the general school laws of the state shall provide.

The said board of education shall perform all the acts and duties required to be performed for said district by the general laws of the state. Except as inconsistent with this amendment, the general school laws of the state shall, unless the context evinces a contrary intent, be held to extend and apply to the said "District No. 1".

Upon the annexation of any contiguous municipality which shall include a school district or districts or any part of a district, said school district or districts or part shall be merged in said "District No. 1", which shall then own all the property thereof, real and personal, located within the boundaries of such annexed municipality, and shall assume and pay all the bonds, obligations and indebtedness of each of the said included school districts, and a proper proportion of those of partially included districts.

Provided, however, that the indebtedness, both principal and interest, which any school district may be under at the time when it becomes a part, by this amendment or by annexation, of said "District No. 1", shall be paid by said school district so owing the same by a special tax to be fixed and certified by the board of education to the council which shall levy the same upon the property within the boundaries of such district, respectively, as the same existed at the time such district becomes a part of said "District No. 1", and in case of partially included districts such tax shall be equitably apportioned upon the several parts thereof.

ANNOTATION

Annexation of territory to city and county of Denver changed boundaries of school districts affected. See Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 150 Colo. 198, 372 P.2d 152 (1962), appeal dismissed, 372 U.S. 226, 83 S. Ct. 679, 9 L. Ed. 714 (1963).

Purpose of this section is merely to require that assets and liabilities of school districts lying partly or wholly within annexed territory be consolidated into the constitutionally created single Denver school district. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 193 Colo. 211, 565 P.2d 212 (1977).

And not to restrict annexations to certain land. The language of this section evinces no intent to restrict Denver annexations to land within other incorporated municipalities. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 193 Colo. 211, 565 P.2d 212 (1977).

Territory to be annexed not defined. This section of the state constitution does not define what territory, whether incorporated or not incorporated, is subject to annexation. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. City & County of Denver, 193 Colo. 211, 565 P.2d 212 (1977).

School district created under this section has power to sue and be sued and to compromise actions and claims against such district. Sch. Dist. No. 1 v. Faker, 106 Colo. 356, 105 P.2d 406 (1940).

Office of county superintendent of schools terminated. Immediately upon the taking effect of this article of the constitution, the official term of the superintendent of schools next theretofore elected for the old county of Arapahoe, terminated. No such office existed in the new entity, the city and county of Denver, and there could be no incumbent thereof. The person chosen to the office of superintendent of schools for the city and county of Denver, at the first election under its charter, adopted pursuant to this article, was not entitled to receive, in such office, the salary prescribed by the general law, but only that fixed by the charter. Lawson v. Meyer, 54 Colo. 96, 129 P. 197 (1913).

Applied in Mountain States Legal Found. v. Denver Sch. Dist. No. 1, 459 F. Supp. 357 (D. Colo. 1978); Carstens v. Lamm, 543 F. Supp. 68 (D. Colo. 1982).

Section 8. Conflicting constitutional provisions declared inapplicable. Anything in the constitution of this state in conflict or inconsistent with the provisions of this amendment is hereby declared to be inapplicable to the matters and things by this amendment covered and provided for.

Source: L. 01: Entire article added, p. 106.

ANNOTATION

Parts of constitution in conflict with this article are inapplicable. Under this section, it is only the things in the constitution that are in conflict or inconsistent with the provisions of this article that are declared to be inapplicable to the matters covered therein. Dixon v. People ex rel. Elliott, 53 Colo. 527, 127 P. 930 (1912).

The provisions of this section did not apply to art. XXII, Colo. Const. People ex rel. Carlson v. City Council, 60 Colo. 370, 153 P. 690 (1915).

Power to issue bonds is not limited by this section. A bond issue authorized by municipal ordinance does not violate the limitations imposed by § 6, as the home rule amendment specifically empowers a home rule city to issue revenue bonds. Davis v. City of Pueblo, 158 Colo. 319, 406 P.2d 671 (1965).

Or by § 8 of art. XI, Colo. Const. A home rule city which undertakes to issue bonds and finance a program of capital improvements, a matter of local and municipal concern, is not limited in its power to do so by § 8 of art. XI, Colo. Const. Berman v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 538, 400 P.2d 434 (1965).

This article has superseded art. XI, Colo. Const. Davis v. City of Pueblo, 158 Colo. 319, 406 P.2d 671 (1965).

Section 9. Procedure and requirements for adoption. (1) Notwithstanding any provision in sections 4, 5, and 6 of this article to the contrary, the registered electors of each city and county, city, and town of the state are hereby vested with the power to adopt, amend, and repeal a home rule charter.

(2) The general assembly shall provide by statute procedures under which the registered electors of any proposed or existing city and county, city, or town may adopt, amend, and repeal a municipal home rule charter. Action to initiate home rule shall be by petition, signed by not less than five percent of the registered electors of the proposed or existing city and county, city, or town, or by proper ordinance by the city council or board of trustees of a town, submitting the question of the adoption of a municipal home rule charter to the registered electors of the city and county, city, or town. No municipal home rule charter, amendment thereto, or repeal thereof, shall become effective until approved by a majority of the registered electors of such city and county, city, or town voting thereon. A new city or town may acquire home rule status at the time of its incorporation.

(3) The provisions of this article as they existed prior to the effective date of this section, as they relate to procedures for the initial adoption of home rule charters and for the amendment of existing home rule charters, shall continue to apply until superseded by statute.

(4) It is the purpose of this section to afford to the people of all cities, cities and counties, and towns the right to home rule regardless of population, period of incorporation, or other limitation, and for this purpose this section shall be self-executing. It is the further purpose of this section to facilitate adoption and amendment of home rule through such procedures as may hereafter be enacted by the general assembly.

ANNOTATION

A proceeding to obtain a home rule charter may be initiated at the same time a petition for incorporation is filed. Malmgren v. Copper Mountain, Inc., 873 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1994).

Requirement that signatories to petitions for incorporation be landowners was not unconstitutional limitation on municipality's ability to achieve home rule status where such requirement was applicable only to signatories to petition for incorporation, not to signatories to petition for home rule charter. Malmgren v. Copper Mountain, Inc., 873 P.2d 44 (Colo. App. 1994).

Section 10. City and county of Broomfield - created. The city of Broomfield is a preexisting municipal corporation and home rule city of the state of Colorado, physically situated in parts of Adams, Boulder, Jefferson, and Weld counties. On and after November 15, 2001, all territory in the municipal boundaries of the city of Broomfield shall be detached from the counties of Adams, Boulder, Jefferson, and Weld and shall be consolidated into a single county and municipal corporation with the name "The City and County of Broomfield". Prior to November 15, 2001, the city of Broomfield shall not extend its boundaries beyond the annexation boundary map approved by the Broomfield city council on April 28, 1998, as an amendment to the city of Broomfield 1995 master plan. The existing charter of the said city of Broomfield shall become the charter of the city and county of Broomfield.

The city and county of Broomfield shall have perpetual succession; shall own, possess, and hold all real and personal property, including water rights, the right to use water, and contracts for water, currently owned, possessed, or held by the said city of Broomfield; shall assume, manage, and dispose of all trusts in any way connected therewith; shall succeed to all the rights and liabilities of, shall acquire all benefits of, and shall assume and pay all bonds, obligations, and indebtedness of said city of Broomfield and its proportionate share of the general obligation indebtedness and, as provided by intergovernmental agreement, its proportionate share of revenue bond obligations of the counties of Adams, Boulder, Jefferson, and Weld on and after November 15, 2001.

The city and county of Broomfield may sue and defend, plead, and be impleaded in all courts and in all matters and proceedings; may have and use a common seal and alter the same at pleasure; may grant franchises; may purchase, receive, hold, and enjoy, or sell and dispose of real and personal property; may receive bequests, gifts, and donations of real and personal property, or real and personal property in trust for public, charitable, or other purposes, and do all things and acts necessary to carry out the purposes of such gifts, bequests, donations, and trusts with power to manage, sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the same in accordance with the terms of the gift, bequest, donation, or trust.

The city and county of Broomfield shall have the power within and without its territorial limits to construct, condemn, purchase, acquire, lease, add to, maintain, conduct, and operate water works, water supplies, sanitary sewer facilities, storm water facilities, parks, recreation facilities, open space lands, light plants, power plants, heating plants, electric and other energy facilities and systems, gas facilities and systems, transportation systems, cable television systems, telecommunication systems, and other public utilities or works or ways local in use and extent, in whole or in part, and everything required therefor, for the use of said city and county and the inhabitants thereof; to purchase in whole or in part any such systems, plants, works, facilities, or ways, or any contracts in relation or connection thereto that may exist, and may enforce such purchase by proceedings at law as in taking land for public use by right of eminent domain; and to issue bonds in accordance with its charter in any amount necessary to carry out any said powers or purposes, as the charter may provide and limit. The city and county of Broomfield shall have all of the powers of its charter and shall have all of the powers set out in section 6 of this article, including the power to make, amend, add to, or replace its charter as set forth in section 9 of this article. The charter provisions and procedures shall supersede any constitutional or statutory limitations and procedures regarding financial obligations. The city and county of Broomfield shall have all powers conferred to home rule municipalities and to home rule counties by the constitution and general laws of the state of Colorado that are not inconsistent with the constitutional provisions creating the city and county of Broomfield.

Prior to November 15, 2001, the charter and ordinances of the city of Broomfield shall govern all local and municipal matters of the city. On and after November 15, 2001, the constitutional provisions creating and governing the city and county of Broomfield, the city and county charter adopted in accordance with these constitutional provisions, and the ordinances existing and adopted from time to time shall govern all local and municipal matters of the city and county of Broomfield.

On and after November 15, 2001, the requirements of section 3 of article XIV of this constitution and the general annexation and consolidation statutes of the state relating to counties shall apply to the city and county of Broomfield. On and after November 15, 2001, any contiguous territory, together with all property belonging thereto, hereafter annexed to or consolidated with the city and county of Broomfield under any laws of this state, in whatsoever county the same may be at the time, shall be detached from such other county and become a municipal and territorial part of the city and county of Broomfield.

On and after November 15, 2001, no annexation or consolidation proceeding shall be initiated pursuant to the general annexation and consolidation statutes of the state to annex lands to or consolidate lands with the city and county of Broomfield until such proposed annexation or consolidation is first approved by a majority vote of a seven-member boundary control commission. The boundary control commission shall be composed of one commissioner from each of the boards of commissioners of Adams, Boulder, Jefferson, and Weld counties, respectively, and three elected officials of the city and county of Broomfield. The commissioners from each of the said counties shall be appointed by resolution of the respective county boards of commissioners. The three elected officials from the city and county of Broomfield shall be appointed by the mayor of the city and county of Broomfield. The boundary control commission shall adopt all actions, including actions regarding procedural rules, by majority vote. Each member of the boundary control commission shall have one vote, including the commissioner who acts as chairperson of the commission. The commission shall file all procedural rules adopted by the commission with the secretary of state.

Section 11. Officers - city and county of Broomfield. The officers of the city and county of Broomfield shall be as provided for by its charter or ordinances. The jurisdiction, term of office, and duties of such officers shall commence on November 15, 2001. The qualifications and duties of all such officers shall be as provided for by the city and county charter and ordinances, but the ordinances shall designate the officers who shall perform the acts and duties required of county officers pursuant to this constitution or the general laws of the state of Colorado, as far as applicable. All compensation for elected officials shall be determined by ordinance and not by state statute. If any elected officer of the city and county of Broomfield shall receive any compensation, such officer shall receive the same as a stated salary, the amount of which shall be fixed by ordinance within limits fixed by the city and county charter or by resolution approving the city and county budget and paid in equal monthly payments. No elected officer shall receive any increase or decrease in compensation under any ordinance or resolution passed during the term for which such officer was elected.

Section 12. Transfer of government. Upon the canvass of the vote showing the adoption of the constitutional provisions creating and governing the city and county of Broomfield, the governor shall issue a proclamation accordingly, and, on and after November 15, 2001, the city of Broomfield and those parts of the counties of Adams, Boulder, Jefferson, and Weld included in the boundaries of said city shall be consolidated into the city and county of Broomfield. The duties and terms of office of all officers of Adams, Boulder, Jefferson, and Weld counties shall no longer be applicable to and shall terminate with regard to the city and county of Broomfield. On and after November 15, 2001, the terms of office of the mayor and city council of the city of Broomfield shall terminate with regard to the city of Broomfield and said mayor and city council shall become the mayor and city council of the city and county of Broomfield. The city council of the city and county of Broomfield, in addition to performing the duties prescribed in the city and county charter and ordinances, shall perform the duties of a board of county commissioners or may delegate certain duties to various boards and commissions appointed by the city council of the city and county of Broomfield. The city and county of Broomfield shall be a successor district of the city of Broomfield under section 20 of article X of this constitution. Any voter approval granted the city of Broomfield under section 20 of article X of this constitution prior to November 15, 2001, shall be considered voter approval under said section for the city and county of Broomfield. The city and county of Broomfield shall have the power to continue to impose and collect sales, use, and property taxes that were imposed by the city of Broomfield and the counties of Adams, Boulder, Jefferson, and Weld within the areas where said taxes were imposed on November 14, 2001, until the voters of the city and county of Broomfield approve uniform sales, use, and property taxes within the city and county of Broomfield or approve increased sales, use, or property taxes within the city and county of Broomfield. Any violation of any criminal statutes of the state of Colorado occurring on or before November 14, 2001, shall continue to be prosecuted within the county where the violation originally occurred.

ANNOTATION

The city and county of Broomfield is entitled to retain and use property taxes assessed in 2001 by a county in which a portion of the city of Broomfield was located before the creation of the city and county. Adams County v. City & County of Broomfield, 78 P.3d 1129 (Colo. App. 2003).

The city and county of Broomfield is permitted to retain and use the property taxes payable in 2002 attributable to Jefferson county's 2001 assessment on property that became part of the city and county of Broomfield. Although this section does not expressly allow Broomfield to retain and use property taxes it collects, voters must have known that Broomfield would assume the duties and responsibilities formerly carried out by any other counties with respect to property within the new city and county, and the voters also must have intended that Broomfield would have the power to retain and use the property taxes that Jefferson county formerly assessed and imposed. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Jefferson County v. City & County of Broomfield, 62 P.3d 1086 (Colo. App. 2002).

Jefferson county's argument that it is entitled to tax revenues collected in 2002 to pay for services it rendered in 2001 because taxes are paid in arrears is incorrect. The services that Jefferson county rendered in 2001 were paid for with the taxes that Jefferson county collected in 2001, and services that Broomfield rendered in 2002 were paid for with the taxes Broomfield collected in 2002. This interpretation gives a consistent, harmonious, and sensible effect to the various statutes that create the property tax schemes. A different conclusion permitting Jefferson county to obtain the 2002 taxes would represent a windfall to it, because the services for the residents of the property no longer in Jefferson county, but now lying within Broomfield, must be provided and paid for by Broomfield. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Jefferson County v. City & County of Broomfield, 62 P.3d 1086 (Colo. App. 2002).

Section 13. Sections self-executing - appropriations. Sections 10 through 13 of this article shall be in all respects self-executing and shall be construed so as to supersede any conflicting constitutional or statutory provision that would otherwise impede the creation of the city and county of Broomfield or limit any of the provisions of those sections. Except as otherwise provided in sections 10 through 13, said sections shall be effective on and after November 15, 2001. After the adoption of the constitutional provisions creating and governing the city and county of Broomfield, the general assembly may appropriate funds, if necessary, in cooperation with the city and county of Broomfield to implement these constitutional provisions at the state level.

ARTICLE XXI
Recall from Office

Cross references: For recall of state and county officers, see part 1 of article 12 of title 1; for recall of municipal officers see part 5 of article 4 of title 31.

Section 1. State officers may be recalled. Every elective public officer of the state of Colorado may be recalled from office at any time by the registered electors entitled to vote for a successor of such incumbent through the procedure and in the manner herein provided for, which procedure shall be known as the recall, and shall be in addition to and without excluding any other method of removal provided by law.

The procedure hereunder to effect the recall of an elective public officer shall be as follows:

A petition signed by registered electors entitled to vote for a successor of the incumbent sought to be recalled, equal in number to twenty-five percent of the entire vote cast at the last preceding election for all candidates for the position which the incumbent sought to be recalled occupies, demanding an election of the successor to the officer named in said petition, shall be filed in the office in which petitions for nominations to office held by the incumbent sought to be recalled are required to be filed; provided, if more than one person is required by law to be elected to fill the office of which the person sought to be recalled is an incumbent, then the said petition shall be signed by registered electors entitled to vote for a successor to the incumbent sought to be recalled equal in number to twenty-five percent of the entire vote cast at the last preceding general election for all candidates for the office, to which the incumbent sought to be recalled was elected as one of the officers thereof, said entire vote being divided by the number of all officers elected to such office, at the last preceding general election; and such petition shall contain a general statement, in not more than two hundred words, of the ground or grounds on which such recall is sought, which statement is intended for the information of the registered electors, and the registered electors shall be the sole and exclusive judges of the legality, reasonableness and sufficiency of such ground or grounds assigned for such recall, and said ground or grounds shall not be open to review.

Law reviews. For note, "A Study of the Colorado Commission on Judicial Qualifications", see 47 Den. L.J. 491 (1970).

Recall, initiative, and referendum are fundamental rights of a republican form of government which the people have reserved unto themselves. Such a reservation of power in the people must be liberally construed in favor of the right of the people to exercise it. Conversely, limitations on the power of referendum must be strictly construed. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

Power of recall is a fundamental constitutional right of Colorado citizens, and the reservation of this power in the people must be liberally construed. Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

And is cumulative of power to remove. The power to remove public officials pursuant to art. XIII of this constitution and the power of recall under this article are cumulative and concurrent rather than exclusive remedies available to the people. Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

"Every elective public officer of the state of Colorado" refers to officers of state, as distinguished from members of school boards and county, city, town, and precinct officers. Guyer v. Stutt, 68 Colo. 422, 191 P. 120 (1920).

Where it was contended that the second paragraph of this section relates to all elective public officers instead of elective public officers of the state; but if so why does not the first paragraph omit the words "of the state of Colorado"? Since it does not, and since not elsewhere in the article is there any statement that any other elective public officer may be recalled under its provisions, it is fair to say that the second paragraph refers to state officers only. This conclusion is strengthened by the provision that, under section 2 of this article, the petition must be submitted to the governor and that the governor must order the election and fix the date for holding it, and, by the provisions of section 4 of this article, that the state shall pay the election expenses of the unrecalled incumbent. Hall v. Cummings, 73 Colo. 74, 213 P. 328 (1923).

Except as provided in section 4 of this article. The recall was intended to apply only to the elective public officers of the state except as provided in section 4 of this article for the recall of city, county, and town officers. Guyer v. Stutt, 68 Colo. 422, 191 P. 120 (1920).

Article held inapplicable to school directors. Guyer v. Stutt, 68 Colo. 422, 191 P. 120 (1920).

Every elective officer who discharges a governmental function is subject to recall, provided there is a constitutional provision or enabling legislation prescribing the procedure to be followed. Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

Elective officers of subordinate units of government may be recalled. To the extent that prior supreme court decisions hold that elective officers of subordinate units of state government may not be recalled under § 4 of this article, those cases are overruled. Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

Trial court erred in concluding that requirements of this section do not apply to petitions seeking elections for the recall of municipal officers. Combs v. Nowak, 43 P.3d 743 (Colo. App. 2001).

Reapportionment plan nullifying recall power unconstitutional. A reapportionment plan which virtually nullifies the power of recall cannot be constitutionally sanctioned. In re Reapportionment of Colo. Gen. Ass'y, 647 P.2d 191 (Colo.

1982).

Effect of signature requirement. The framers, by requiring that a recall petition contain the signatures of at least 25 percent of all votes cast in the last election for all candidates for the position which the person sought to be recalled occupies, assured that a recall election will not be held in response to the wishes of a small and unrepresentative minority. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

County clerk must accept petitions for filing even if it appears that some signatures were signed after sixty days from the date of the first signature. The clerk may then conduct a hearing on protests, if any, including protests on the basis of noncompliance of the 60-day rule. Dodge v. County Clerk and Recorder, 768 P.2d 1271 (Colo. App. 1988).

Right is given by third paragraph of section to set up in petition for recall of judge facts upon which recall is sought, even though they might tend to obstruct the administration of the law. Marians v. People ex rel. Hines, 69 Colo. 87, 169 P. 155 (1917).

As act on which recall based must be mentioned in petition. The provision of this section as to statement in the petition intends that when a citizen is of the opinion that a public officer, subject to recall, has done that which shows him to be unfit for the office which he holds, the citizen may make such act the basis of an attempt to recall the officer; and to do that he must necessarily mention said act in the recall petition. Marians v. People ex rel. Hines, 69 Colo. 87, 169 P. 155 (1917).

Dissatisfaction sufficient grounds. Colorado is not a state in which official misconduct is necessarily required as a ground for recall. Rather, the dissatisfaction, whatever the reason, of the electorate is sufficient to set the recall procedures in motion. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

And court's inquiry into sufficiency of grounds prohibited. Trial court's inquiry into the sufficiency of the statement of the grounds for recall clearly infringes upon the powers reserved by the people and was error. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

Recall political in nature. The limitation on judicial review of the grounds for recall makes it clear that the recall intended by the framers of the Colorado constitution is purely political in nature. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

Circulation of petition for recall of district judge is not contempt of court, where the facts set out in the petition are truthfully stated, though with uncalled-for bitterness. Such a petition is privileged. Marians v. People ex rel. Hines, 69 Colo. 87, 169 P. 155 (1917).

Applied in People ex rel. Losavio v. Gentry, 199 Colo. 153, 606 P.2d 856 (1980); Kallenberger v. Buchanan, 649 P.2d 314 (Colo. 1982).

Section 2. Form of recall petition. Any recall petition may be circulated and signed in sections, provided each section shall contain a full and accurate copy of the title and text of the petition; and such recall petition shall be filed in the office in which petitions for nominations to office held by the incumbent sought to be recalled are required to be filed.

The signatures to such recall petition need not all be on one sheet of paper, but each signer must add to his signature the date of his signing said petition, and his place of residence, giving his street number, if any, should he reside in a town or city. The person circulating such sheet must make and subscribe an oath on said sheet that the signatures thereon are genuine, and a false oath, willfully so made and subscribed by such person, shall be perjury and be punished as such. All petitions shall be deemed and held to be sufficient if they appear to be signed by the requisite number of signers, and such signers shall be deemed and held to be registered electors, unless a protest in writing under oath shall be filed in the office in which such petition has been filed, by some registered elector, within fifteen days after such petition is filed, setting forth specifically the grounds of such protest, whereupon the officer with whom such petition is filed shall forthwith mail a copy of such protest to the person or persons named in such petition as representing the signers thereof, together with a notice fixing a time for hearing such protest not less than five nor more than ten days after such notice is mailed. All hearings shall be before the officer with whom such protest is filed, and all testimony shall be under oath. Such hearings shall be summary and not subject to delay, and must be concluded within thirty days after such petition is filed, and the result thereof shall be forthwith certified to the person or persons representing the signers of such petition. In case the petition is not sufficient it may be withdrawn by the person or a majority of the persons representing the signers of such petition, and may, within fifteen days thereafter, be amended and refiled as an original petition. The finding as to the sufficiency of any petition may be reviewed by any state court of general jurisdiction in the county in which such petition is filed, upon application of the person or a majority of the persons representing the signers of such petition, but such review shall be had and determined forthwith. The sufficiency, or the determination of the sufficiency, of the petition referred to in this section shall not be held, or construed, to refer to the ground or grounds assigned in such petition for the recall of the incumbent sought to be recalled from office thereby.

When such petition is sufficient, the officer with whom such recall petition was filed, shall forthwith submit said petition, together with a certificate of its sufficiency to the governor, who shall thereupon order and fix the date for holding the election not less than thirty days nor more than sixty days from the date of submission of said petition; provided, if a general election is to be held within ninety days after the date of submission of said petition, the recall election shall be held as part of said general election.

ANNOTATION

Right of recall is a fundamental right of the people. Hazelwood v. Saul, 619 P.2d 499 (Colo. 1980).

Statutes governing exercise of the power to recall are to be liberally construed in favor of the ability to exercise it, and any limitations on that power must be strictly construed. Hazelwood v. Saul, 619 P.2d 499 (Colo. 1980).

Importance of petition is fully recognized in this article by the several provisions concerning it. The signers must be qualified electors; each one must add to his signature the date of signing and his place of residence, with street and number, if in town or city; and the genuineness of the signatures must be attested under oath by the circulator of the sheets for signature. The petition is to contain a statement of the grounds of recall, in not more than two hundred words, and must be signed by electors in number equal to one quarter of the vote cast at the last preceding election. Each section of the petition must contain its full title and text. Landrum v. Ramer, 64 Colo. 82, 172 P. 3 (1918).

And petition must conform with this section. This section provides for a series of steps leading up to a recall election, and the first act which partakes of an official character is the filing of a recall petition in the office of the secretary of state. The instrument to be filed is to be of the form and substance prescribed by the amendment, and nothing short of that is a petition with a right to be filed. Until there is such a petition, the movement for an election is not initiated. Landrum v. Ramer, 64 Colo. 82, 172 P. 3 (1918).

Date of signing and place of residence must be added. A signature is not complete, and the writer of it not a "signer" unless there be added the date of signing and place of residence. Until it has been determined that the requisite number of persons have signed, and added to their signatures the matters required, and the verifying affidavits have been made, no one can say that there is a recall petition at all. These matters can be determined from the papers by inspection and computation. Landrum v. Ramer, 64 Colo. 82, 172 P. 3 (1918).

However, electors are presumed qualified. Whether or not signers of a recall petition are qualified electors need not be considered in the first instance; their qualification is presumed until a protest is filed. This is a reasonable and almost necessary provision, in order to make it possible to file a petition within a reasonable time after it is presented. There is no such reason for presuming correctness as to the matters which appear on the face of the papers, and it is worthy of notice that there is but one of all the requirements to which this presumption attaches. Landrum v. Ramer, 64 Colo. 82, 172 P. 3 (1918).

Secretary of state may examine petition before filing it. The secretary of state is not under duty to immediately file in his office a paper presented to him as a petition for an election to recall an officer. It is his duty to examine what is presented and to determine whether it complies with the requirements of this section, and he is entitled to a reasonable time for such examination. Landrum v. Ramer, 64 Colo. 82, 172 P. 3 (1918).

Applied in Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974); Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

Section 3. Resignation - filling vacancy. If such officer shall offer his resignation, it shall be accepted, and the vacancy caused by such resignation, or from any other cause, shall be filled as provided by law; but the person appointed to fill such vacancy shall hold his office only until the person elected at the recall election shall qualify. If such officer shall not resign within five days after the sufficiency of the recall petition shall have been sustained, the governor shall make or cause to be made publication of notice for the holding of such election, and officers charged by law with duties concerning elections shall make all arrangements for such election, and the same shall be conducted, returned and the result thereof declared in all respects as in the case of general elections.

On the official ballot at such elections shall be printed in not more than 200 words, the reasons set forth in the petition for demanding his recall, and in not more than three hundred words there shall also be printed, if desired by him, the officer's justification of his course in office. If such officer shall resign at any time subsequent to the filing thereof, the recall election shall be called notwithstanding such resignation.

There shall be printed on the official ballot, as to every officer whose recall is to be voted on, the words, "Shall (name of person against whom the recall petition is filed) be recalled from the office of (title of the office)?" Following such question shall be the words, "Yes" and "No", on separate lines, with a blank space at the right of each, in which the voter shall indicate, by marking a cross (X), his vote for or against such recall.

On such ballots, under each question, there shall also be printed the names of those persons who have been nominated as candidates to succeed the person sought to be recalled; but no vote cast shall be counted for any candidate for such office, unless the voter also voted for or against the recall of such person sought to be recalled from said office. The name of the person against whom the petition is filed shall not appear on the ballot as a candidate for the office.

If a majority of those voting on said question of the recall of any incumbent from office shall vote "no", said incumbent shall continue in said office; if a majority shall vote "yes", such incumbent shall thereupon be deemed removed from such office upon the qualification of his successor.

If the vote had in such recall elections shall recall the officer then the candidate who has received the highest number of votes for the office thereby vacated shall be declared elected for the remainder of the term, and a certificate of election shall be forthwith issued to him by the canvassing board. In case the person who received the highest number of votes shall fail to qualify within fifteen days after the issuance of a certificate of election, the office shall be deemed vacant, and shall be filled according to law.

Candidates for the office may be nominated by petition, as now provided by law, which petition shall be filed in the office in which petitions for nomination to office are required by law to be filed not less than fifteen days before such recall election.

ANNOTATION

Recalled officer may not succeed himself. Home-rule cities may provide for an election system in which candidates may be elected by a plurality vote. They may not, however, make it possible to frustrate the will of the majority by allowing a recalled officer to succeed himself. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974).

Section 4. Limitation - municipal corporations may adopt, when.

No recall petition shall be circulated or filed against any officer until he has actually held his office for at least six months, save and except it may be filed against any member of the state legislature at any time after five days from the convening and organizing of the legislature after his election.

After one recall petition and election, no further petition shall be filed against the same officer during the term for which he was elected, unless the petitioners signing said petition shall equal fifty percent of the votes cast at the last preceding general election for all of the candidates for the office held by such officer as herein above defined.

In any recall election of a state elective officer, if the incumbent whose recall is sought is not recalled, he shall be repaid from the state treasury for the expenses of such election in the manner provided by law. The general assembly may establish procedures for the reimbursement by a local governmental entity of expenses incurred by an incumbent elective officer of such governmental entity whose recall is sought but who is not recalled.

If the governor is sought to be recalled under the provisions of this article, the duties herein imposed upon him shall be performed by the lieutenant-governor; and if the secretary of state is sought to be recalled, the duties herein imposed upon him, shall be performed by the state auditor.

The recall may also be exercised by the registered electors of each county, city and county, city and town of the state, with reference to the elective officers thereof, under such procedure as shall be provided by law.

Until otherwise provided by law, the legislative body of any such county, city and county, city and town may provide for the manner of exercising such recall powers in such counties, cities and counties, cities and towns, but shall not require any such recall to be signed by registered electors more in number than twenty-five percent of the entire vote cast at the last preceding election, as in section 1 hereof more particularly set forth, for all the candidates for office which the incumbent sought to be recalled occupies, as herein above defined.

Every person having authority to exercise or exercising any public or governmental duty, power or function, shall be an elective officer, or one appointed, drawn or designated in accordance with law by an elective officer or officers, or by some board, commission, person or persons legally appointed by an elective officer or officers, each of which said elective officers shall be subject to the recall provision of this constitution; provided, that, subject to regulation by law, any person may, without compensation therefor, file petitions, or complaints in courts concerning crimes, or do police duty only in cases of immediate danger to person or property.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or limiting the present or future powers of cities and counties or cities having charters adopted under the authority given by the constitution, except as in the last three preceding paragraphs expressed.

In the submission to the electors of any petition proposed under this article, all officers shall be guided by the general laws of the state, except as otherwise herein provided.

This article is self-executing, but legislation may be enacted to facilitate its operations, but in no way limiting or restricting the provisions of this article, or the powers herein reserved.

Law reviews. For comment, "Water: Statewide or Local Concern?, City of Thornton v. Farmers Reservoir & Irrigation Co., 194 Colo. 526, 575 P.2d 382 (1978)", see 56 Den. L.J. 625 (1979).

Power of recall is fundamental right of citizens within a representative democracy. Shroyer v. Sokol, 191 Colo. 32, 550 P.2d 309 (1976).

Reservation of power of recall in people must be liberally construed in favor of the ability to exercise it; conversely, limitations on the power of recall must be strictly construed. Shroyer v. Sokol, 191 Colo. 32, 550 P.2d 309 (1976).

Applicability of section. This section, by referring expressly to the last preceding general election, shows the recall applies to state officers only, except as it otherwise makes direct provision for the recall of city, county, and town officers. Guyer v. Stutt, 68 Colo. 422, 191 P. 120 (1920).

As recall power not in conflict with state constitution delegated. The Colorado constitution delegates the recall power to the subordinate levels of state government; however, this delegation of power must be limited to procedural matters and substantive provisions not in conflict with the state constitution. Bernzen v. City of Boulder, 186 Colo. 81, 525 P.2d 416 (1974); Shroyer v. Sokol, 191 Colo. 32, 550 P.2d 309 (1976).

Local officers may not be recalled without further legislation. A county officer cannot be recalled without further legislation. Hall v. Cummings, 73 Colo. 74, 213 P. 328 (1923).

This section provides that the recall may also be exercised with reference to the elective officers of each county, city, and town, but, until otherwise provided by law, leaves the manner of exercising the recall power, as to these officers, to be provided by the legislative body of the county, city, and town, showing that, for the purpose of the recall, in the sense contained in this article, the elective officers of counties, cities, and towns are not regarded as public officers of the state, but as city, county, and town officers. Of course, it follows that the recall power mentioned in this section cannot apply to county, city, and town officers until the manner of exercising it shall be provided according to law. Nowhere in the instrument is it said that school directors may be recalled. Guyer v. Stutt, 68 Colo. 422, 191 P. 120 (1920).

School directors intentionally omitted from recall. By classifying practically all of the elective public officers, and omitting school directors, it would seem they were intentionally omitted from the recall. The framers of the amendment must be presumed to have intended what is expressly and specifically therein stated rather than what might be inferred from the use of ambiguous generalities. Guyer v. Stutt, 68 Colo. 422, 191 P. 120 (1920).

Every elective officer who discharges a governmental function is subject to recall, provided there is a constitutional provision or enabling legislation prescribing the procedure to be followed. Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

Elective officers of subordinate units of state government may be recalled. To the extent that prior supreme court decisions hold that elective officers of subordinate units of state government may not be recalled under this section, those cases are overruled. Groditsky v. Pinckney, 661 P.2d 279 (Colo. 1983).

Provision of city charter amendment providing for compulsory, binding arbitration of all unresolved municipal-police union labor disputes arising from collective bargaining agreement was unlawful as removing governmental decision-making from aegis of elected representatives, and placing it in the hands of an outside person who had no accountability to the public. Greeley Police Union v. City Council, 191 Colo. 419, 553 P.2d 790 (1976).

However, a city charter amendment requiring binding arbitration of unresolved labor issues with police officers does not violate this provision where the city council creates the panel of arbitrators from which the arbitrator or arbitrators are selected, where the council can modify the membership on the panel with specified restrictions, and where other standards and safeguards exist. Fraternal Order of Police v. City of Commerce City, 996 P.2d 133 (Colo. 2000).

Arbitration provisions in Labor Peace Act do not violate this section. Where arbitrator was selected by a politically accountable government official the arbitration process was constitutional under this section. Reg'l Transp. Dist. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Availability of judicial review of arbitrator's award, under "unfair, capricious, or unjust" standard, and of director's decision to order arbitration, imposed sufficient standards and safeguards. Therefore, no unlawful delegation of legislative authority occurred. Reg'l Transp. Dist. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Arbitrator appointed by the executive director of the department of labor was appointment by a politically accountable government official in compliance with this provision. Reg'l Transp. v. Dept. of Labor, 830 P.2d 942 (Colo. 1992).

Application of 25 percent limitation. The 25 percent limitation expressed in this section does not apply only to local recall ordinances; it also applies to statutory enactments, such as § 30-10-202. Shroyer v. Sokol, 191 Colo. 32, 550 P.2d 309 (1976).

Incorporation of provisions into § 30-10-202. Both the 25 percent limitation and the electors (not necessarily registered) requirements, set forth in this section, can be incorporated by implication into § 30-10-202. Shroyer v. Sokol, 191 Colo. 32, 550 P.2d 309 (1976).

Statutory limitation on reimbursement unconstitutional. Statute which places a ten cent per voter limitation on reimbursement of expenses to an incumbent who prevails in a recall election violates this section. Passarelli v. Schoettler, 742 P.2d 867 (Colo. 1987) (decided prior to 1988 amendment to this section).

Applied in City & County of Denver v. Denver Firefighters Local 858, 663 P.2d 1032 (Colo. 1983).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "One Year Review of Constitutional and Administrative Law", see 34 Dicta 79 (1957).

Constitutionality of article. This article is not repugnant to section 4 of the enabling act; neither is it repugnant to § 10 of art. I, U.S. Const., § 4 of art. IV, U.S. Const., and § 1 of amend. XIV, U.S. Const.; nor is it invalid as containing matter which is not constitutional or fundamental in character; and it is not invalid because never lawfully or actually adopted by the vote of the electors contrary to § 5 of art. II, Colo. Const., and § 2 of art. XIX, Colo. Const. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 99 Colo. 591, 65 P.2d 7 (1937).

This article does not conflict with § 31 of art. V, Colo. Const. and, hence, does not supersede it. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 99 Colo. 591, 65 P.2d 7 (1937).

And this section is self-executing as to establishment of specified fund; otherwise not, save that the fund so created becomes the fund out of which payments will be made under the laws heretofore in force until this article is otherwise effectuated by legislation. In re Interrogatories by Governor, 99 Colo. 591, 65 P.2d 7 (1937); Fairall v. Frisbee, 104 Colo. 553, 92 P.2d 748 (1939).

This amendment is not self-executing except as to the establishment of the pension fund. Bedford v. Sinclair, 112 Colo. 176, 147 P.2d 486 (1944).

This article has no application to proceeds of city sales and use tax; state taxation in the same field as that of a municipality can coexist. The old age pension and the state sales and use tax statutes deal exclusively with state levies and have no application to taxes levied by home rule cities, which are purely local and municipal. Berman v. City & County of Denver, 156 Colo. 538, 400 P.2d 434 (1965).

Outstanding feature of pension fund program is its trust fund character. The Colorado supreme court has recognized that the beneficiaries have a high degree of interest in the preservation of the fund. Gonzales v. Shea, 318 F. Supp. 572 (D. Colo. 1970), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 403 U.S. 927, 91 S. Ct. 2259, 29 L. Ed. 2d 706 (1971).

Applied in City & County of Denver v. People, 103 Colo. 565, 88 P.2d 89 (1939).

Section 2. Moneys allocated to fund. There is hereby set aside, allocated and allotted to the old age pension fund sums and money as follows:

(a) Eighty-five percent of all net revenue accrued or accruing, received or receivable from any and all excise taxes now or hereafter levied upon sales at retail, or any other purchase transaction; together with eighty-five percent of the net revenue derived from any excise taxes now or hereafter levied upon the storage, use, or consumption of any commodity or product; together with eighty-five percent of all license fees imposed by article 26 of title 39, Colorado Revised Statutes, and amendments thereto; provided, however, that no part of the revenue derived from excise taxes now or hereafter levied, for highway purposes, upon gasoline or other motor fuel, shall be made a part of said old age pension fund.

(b) Eighty-five percent of all net revenue accrued or accruing, received or receivable from taxes of whatever kind upon all malt, vinous, or spirituous liquor, both intoxicating and non-intoxicating, and license fees connected therewith.

(c) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2006, p. 2956, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 2007, p. 2964, December 31, 2006.)

(d) All grants in aid from the federal government for old age assistance.

(e) (Deleted by amendment, L. 2006, p. 2956, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 2007, p. 2964, December 31, 2006.)

(f) Such other money as may be allocated to said fund by the general assembly.

ANNOTATION

Amendment of section constitutional. This section and section 5 of this article are not invalid by reason of the fact that the 1936 amendment of the section attempted to extend or amend an act by reference to its title only, contrary to the provisions of § 24 of art. V, Colo. Const. In re Interrogatories of the Governor, 99 Colo. 591, 65 P.2d 7 (1937).

Amendment not retroactive. The amendment providing, inter alia, that beginning January 1, 1937, 85 percent of the revenue derived from excise taxes on liquors shall become a part of the old-age pension fund, is not retroactive. City & County of Denver v. People, 103 Colo. 565, 88 P.2d 89, appeal dismissed, 307 U.S. 615, 59 S. Ct. 1044, 83 L. Ed. 1496, reh'g denied, 308 U.S. 633, 60 S. Ct. 69, 84 L. Ed. 527 (1939).

Provision self-executing. This section of the constitution sets aside 85 percent of license fees and allots them to the old-age pension fund, which provision is self-executing. Sheridan Hotel, Inc. v. Perkins, 118 Colo. 499, 197 P.2d 468 (1948).

Funds allocated but no tax levied under this amendment. While the pension amendment to the constitution directly allocates certain excise tax levies and license fees, and, contingently, other revenues, to the old-age pension fund, still, in and of its terms, such amendment does not operate to levy a tax of any kind upon anything. Bedford v. Sinclair, 112 Colo. 176, 147 P.2d 486 (1944).

Revenue from municipal tax not included. Subsection (a) contains no language which expressly or by reasonable inference refers to taxes or license fees that have been imposed by a municipality, or otherwise than by the usual legislative procedure of the state as a whole. State v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 519, 107 P.2d 317 (1940).

The revenue from a cigarette tax collected under an ordinance of the city of Denver does not come within the purview of this section. State v. City & County of Denver, 106 Colo. 519, 107 P.2d 317 (1940).

A tax imposed on all liquor dealers in the city of Grand Junction by a city ordinance is not a tax upon liquor, but an occupational excise tax upon the business of selling liquor, and such taxes do not come within the purview of this section of the constitution. Post v. City of Grand Junction, 118 Colo. 434, 195 P.2d 958 (1948).

Mandamus will not lie to compel funding. Mandamus will not lie to compel state officers to set aside and place in old age pension fund 85 percent of net revenues from a public revenue service tax, although petitioner was not receiving minimum pension authorized. Conklin v. Armstrong, 106 Colo. 376, 105 P.2d 854 (1940).

Courts will not be responsible for diverting state funds in interest of particular fund. Since this amendment does not in terms segregate liquor values from values of other property, nor has the general assembly clothed the state taxing authority with power to make such segregation, or upon its value to levy a tax in behalf of the pension fund, nor has such authority attempted to take such steps, it was held that the courts would not assume responsibility for diverting legally established state funds in the interest of a particular fund, however worthy and appealing. Bedford v. Sinclair, 112 Colo. 176, 147 P.2d 486 (1944).

But certain percentage of all revenue from liquor taxes should go to pension fund. Since by this amendment a certain percentage of all revenue arising from taxes of whatever kind on liquor shall be allocated to the old age pension fund, to the extent funds resulting from ad valorem levies by the state, the counties, municipalities and school districts are augmented by the value of liquor included in total valuations, it was held that such percentage should be withheld from the funds of those several legal entities and allocated to the pension fund. Bedford v. Sinclair, 112 Colo. 176, 147 P.2d 486 (1944).

Where proceedings should have been dismissed by trial court. Where a county treasurer, perplexed as to his duty in relation to the allocation of revenues, sought a declaratory judgment in the premises, and the trial court adjudged that subsection (b) of this section operates upon all taxes on liquor, including ad valorem taxes, but that such provision "is not self-executing", it was held that the trial court should have dismissed the proceedings. Bedford v. Sinclair, 112 Colo. 176, 147 P.2d 486 (1944).

Applied in People ex rel. Inter-Church Temperance Movement v. Baker, 133 Colo. 398, 297 P.2d 273 (1956).

Section 3. Persons entitled to receive pensions. Every citizen of the United States who has been a resident of the state of Colorado for such period as the general assembly may determine, who has attained the age of sixty years or more, and who qualifies under the laws of Colorado to receive a pension, shall be entitled to receive the same; provided, however, that no person otherwise qualified shall be denied a pension by reason of the fact that the person is the owner of real estate occupied by the person as a residence; nor for the reason that relatives may be financially able to contribute to the person's support and maintenance; nor shall any person be denied a pension for the reason that the person owns personal property which by law is exempt from execution or attachment; nor shall any person be required, in order to receive a pension, to repay, or promise to repay, the state of Colorado any money paid to the person as an old age pension.

ANNOTATION

Pension classifications unconstitutional. The establishment of two classes of needy citizens between the ages of 60 and 65, indistinguishable from each other except that one is composed of residents who have resided continuously in Colorado for 35 years, and the second for residents who have resided in Colorado less than 35 continuous years, which works to deny critically needed old-age pension benefits to those who have resided in Colorado less than 35 continuous years, is unconstitutional as violative of equal protection. Jeffrey v. Colo. State Dept. of Soc. Servs., 198 Colo. 265, 599 P.2d 874 (1979).

Exempt personal property determined under Colorado rather than federal law. Provision of this section excluding from calculations of need "personal property which by law is exempt from execution or attachment", refers to Colorado law, not federal law, by reason of section 26-2-109 implementing the constitution. Francis v. Colo. Bd. of Soc. Servs., 184 Colo. 136, 518 P.2d 1174 (1974).

Classification of railroad retirement annuity as income in computing need for old age pension does not conflict with this section. Francis v. Colo. Bd. of Soc. Servs., 184 Colo. 136, 518 P.2d 1174 (1974).

But income including railroad retirement annuities is not personal property within the meaning of this provision. Francis v. Colo. Bd. of Soc. Servs., 184 Colo. 136, 518 P.2d 1174 (1974).

Section 4. The state board of public welfare to administer fund. The state board of public welfare, or such other agency as may be authorized by law to administer old age pensions, shall cause all moneys deposited in the old age pension fund to be paid out as directed by this article and as required by statutory provisions not inconsistent with the provisions hereof, after defraying the expense of administering the said fund.

Source: Initiated 56: Entire article R&RE, effective January 1, 1957, see L. 57, p. 555.

Cross references: For the state agency authorized to administer or supervise the administration of public assistance programs, see § 26-2-104.

ANNOTATION

Intended effect of this section is that the pensioners shall receive all moneys that enter into the old age pension fund, except such as are required to defray the expense of administering the fund. Redmon v. Davis, 115 Colo. 415, 174 P.2d 945 (1946).

Balance of allocation for administrative expenses belongs to pensioners. The intended effect of this section is that the pensioners shall receive all moneys that enter into the old age pension fund except that allocated for administrative expenses, and if only a portion of the latter is used for the payment of such expenses, the balance belongs to the pensioners. Davis v. Pensioners Protective Ass'n, 110 Colo. 380, 135 P.2d 142 (1943).

Administration expenses of other relief schemes cannot be paid from old age fund. Insofar as money allocated from the old age pension fund is used to defray the expenses of administering relief schemes other than those of the old age pension plan of relief, this constitutes an unconstitutional diversion of pension funds from their constitutionally prescribed use. Davis v. Pensioners Protective Ass'n, 110 Colo. 380, 135 P.2d 142 (1943).

Authority to prorate fund. Under this article authority to prorate the old age pension fund is vested by necessary implication in state board of public welfare. Fairall v. Redmon, 107 Colo. 195, 110 P.2d 247 (1941).

Payment of funeral and burial expenses of deceased old age pensioners out of the old age pension fund is payment of a "pension" as the word is used in this article and does not violate this section or section 7 of this article. Redmon v. Davis, 115 Colo. 415, 174 P.2d 945 (1946).

Section 5. Revenues for old age pension fund continued. The excise tax on sales at retail, together with all license fees levied by article 26 of title 39, Colorado Revised Statutes, and amendments thereto, are hereby continued in full force and effect beyond the date on which said taxes and license fees would otherwise expire, and shall continue until repealed or amended; provided, however, that no law providing revenue for the old age pension fund shall be repealed, nor shall any such law be amended so as to reduce the revenue provided for the old age pension fund, except in the event that at the time of such repeal or amendment, revenue is provided for the old age pension fund in an amount at least equal to that provided by the measure amended or repealed during the calendar year immediately preceding the proposed amendment or repeal.

ANNOTATION

Amendment of section constitutional. This section and § 2 of this article are not invalid by reason of the fact that the 1936 amendment of the section attempted to extend or amend an act by reference to its title only, contrary to the provisions of § 24 of art. V, Colo. Const. In re Interrogatories of the Governor, 99 Colo. 591, 65 P.2d 7 (1937).

Section prohibits repeal of any revenue act providing funds for old age pension unless a substitute revenue provision is enacted which furnishes an equal amount of money. Gonzales v. Shea, 318 F. Supp. 572 (D. Colo. 1970), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 403 U.S. 927, 91 S. Ct. 2259, 29 L. Ed. 2d 706 (1971).

Section 6. Basic minimum award. (a) Beginning on the effective date of this article, every person entitled to and receiving an old age pension from the state of Colorado under any former law or constitutional provision shall be entitled to receive the basic minimum award hereinafter provided for, without being required to make a new application therefor, and such basic minimum award shall be paid each month thereafter, so long as he remains qualified, to each person receiving an old age pension at the time of the adoption of this article, and such basic minimum award shall likewise be paid to each person who hereafter becomes qualified to receive an old age pension; subject, however, to the provisions of this article relating to net income from other sources.

(b) From and after the effective date of this article, the basic minimum award payable to those persons qualified to receive an old age pension shall be one hundred dollars monthly, provided, however, that the amount of net income, from whatever source, that any person qualified to receive a pension may have shall be deducted from the amount of the pension award unless otherwise provided by law.

(c) The state board of public welfare, or such other agency as may be authorized by law to administer old age pensions, shall have the power to adjust the basic minimum award above one hundred dollars per month if, in its discretion, living costs have changed sufficiently to justify that action.

ANNOTATION

Receivable income deducted from pension. By this section and by statutes, particularly § 26-4-110, an old age pension recipient is chargeable with and shall have deducted from his pension any income receivable whether in cash or in kind. Colorado State Bd. of Pub. Welfare v. Champion, 141 Colo. 375, 348 P.2d 256 (1960).

Applicant living with employed spouse or with spouse of ample means who is sharing family necessaries for which the income of such spouse would be chargeable can be said to be receiving income in kind. The value thereof can be determined and the amount deducted from any pension to which the recipient may be entitled. Colorado State Bd. of Pub. Welfare v. Champion, 141 Colo. 375, 348 P.2d 256 (1960).

Section 7. Stabilization fund and health and medical care fund. (a) All the moneys deposited in the old age pension fund shall be first available for payment of basic minimum awards to qualified recipients, and no part of said fund shall be transferred to any other fund until such basic minimum awards shall have been paid.

(b) Any moneys remaining in the old age pension fund after full payment of such basic minimum awards shall be transferred to a fund to be known as the stabilization fund, which fund shall be maintained at the amount of five million dollars, and restored to that amount after any disbursements therefrom. The state board of public welfare, or such other agency as may be authorized by law to administer old age pensions, shall use the moneys in such fund only to stabilize payments of basic minimum awards.

(c) Any moneys remaining in the old age pension fund, after full payment of basic minimum awards and after establishment and maintenance of the stabilization fund in the amount of five million dollars, shall be transferred to a health and medical care fund. The state board of public welfare, or such other agency as may be authorized by law to administer old age pensions, shall establish and promulgate rules and regulations for administration of a program to provide health and medical care to persons who qualify to receive old age pensions and who are not patients in an institution for tuberculosis or mental disease; the costs of such program, not to exceed ten million dollars in any fiscal year, shall be defrayed from such health and medical care fund; provided, however, all moneys available, accrued or accruing, received or receivable, in said health and medical care fund, in excess of ten million dollars in any fiscal year shall be transferred to the general fund of the state to be used pursuant to law.

ANNOTATION

Payment of funeral and burial expenses of deceased old age pensioners out of the old age pension fund is payment of a "pension" as the word is used in this article and does not violate this section or section 4 of this article. Redmon v. Davis, 115 Colo. 415, 174 P.2d 945 (1946).

Section 8. Fund to remain inviolate. All moneys deposited in the old age pension fund shall remain inviolate for the purpose for which created, and no part thereof shall be transferred to any other fund, or used or appropriated for any other purpose, except as provided for in this article.

ARTICLE XXV
Public Utilities

In addition to the powers now vested in the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, all power to regulate the facilities, service and rates and charges therefor, including facilities and service and rates and charges therefor within home rule cities and home rule towns, of every corporation, individual, or association of individuals, wheresoever situate or operating within the State of Colorado, whether within or without a home rule city or home rule town, as a public utility, as presently or as may hereafter be defined as a public utility by the laws of the State of Colorado, is hereby vested in such agency of the State of Colorado as the General Assembly shall by law designate.

Until such time as the General Assembly may otherwise designate, said authority shall be vested in the Public Utilities Commission of the State of Colorado; provided however, nothing herein shall affect the power of municipalities to exercise reasonable police and licensing powers, nor their power to grant franchises; and provided, further, that nothing herein shall be construed to apply to municipally owned utilities.

Law reviews. For article, "Utility Use of Renewable Resources: Legal and Economic Implications", see 59 U. Den. L.J. 663 (1982). For article, "Retail Competition in the Electric Utility Industry", see 60 Den. L.J. 1 (1982).

Power to regulate public utilities vested in public utilities commission. This article vests all power to regulate rates of public utilities within a home rule city, as well as elsewhere in the state, in the public utilities commission. Intermountain Rural Elec. Ass'n v. District Court, 160 Colo. 128, 414 P.2d 911 (1966); Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131 (1970).

The addition of this article to the Colorado Constitution in 1954 granted the public utilities commission the authority to regulate privately owned public utilities within home-rule cities. City of Craig v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 656 P.2d 1313 (Colo. 1983).

Commission's jurisdiction is not limited by a public/private capacity distinction. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph v. PUC, 763 P.2d 1020 (Colo. 1988).

Public utility commission's general authority to regulate does not preempt a home rule city's power to regulate its streets and utility poles and determine when a reasonable relocation of facilities is required. U S West Commc'ns v. City of Longmont, 948 P.2d 509 (Colo. 1997).

There is no requirement that company engage in every stage of manufacturing and distribution process in order to achieve the position of a utility. K.C. Elec. Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 191 Colo. 96, 550 P.2d 871 (1976).

This article has granted to public utilities commission authority to issue certificates of public convenience and necessity. Miller Bros. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 185 Colo. 414, 525 P.2d 443 (1974).

The public utilities commission's primary function and activity is certification, registration, and permitting of public utilities. The PUC does not offer, directly or indirectly, telephone services, electric services, motor vehicle services, or any other public utility services or programs to the public. Its function is limited to regulation of private entities and public utilities that offer such services. Reeves v. Queen City Transp., 10 F. Supp. 2d 1181 (D. Colo. 1998).

A public utility's activity does not become a "program or activity" of the PUC for purposes of the Americans with Disabilities Act merely because of the PUC's issuance of a certificate of public convenience and necessity. Reeves v. Queen City Transp., 10 F. Supp. 2d 1181 (D. Colo. 1998).

Authority of public utilities commission subject to general assembly restrictions. The authority of the public utilities commission has been made subject to restrictions which may be imposed by the general assembly. Peoples Natural Gas Div. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 626 P.2d 159 (Colo. 1981); City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Purpose of this article is to grant to general assembly authority to regulate privately owned public utilities within home rule cities, for without the grant of such power the regulation of service among the inhabitants of the city was a local matter, and laws of the state in conflict with ordinances and charter provisions enacted pursuant to art. XX, Colo. Const., had no force and effect within the municipality. City & County of Denver v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 181 Colo. 38, 507 P.2d 871 (1973).

Section 40-3-106 (4), which requires that a fixed public utility be ordered to increase rates charged customers in a municipality by adding a surcharge to recover the amount paid to the municipality under a franchise or license, does not violate this article as said section is a legislative restriction on the authority of the commission as authorized by this article. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Not municipally owned utilities operating within corporate boundaries. The public utilities commission has no jurisdiction to regulate or control the operation of a municipally owned utility which operates wholly within the territorial boundaries of a home rule city. City & County of Denver v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 181 Colo. 38, 507 P.2d 871 (1973).

The rationale of this article is that when a municipally owned utility operates within the municipality, there is no one who needs the protections of the public utilities commission. The electorate of the city exercises ultimate power and control over the city-run utility and if the people of the city are in any way dissatisfied with the operation of the utility, they may demonstrate their discontent at the next municipal election. K.C. Elec. Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 191 Colo. 96, 550

P.2d 871 (1976).

This provision establishes that (1) the public utilities commission cannot interfere with towns and cities in the exercise of their police power, and (2) that the commission has no jurisdiction over municipally owned utilities. United States Disposal Sys. v. City of Northglenn, 193 Colo. 277, 567 P.2d 365 (1977).

Where a home rule city was not concerned with supplying anyone other than its own citizens, and, in purchasing power, it was acting strictly as a municipally owned utility for the benefit of its own residents, the public utilities commission had no jurisdiction to require the city to purchase its power from any particular utility. K.C. Elec. Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 191 Colo. 96, 550 P.2d 871 (1976).

Where municipal utility refuses to provide a necessary service, private utility may be certificated to provide service within municipal boundaries. This article and section 35 of article V grant the public utilities commission authority to regulate public utilities throughout Colorado, including those that are located within home rule cities, but not municipally owned utilities operating within municipal boundaries. City of Fort Morgan v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 159 P.3d 87 (Colo. 2007).

Constitutional provision does not exempt municipalities from PUC regulation for extraterritorial delivery of water. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Denver Bd. of Water Comm'rs, 718 P.2d 235 (Colo. 1986).

But statutes do provide for exemption. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Denver Bd. of Water Comm'rs, 718 P.2d 235 (Colo. 1986).

County which provides mass transit within county boundaries is exempt from regulation by PUC. City of Durango v. Durango Transp., 807 P.2d 1152 (Colo. 1991); Durango Transp., Inc. v. City of Durango, 824 P.2d 48 (Colo. App. 1991).

This article does not affect the power of municipalities to exercise reasonable police and licensing powers or to grant franchises, nor does it apply to municipally-owned facilities. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

Public utilities commission may regulate rates fixed by contract. Unless otherwise provided by constitution or statute, a general grant of power to regulate rates authorizes a public utilities commission to regulate or modify rates fixed by contract, including those specified in franchise agreements, even though such contracts or agreements were executed prior to the passage of the statute by which the power is conferred, since they must be deemed to have been made subject to a proper exercise of the reserve police power of the state. Zelinger v. Pub. Serv. Co., 164 Colo. 424, 435 P.2d 412 (1967).

Unless suspension of power clearly and unmistakably shown. Assuming, without deciding, that at the time a franchise granting a gas company the right to operate a gas plant in a home rule city and to supply gas service to citizens of that city was entered into, art. XX, Colo. Const., gave a home rule city the power to establish by contract the rates to be charged by a public service corporation for a definite term and thereby suspend during the life of the contract the governmental power of fixing and regulating rates, yet it has been noted by the supreme court that it must clearly and unmistakably appear that the contract by its terms suspends the power of the state to regulate and all doubts must be resolved in favor of the continuance of the power of the state to regulate. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131

(1970).

Franchise ordinance did not suspend state's power to regulate. A franchise ordinance adopted by a home rule city granting to a gas company the right to operate a gas plant in the city and to supply gas service to citizens of that city did not suspend the power of the state to regulate and did not intend to do so. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131 (1970).

The phrase in a section of a franchise granting a gas company the right to operate a gas plant in a home rule city and to supply gas service to the citizens of that city, which specified that the rates shall remain in effect "unless and until changed in accordance with law" means not in accordance with due process but in accordance with the statutory or constitutional law of the state relating to rate fixing authority and jurisdiction. Pub. Utils. Comm'n v. City of Durango, 171 Colo. 553, 469 P.2d 131 (1970).

The public utilities commission cannot authorize a power company operating pursuant to a certificate of public convenience and necessity in an area annexed by a home rule municipality to expand its system and use city streets without obtaining a franchise from such municipality. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

The consent of both the municipality and the public utilities commission is necessary to operate a public utility within a home rule city, but neither the general assembly nor the public utilities commission is empowered to grant a franchise to a public utility to use the streets, alleys, and public places of a home rule municipality without the municipality's consent. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1988).

The right of home rule cities to grant franchises is not unconstitutionally interfered with by § 40-3-106 (4), which results in the customers within a municipality which has granted a franchise paying the cost of the franchise fee as part of the rates for the service. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

Section 40-3-106 (4) does not affect either a home rule city's ability to negotiate and grant franchises and to collect franchise fees or a fixed utility's obligation to pay to a municipality the entire amount of the franchise fee negotiated and, therefore, does not violate this article or §§ 4 and 6 of article XX of this constitution. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 732 P.2d 1181 (Colo. 1987).

City had regulatory power to set rates only as long as it saw fit to exercise power. When it withdrew from the field of the regulation of rates charged by public utilities by a charter amendment, the law of the state became automatically effective, and the public utilities commission had jurisdiction to regulate the rates of a public service company from and after the date of the charter amendment without regard to the question of whether the company operations were of "local and municipal" or "statewide" concern. Zelinger v. Pub. Serv. Co., 164 Colo. 424, 435 P.2d 412 (1967).

But city may not regulate statewide telephone system. A statewide telephone system, with its need for coordinated intra and interstate communications is a matter of statewide concern heavily outweighing any possible municipal interest. City of Englewood v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 163 Colo. 400, 431 P.2d 40 (1967).

The question as to whether a city has the power to require a statewide telephone company to obtain a city franchise in order to maintain its facilities within the limits of the city is answered by saying that the company already has such a right granted to it by the state and need not seek a second one, and the city cannot force it to, either. City of Englewood v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 163 Colo. 400, 431 P.2d 40 (1967).

Municipality's extension of electric service to new customers within annexed area does not constitute a taking without due process of law of a public utility's preexisting right to service a certificated area. Union Rural Elec. Ass'n v. Town of Frederick, 670 P.2d 4 (Colo. 1983).

Municipally owned utilities, not within the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission, are not precluded from providing electric service to new customers within their municipal limits. Union Rural Elec. Ass'n v. Town of Frederick, 670 P.2d 4 (Colo. 1983).

Viaduct construction within home-rule municipality subject to commission's preemptive jurisdiction. A municipality's authority to exercise reasonable police power does not encompass the right to regulate the construction of viaducts within a home-rule municipality because the construction of, and the apportionment of costs for viaducts is a matter of mixed local and statewide concern and subject therefore to the preemptive jurisdiction of the public utilities commission. Denver & R. G. W. R. R. v. City & County of Denver, 673 P.2d 354 (Colo. 1983).

Trash hauling matter of statewide concern. The constitution and the statutes of this state have given to the business of trash hauling the status of a matter of statewide concern, subject to the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission. Under such circumstances, a city has no power to pass an ordinance which is in conflict with the exercise by the commission of its statutory power. Givigliano v. Veltri, 180 Colo. 10, 501 P.2d 1044 (1972).

Acquisition of municipal utility determined by people. The acquisition by the city of the utility's facilities could not be prevented or interfered with by any agency once the people of the city determined by their vote that the system was to be acquired. City of Thornton v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 157 Colo. 188, 402 P.2d 194 (1965).

Jurisdiction over transfer of assets. The commission has jurisidiction to review telephone company's transfer of directory publishing assets to related corporation. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph v. PUC, 763 P.2d 1020 (Colo. 1988).

Action pursuant to this constitutional provision and 40-5-105 requiring commission approval of transfer of utility's assets not made in the ordinary course of business does not constitute an unconstitutional taking. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph v. PUC, 763 P.2d 1020 (Colo. 1988).

No jurisdiction over wellhead production of natural gas. The public utilities commission exercises no jurisdiction over the wellhead production of natural gas, which gas is then sold in intrastate commerce in Colorado. Its authority is limited to the regulation of "public utilities". Superior Oil Co. v. Western Slope Gas Co., 549 F. Supp. 463 (D. Colo. 1982).

Regulatory powers legislative, not judicial. The powers delegated to the commission on matters affecting the regulation of public utilities are legislative and not judicial. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 629 P.2d 619 (Colo. 1981).

The commission's power to regulate utility rates is legislative in nature. CF&I Steel, L.P. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 949 P.2d 577 (Colo. 1997).

The authority of the public utilities commission to grant certificates of public convenience and necessity is expressly limited by the constitution and statutes. City of Greeley v. Poudre Valley R. Elec., 744 P.2d 739 (Colo. 1987), appeal dismissed for want of a properly presented federal question, 485 U.S. 949, 108 S. Ct. 1207, 99 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1989).

PUC, acting as administrative agency, has been endowed with legislative authority in public utility matters, and judicial review of a PUC decision is generally limited to whether PUC has acted within its proper authority, whether its rulings are just and reasonable, and whether its conclusions are supported by the evidence presented to it. Integrated Network Servs., Inc. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 875 P.2d 1373 (Colo. 1994); Pub. Serv. Co. of Colo. v. Van Wyk, 27 P.3d 377 (Colo. 2001).

Exercise of temporary authority by commission authorized. Even in the absence of an express delegation of legislative powers, the public utilities commission's exercise of temporary authority to provide airline transportation to the public appears fully authorized by this section's general grant to the commission of all power to regulate the service of public utilities. Aspen Airways, Inc. v. Rocky Mt. Airways, Inc., 196 Colo. 285, 584 P.2d 629 (1978).

But public utilities commission lacks authority to effect social legislation by ordering that pay phone rates be reduced according to age and indigency classifications. Colo. Mun. League v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 197 Colo. 106, 591 P.2d 577 (1979).

And restricted power to set preferential rates. Although the public utilities commission has been granted broad rate making powers by this section, the commission's power to effect social policy through preferential rate making is restricted by §§ 40-3-106(1) and 40-3-102 no matter how deserving the group benefiting from the preferential rate may be. Mountain States Legal Found. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 197 Colo. 56, 590 P.2d 495 (1979).

Commission's discretion not limitless. The commission has considerable discretion in its choice of the means to accomplish its functions, but it does not have limitless legislative prerogative, as the general assembly may restrict the legislative authority delegated to it. City of Montrose v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 629 P.2d 619 (Colo. 1981).

Commission cannot impose monetary fines. The constitutional and statutory provisions which have created the public utilities commission and defined its powers do not authorize it to impose monetary fines. Haney v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 194 Colo. 481, 574 P.2d 863 (1978).

Authority of public utilities commission to order public utility to pay attorney's fees and costs of intervenor emanates from this article. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 195 Colo. 130, 576 P.2d 544 (1978); Colo. Ute Elec. Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 198 Colo. 534, 602 P.2d 861 (1979).

Commission's standard for determining attorneys' fee or costs award has three criteria: (1) the representation and expenses incurred relate to general consumer interests; (2) the testimony, evidence and exhibits provided "materially assist the commission" in reaching its decision; and (3) the fees and costs incurred are reasonable. Colo. Ute Elec. Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 198 Colo. 534, 602 P.2d 861 (1979).

Jurisdiction of district court extends only to review of commission's decision. Since jurisdiction over the adequacy, installation and extension of power services and facilities necessary to supply, extend, and connect the same is vested exclusively in the public utilities commission, it follows that the jurisdiction of the district court extends only to a review of the decision of the public utilities commission in appropriate proceedings. Intermountain Rural Elec. Ass'n v. District Court, 160 Colo. 128, 414 P.2d 911 (1966).

Special expertise of commission in regulating utilities is given great deference in its selection of an appropriate remedy for telephone company's transfer of directory publishing assets. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph v. PUC, 763 P.2d 1020 (Colo. 1988).

Remedy of undoing transfer made without prior approval of commission was appropriate. Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph v. PUC, 763 P.2d 1020 (Colo. 1988).

PUC is an administrative agency with considerable expertise in utility regulation and its decisions are to be accorded due deference. Review of the PUC's decisions are limited to the factors enumerated in § 40-6-115 (3), C.R.S. Integrated Network Servs. v. PUC, 875 P.2d 1373 (Colo. 1994); Silverado Communic. Corp. v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 893 P.2d 1316 (Colo. 1995).

PUC's approval of a line upgrade is a valid exercise of PUC's statutory authority, but such decision does not constitute an adjudication of the issue of property interests of affected parties. PUC does not have, and was never given, any authority to adjudicate property rights. Nor does the PUC have the authority to adjudicate questions related to damages stemming from property ownership and torts committed against either the property or the owner. Pub. Serv. Co. of Colo. v. Van Wyk, 27 P.3d 377 (Colo. 2001).

Applied in Denver Bar Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 154 Colo. 273, 391 P.2d 467 (1964); Shoemaker v. Mountain States Tel. & Tel. Co., 38 Colo. App. 321, 559 P.2d 721 (1976); People v. Fierro, 199 Colo. 215, 606 P.2d 1291 (1980); Mountain View Elec. Ass'n v. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 686 P.2d 1336 (Colo. 1984).

ARTICLE XXVI
Nuclear Detonations

Section 1. Nuclear detonations prohibited - exceptions. No nuclear explosive device may be detonated or placed in the ground for the purpose of detonation in this state except in accordance with this article.

Section 2. Election required. Before the emplacement of any nuclear explosive device in the ground in this state, the detonation of that device shall first have been approved by the voters through enactment of an initiated or referred measure authorizing that detonation, such measure having been ordered, proposed, submitted to the voters, and approved as provided in section 1 of article V of this constitution.

Section 3. Certification of indemnification required. Before the detonation or emplacement for the purpose of detonation of any nuclear explosive device, a competent state official or agency designated by the governor shall first have certified that sufficient and secure financial resources exist in the form of applicable insurance, self-insurance, indemnity bonds, indemnification agreements, or otherwise, without utilizing state funds, to compensate in full all parties that might foreseeably suffer damage to person or property from ground motion, ionizing radiation, other pollution, or other hazard attributable to such detonation. Damage is attributable to such detonation without regard to negligence and without regard to any concurrent or intervening cause.

ARTICLE XXVII
Great Outdoors Colorado Program

Section 1. Great Outdoors Colorado Program. (1) The people of the State of Colorado intend that the net proceeds of every state-supervised lottery game operated under the authority of Article XVIII, Section 2 shall be guaranteed and permanently dedicated to the preservation, protection, enhancement and management of the state's wildlife, park, river, trail and open space heritage, except as specifically provided in this article. Accordingly, there shall be established the Great Outdoors Colorado Program to preserve, protect, enhance and manage the state's wildlife, park, river, trail and open space heritage. The Great Outdoors Colorado Program shall include:

(a) Wildlife program grants which:

(I) Develop wildlife watching opportunities;

(II) Implement educational programs about wildlife and wildlife environment;

(III) Provide appropriate programs for maintaining Colorado's diverse wildlife heritage;

(IV) Protect crucial wildlife habitats through the acquisition of lands, leases or easements and restore critical areas;

(b) Outdoor recreation program grants which:

(I) Establish and improve state parks and recreation areas throughout the State of Colorado;

(II) Develop appropriate public information and environmental education resources on Colorado's natural resources at state parks, recreation areas, and other locations throughout the state;

(III) Acquire, construct and maintain trails and river greenways;

(IV) Provide water for recreational purposes through the acquisition of water rights or through agreements with holders of water rights, all in accord with applicable state water law;

(c) A program to identify, acquire and manage unique open space and natural areas of statewide significance through grants to the Colorado Divisions of Parks and Outdoor Recreation and Wildlife, or municipalities, counties, or other political subdivision of the State, or non-profit land conservation organizations, and which will encourage cooperative investments by other public or private entities for these purposes; and

(d) A program for grants to match local investments to acquire, develop and manage open space, parks, and environmental education facilities, and which will encourage cooperative investments by other public or private entities for these purposes.

ANNOTATION

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATION.

This article allocates the net proceeds of the state-supervised lottery to the Conservation Trust Fund, the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund, and the Division of Parks and Outdoor Recreation. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

This article and section 20 of article X of the Colorado constitution are not in irreconcilable, material, and direct conflict since this article does not authorize what section 20 of article X forbids or forbid what that section authorizes. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

The sale of lottery tickets does not constitute a "property sale" under section 20 of article X of the Colorado constitution. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

Net lottery proceeds are not to be excluded from state fiscal year spending as "gifts" under section 20 of article X of the Colorado constitution. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

II. TRUST FUND.

Since the inclusion of all net lottery proceeds in the calculation of state fiscal year spending creates an implicit conflict between section 20 of article X of the Colorado constitution and this article, legislation exempting net lottery proceeds dedicated by this article to Great Outdoors Colorado purposes from that section and subjecting such proceeds dedicated to the capital construction fund and the excess that spill over into the general fund to that section represented a reasonable resolution of that implicit conflict. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

III. BOARD OF TRUST FUND.

It is erroneous to exclude net lottery proceeds from the purview of section 20 of article X of the Colorado constitution on the basis of a characterization of the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund Board created under this article as a "district" or "non-district" for purposes of that section. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1993).

Although the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund Board is not a local government, private entity, agency of the state, or enterprise under section 20 of article X of the Colorado constitution, it is essentially governmental in nature and the best reading of that section is to exclude from state fiscal year spending limits only those entities that are non-governmental, since this interpretation is the interpretation that reasonably restrains most the growth of government. Submission of Interrogatories on Senate Bill 93-74, 852 P.2d 1, (Colo. 1993).

Section 2. Trust Fund created. A fund to be known as the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund, referred to in this article as the "Trust Fund," is hereby created and established in the Treasury of the State of Colorado.

Section 3. Moneys allocated to Trust Fund. (1) Beginning with the proceeds from the fourth quarter of the State's Fiscal Year 1992-1993, all proceeds from all programs, including Lotto and every other state-supervised lottery game operated under the authority of Article XVIII, Section 2 of the Colorado Constitution, whether by the Colorado Lottery Commission or otherwise (such programs defined hereafter in this Article as "Lottery Programs"), net of prizes and expenses of the state lottery division and after a sufficient amount of money has been reserved, as of the end of any fiscal quarter, to ensure the operation of the lottery for the ensuing fiscal quarter (such netted proceeds defined hereafter in this Article as "Net Proceeds") are set aside, allocated, allotted, and continuously appropriated as follows, and the Treasurer shall distribute such proceeds no less frequently than quarterly, as follows:

(a) Repealed.

(b) For each quarter including and after the first quarter of the State's Fiscal Year 1998-1999:

(I) Forty percent to the Conservation Trust Fund for distribution to municipalities and counties and other eligible entities for parks, recreation and open space purposes;

(II) Ten percent to the Division of Parks and Outdoor Recreation for the acquisition, development and improvement of new and existing state parks, recreation areas and recreational trails; and

(III) All remaining Net Proceeds in trust to the Board of the Trust Fund, provided, however, that in any state fiscal year in which the portion of the Net Proceeds which would otherwise be given in trust to the State Board of the Trust Fund exceeds the amount of $35 million, to be adjusted each year for changes from the 1992 Consumer Price Index-Denver, the Net Proceeds in excess of such amount or adjusted amount shall be allocated to the General Fund of the State of Colorado.

(c) to (e) Repealed.

(2) From July 1, 1993, the following sums of money and property, in addition to Net Proceeds as set forth in Section 3(1) above, are set aside, allocated, allotted, and continuously appropriated in trust to the Board of the Trust Fund:

(a) All interest derived from moneys held in the Trust Fund;

(b) Any property donated specifically to the State of Colorado for the specific purpose of benefitting the Trust Fund, including contributions, grants, gifts, bequests, donations, and federal, state, or local grants; and

(c) Such other moneys as may be allocated to the Trust Fund by the General Assembly.

ANNOTATION

Payments made under § 33-60-103 (1)(c) on the 1992 refunding of certain state obligations may be paid from net proceeds of the state lottery without violating this article. In re Great Outdoors Colo. Trust Fund, 913 P.2d 533 (Colo. 1996).

Savings resulting from the 1992 refunding of certain state obligations do not accrue to the great outdoors Colorado trust fund but instead to the capital construction fund. In re Great Outdoors Colo. Trust Fund, 913 P.2d 533 (Colo. 1996).

The general assembly's action in delaying the final payment on the Colorado convention center contract so that it would fall within the window prescribed by this article was constitutional. In re Great Outdoors Colo. Trust Fund, 913 P.2d 533 (Colo. 1996).

Section 4. Fund to remain inviolate. All moneys deposited in the Trust Fund shall remain in trust for the purposes set forth in this article, and no part thereof shall be used or appropriated for any other purpose, nor made subject to any other tax, charge, fee or restriction.

Section 5. Trust Fund expenditures. (1) (a) Expenditures from the Trust Fund shall be made in furtherance of the Great Outdoors Colorado Program, and shall commence in State Fiscal Year 1993-94. The Board of the Trust Fund shall have the duty to assure that expenditures are made for the purposes set forth in this section and in section 6, and that the amounts expended for each of the following purposes over a period of years be substantially equal:

(I) Investments in the wildlife resources of Colorado through the Colorado Division of Wildlife, including the protection and restoration of crucial wildlife habitats, appropriate programs for maintaining Colorado's diverse wildlife heritage, wildlife watching, and educational programs about wildlife and wildlife environment, consistent with the purposes set forth in Section 1(1)(a) of this article;

(II) Investments in the outdoor recreation resources of Colorado through the Colorado Division of Parks and Outdoor Recreation, including the State Parks System, trails, public information and environmental education resources, and water for recreational facilities, consistent with the purposes set forth in Section 1(1)(b) of this article;

(III) Competitive grants to the Colorado Divisions of Parks and Outdoor Recreation and Wildlife, and to counties, municipalities or other political subdivisions of the state, or non-profit land conservation organizations, to identify, acquire and manage open space and natural areas of statewide significance, consistent with the purposes set forth in Section 1(1)(c) of this article; and

(IV) Competitive matching grants to local governments or other entities which are eligible for distributions from the conservation trust fund, to acquire, develop or manage open lands and parks, consistent with the purposes set forth in Section 1(1)(d) of this article;

(b) Provided, however, that the State Board of the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund shall have the discretion (a) to direct that any portion of available revenues be reinvested in the Trust Fund and not expended in any particular year, (b) to make other expenditures which it considers necessary and proper to the accomplishment of the purposes of this amendment.

(2) All funds provided to state agencies from the Trust Fund shall be deemed to be custodial in nature, and the expenditure of those funds shall not be subject to legislative appropriation or restriction.

Section 6. The State Board of the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund. (1) There shall be established a State Board of the Great Outdoors Colorado Trust Fund. The Board shall consist of two members of the public from each congressional district, a representative designated by the State Board of Parks and Outdoor Recreation, a representative designated by the Colorado Wildlife Commission, and the Executive Director of the Department of Natural Resources. The public members of the Board shall be appointed by the Governor, subject to the consent of the Senate, for terms of four years - provided, however, that when the first such members are appointed, one of the public members from each congressional district shall be appointed for a two-year term, to assure staggered terms of office thereafter. At least two members shall reside west of the Continental Divide. At least one member shall represent agricultural interests. The public members of the board shall be entitled to a reasonable per diem compensation to be determined by the Board plus their actual expenses for each meeting of the Board or a committee of the Board. The Board's composition shall reflect, to the extent practical, Colorado's gender, ethnic and racial diversity, and no two of the representatives of any one congressional district shall be members of the same political party. Members of the Board shall be subject to removal as provided in Article IV, Section 6 of this constitution.

(2) The Board shall be responsible for, and shall have the power to undertake the following actions:

(a) To direct the Treasurer to disburse expendable income from the Trust Fund as the Board may determine by resolution, and otherwise to administer the Trust Fund, provided, however, that the Board shall not have the power to acquire any interest in real property other than (I) temporarily to hold real property donated to it and (II) to acquire leased office space;

(b) To promulgate rules and regulations as are necessary or expedient for the conduct of its affairs and its meetings and of meetings of any committees and generally for the administration of this article, provided, however, that such rules and regulations shall give the public an opportunity to comment on the general policies of the Board and upon specific grant proposals before the Board;

(c) To cause to be published and distributed an annual report, including a financial report, to the citizens, the Governor and the General Assembly of Colorado, which will set out the Board's progress in administering the funds appropriated to it, and the Board's objectives and its budget for the forthcoming year, and to consult with the General Assembly from time to time concerning its objectives and its budget;

(d) To administer the distribution of grants pursuant to Sections 1(1)(c), 1(1)(d), 5(1)(a)(III), and 5(1)(a)(IV) of this article, with the expense of administering said grants to be defrayed from the funds made available to the program elements of said sections;

(e) Commencing July 1, 1993, to determine what portions, if any, of moneys allocated to the Trust Fund should be invested in an interest-bearing Trust Fund account by the Treasurer of the State of Colorado, to remain in the Trust Fund and available for expenditure in future years;

(f) To employ such staff and to contract for such office space and acquire such equipment and supplies and enter into such other contracts as it may consider necessary from time to time to accomplish its purposes, and to pay the cost thereof from the funds appropriated to the Board under this article, provided, however, that to the extent it is reasonably feasible to do so the Board shall (I) contract with the Colorado Department of Natural Resources or other state agency for necessary administrative support and (II) endeavor to keep the level of administrative expense as low as may be practicable in comparison with its expenditures for the purposes set forth in Section 1 of this article, and the Board may contract with the State Personnel Board or any successor thereof for personnel services.

(3) The Board shall be a political subdivision of the state, and shall have all the duties, privileges, immunities, rights, liabilities and disabilities of a political subdivision of the state, provided, however, that its organization, powers, revenues and expenses shall not be affected by any order or resolution of the general assembly, except as provided in this constitution. It shall not be an agency of state government, nor shall it be subject to administrative direction by any department, commission, board, bureau or agency of the state, except to the extent provided in this constitution. The Board shall be subject to annual audit by the state auditor, whose report shall be a public document. The Board shall adopt rules permitting public access to its meetings and records which are no less restrictive than state laws applicable to state agencies, as such laws may be amended from time to time. The Board members, officers and directors of the Board shall have no personal liability for any actions or refusal to act by the Board as long as such action or refusal to act did not involve willful or intentional malfeasance or gross negligence.

ARTICLE XXVIII
Campaign and Political Finance

Editor's note: (1) Section 1(4) of article V of the state constitution provides that initiated and referred measures shall take effect from and after the official declaration of the vote thereon by the proclamation of the Governor. The Governor's proclamation on Amendment 27 implementing this article was issued on December 20, 2002; however, § 13 of this article provides that the effective date of this article is December 6, 2002. (See L. 2003, p. 3609.)

(2) (a) In 2008, Amendment 54 amended § 13 of this article creating an exception to the effective date stating that the provisions of this article amended or added by Amendment 54 concerning sole source government contracts are effective December 31, 2008; however, the Governor's proclamation date on Amendment 54 was January 8, 2009.

(b) In the case of Dallman v. Ritter, the Denver District Court declared Amendment 54, which amended certain provision of this article, unconstitutional and issued a preliminary injunction enjoining the enforcement of Amendment 54 (see Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)). The Colorado Supreme Court affirmed the district court's ruling (see Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)).

(3) In the case of In re Interrogatories by Ritter, the Supreme Court declared §§ 3(4) and 6(2) of this article unconstitutional in light of Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. __, 130 S.Ct. 876, 175 L. Ed.2d 753 (2010).

Section 1. Purposes and findings. The people of the state of Colorado hereby find and declare that large campaign contributions to political candidates create the potential for corruption and the appearance of corruption; that large campaign contributions made to influence election outcomes allow wealthy individuals, corporations, and special interest groups to exercise a disproportionate level of influence over the political process; that the rising costs of campaigning for political office prevent qualified citizens from running for political office; that because of the use of early voting in Colorado timely notice of independent expenditures is essential for informing the electorate; that in recent years the advent of significant spending on electioneering communications, as defined herein, has frustrated the purpose of existing campaign finance requirements; that independent research has demonstrated that the vast majority of televised electioneering communications goes beyond issue discussion to express electoral advocacy; that political contributions from corporate treasuries are not an indication of popular support for the corporation's political ideas and can unfairly influence the outcome of Colorado elections; and that the interests of the public are best served by limiting campaign contributions, establishing campaign spending limits, providing for full and timely disclosure of campaign contributions, independent expenditures, and funding of electioneering communications, and strong enforcement of campaign finance requirements.

Section 2. Definitions. For the purpose of this article and any statutory provisions pertaining to campaign finance, including provisions pertaining to disclosure:

(1) "Appropriate officer" means the individual with whom a candidate, candidate committee, political committee, small donor committee, or issue committee must file pursuant to section 1-45-109 (1), C.R.S., or any successor section.

(2) "Candidate" means any person who seeks nomination or election to any state or local public office that is to be voted on in this state at any primary election, general election, school district election, special district election, or municipal election. "Candidate" also includes a judge or justice of any court of record who seeks to be retained in office pursuant to the provisions of section 25 of article VI. A person is a candidate for election if the person has publicly announced an intention to seek election to public office or retention of a judicial office and thereafter has received a contribution or made an expenditure in support of the candidacy. A person remains a candidate for purposes of this article so long as the candidate maintains a registered candidate committee. A person who maintains a candidate committee after an election cycle, but who has not publicly announced an intention to seek election to public office in the next or any subsequent election cycle, is a candidate for purposes of this article.

(3) "Candidate committee" means a person, including the candidate, or persons with the common purpose of receiving contributions or making expenditures under the authority of a candidate. A contribution to a candidate shall be deemed a contribution to the candidate's candidate committee. A candidate shall have only one candidate committee. A candidate committee shall be considered open and active until affirmatively closed by the candidate or by action of the secretary of state.

(4) "Conduit" means a person who transmits contributions from more than one person, directly to a candidate committee. "Conduit" does not include the contributor's immediate family members, the candidate or campaign treasurer of the candidate committee receiving the contribution, a volunteer fund raiser hosting an event for a candidate committee, or a professional fund raiser if the fund raiser is compensated at the usual and customary rate.

(4.5) "Contract holder" means any non-governmental party to a sole source government contract, including persons that control ten percent or more shares or interest in that party; or that party's officers, directors or trustees; or, in the case of collective bargaining agreements, the labor organization and any political committees created or controlled by the labor organization;

Editor's note: Subsection (4.5) was declared unconstitutional (see the editor's note following this section).

(5) (a) "Contribution" means:

(I) The payment, loan, pledge, gift, or advance of money, or guarantee of a loan, made to any candidate committee, issue committee, political committee, small donor committee, or political party;

(II) Any payment made to a third party for the benefit of any candidate committee, issue committee, political committee, small donor committee, or political party;

(III) The fair market value of any gift or loan of property made to any candidate committee, issue committee, political committee, small donor committee or political party;

(IV) Anything of value given, directly or indirectly, to a candidate for the purpose of promoting the candidate's nomination, retention, recall, or election.

(b) "Contribution" does not include services provided without compensation by individuals volunteering their time on behalf of a candidate, candidate committee, political committee, small donor committee, issue committee, or political party; a transfer by a membership organization of a portion of a member's dues to a small donor committee or political committee sponsored by such membership organization; or payments by a corporation or labor organization for the costs of establishing, administering, and soliciting funds from its own employees or members for a political committee or small donor committee.

(6) "Election cycle" means either:

(a) The period of time beginning thirty-one days following a general election for the particular office and ending thirty days following the next general election for that office;

(b) The period of time beginning thirty-one days following a general election for the particular office and ending thirty days following the special legislative election for that office; or

(c) The period of time beginning thirty-one days following the special legislative election for the particular office and ending thirty days following the next general election for that office.

(7) (a) "Electioneering communication" means any communication broadcasted by television or radio, printed in a newspaper or on a billboard, directly mailed or delivered by hand to personal residences or otherwise distributed that:

(I) Unambiguously refers to any candidate; and

(II) Is broadcasted, printed, mailed, delivered, or distributed within thirty days before a primary election or sixty days before a general election; and

(III) Is broadcasted to, printed in a newspaper distributed to, mailed to, delivered by hand to, or otherwise distributed to an audience that includes members of the electorate for such public office.

(b) "Electioneering communication" does not include:

(I) Any news articles, editorial endorsements, opinion or commentary writings, or letters to the editor printed in a newspaper, magazine or other periodical not owned or controlled by a candidate or political party;

(II) Any editorial endorsements or opinions aired by a broadcast facility not owned or controlled by a candidate or political party;

(III) Any communication by persons made in the regular course and scope of their business or any communication made by a membership organization solely to members of such organization and their families;

(IV) Any communication that refers to any candidate only as part of the popular name of a bill or statute.

(8) (a) "Expenditure" means any purchase, payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money by any person for the purpose of expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate or supporting or opposing a ballot issue or ballot question. An expenditure is made when the actual spending occurs or when there is a contractual agreement requiring such spending and the amount is determined.

(b) "Expenditure" does not include:

(I) Any news articles, editorial endorsements, opinion or commentary writings, or letters to the editor printed in a newspaper, magazine or other periodical not owned or controlled by a candidate or political party;

(II) Any editorial endorsements or opinions aired by a broadcast facility not owned or controlled by a candidate or political party;

(III) Spending by persons, other than political parties, political committees and small donor committees, in the regular course and scope of their business or payments by a membership organization for any communication solely to members and their families;

(IV) Any transfer by a membership organization of a portion of a member's dues to a small donor committee or political committee sponsored by such membership organization; or payments made by a corporation or labor organization for the costs of establishing, administering, or soliciting funds from its own employees or members for a political committee or small donor committee.

(8.5) "Immediate family member" means any spouse, child, spouse's child, son-in- law, daughter-in-law, parent, sibling, grandparent, grandchild, stepbrother, stepsister, stepparent, parent-in-law, brother-in-law, sister-in-law, aunt, niece, nephew, guardian, or domestic partner;

Editor's note: Subsection (8.5) was declared unconstitutional (see the editor's note following this section).

(9) "Independent expenditure" means an expenditure that is not controlled by or coordinated with any candidate or agent of such candidate. Expenditures that are controlled by or coordinated with a candidate or candidate's agent are deemed to be both contributions by the maker of the expenditures, and expenditures by the candidate committee.

(10) (a) "Issue committee" means any person, other than a natural person, or any group of two or more persons, including natural persons:

(I) That has a major purpose of supporting or opposing any ballot issue or ballot question; or

(II) That has accepted or made contributions or expenditures in excess of two hundred dollars to support or oppose any ballot issue or ballot question.

(b) "Issue committee" does not include political parties, political committees, small donor committees, or candidate committees as otherwise defined in this section.

(c) An issue committee shall be considered open and active until affirmatively closed by such committee or by action of the appropriate authority.

(11) "Person" means any natural person, partnership, committee, association, corporation, labor organization, political party, or other organization or group of persons.

(12) (a) "Political committee" means any person, other than a natural person, or any group of two or more persons, including natural persons that have accepted or made contributions or expenditures in excess of $200 to support or oppose the nomination or election of one or more candidates.

(b) "Political committee" does not include political parties, issue committees, or candidate committees as otherwise defined in this section.

(c) For the purposes of this article, the following are treated as a single political committee:

(I) All political committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a single corporation or its subsidiaries;

(II) All political committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a single labor organization; except that, any political committee established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a local unit of the labor organization which has the authority to make a decision independently of the state and national units as to which candidates to support or oppose shall be deemed separate from the political committee of the state and national unit;

(III) All political committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by the same political party;

(IV) All political committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by substantially the same group of persons.

(13) "Political party" means any group of registered electors who, by petition or assembly, nominate candidates for the official general election ballot. "Political party" includes affiliated party organizations at the state, county, and election district levels, and all such affiliates are considered to be a single entity for the purposes of this article, except as otherwise provided in section 7.

(14) (a) "Small donor committee" means any political committee that has accepted contributions only from natural persons who each contributed no more than fifty dollars in the aggregate per year. For purposes of this section, dues transferred by a membership organization to a small donor committee sponsored by such organization shall be treated as pro-rata contributions from individual members.

(b) "Small donor committee" does not include political parties, political committees, issue committees, or candidate committees as otherwise defined in this section.

(c) For the purposes of this article, the following are treated as a single small donor committee:

(I) All small donor committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a single corporation or its subsidiaries;

(II) All small donor committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a single labor organization; except that, any small donor committee established, financed, maintained, or controlled by a local unit of the labor organization which has the authority to make a decision independently of the state and national units as to which candidates to support or oppose shall be deemed separate from the small donor committee of the state and national unit;

(III) All small donor committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by the same political party;

(IV) All small donor committees established, financed, maintained, or controlled by substantially the same group of persons.

(14.4) "Sole source government contract" means any government contract that does not use a public and competitive bidding process soliciting at least three bids prior to awarding the contract. This provision applies only to government contracts awarded by the state or any of its political subdivisions for amounts greater than one hundred thousand dollars indexed for inflation per the United States bureau of labor statistics consumer price index for Denver-Boulder-Greeley after the year 2012, adjusted every four years, beginning January 1, 2012, to the nearest lowest twenty five dollars. This amount is cumulative and includes all sole source government contracts with any and all governmental entities involving the contract holder during a calendar year. A sole source government contract includes collective bargaining agreements with a labor organization representing employees, but not employment contracts with individual employees. Collective bargaining agreements qualify as sole source government contracts if the contract confers an exclusive representative status to bind all employees to accept the terms and conditions of the contract;

Editor's note: Subsection (14.4) was declared unconstitutional (see the editor's note following this section).

(14.6) "State or any of its political subdivisions" means the state of Colorado and its agencies or departments, as well as the political subdivisions within this state including counties, municipalities, school districts, special districts, and any public or quasi-public body that receives a majority of its funding from the taxpayers of the state of Colorado.

Editor's note: Subsection (14.6) was declared unconstitutional (see the editor's note following this section).

(15) "Unexpended campaign contributions" means the balance of funds on hand in any candidate committee at the end of an election cycle, less the amount of all unpaid monetary obligations incurred prior to the election in furtherance of such candidacy.

Editor's note: (1) In 2008, Amendment 54 amended § 13 of this article creating an exception to the effective date stating that the provisions of this article amended or added by Amendment 54 concerning sole source government contracts are effective December 31, 2008; however the Governor's proclamation date on Amendment 54 was January 8, 2009.

(2) In the case of Dallman v. Ritter, the Denver District Court declared the provisions of subsections (4.5), (8.5), (14.4), and (14.6) unconstitutional and issued a preliminary injunction enjoining the enforcement of Amendment 54 (see Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)). The Colorado Supreme Court affirmed the district court's ruling (see Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)).

Cross references: For the definition of "major purpose", as used in subsection (10)(a)(I), see § 1-45-103 (12)(b).

ANNOTATION

The phrase "a major purpose" in subsection (10)(a) is not inherently vague or overbroad on its face. Independence Inst. v. Coffman, 209 P.3d 1130 (Colo. App. 2008); Cerbo v. Protect Colo. Jobs, Inc., 240 P.3d 495 (Colo. App. 2010).

Definition of issue committee contained in subsection (10)(a) is not unconstitutionally vague on its face. Administrative law judge considered the length of time nonprofit policy research organization that engaged in ballot advocacy had been in existence, its original purpose and organizational structure, the various issues with which it had been involved, and the amount of money it expended on radio ads. Constitutional provisions need not be so exact as to eliminate any need for such fact-specific analysis. The obvious relevance and ready availability of such information means that any multi-purpose issue committee can assess the burden on its rights to free speech and free association and make an informed decision before undertaking ballot advocacy. Accordingly, organization failed to prove that the term "a major purpose" is invalid in all respects or that it cannot be constitutionally applied to any multi-purpose issue committee. Independence Inst. v. Coffman, 209 P.3d 1130 (Colo. App. 2008), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 130 S. Ct. 625, 175 L. Ed. 2d 479 (2009).

Definition of issue committee contained in subsection (10)(a) is not unconstitutionally overbroad on its face. A law is facially overbroad if it sweeps within its reach a substantial amount of activity that is constitutionally protected. People v. Shepard, 983 P.2d 1 (Colo. 1999); Independence Inst. v. Coffman, 209 P.3d 1130 (Colo. App. 2008), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 130 S. Ct. 625, 175 L. Ed. 2d 479 (2009).

Secretary of state had promulgated rules to limit the disclosure and termination requirements for mutli-purpose issue committees. Those rules, which define a multi-purpose issue committee, combined with the fact-specific inquiry that was part of the court's vagueness analysis, provide sufficient guidance as to when a multi-purpose issue committee has "a major purpose" of supporting or opposing a ballot measure. As so interpreted, subsection (10)(a) does not sweep a substantial amount of protected speech within its application. Therefore, the definition is not unconstitutionally overbroad on its face. Independence Inst. v. Coffman, 209 P.3d 1130 (Colo. App. 2008), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 130 S. Ct. 625, 175 L. Ed. 2d 479 (2009).

Registration and disclosure requirements are unconstitutional as applied to ballot-initiative committee. There is virtually no proper governmental interest in imposing disclosure requirements on ballot-initiative committees that raise and expend minimal money, and limited interest cannot justify the burden that disclosure requirements impose on such a committee. Sampson v. Buescher, 625 F.3d 1247 (10th Cir. 2010).

The financial burden of state regulation on ballot initiative committee member's freedom of association approaches or exceeds the value of their financial contributions to their political effort; and the governmental interest in imposing those regulations is minimal, if not nonexistent, in light of the small size of the contributions. Therefore it is unconstitutional to impose that burden on the committee members. Sampson v. Buescher, 625 F.3d 1247 (10th Cir. 2010).

Rule 4.27, raising threshold requirement for registration and disclosure of issue committees from $200 to $5,000, exceeds secretary of state's rule-making authority and must be set aside as void. Rule 4.27 conflicts with subsection (10)(a)(II) of this section and § 1-45-108 (1)(a)(I). Colo. Common Cause v. Gessler, 2012 COA 147, __ P.3d __.

Although in promulgating rule 4.27, the secretary was attempting to clarify the registration and reporting requirements in light of Sampson v. Buescher, 625 F.3d 1247 (10th Cir. 2010), Sampson did not facially invalidate any provision of the campaign finance law, and, to the extent Sampson impacts the future application of campaign finance laws on issue committees in a similar factual context, rule 4.27 exceeds the scope of Sampson. Colo. Common Cause v. Gessler, 2012 COA 147, __ P.3d __.

Under definition of issue committee in subsection (10)(a), an organization has a "major purpose" of supporting a ballot issue if such support "constitutes a considerable or principal portion of the organizations's total activities". Cerbo v. Protect Colo. Jobs, Inc., 240

P.3d 495 (Colo. App. 2010).

Facts in record demonstrate that nonprofit organization had a major purpose of supporting proposed ballot issue. Cerbo v. Protect Colo. Jobs, Inc., 240 P.3d 495 (Colo. App. 2010).

Administrative law judge (ALJ) erred in her analysis of major purpose issue by (1) placing undue weight on fact organization had purposes other than supporting a proposed initiative; (2) giving too much weight to activities that organization merely considered undertaking while giving too little weight to what it actually did; and (3) failing to give weight to other factors relevant to the inquiry. Cerbo v. Protect Colo. Jobs, Inc., 240 P.3d 495 (Colo. App. 2010).

Nonprofit organization has a "major purpose" of supporting a ballot issue when it is created at same time ballot issue is conceived, is operated and represented by individuals otherwise intimately involved in drafting and promoting the ballot issue individually and through other organizations, spends its entire first year promoting the ballot issue to the exclusion of almost all other activities, and spends three-fourths of all the funds it has ever expended promoting the ballot issue. Cerbo v. Protect Colo. Jobs, Inc., 240 P.3d 495 (Colo. App. 2010).

Definition of a political committee in subsection (12)(a) is unconstitutional as applied to non-profit ideological corporation because it fails to incorporate Buckley v. Valeo's "major purpose" test. Colo. Right to Life Comm. v. Coffman, 498 F.3d 1137 (10th Cir. 2007).

"Expressly advocating" for purposes of the definition of expenditure in subsection (8) of this section is limited to speech that explicitly exhorts the viewer or reader to vote for or against a candidate in an upcoming election using either the "magic words" described in Buckly v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 44 n.52 (1976), or substantially similar words. The court declined to adopt a functional equivalence test for "express advocacy" that would be difficult to apply and unconstitutionally chill political speech. None of the 17 ads at issue contained any of the magic words or substantially similar synonyms. Accordingly, because none of the ads constituted "expenditures", neither of the two political organizations that distributed the ads were subject to regulation as "political committees". Colo. Ethics v. Senate Majority Fund, LLC, 2012 CO 12, 269 P.3d 1248.

Administrative law judge (ALJ) did not err in concluding that definition of "expenditures" did not apply to metropolitan district boards. Respondents had argued that the metropolitan districts qualified as "persons" that could expend payments on behalf of issue committee supporting ballot issue. Even if the definition of "person" could be stretched to cover political subdivisions of the state such as metropolitan districts, respondents failed to explain how the payments at issue were "made with the prior knowledge and consent of an agent" of the issue committee that was not yet formed in order to bring such payments within the definition of "expenditure". Skruch v. Highlands Ranch Metro. Dists., 107 P.3d 1140 (Colo. App. 2004).

ALJ did not err by interpreting "expenditure" to occur when a payment is made and when there is a contractual agreement and the amount is determined. The use of the disjunctive "or" in the definition of "expenditure" indicates that an expenditure is made if either criterion is met after the ballot title is submitted. Skruch v. Highlands Ranch Metro. Dists., 107 P.3d 1140 (Colo. App. 2004).

Payment by unions of staff salaries for time spent organizing walks to distribute political literature and payments of other costs associated with related political activities did not constitute prohibited expenditures in violation of section 3(4)(a) of this article. Whether payments made by the union are prohibited as "expenditures" depends upon whether they are exempt from regulation by the membership communication exception in subsection (8)(b)(III) of this section as payments for "any communication solely to members and their families". The membership communication exception must be construed broadly to reflect the plain language of this constitutional provision and to satisfy the demands of the first amendment. The membership communication exception as construed applies to most of the union's activities in this case. To the extent that the challenged union activities are not embraced by the membership communication exception, the administrative law judge correctly held that person filing campaign finance complaint failed to prove facts demonstrating that an expenditure was made. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

The membership communication exception found in subsection (8)(b)(III) must be extended to and embraced within the definition of "contribution". To hold otherwise nullifies the exception. The same conduct may not be protected by the membership communication exception to expenditures, that is, treated as an exempt expenditure, yet, at the same time, be prohibited as a non-exempt contribution. Such a result would be contrary to the intent of the electorate and constitute an unreasonable and disharmonious application of this article. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

Unions' challenged conduct does not meet the pertinent definitions of a contribution under subsection (5)(a)(II) and (5)(a)(IV) of this section and § 1-45-103 (6). Facts may reasonably be viewed in two contradictory ways: One advancing the union's argument that the payment of union staff salaries for organizing political events were paid for the benefit of the unions and their members and thus exempt from regulation; the other that the payments constituted payments made to a third party for the benefit of the candidate or anything of value given indirectly to the candidate and, thus, were prohibited contributions. When the first amendment is at stake, the tie goes to the speaker rather than to censorship and regulation. On the facts of this case, the unions did not make any prohibited contributions in violation of section 3(4)(a) of this article. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

Because coordination, as a concept or as a matter of law, is not required to protect the rights of the maker of a contribution under the circumstances of this case, court declines to impose a requirement of coordination on the definition of contribution to satisfy first amendment requirements. While a finding of coordination may be necessary to protect the recipient of an indirect contribution from unwittingly violating this article, that issue is not raised by this case. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

Order by ALJ assessing penalty against nonprofit association engaging in political advocacy based upon determination by ALJ that association was a political committee is vacated and case remanded. Under controlling precedent, regulation under campaign finance laws should be tied to groups controlled by candidates or which have a "major purpose" of electing candidates. Here, record does not permit a determination of whether major purpose test satisfied as to association. On remand, ALJ instructed to determine whether association's "major purpose" in 2004 was the nomination or election of candidates. Alliance for Colorado's Families v. Gilbert, 172 P.3d 964 (Colo. App. 2007).

Court rejects interpretation of subsection (5)(a)(IV) and § 1-45-103 (6)(a) under which a city employee would be barred from providing to a candidate for elected office anything of value that had the effect of promoting the candidate's election. ALJ correctly construed the relevant phrase "for the purpose of" in subsection (5)(a)(IV) in accordance with its plain meaning to indicate an anticipated result that is intended or desired. Court rejects construction under which phrase would mean "with the effect of". Such a construction would improperly conflate the distinct concepts of purpose and effect. Such an interpretation would also lead to unintended consequences far beyond the scope of issues presented in the case. CEW v. City & County of Broomfield, 203 P.3d 623 (Colo. App. 2009).

Since effect of city employees' actions, rather than their intent, is to be examined, court further rejects argument that intent is to be gauged by objective rather than subjective criteria. Inquiry into purpose requires examination of the intent of the person alleged to have made a campaign contribution. ALJ considered evidence concerning the city employees' intent and determined, on the basis of substantial evidence in the record, that organization bringing campaign finance complaint had not met its burden of proving that the employees provided services for the purpose of promoting a campaign even though employees knew information would be helpful to the candidates to whom the information was provided. Organization's interpretation improperly equates knowledge of the possible effects of one's actions with an intent to achieve a particular result. Accordingly, ALJ correctly determined that city's contribution of staff time was not "for the purpose of" promoting a political campaign. CEW v. City & County of Broomfield, 203 P.3d 623 (Colo. App. 2009).

Television advertisements urging voters to oppose incumbent member met the definition of electioneering communications under subsection (7)(a). Unambiguous reference to "any communication" in definition does not distinguish between express advocacy and advocacy that is not express. Further, subsection (7)(a) is triggered when a communication is made within 30 days before a primary election or 60 days before a general election, without regard to the communication's purpose. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

Regular business exception in subsection (7)(b)(III) is limited to persons whose business is to broadcast, print, publicly display, directly mail, or hand deliver candidate-specific communications within the named candidate's district as a service rather than to influence elections. Wording of exception shows that the phrase "in the regular course and scope of their business" does not apply to political committees. Accordingly, political committee does not come within the regular business exception. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

A judicial officer seeking retention is a candidate for purposes of the definition of "candidate" in subsection (2). Further, a judicial retention vote is an election for purposes of the definition of "political committee" in subsection (12)(a). Colo. Ethics Watch v. Clear the Bench, 2012 COA 42, 277 P.3d 931.

An organization that supports or opposes the retention of a judicial officer is a political committee because it supports or opposes the election of a candidate and because it is recognized as such by § 1-45-109 (1)(a)(I). Organization accepted contributions and made expenditures of over $200 to oppose the retention of three justices of the Colorado supreme court. It is, therefore, a political committee. Organization cannot be both a political committee and issue committee because the two are defined under subsections (10) and (12) to be mutually exclusive. Colo. Ethics Watch v. Clear the Bench, 2012 COA 42, 277 P.3d 931.

The language in art. VI, § 3, stating that "a question shall be placed on the . . . ballot" does not render judicial retention a "ballot question" for purposes of the Fair Campaign Practices Act (FCPA). A judicial retention vote is not a "ballot question" because it does not involve a citizen petition or referred measure. Because a judicial retention vote does not meet the definition of a "ballot issue" or "ballot question" contained in the FCPA, organization opposing retention of three justices is not an issue committee under subsection (10). Colo. Ethics Watch v. Clear the Bench, 2012 COA 42, 277 P.3d 931.

Because amendment 54's prohibitions do not serve a sufficiently important interest in this case, its organized labor provisions, specifically subsections (4.5) and (14.4), violate the first amendment. Subsection (4.5) leaves labor organizations involved in collective bargaining with no political voice either through their own direct contributions or through any affiliated political committee. Because there are other, more discrete options to limit corruption without completely stifling speech, subsection (4.5) is not closely drawn. Moreover, the attributes of a negotiated collective bargaining agreement make the potential of pay-to-play corruption in connection with such agreement exceedingly remote, so the government lacks a sufficiently important interest to justify this sort of heavy-handed regulation. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Because there is no compelling governmental interest underlying the disparate treatment of different sole source contractors, amendment 54's provisions applying to labor organizations also violate the fourteenth amendment's equal protection clause. Under subsection (4.5), amendment 54 prohibits contributions by a labor organization or any of its affiliated political committees, but it does not restrict contributions by political committees affiliated with any other type of donor, such as private corporations. By prohibiting both unions and their political committees from making contributions, amendment 54 completely strips unions of any political voice, while still allowing corporations to particulate through their own political committees. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Restriction in section 15 on contributions from "immediate family members" as defined in subsection (8.5) is unconstitutionally overbroad. State law already prohibits one of the main concerns of this section -- that a family member will make a contribution in his or her own name while using the funds of another. Section 15 expands the scope of prohibited conduit contributions and increases the penalty in a manner disproportionate to its purpose. Therefore, amendment 54's prohibition on contributions made on behalf of immediate family members serves to substantially chill speech and does little to further its purpose of eliminating the appearance of impropriety. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Court required to sever all of amendment 54's additions to this section. Both subsections (8.5) and (14.6) overbroadly apply amendment to families and government. Court required to strike as unconstitutional the application of subsection (4.5) to organized labor. Subsection (14.4) uses phrases that are overbroad as written. Also, its application to collective bargaining agreements is improperly tailored. These breadth and tailoring problems leave subsection (14.4) with no cognizable application. Amendment 54's purposes provide no standard by which to rewrite defective definitions. Court is in no position to arbitrarily decide to whom and to what types of government contracts amendment 54 should apply -- that is the role of the lawmaking body, the people in this case. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Deficiencies in amendment 54 so pervasive as to render it wholly unconstitutional. Despite the constitutionality of some limited phrases and portions, amendment 54 is so incomplete or riddled with omissions that it cannot be salvaged as a meaningful legislative enactment. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Section 3. Contribution limits. (1) Except as described in subsections (2), (3), and (4) of this section, no person, including a political committee, shall make to a candidate committee, and no candidate committee shall accept from any one person, aggregate contributions for a primary or a general election in excess of the following amounts:

(a) Five hundred dollars to any one:

(I) Governor candidate committee for the primary election, and governor and lieutenant governor candidate committee, as joint candidates under 1-1-104, C.R.S., or any successor section, for the general election;

(II) Secretary of state, state treasurer, or attorney general candidate committee; and

(b) Two hundred dollars to any one state senate, state house of representatives, state board of education, regent of the university of Colorado, or district attorney candidate committee.

(2) No small donor committee shall make to a candidate committee, and no candidate committee shall accept from any one small donor committee, aggregate contributions for a primary or a general election in excess of the following amounts:

(a) Five thousand dollars to any one:

(I) Governor candidate committee for the primary election, and governor and lieutenant governor candidate committee, as joint candidates under 1-1-104, C.R.S., or any successor section, for the general election;

(II) Secretary of state, state treasurer, or attorney general candidate committee; and

(b) Two thousand dollars to any one state senate, state house of representatives, state board of education, regent of the university of Colorado, or district attorney candidate committee.

(3) (a) No political party shall accept aggregate contributions from any person, other than a small donor committee as described in paragraph (b) of this subsection (3), that exceed three thousand dollars per year at the state, county, district, and local level combined, and of such amount no more than twenty-five hundred dollars per year at the state level;

(b) No political party shall accept aggregate contributions from any small donor committee that exceed fifteen thousand dollars per year at the state, county, district, and local level combined, and of such amount no more than twelve thousand, five hundred dollars at the state level;

(c) No political party shall accept contributions that are intended, or in any way designated, to be passed through the party to a specific candidate's candidate committee;

(d) In the applicable election cycle, no political party shall contribute to any candidate committee more than twenty percent of the applicable spending limit set forth in section 4 of this article.

(e) Any unexpended campaign contributions retained by a candidate committee for use in a subsequent election cycle shall be counted and reported as contributions from a political party in any subsequent election for purposes of paragraph (d) of this subsection (3);

(4) (a) It shall be unlawful for a corporation or labor organization to make contributions to a candidate committee or a political party, and to make expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate; except that a corporation or labor organization may establish a political committee or small donor committee which may accept contributions or dues from employees, officeholders, shareholders, or members.

(b) The prohibition contained in paragraph (a) of this subsection (4) shall not apply to a corporation that:

(I) Is formed for the purpose of promoting political ideas and cannot engage in business activities; and

(II) Has no shareholders or other persons with a claim on its assets or income; and

(III) Was not established by and does not accept contributions from business corporations or labor organizations.

Editor's note: Subsection (4) was declared unconsitutional (see editor's note following this section).

(5) No political committee shall accept aggregate contributions or pro-rata dues from any person in excess of five hundred dollars per house of representatives election cycle.

(6) No candidate's candidate committee shall accept contributions from, or make contributions to, another candidate committee, including any candidate committee, or equivalent entity, established under federal law.

(7) No person shall act as a conduit for a contribution to a candidate committee.

(8) Notwithstanding any other section of this article to the contrary, a candidate's candidate committee may receive a loan from a financial institution organized under state or federal law if the loan bears the usual and customary interest rate, is made on a basis that assures repayment, is evidenced by a written instrument, and is subject to a due date or amortization schedule. The contribution limits described in this section shall not apply to a loan as described in this subsection (8).

(9) All contributions received by a candidate committee, issue committee, political committee, small donor committee, or political party shall be deposited in a financial institution in a separate account whose title shall include the name of the committee or political party. All records pertaining to such accounts shall be maintained by the committee or political party for one-hundred eighty days following any general election in which the committee or party received contributions unless a complaint is filed, in which case they shall be maintained until final disposition of the complaint and any consequent litigation. Such records shall be subject to inspection at any hearing held pursuant to this article.

(10) No candidate committee, political committee, small donor committee, issue committee, or political party shall accept a contribution, or make an expenditure, in currency or coin exceeding one hundred dollars.

(11) No person shall make a contribution to a candidate committee, issue committee, political committee, small donor committee, or political party with the expectation that some or all of the amounts of such contribution will be reimbursed by another person. No person shall be reimbursed for a contribution made to any candidate committee, issue committee, political committee, small donor committee, or political party, nor shall any person make such reimbursement except as provided in subsection (8) of this section.

(12) No candidate committee, political committee, small donor committee, or political party shall knowingly accept contributions from:

(a) Any natural person who is not a citizen of the United States;

(b) A foreign government; or

(c) Any foreign corporation that does not have the authority to transact business in this state pursuant to article 115 of title 7, C.R.S., or any successor section.

(13) Each limit on contributions described in subsections (1), (2), (3) (a), (3) (b) and (5) of this section, and subsection (14) of section 2, shall be adjusted by an amount based upon the percentage change over a four year period in the United States bureau of labor statistics consumer price index for Denver-Boulder-Greeley, all items, all consumers, or its successor index, rounded to the nearest lowest twenty-five dollars. The first adjustment shall be done in the first quarter of 2007 and then every four years thereafter. The secretary of state shall calculate such an adjustment in each limit and specify the limits in rules promulgated in accordance with article 4 of title 24, C.R.S., or any successor section.

Editor's note: In the case of In re Interrogatories by Ritter, the Supreme Court declared subsection (4) of this section unconstitutional in light of Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. __, 130 S.Ct. 876, 175 L. Ed.2d 753 (2010).

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "Campaign Finance and 527 Organizations: Keeping Big Money in Politics", see 34 Colo. Law. 71 (July 2005).

To the extent that subsection (4) makes it unlawful for a corporation or labor organization to make expenditures expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate, it violates the dictates of the first amendment of the United States constitution in light of the decision of the United States supreme court in Citizens United v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 558 U.S. 310, 130 S. Ct. 876, 175 L. Ed. 2d 753 (2010).

Sections 3(4)(a) and (6)(2) of this article regulating corporate expenditures and electioneering communications are unconstitutional as applied to non-profit ideological corporation because corporation meets supreme court-approved exemption requirements for a voluntary ideological corporation that seeks to engage in political speech. Colo. Right to Life Comm. v. Coffman, 498 F.3d 1137 (10th Cir. 2007).

Candidate's disclosure report not required to report unexpended campaign funds at the end of an election cycle as contributions from a political party. To accomplish the purpose of subsection (3)(e), it is necessary only that a candidate committee report the amount of unexpended campaign funds on hand at the end of an election cycle. To report money already on hand as a fictional, new contribution from an unidentified political party would artificially inflate the amount of funds reportedly available to a candidate committee and would be confusing to those who read the report. Williams v. Teck, 113 P.3d 1255 (Colo. App. 2005).

Payment by unions of staff salaries for time spent organizing walks to distribute political literature and payments of other costs associated with related political activities did not constitute prohibited expenditures in violation of subsection (4)(a) of this section. Whether payments made by the union are prohibited as "expenditures" depends upon whether they are exempt from regulation by the membership communication exception in section 2(8)(b)(III) of this article as payments for "any communication solely to members and their families". The membership communication exception must be construed broadly to reflect the plain language of this constitutional provision and to satisfy the demands of the first amendment. The membership communication exception as construed applies to most of the union's activities in this case. To the extent that the challenged union activities are not embraced by the membership communication exception, the administrative law judge correctly held that person filing campaign finance complaint failed to prove facts demonstrating that an expenditure was made. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

The membership communication exception found in section 2(8)(b)(III) must be extended to and embraced within the definition of "contribution". To hold otherwise nullifies the exception. The same conduct may not be protected by the membership communication exception to expenditures, that is, treated as an exempt expenditure, yet, at the same time, be prohibited as a non-exempt contribution. Such a result would be contrary to the intent of the electorate and constitute an unreasonable and disharmonious application of this article. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

Unions' challenged conduct does not meet the pertinent definitions of a contribution under section 2(5)(a)(II) and (5)(a)(IV) of this article and § 1-45-103 (6). Facts may reasonably be viewed in two contradictory ways: One advancing the union's argument that the payment of union staff salaries for organizing political events were paid for the benefit of the unions and their members and thus exempt from regulation; the other that the payments constituted payments made to a third party for the benefit of the candidate or anything of value given indirectly to the candidate and, thus, were prohibited contributions. When the first amendment is at stake, the tie goes to the speaker rather than to censorship and regulation. On the facts of this case, the unions did not make any prohibited contributions in violation of subsection (4)(a) of this section. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

Because coordination, as a concept or as a matter of law, is not required to protect the rights of the maker of a contribution under the circumstances of this case, the court declines to impose a requirement of coordination on the definition of contribution to satisfy first amendment requirements. While a finding of coordination may be necessary to protect the recipient of an indirect contribution from unwittingly violating this article, that issue is not raised by this case. Colo. Educ. Ass'n v. Rutt, 184 P.3d 65 (Colo. 2008).

Under section 9(2)(a) of this article, a complaint alleging that a contribution exceeds the applicable limit, either on its own or when aggregated with previous contributions, must be filed within 180 days of that excess contribution. Lambert v. Ritter Inaugural Comm., Inc., 218 P.3d 1115 (Colo. App. 2009).

To give effect to both the contribution limit in this section and the time limit in section 9(2)(a), a complaint may seek relief only as to contributions which--standing alone or aggregated--exceed the limit and are made within the preceding 180-day period, and the relief available under section 10(1) of this article or § 1-45-103.7 (7)(b) is limited to those excess contributions as to which the complaint is timely. Lambert v. Ritter Inaugural Comm., Inc., 218 P.3d 1115 (Colo. App. 2009).

Section 4. Voluntary campaign spending limits. (1) Candidates may certify to the secretary of state that the candidate's candidate committee shall not exceed the following spending limits for the applicable election cycle:

(a) Two and one-half million dollars combined for a candidate for governor and governor and lieutenant governor as joint candidates under 1-1-104, C.R.S., or any successor section;

(b) Five hundred thousand dollars for a candidate for secretary of state, attorney general, or treasurer;

(c) Ninety thousand dollars for a candidate for the state senate;

(d) Sixty-five thousand dollars for a candidate for the state house of representatives, state board of education, regent of the university of Colorado, or district attorney.

(2) Candidates accepting the campaign spending limits set forth above shall also agree that their personal contributions to their own campaign shall be counted as political party contributions and subject to the aggregate limit on such contributions set forth in section 3 of this article.

(3) Each candidate who chooses to accept the applicable voluntary spending limit shall file a statement to that effect with the secretary of state at the time that the candidate files a candidate affidavit as currently set forth in section 1-45-110(1), C.R.S., or any successor section. Acceptance of the applicable voluntary spending limit shall be irrevocable except as set forth in subsection (4) of this section and shall subject the candidate to the penalties set forth in section 10 of this article for exceeding the limit.

(4) If a candidate accepts the applicable spending limit and another candidate for the same office refuses to accept the spending limit, the accepting candidate shall have ten days in which to withdraw acceptance. The accepting candidate shall have this option of withdrawing acceptance after each additional non-accepting candidate for the same office enters the race.

(5) The applicable contribution limits set forth in section 3 of this article shall double for any candidate who has accepted the applicable voluntary spending limit if:

(a) Another candidate in the race for the same office has not accepted the voluntary spending limit; and

(b) The non-accepting candidate has raised more than ten percent of the applicable voluntary spending limit.

(6) Only those candidates who have agreed to abide by the applicable voluntary spending limit may advertise their compliance. All other candidates are prohibited from advertising, or in any way implying, their acceptance of voluntary spending limits.

(7) Each spending limit described in subsection (1) of this section shall be adjusted by an amount based upon the percentage change over a four year period in the United States bureau of labor statistics consumer price index for Denver-Boulder-Greeley, all items, all consumers, or its successor index, rounded to the nearest lowest twenty-five dollars. The first adjustment shall be done in the first quarter of 2007 and then every four years thereafter. The secretary of state shall calculate such an adjustment in each limit and specify the limits in rules promulgated in accordance with article 4 of title 24, C.R.S., or any successor section.

Section 5. Independent expenditures. (1) Any person making an independent expenditure in excess of one thousand dollars per calendar year shall deliver notice in writing to the secretary of state of such independent expenditure, as well as the amount of such expenditure, and a detailed description of the use of such independent expenditure. The notice shall specifically state the name of the candidate whom the independent expenditure is intended to support or oppose. Each independent expenditure in excess of one-thousand dollars shall require the delivery of a new notice. Any person making an independent expenditure within thirty days of a primary or general election shall deliver such notice within forty-eight hours after obligating funds for such expenditure.

(2) Any person making an independent expenditure in excess of one thousand dollars shall disclose, in the communication produced by the expenditure, the name of the person making the expenditure and the specific statement that the advertisement of material is not authorized by any candidate. Such disclosure shall be prominently featured in the communication.

(3) Expenditures by any person on behalf of a candidate for public office that are coordinated with or controlled by the candidate or the candidate's agent, or political party shall be considered a contribution to the candidate's candidate committee, or the political party, respectively.

(4) This section 5 applies only to independent expenditures made for the purpose of expressly advocating the defeat or election of any candidate.

Section 6. Electioneering communications. (1) Any person who expends one thousand dollars or more per calendar year on electioneering communications shall submit reports to the secretary of state in accordance with the schedule currently set forth in 1-45-108 (2), C.R.S., or any successor section. Such reports shall include spending on such electioneering communications, and the name, and address, of any person that contributes more than two hundred and fifty dollars per year to such person described in this section for an electioneering communication. In the case where the person is a natural person, such reports shall also include the occupation and employer of such natural person. The last such report shall be filed thirty days after the applicable election.

(2) Notwithstanding any section to the contrary, it shall be unlawful for a corporation or labor organization to provide funding for an electioneering communication; except that any political committee or small donor committee established by such corporation or labor organization may provide funding for an electioneering communication.

Editor's note: Subsection (2) was declared unconsitutional (see editor's note following this section).

Editor's note: In the case of In re Interrogatories by Ritter, the Supreme Court declared subsection (2) of this section unconstitutional in light of Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, 558 U.S. __, 130 S.Ct. 876, 175 L. Ed.2d 753 (2010).

ANNOTATION

To the extent that subsection (2) makes it unlawful for a corporation or labor organization to provide funding for an electioneering communication, it violates the dictates of the first amendment of the United States constitution in light of the decision of the United States supreme court in Citizens United v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 558 U.S. 310, 130 S. Ct. 876, 175 L. Ed. 2d 753 (2010).

Sections 3(4)(a) and 6(2) of this article regulating corporate expenditures and electioneering communications are unconstitutional as applied to non-profit ideological corporation because corporation meets supreme court-approved exemption requirements for a voluntary ideological corporation that seeks to engage in political speech. Colo. Right to Life Comm. v. Coffman, 498 F.3d 1137 (10th Cir. 2007).

Telephone opinion poll was not "electioneering" and, thus, did not constitute an "electioneering communication" within the meaning of this article. In giving effect to the intent of the electorate, court gives term "communication" its plain and ordinary meaning. Court relies upon dictionary definitions of "communication" that contemplate imparting a message to, rather than having mere contact with, another party. In reviewing scripts used by telephone opinion pollster,"communication" occurred because "facts, information, thoughts, or opinions" were "imparted, transmitted, interchanged, expressed, or exchanged" by pollster to those it called. Telephone opinion pollster, therefore, communicated information to members of the electorate during its opinion poll. Harwood v. Senate Majority Fund, LLC, 141 P.3d 962 (Colo. App. 2006).

Telephone opinion poll, however, did not satisfy meaning of electioneering. Colorado electorate intended this article to regulate communication that expresses "electorate advocacy" and tends to "influence the outcome of Colorado elections". This conclusion is reinforced by plain and ordinary meaning of term "electioneering". Court relies upon dictionary definitions suggesting that "electioneering" is defined by such activities as taking an active part in an election campaign, campaigning for one's own election, or trying to sway public opinion especially by the use of propaganda and that "campaigning" means influencing the public to support a particular candidate, ticket, or measure. Here, telephone opinion poll did not seek to influence voters or sway public opinion but instead merely asked neutral questions to collect data and measure public opinion. Accordingly, telephone opinion poll did not constitute an "electioneering communication" under this article. Harwood v. Senate Majority Fund, LLC, 141 P.3d 962 (Colo. App. 2006).

Television advertisements urging voters to oppose incumbent member met the definition of electioneering communications under section 2(7)(a). Unambiguous reference to "any communication" in definition does not distinguish between express advocacy and advocacy that is not express. Further, section 2(7)(a) is triggered when a communication is made within 30 days before a primary election or 60 days before a general election, without regard to the communication's purpose. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

Regular business exception in section 2(7)(b)(III) is limited to persons whose business is to broadcast, print, publicly display, directly mail, or hand deliver candidate-specific communications within the named candidate's district as a service rather than to influence elections. Wording of exception shows that the phrase "in the regular course and scope of their business" does not apply to political committees. Accordingly, political committee does not come within the regular business exception. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

Section 7. Disclosure. The disclosure requirements relevant to candidate committees, political committees, issue committees, and political parties, that are currently set forth in section 1-45-108, C.R.S., or any successor section, shall be extended to include small donor committees. The disclosure requirements of section 1-45-108, C.R.S., or any successor section, shall be extended to require disclosure of the occupation and employer of each person who has made a contribution of one hundred dollars or more to a candidate committee, political committee, issue committee, or political party. For purposes of this section and 1-45-108, C.R.S., or any successor section, a political party shall be treated as separate entities at the state, county, district, and local levels.

Section 8. Filing - where to file - timeliness. The secretary of state shall promulgate rules relating to filing in accordance with article 4 of title 24, C.R.S., or any successor section. The rules promulgated pursuant to this section shall extend section 1- 45-109, C.R.S., or any successor section to apply to small donor committees.

Section 9. Duties of the secretary of state - enforcement. (1) The secretary of state shall:

(a) Prepare forms and instructions to assist candidates and the public in complying with the reporting requirements of this article and make such forms and instructions available to the public, municipal clerks, and county clerk and recorders free of charge;

(b) Promulgate such rules, in accordance with article 4 of title 24, C.R.S., or any successor section, as may be necessary to administer and enforce any provision of this article;

(c) Prepare forms for candidates to declare their voluntary acceptance of the campaign spending limits set forth in section 4 of this article. Such forms shall include an acknowledgment that the candidate voluntarily accepts the applicable spending limit and that the candidate swears to abide by those spending limits. These forms shall be signed by the candidate under oath, notarized, filed with the secretary of state, and available to the public upon request;

(c) Maintain a filing and indexing system consistent with the purposes of this article;

(e) Make the reports and statements filed with the secretary of state's office available immediately for public inspection and copying. The secretary of state may charge a reasonable fee for providing copies of reports. No information copied from such reports shall be sold or used by any person for the purpose of soliciting contributions or for any commercial purpose;

(f) Refer any complaints filed against any candidate for the office of secretary of state to the attorney general. Any administrative law judge employed pursuant to this section shall be appointed pursuant to part 10 of article 30 of title 24, C.R.S., or any successor section. Any hearing conducted by an administrative law judge employed pursuant to subsection (2) of this section shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of section 24-4-105, C.R.S., or any successor section.

(2) (a) Any person who believes that a violation of section 3, section 4, section 5, section 6, section 7, or section 9 (1) (e), of this article, or of sections

1-45-108, 1-45-114, 1-45-115, or 1-45-117 C.R.S., or any successor sections, has occurred may file a written complaint with the secretary of state no later than one hundred eighty days after the date of the alleged violation. The secretary of state shall refer the complaint to an administrative law judge within three days of the filing of the complaint. The administrative law judge shall hold a hearing within fifteen days of the referral of the complaint, and shall render a decision within fifteen days of the hearing. The defendant shall be granted an extension of up to thirty days upon defendant's motion, or longer upon a showing of good cause. If the administrative law judge determines that such violation has occurred, such decision shall include any appropriate order, sanction, or relief authorized by this article. The decision of the administrative law judge shall be final and subject to review by the court of appeals, pursuant to section 24-4-106 (11), C.R.S., or any successor section. The secretary of state and the administrative law judge are not necessary parties to the review. The decision may be enforced by the secretary of state, or, if the secretary of state does not file an enforcement action within thirty days of the decision, in a private cause of action by the person filing the complaint. Any private action brought under this section shall be brought within one year of the date of the violation in state district court. The prevailing party in a private enforcement action shall be entitled to reasonable attorneys fees and costs.

(b) The attorney general shall investigate complaints made against any candidate for the office of secretary of state using the same procedures set forth in paragraph (a) of this subsection (2). Complainant shall have the same private right of action as under paragraph (a) of this subsection (2).

(c) A subpoena issued by an administrative law judge requiring the production of documents by an issue committee shall be limited to documents pertaining to contributions to, or expenditures from, the committee's separate account established pursuant to section 3(9) of this article to support or oppose a ballot issue or ballot question. A subpoena shall not be limited in this manner where such issue committee fails to form a separate account through which a ballot issue or ballot question is supported or opposed.

Editor's note: In subsection (1) of this section, it appears that the fourth paragraph should have been lettered as paragraph (d) instead of (c); however, the original document filed with the secretary of state contains the lettering reflected in this section.

ANNOTATION

District court did not abuse its discretion by entering preliminary injunction against secretary of state enjoining implementation of administrative rule defining "member" for purposes of constitutional provisions governing small donor committees. Proposed rule would force labor and other covered organizations to get written permission before using an individual's dues or contributions to fund political campaigns. Plaintiffs demonstrated reasonable probability of success on the merits in challenging secretary's authority to enact proposed rule.

Secretary's "definition" of term "member" in proposed rule is much more than an effort to define term. It can be read effectively to add, modify, and conflict with constitutional provision by imposing new condition not found in text of this article. Secretary's stated purpose in enacting proposed rule not furthered by "definition" contained in proposed rule. Proposed rule does not further secretary's stated goal of achieving transparency of political contributions. Sanger v. Dennis, 148 P.3d 404 (Colo. App. 2006).

Plaintiffs demonstrated reasonable probability of success on the merits in alleging that administrative rule promulgated by secretary of state violated their constitutional rights to freedom of association as applied to them. Secretary's immediate enforcement of administrative rule forcing labor and other covered organizations to get written permission before using an individual's dues or contributions to fund political campaigns would have effectively prevented plaintiffs from exercising their first amendment rights in general election. Administrative rule was not narrowly tailored. Rationale justifying administrative rule was based upon speculation there would be dissenters, thereby impermissibly penalizing constitutional rights of the many for the speculative rights of the few. Accordingly, district court did not abuse its discretion by entering preliminary injunction against implementation of administrative rule. Sanger v. Dennis, 148 P.3d 404 (Colo. App. 2006).

Administrative law judge (ALJ) proceeding under a privately filed complaint under this section need not be "the appropriate officer" described in § 10 of this article to have the authority to impose a sanction. This section is applicable when "any person" files a complaint alleging violations of certain provisions and allows an ALJ to sanction violations, and § 10 applies when "the appropriate officer" determines to sanction a violation when a report is not filed by the close of business on the day due. Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

ALJ had authority to impose appropriate sanction under subsection (2)(a). The appropriate officer may either directly sanction the offending party under § 10(2)(b) of this article or initiate a complaint under subsection (2)(a). Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

Subsection (2)(a) authorizes ALJ to render a decision upon a complaint and, if ALJ concludes that a violation has occurred, "such decision shall include any appropriate order, sanction, or relief authorized by this article". Nothing in the article, however, recognizes or grants a defense of "good faith", and an ALJ is not at liberty to engraft any limitation or restriction not specifically provided. Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

While this section requires ALJ to include in the decision an appropriate order, sanction, or relief as authorized by the terms of this article, ALJ has discretion to impose no sanction at all if he or she reasonable concludes one would not be appropriate. Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

Adoption of rule 9.3 of the Colorado secretary of state's rules concerning campaign and political finance requiring the name of the candidate unambiguously referred to in the electioneering communication to be included in the electioneering report was within the rulemaking authority of the secretary of state under subsection (1)(b) and § 1-45-111.5 (1). Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

ALJ had jurisdiction to impose penalty for violation of rule 9.3 and did not err by imposing a $1000 penalty on political committee. Subsection (2)(a) grants an ALJ authority to conduct hearings on alleged violations of the article and the Finance Campaign Practices Act and to impose penalties if a violation has occurred. Rule 9.3 is necessary to implement former § 1-45-109 (5), and, under § 10(2)(a), sanctions can be imposed for violations of § 1-45-109. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

Subsection (2)(a) does not create a constitutional right for complainants to insist upon a hearing within 45 days of referral to the ALJ, absent a finding of good cause. Rather, language in subsection (2)(a) is directory. Nothing in the constitutional language suggests that failure to conduct a hearing within the 45 days following referral divests the ALJ of jurisdiction to decide the matter. Unlike various other constitutional and statutory provisions related to election matters, subsection (2)(a) does not grant precedence over other ALJ business. When no statute or rule of court entitles a claim to preferential scheduling, the decision whether to grant priority is left to the sound discretion of the trial court. Johnson v. Griffin, 240 P.3d 404 (Colo. App. 2009).

Under subsection (2)(a), a complaint alleging that a contribution exceeds the applicable limit, either on its own or when aggregated with previous contributions, must be filed within 180 days of that excess contribution. Lambert v. Ritter Inaugural Comm., Inc., 218 P.3d 1115 (Colo. App. 2009).

To give effect to both the contribution limit in section 3 of this article and the time limit in subsection (2)(a), a complaint may seek relief only as to contributions which--standing alone or aggregated--exceed the limit and are made within the preceding 180-day period, and the relief available under section 10(1) of this article or § 1-45-103.7 (7)(b) is limited to those excess contributions as to which the complaint is timely. Lambert v. Ritter Inaugural Comm., Inc., 218 P.3d 1115 (Colo. App. 2009).

Because Colorado Springs, as a home rule municipality, enacted a campaign practices ordinance, § 1-45-116 expressly provides that neither this article nor the Fair Campaign Practices Act applies to a complaint submitted to the secretary of state (secretary) alleging that certain candidates for city council had violated the ordinance. Accordingly, an administrative law judge to whom the complaint had been forwarded by the secretary lacks subject matter jurisdiction over campaign practices arising out of the city's elections and properly dismissed the complaint. The attempted referral of the complaint to the secretary conflicts with the clear intent of the general assembly to exclude home rule municipality elections from state disclosure requirements when the home rule municipality has adopted its own ordinances regulating campaign practices. In re City of Colo. Springs, 2012 COA 55, 277 P.3d 937.

Section 10. Sanctions. (1) Any person who violates any provision of this article relating to contribution or voluntary spending limits shall be subject to a civil penalty of at least double and up to five times the amount contributed, received, or spent in violation of the applicable provision of this article. Candidates shall be personally liable for penalties imposed upon the candidate's committee.

(2) (a) The appropriate officer shall impose a penalty of fifty dollars per day for each day that a statement or other information required to be filed pursuant to section 5, section 6, or section 7 of this article, or sections 1-45-108, 1-45-109 or 1-45-110, C.R.S., or any successor sections, is not filed by the close of business on the day due. Upon imposition of a penalty pursuant to this subsection (2), the appropriate officer shall send the person upon whom the penalty is being imposed proper notification by certified mail of the imposition of the penalty. If an electronic mail address is on file with the secretary of state, the secretary of state shall also provide such notification by electronic mail. Revenues collected from fees and penalties assessed by the secretary of state or revenues collected in the form of payment of the secretary of state's attorney fees and costs pursuant to this article shall be deposited in the department of state cash fund created in section 24-21-104 (3), C.R.S., or any successor section.

(b) (I) Any person required to file a report with the secretary of state and upon whom a penalty has been imposed pursuant to this subsection (2) may appeal such penalty by filing a written appeal with the secretary of state no later than thirty days after the date on which notification of the imposition of the penalty was mailed to such person's last known address in accordance with paragraph (a) of this subsection (2). Except as provided in paragraph (c) of this subsection (2), the secretary shall refer the appeal to an administrative law judge. Any hearing conducted by an administrative law judge pursuant to this subsection (2) shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of section 24-4-105, C.R.S., or any successor section. The administrative law judge shall set aside or reduce the penalty upon a showing of good cause, and the person filing the appeal shall bear the burden of proof. The decision of the administrative law judge shall be final and subject to review by the court of appeals pursuant to section 24-4-106 (11), C.R.S., or any successor section.

(II) If the administrative law judge finds that the filing of an appeal brought pursuant to subparagraph (I) of this paragraph (b) was frivolous, groundless, or vexatious, the administrative law judge shall order the person filing the appeal to pay reasonable attorney fees and costs of the secretary of state in connection with such proceeding.

(c) Upon receipt by the secretary of state of an appeal pursuant to paragraph (b) of this subsection (2), the secretary shall set aside or reduce the penalty upon a showing of good cause.

(d) Any unpaid debt owing to the state resulting from a penalty imposed pursuant to this subsection (2) shall be collected by the state in accordance with the requirements of section 24-30-202.4, C.R.S., or any successor section.

(3) Failure to comply with the provisions of this article shall have no effect on the validity of any election.

Administrative law judge (ALJ) correctly dismissed appellants' agency appeal under subsection (2)(b)(I) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. No question that appellants were required to file reports with secretary of state under § 1-45-109 (1) once appellant-candidate became a candidate for the general assembly. This does not mean, however, appellants acquired right to appeal penalty to secretary of state. Report at issue was filed not in connection with appellant-candidate's candidacy for the general assembly but solely in connection with position as a county commissioner. Thus, ALJ correctly determined that, for purposes of report and penalty at issue, appellants were persons required to file appeal with county clerk and recorder, not with secretary of state. Sullivan v. Bucknam, 140 P.3d 330 (Colo. App. 2006).

Although appellants could have been required to file a report with the secretary of state in certain circumstances, those circumstances were not present in instant case. Appellants do not qualify as persons required to file with secretary of state under subsection (2)(b)(I) for purposes of underlying action merely because they could have been required to so file in other circumstances. Sullivan v. Bucknam, 140 P.3d 330 (Colo. App. 2006).

Subsection (1) only sanctions violations of this article relating to contribution or voluntary spending limits. Plaintiff's sole argument to administrative law judge was that special district violated § 1-45-117 (1)(b)(I) by urging voters to support ballot issue. Plaintiff made no argument that expenditure violated a contribution or spending limit nor did plaintiff make any other argument concerning the amount district spent. Accordingly, § 1-45-117 (4) provided the basis for sanctions against district. Sherritt v. Rocky Mtn. Fire Dist., 205 P.3d 544 (Colo. App. 2009).

Administrative law judge (ALJ) proceeding under a privately filed complaint under § 9 of this article need not be "the appropriate officer" described in this section to have the authority to impose a sanction. Section 9 is applicable when "any person" files a complaint alleging violations of certain provisions and allows an ALJ to sanction violations, and this section applies when "the appropriate officer" determines to sanction a violation when a report is not filed by the close of business on the day due. Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

ALJ had authority to impose appropriate sanction under § 9(2)(a) of this article. The appropriate officer may either directly sanction the offending party under subsection (2)(b) or initiate a complaint under § 9(2)(a). Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

Section 9(2)(a) authorizes ALJ to render a decision upon a complaint and, if ALJ concludes that a violation has occurred, "such decision shall include any appropriate order, sanction, or relief authorized by this article". Nothing in the article, however, recognizes or grants a defense of "good faith", and an ALJ is not at liberty to engraft any limitation or restriction not specifically provided. Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209 P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

While § 9(a)(2) of this article requires ALJ to include in the decision an appropriate order, sanction, or relief as authorized by the terms of this article, ALJ has discretion to impose no section at all if he or she reasonably concludes one would not be appropriate. Patterson Recall Comm., Inc. v. Patterson, 209

P.3d 1210 (Colo. App. 2009).

ALJ had jurisdiction to impose penalty for violation of rule 9.3 and did not err by imposing a $1000 penalty on political committee. Section (2)(a) of article XXVIII of the state constitution grants an ALJ authority to conduct hearings on alleged violations of the article and the Finance Campaign Practices Act and to impose penalties if a violation has occurred. Rule 9.3 is necessary to implement former § 1-45-109 (5), and, under subsection (2)(a) of this section, sanctions can be imposed for violations of § 1-45-109. Colo. Citizens for Ethics in Gov't v. Comm. for the Am. Dream, 187 P.3d 1207 (Colo. App. 2008).

Subsection (1) provides sanctions for violations of §§ 3 and 4 of this article related to limits on contributions and spending, while subsection (2) relates to violations of disclosure requirements. Johnson v. Griffin, 240 P.3d 404 (Colo. App. 2009).

Under § 9(2)(a) of this article, a complaint alleging that a contribution exceeds the applicable limit, either on its own or when aggregated with previous contributions, must be filed within 180 days of that excess contribution. Lambert v. Ritter Inaugural Comm., Inc., 218 P.3d 1115 (Colo. App. 2009).

To give effect to both the contribution limit in § 3 of this article and the time limit in subsection 9(2)(a), a complaint may seek relief only as to contributions which--standing alone or aggregated--exceed the limit and are made within the preceding 180-day period, and the relief available under subsection (1) of this section or § 1-45-103.7 (7)(b) is limited to those excess contributions as to which the complaint is timely. Lambert v. Ritter Inaugural Comm., Inc., 218 P.3d 1115 (Colo. App. 2009).

Section 14. Severability. If any provision of this article or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, such invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications of the article which can be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this article are declared to be severable.

Section 15. Because of a presumption of impropriety between contributions to any campaign and sole source government contracts, contract holders shall contractually agree, for the duration of the contract and for two years thereafter, to cease making, causing to be made, or inducing by any means, a contribution, directly or indirectly, on behalf of the contract holder or on behalf of his or her immediate family member and for the benefit of any political party or for the benefit of any candidate for any elected office of the state or any of its political subdivisions.

ANNOTATION

Limited record insufficient to allow determination of whether amendment 54's absolute ban on contributions from sole source contractors is so stringent that it will undermine the potential for robust and effective discussion of candidates and campaign issues, bearing on the issue of whether the amendment is narrowly tailored. Although anecdotal evidence was presented to trial court that contribution limits restricted candidates' ability to raise funds for their campaigns, it is too conjectural to form the basis of court's decision. Speculation into whether candidates will be able to mount effective campaigns is unwise. Record is insufficient to assess contribution limits' cumulative monetary effect. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

The plainly legitimate sweep of amendment 54 is the elimination of an appearance of impropriety in the process of awarding no-bid government contracts. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Application of section to any government contract that does not solicit three bids is overbroad. Contribution limits, as written, apply to a substantial number of state contracts where competitive bidding is neither feasible nor appropriate. The purpose of amendment 54 is not furthered by such an over-inclusive definition of sole source contract. Its broad application to all contracts that do not solicit three bids is not sufficiently directed toward eliminating the appearance of impropriety. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Prohibition on all contributions from sole source government contractors for the benefit of any political party or for the benefit of any candidate for any elected office of the state or any of its political subdivisions is over-inclusive in light of its plainly legitimate sweep. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Judged in relation to amendment 54's purpose of eliminating appearance of impropriety, an absolute contribution ban oversteps its legitimate sweep and restricts a substantial amount of protected speech. This section fails to tailor its prohibitions toward those who have some control over awarding no-bid contracts, which would be directly correlated to its purpose of preventing the appearance of impropriety. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Ban on contributions for a two-year period after a contract's expiration or termination is similarly overbroad. The two-year ban on contributions after a contract expires inhibits a substantial amount of free speech, especially considering the overbreadth of amendment 54's other restrictions. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Restrictions in section on contributions from "immediate family members" are unconstitutionally overbroad. State law already prohibits one of the main concerns of this section -- that a family member will make a contribution in his or her own name while using the funds of another. This section expands the scope of prohibited conduit contributions and increases the penalty in a manner disproportionate to its purpose. Therefore, amendment 54's prohibitions on contributions made on behalf of immediate family members of sole source contract holders serves to substantially chill speech and does little to further its purpose of eliminating the appearance of impropriety. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Court lacks confidence that, under permutations of this section, a contract holder can make an informed decision before acting. Accordingly, the possible applications of this section render it unconstitutionally vague with respect to prohibited contributions of family members. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Restriction on first amendment activity for those that serve a nonprofit falls outside of amendment 54's plainly legitimate sweep. This section prohibits directors and officers of nonprofit organizations holding sole source government contracts from contributing to any candidate or party in the state. Nonprofit board members must choose between remaining on the board and exercising their first amendment rights, creating a perverse incentive to refrain from charitable activity that does not comport with amendment 54's purpose. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

By restricting all contributions from labor organizations and their political committees, this section impermissibly abridges union members' first amendment rights to associate in order to amplify their political voice. Without creating an outlet for small contributions, amendment 54's solution to the pay-to-play problem is not closely drawn under first amendment analysis. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

By treating unions differently than other entities, amendment 54 violates union members' fourteenth amendment equal protection clause guarantees. By prohibiting both unions and their political action committees (PACs) from making contributions, amendment 54 completely strips unions of any political voice, while allowing corporations to participate through their own PACs. Because there is no compelling governmental interest underlying the disparate treatment of different sole source contractors, amendment 54's provisions applying to labor organizations violate the fourteenth amendment's equal protection clause. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Given that necessary nullifications of this section would leave the section completely eviscerated, court is left with no choice but to sever all of this section. After striking all unconstitutional sections, it is impossible to achieve amendment 54's legitimate purpose without substantially rewriting the amendment from the bench. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Deficiencies in amendment 54 so pervasive as to render it wholly unconstitutional. Despite the constitutionality of some limited phrases and portions, amendment 54 is so incomplete or riddled with omissions that it cannot be salvaged as a meaningful legislative enactment. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Section 16. To aid in enforcement of this measure concerning sole source contracts, the executive director of the department of personnel shall promptly publish and maintain a summary of each sole source government contract issued. Any contract holder of a sole source government contract shall promptly prepare and deliver to the executive director of the department of personnel a true and correct "Government Contract Summary," in digital format as prescribed by that office, which shall identify the names and addresses of the contract holders and all other parties to the government contract, briefly describe the nature of the contract and goods or services performed, disclose the start and end date of the contract, disclose the contract's estimated amount or rate of payment, disclose the sources of payment, and disclose other information as determined by the executive director of the department of personnel which is not in violation of federal law, trade secrets or intellectual property rights. The executive director of the department of personnel is hereby given authority to promulgate rules to facilitate this section.

Editor's note: (1) In 2008, Amendment 54 amended § 13 of this article creating an exception to the effective date stating that the provisions of this article amended or added by Amendment 54 concerning sole source government contracts are effective December 31, 2008; however the Governor's proclamation date on Amendment 54 was January 8, 2009.

(2) In the case of Dallman v. Ritter, the Denver District Court declared the provisions of this section unconstitutional and issued a preliminary injunction enjoining the enforcement of Amendment 54 (see Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)). The Colorado Supreme Court affirmed the district court's ruling (see Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)).

ANNOTATION

Court severs this section. After obligatory striking of sections 15 and 17 and subsections (3.5), (8.5), (14.4), and (14.6) of section 2, this section's government contracts summary is the only portion that retains any substance. But this section is dependent on amendment 54's definition of "sole source contract", which is unconstitutionally overbroad. Furthermore, standing alone this section cannot effectuate the purpose behind the passage of amendment 54, and court's goal must be to give effect to the law's overall intent, not specific sections. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Deficiencies in amendment 54 so pervasive as to render it wholly unconstitutional. Despite the constitutionality of some limited phrases and portions, amendment 54 is so incomplete or riddled with omissions that it cannot be salvaged as a meaningful legislative enactment. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Section 17. (1) Every sole source government contract by the state or any of its political subdivisions shall incorporate article XXVIII, section 15, into the contract. Any person who intentionally accepts contributions on behalf of a candidate committee, political committee, small donor committee, political party, or other entity, in violation of section 15 has engaged in corrupt misconduct and shall pay restitution to the general treasury of the contracting governmental entity to compensate the governmental entity for all costs and expenses associated with the breach, including costs and losses involved in securing a new contract if that becomes necessary. If a person responsible for the bookkeeping of an entity that has a sole source contract with a governmental entity, or if a person acting on behalf of the governmental entity, obtains knowledge of a contribution made or accepted in violation of section 15, and that person intentionally fails to notify the secretary of state or appropriate government officer about the violation in writing within ten business days of learning of such contribution, then that person may be contractually liable in an amount up to the above restitution.

(2) Any person who makes or causes to be made any contribution intended to promote or influence the result of an election on a ballot issue shall not be qualified to enter into a sole source government contract relating to that particular ballot issue.

(3) The parties shall agree that if a contract holder intentionally violates section 15 or section 17 (2), as contractual damages that contract holder shall be ineligible to hold any sole source government contract, or public employment with the state or any of its political subdivisions, for three years. The governor may temporarily suspend any remedy under this section during a declared state of emergency.

(4) Knowing violation of section 15 or section 17 (2) by an elected or appointed official is grounds for removal from office and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust or profit in the state, and shall constitute misconduct or malfeasance.

(5) A registered voter of the state may enforce section 15 or section 17 (2) by filing a complaint for injunctive or declaratory relief or for civil damages and remedies, if appropriate, in the district court.

Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)). The Colorado Supreme Court affirmed the district court's ruling (see Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010)).

ANNOTATION

Apart from restitutionary penalty of subsection (1), every subsection of this section penalizes protected first amendment expression in a manner disproportionately severe to the section's purpose. The disproportionate punishment serves to chill protected speech and is insufficiently related to eliminating the appearance of impropriety. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Subsection (1) imposes a restitutionary penalty that compensates the government for expenses associated with prohibited contributions. This provision is proportionate to and consistent with the legitimate sweep of amendment 54. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Subsection (3) prohibits a contract holder who intentionally violates section 15 from holding any government contract and from holding public employment for three years. Irrespective of the amount of the prohibited contribution or the ability of the recipient to award contracts, any person violating section 15 faces a severe economic penalty as well as a harsh restriction on employment. This excessive punishment oversteps amendment 54's plainly legitimate sweep. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Subsection (4), which removes any elected or appointed official from office if he or she knowingly violates section 15 and disqualifies the official from holding any office in the state, is similar to subsection (3) in its overbreadth. A one-size-fits-all penalty may be appropriate when the penalty is a monetary fine, but the severity of the penalty is disproportionate to amendment 54's purpose. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Although subsection (5), which allows any registered voter to enforce section 15 or subsection (2) of this section through various remedies, poses an undeniable risk of harassment, that alone is insufficient to invalidate its provisions. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Because there is an insufficient link between a ballot issue contribution and a contract award, state's interest under subsection (2) is not sufficiently compelling to justify ban on "any person" who contributes to a ballot issue from entering into a sole source contract with respect to that issue. Any reading of this section would be an unconstitutional prohibition under the first amendment. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Court required to sever all of this section. Striking section 15 renders the rest of subsection (1) of this section meaningless because the remaining section attempts to prescribe a penalty without any corollary offense. Subsection (2) is entirely unconstitutional because it is not closely drawn to a compelling government interest. Similarly subsections (3) and (4) impose unconstitutionally severe penalties for contract holders and government officials, leaving no option but to entirely excise each as well. Although subsection (5) is constitutionally sufficient, with the excising of the other parts of this section, it no longer represents any sort of "meaningful legislative enactment". Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Deficiencies in amendment 54 so pervasive as to render it wholly unconstitutional. Despite the constitutionality of some limited phrases and portions, amendment 54 is so incomplete or riddled with omissions that it cannot be salvaged as a meaningful legislative enactment. Dallman v. Ritter, 225 P.3d 610 (Colo. 2010).

Rev. 1265 (2007); for article, "The Practitioner's Guide to Amendment 41 and the Colorado Independent Ethics Commission", see 38 Colo. Law. 37 (October 2009); for article, "Amendment 41: Ethics in Government", see 39 Colo. Law. 29 (December 2010).

Section 1. Purposes and findings. (1) The people of the state of Colorado hereby find and declare that:

(a) The conduct of public officers, members of the general assembly, local government officials, and government employees must hold the respect and confidence of the people;

(b) They shall carry out their duties for the benefit of the people of the state;

(c) They shall, therefore, avoid conduct that is in violation of their public trust or that creates a justifiable impression among members of the public that such trust is being violated;

(d) Any effort to realize personal financial gain through public office other than compensation provided by law is a violation of that trust; and

(e) To ensure propriety and to preserve public confidence, they must have the benefit of specific standards to guide their conduct, and of a penalty mechanism to enforce those standards.

(2) The people of the state of Colorado also find and declare that there are certain costs associated with holding public office and that to ensure the integrity of the office, such costs of a reasonable and necessary nature should be born by the state or local government.

ANNOTATION

It would not violate this section for the secretary of state to serve as a member of the board of directors of a nonprofit entity registered with and regulated by the secretary of state's office, provided there is full disclosure and recusal where appropriate; however, this could create an appearance of impropriety as a result. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-06.

It would not pose any violation of the public trust or any principles in this article for a retired community college accounting professor to enter into a contract with the college since he was not involved in the accounting procedures at the college when he was employed there and the proposed contract does not involve a matter in which he was directly involved as a professor. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-08.

It would not pose a violation of the public trust or any principles of this article for a former employee of the department of health care policy and financing to enter into a contract with a consulting company to work on project management issues relating to a major health care provider. Independent Ethics Commission Letter Ruling 10-02.

The appearance that access to members of the general assembly is available for a price and invitations from members to corporate donors to attend a fund-raising luncheon could be perceived as creating a justifiable impression among members of the public that the public trust is being violated. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-14.

No violation of the public trust would occur if the housing division of the department of local affairs hired a qualified individual whose business has outstanding loans with the division, provided the individual would not have oversight or authority over his own contracts and his position would not be a "decision-making" or managerial position. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-11.

In order to avoid the appearance of impropriety, local government officials who contract with the entity they serve in a public capacity should be removed from any involvement in the procurement process when his or her business is a potential bidder by erecting a wall between himself or herself and the local government purchasing or contracting for the goods or services to be provided by the official's business. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-01.

Section 2. Definitions. As used in this article, unless the context otherwise requires:

(1) "Government employee" means any employee, including independent contractors, of the state executive branch, the state legislative branch, a state agency, a public institution of higher education, or any local government, except a member of the general assembly or a public officer.

(2) "Local government" means county or municipality.

(3) "Local government official" means an elected or appointed official of a local government but does not include an employee of a local government.

(4) "Person" means any individual, corporation, business trust, estate, trust, limited liability company, partnership, labor organization, association, political party, committee, or other legal entity.

(5) "Professional lobbyist" means any individual who engages himself or herself or is engaged by any other person for pay or for any consideration for lobbying. "Professional lobbyist" does not include any volunteer lobbyist, any state official or employee acting in his or her official capacity, except those designated as lobbyists as provided by law, any elected public official acting in his or her official capacity, or any individual who appears as counsel or advisor in an adjudicatory proceeding.

(6) "Public officer" means any elected officer, including all statewide elected officeholders, the head of any department of the executive branch, and elected and appointed members of state boards and commissions. "Public officer" does not include a member of the general assembly, a member of the judiciary, any local government official, or any member of a board, commission, council or committee who receives no compensation other than a per diem allowance or necessary and reasonable expenses.

ANNOTATION

Term "independent contractor" means those who enter into "personal services" contracts as that term is defined in part 5 of article 50 of title 24, including their employees and members of their immediate families. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-07.

Public officials who are elected, but who have not yet been sworn in, are not under the jurisdiction of the independent ethics commission. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-18.

A government agency is a "person" under this section, and a public official or employee therefore may not accept gifts valued in excess of $50 from governmental agencies or institutions, unless the gift falls under another specified exception. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-04.

Term "public officer" does not include the commissioner of the Colorado lottery since that individual is

Section 3. Gift ban. (1) No public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official, or government employee shall accept or receive any money, forbearance, or forgiveness of indebtedness from any person, without such person receiving lawful consideration of equal or greater value in return from the public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official, or government employee who accepted or received the money, forbearance or forgiveness of indebtedness.

(2) No public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official, or government employee, either directly or indirectly as the beneficiary of a gift or thing of value given to such person's spouse or dependent child, shall solicit, accept or receive any gift or other thing of value having either a fair market value or aggregate actual cost greater than fifty dollars ($50) in any calendar year, including but not limited to, gifts, loans, rewards, promises or negotiations of future employment, favors or services, honoraria, travel, entertainment, or special discounts, from a person, without the person receiving lawful consideration of equal or greater value in return from the public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official, or government employee who solicited, accepted or received the gift or other thing of value.

(3) The prohibitions in subsections (1) and (2) of this section do not apply if the gift or thing of value is:

(a) A campaign contribution as defined by law;

(b) An unsolicited item of trivial value less than fifty dollars ($50), such as a pen, calendar, plant, book, note pad or other similar item;

(c) An unsolicited token or award of appreciation in the form of a plaque, trophy, desk item, wall memento, or similar item;

(d) Unsolicited informational material, publications, or subscriptions related to the recipient's performance of official duties;

(e) Admission to, and the cost of food or beverages consumed at, a reception, meal or meeting by an organization before whom the recipient appears to speak or to answer questions as part of a scheduled program;

(f) Reasonable expenses paid by a nonprofit organization or other state or local government for attendance at a convention, fact-finding mission or trip, or other meeting if the person is scheduled to deliver a speech, make a presentation, participate on a panel, or represent the state or local government, provided that the non-profit organization receives less than five percent (5%) of its funding from for-profit organizations or entities;

(g) Given by an individual who is a relative or personal friend of the recipient on a special occasion.

(h) A component of the compensation paid or other incentive given to the recipient in the normal course of employment.

(4) Notwithstanding any provisions of this section to the contrary, and excepting campaign contributions as defined by law, no professional lobbyist, personally or on behalf of any other person or entity, shall knowingly offer, give, or arrange to give, to any public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official, or government employee, or to a member of such person's immediate family, any gift or thing of value, of any kind or nature, nor knowingly pay for any meal, beverage, or other item to be consumed by such public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official or government employee, whether or not such gift or meal, beverage or other item to be consumed is offered, given or paid for in the course of such lobbyist's business or in connection with a personal or social event; provided, however, that a professional lobbyist shall not be prohibited from offering or giving to a public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official or government employee who is a member of his or her immediate family any such gift, thing of value, meal, beverage or other item.

(5) The general assembly shall make any conforming amendments to the reporting and disclosure requirements for public officers, members of the general assembly and professional lobbyists, as provided by law, to comply with the requirements set forth in this section.

(6) The fifty-dollar ($50) limit set forth in subsection (2) of this section shall be adjusted by an amount based upon the percentage change over a four-year period in the United States bureau of labor statistics consumer price index for Denver- Boulder-Greeley, all items, all consumers, or its successor index, rounded to the nearest lowest dollar. The first adjustment shall be done in the first quarter of 2011 and then every four years thereafter.

Editor's note: In Position Statement 11-01, released April 8, 2011, the Independent Ethics Commission increased the fifty-dollar gift-ban limit set forth in § 3 (2) to fifty-three dollars, effective until the first quarter of 2015.

ANNOTATION

I. CONSTITUTIONALITY.

As personification of state, governor proper party defendant in suit contesting constitutionality of this article at time of its filing. The evaluation of whether a person or entity is a proper party in a lawsuit must be determined in light of relevant facts and circumstances. Here, there was no alternative entity for plaintiffs to sue in order to challenge this article. Colorado has long recognized the practice of naming the governor, in his role as state's chief executive, as proper defendant in cases where a party seeks to "enjoin or mandate enforcement of a statute, regulation, ordinance, or policy". The only appropriate state agent for litigation purposes was the governor. Prior to creation of the independent ethics commission (commission), the governor was appropriate party defendant in a constitutional challenge. Developmental Pathways v. Ritter, 178 P.3d 524 (Colo. 2008).

Because preliminary injunction issued before commission came into existence and before it had opportunity to act in furtherance of this article, plaintiffs failed to present a ripe as-applied constitutional challenge. Relief plaintiffs seek is only available in a successful facial challenge, not in an as-applied challenge. In order for plaintiffs to obtain a declaration that article is unconstitutional as applied, there must be an actual application or at least a reasonable possibility of enforcement or threat of enforcement. As of the time of suit, the commission was not yet in existence, and it had not yet acted to enforce the gift bans. No enforcement or threat of enforcement of the gift bans had occurred. Therefore, concerns expressed by plaintiffs were merely speculative interpretations of what might occur once commission is operative. As such, district court did not have jurisdiction to grant preliminary injunction. Developmental Pathways v. Ritter, 178 P.3d 524 (Colo. 2008).

II. GIFTS.

A. Generally.

It is not a violation of this article for a covered individual or that person's spouse or dependent child to accept a scholarship provided the scholarship was awarded using objective criteria and is available to all those who meet those criteria; nor is the receipt of a scholarship a direct or indirect benefit to a public employee or official because there is no legal obligation to pay for a college education. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

Covered individuals may accept honoraria for speaking before business or civic groups or writing publications when: (1) Delivering the speech or writing the publication is not part of the public official's or employee's official duties; (2) public resources are not used in the preparation of the speech or publication; (3) government time is not used for the preparation of the speech or publication; (4) the amount of the honorarium is reasonably related to the services the public employee or official is being asked to perform; and (5) neither the sponsor of the speech nor the source of the honorarium is a person or entity with whom the public official or employee has had, or reasonably expects to have, dealings in his or her official capacity. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

Covered individuals may accept insurance proceeds where they have paid premiums to an insurance company like other customers or because the payment is based upon the personal relationship of the parties. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

It is not a breach of the public trust for a covered individual to accept a prize if the competition was fair, open to everyone similarly situated, not rigged in favor of the public employee or official, and there was no evidence that the prize was being given based upon the covered individual's government status. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

A government employee may accept a prize with a monetary value over $50 from a professional organization in the employee's area of employment. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-07.

Acceptance of winnings in raffles, lotteries, or silent auctions does not violate the public trust and is therefore permissible provided the contests are not rigged in favor of the public employee or official based upon his or her governmental status. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

Receipt of an inheritance does not violate the public trust because of the close personal relationship of the people involved provided there is no undue influence, coercion, or other circumstances that would cause a breach of the public trust. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

A covered person may accept discounts that are available to the general public or to all government employees and officials, or to a subset of government employees and officials, so long as the opportunity is uniformly offered and the group is large enough that it is unlikely the discount would in any way influence the recipients in the performance of their official duties. "Special discounts" targeted at a particular government official or employee, or a small group of government officials or employees, where there is potential to influence government action is impermissible. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-03.

A professor may accept an "examination copy" of a textbook that sells for more than $50 if it is unsolicited. Solicited copies may also be accepted as a gift to the university. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-01.

A state agency may accept a gift of code books from a national professional organization without cost because the code books remain with the state agency's program and are not, therefore, gifts to covered individuals personally. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-05.

An employee of the department of law may accept the Richard Marden Davis award from the Denver bar association where she is being honored because of her contributions to the community, not because of her position as a government employee and because there is no indication that the award was being offered to influence an official act. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-01.

It would not be a violation of this article for the Colorado bureau of investigation to accept a voucher for a free conference and travel expenses where an employee won the voucher in a fair and impartial raffle. Furthermore, the gift does not inure to the personal benefit of the employee, but rather to the Colorado bureau of investigation and therefore is not a gift to a covered individual for purposes of this section. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-10.

Pursuant to § 3(6), the $50 gift limit is increased to $53 until the first quarter of 2015. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 11-01.

It would not be a violation of this section for the state of Colorado to accept an electric vehicle from a for-profit entity since the benefit of the vehicle's use does not inure personally to one covered individual but to any insured and trained employee of the executive branch who, when using the vehicle, must also maintain and transmit certain performance data. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-09.

All proscriptions contained in this article are applicable and in effect when covered individuals attend political events and political conventions. Covered individuals must comply with this article at all times, including during attendance at national political conventions. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-02.

B. Admission or Registration Fee.

Commissioner of the public utilities commission (PUC) may accept the waiver of the registration fee for a three-day conference since he will be participating on panels throughout the conference; however, the commissioner should be cautious to avoid the appearance of impropriety in meeting with organizations at private networking events or dinners sponsored or hosted by companies that are regulated by the PUC. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-04.

Not a violation for the director of Colorado lottery to accept the waiver of the registration fee for a conference from a professional association of state lotteries (NAASPL) since Colorado lottery is a dues-paying member of NAASPL and the reimbursement to the lottery director for NAASPL conferences is included in the membership benefits. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-07.

Nor is it a violation for a PUC commissioner to accept the waiver of the registration fee for an out-of-state forum at which the commissioner is an official speaker on the agenda; however, the commissioner may not accept the payment of travel and lodging expenses or the waiver of the registration fee for the entire conference at which he is not a speaker. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-08.

Nor would it be a violation of this section for Colorado state patrol members assigned to the security detail of the governor, lieutenant governor, or any governor-elect to accept free admission to events with an admission price in excess of $50 when they are attending such events with any of those officials as part of their official duties. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-03.

Nor would it be a violation of this section for members of the governor's cabinet and staff to accept free admission to events with an admission price in excess of $50 when they are attending such events with the governor as part of their official duties and so long as the five criteria set out in Position Statement 08-02 are met. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-09 (Position Statement 08-02 overturned in Position Statement 12-01). But see Letter Ruling 10-01 annotated in D. below.

C. Cost of Food or Beverages.

A university professor or employee may accept tickets to an annual banquet provided that he or she is speaking or answering questions as part of the scheduled program. Tickets may also be accepted if they are from a nonprofit organization that receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-01.

An employee of the department of law may accept a free dinner sponsored by the Denver bar association under exception in subsection (3)(e) since he was scheduled to speak at the dinner to present his colleague as the recipient of an award. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-01.

Members of the general assembly who are speaking at a fund-raiser luncheon may accept admission to the event from a political subdivision of the state under exception in subsection (3)(e). Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-14.

Members of the general assembly who are not featured speakers at a fund-raiser luncheon may not solicit for or accept admission to the event from a political subdivision of the state. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-14.

Exception in subsection (3)(e) requires active participation as a speaker or panelist; merely "allowing" the public employee to say a few words or to answer one or two questions is not sufficient. Independent Ethics Commission Letter Ruling 09-06.

Where the value of the meal at a fund-raiser luncheon is $30 but the cost of admission is $100, the value of the gift consists of the cost of admission to the event, not the value of the meal. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-14. But see Letter Ruling 12-01 annotated below.

In determining the value of a complimentary ticket to a luncheon for purposes of the gift ban, the appropriate valuation is the lowest price at which the ticket is available to the general public, and, where the actual ticket price is higher than the gift limit, but close, a public employee may pay the difference between the gift limit and the price of the ticket. Independent Ethics Commission Letter Ruling 12-01.

Under subsection (3)(e) a member of the general assembly being honored at an out-of-state banquet may accept the cost of the meal and a plaque from the nonprofit organization that receives more than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources since he will be speaking at the event; however, he may not accept travel expenses to get there. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-03.

A not-for-profit, non-lobbyist entity may host public officials and employees at an annual luncheon provided the value of the meal is $50 or less and provided the aggregate value of all gifts from the entity is $50 or less for the entire calendar year or if the recipient is appearing to speak or to answer questions as part of the scheduled program. Independent Ethics Commission Letter Ruling 09-02.

A nonprofit, non-lobbyist entity may provide a meal to its board members who are concurrently government employees or officials or to the board members' spouses or dependent children provided the meal is being provided to all board members during a meeting and is reasonably priced, because lawful consideration is being given from the government officials or employees who are serving as a board members of the nonprofit entity in accepting meals during meetings in exchange for his or her service on the board. Independent Ethics Commission Letter Ruling 09-03.

An employee of the governor's office may not accept a complimentary ticket to a dinner to accept a laureate award given to the office by a for-profit professional organization where the employee is not scheduled to speak or answer questions as part of the scheduled program. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-09.

D. Travel.

Gifts of travel are permissible only if they are to a governmental entity rather than to an individual public employee or official and if they are supported by consideration of equal or greater value or they fall under an enumerated exception. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-01, overturning Position Statement 08-02.

Covered individuals should consider the following factors when weighing whether to accept offers of payment or reimbursement for travel expenses: (1) Whether the offer is to a specific individual or to a designee of an agency or governmental entity; (2) whether the offer is ex officio; (3) whether the event is related to the public duties of the covered individual; (4) whether there is an existing or potential conflict of interest or appearance of impropriety; and (5) whether the purpose of the trip or conference is for educational purposes or to conduct the governmental business of the agency or entity. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-01, overturning Position Statement 08-02.

Travel that is not expressly exempted may be considered a gift to the state or local government rather than to the public official or employee and is therefore permissible when the following five conditions are met: (1) The travel is for a legitimate state or local government purpose; (2) the travel arrangements are appropriate to that purpose; (3) the trip is no longer than reasonably necessary to accomplish the business that is its purpose; (4) the government official or employee who will be traveling is not currently, was not in the recent past, and will not in the reasonably foreseeable future, be in a position to take direct official action with respect to the donor; and (5) the government official or employee verifies compliance with the first four conditions. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-02 (overturned in Position Statement 12-01). But see Letter Ruling 10-01 annotated below.

Acceptance of travel expense reimbursement offered to the secretary of state ex officio to attend an out-of-state election law symposium is not a gift to a covered individual and therefore does not violate this article, because the secretary of state, by virtue of his role as the chief elections official of Colorado, is uniquely positioned to discuss the subject matter of the educational symposium. Nor does it present a conflict of interest or an appearance of impropriety. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 13-02.

Permission for the secretary of state to accept reimbursement for travel expenses to attend an elections law symposium does not mean permission to attend entertainment, partisan, or social events unrelated to the symposium, if the cost of the event exceeds $53. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 13-02.

The term "nonprofit" as used in subsection (3)(f) can be defined as in 13-21- 115.7 (1)(b). Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 10-01.

Under exception in subsection (3)(f), a nonprofit organization must receive less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 10-01.

A member of the general assembly may accept travel-related expenses to Turkey from a nonprofit even though the exception in subsection (3)(f) does not apply, if the five conditions are met, and the travel would be a gift to the state rather than to the individual government official. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-04 (Position Statement 08-02, which established the five conditions, overturned in Position Statement 12- 01). But see Advisory Opinion 10-12 and Letter Ruling 10-01 annotated below.

A university professor or employee may be reimbursed by a nonprofit organization for the reasonable travel-related expenses of attending a meeting or fact- finding mission even though that nonprofit organization receives five percent or more of its funding from a for-profit entity, provided that the five conditions set out in Position Statement 08-02 are met. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-01 (Position Statement 08-02 overturned in Position Statement 12-01). But see Letter Ruling 10-01 annotated below.

A nonprofit foundation that receives more than five percent of its funding from for- profit sources may not give scholarships to members of the general assembly to participate in a two-day educational tour of the state's river basins. Independent Ethics

Commission Letter Ruling 10-01.

Under subsection (3)(f), a member of the general assembly being honored at an out- of-state banquet may not accept travel-related expenses from the nonprofit that receives more than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources to attend the banquet; however, he may accept the cost of the meal and a plaque. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-03.

A member of the general assembly may not accept travel-related expenses paid from an educational fund that does not accept donations from for-profit sources but which fund is within a nonprofit organization that does receive more than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-06.

An executive agency employee may not accept travel-related expenses to Turkey from a nonprofit that receives more than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-12; Position Statement 12-01.

Under exception in subsection (3)(f) the governor and selected members of his cabinet and staff may accept travel-related expenses from a nonprofit that receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources to participate in an economic development and trade mission to Israel. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-10.

The executive director of a state agency may accept travel expenses from a nonprofit entity that receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources to go on a fact-finding trip to Israel for purposes within his area of expertise and responsibility and directly related to his duties. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-11.

Members of the general assembly may accept travel expenses to an Eastern European country from a nonprofit that receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources where foreign officials ("fellows") from those countries will visit Colorado and work in the legislators' offices and observe the workings of the Colorado general assembly and, in turn, the legislators may receive travel expenses for a reciprocal trip. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-02.

Members of the general assembly may accept travel expenses to attend a conference sponsored by a nonprofit organization that receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-07.

It would not violate this section for a member of the general assembly and staff to attend educational events sponsored by a nonprofit health institute, including meals, lodging, and travel, where the expenses are reasonable, the events qualify as a convention, fact-finding mission or trip, or other meeting and the nonprofit receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Ruling 09- 05.

A nonprofit health institute may not provide a per diem amount, in addition to reasonable expenses, to members of the general assembly who attend the nonprofit's educational events. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Ruling 09-05.

A member of the general assembly may not accept travel-related expenses from a for-profit entity to attend the entity's conference since the gift does not meet the five conditions set out in Position Statement 08-02 and does not present a legitimate state purpose. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-06 (Position Statement 08-02 overturned in Position Statement 12-01).

A state government employee may not accept travel-related expenses from a for-profit entity that does business in Colorado to speak at a workshop out of state. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-17.

It would be a violation of this article for the state to accept reimbursement from a national for-profit news organization for the governor's travel-related expenses to participate in a televised panel discussion in New York. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-12; Position Statement 12-01.

The governor may accept payment of expenses to attend the annual meeting of the national governors association, even though it receives more than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources, since it is a nonprofit entity primarily funded by membership dues, including dues paid by the state. If the dues cover the cost of the conference, there is lawful consideration for the expenses, and the trip may also be viewed as a gift to the state rather than a gift to the governor, since the five conditions set out in Position Statement 08- 02 are met. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-03 (Position Statement 08- 02 overturned in Position Statement 12-01). But see Letter Ruling 10-01 annotated above.

Employees of the state purchasing office (SPO) may accept travel reimbursement from the subset of a nonprofit, multi-state cooperative purchasing association for the following reasons: (1) The source of the travel funding is contractually allocated to the state and is, therefore, not a gift to the covered individual but rather an expenditure by the SPO; (2) Colorado pays dues to the entity, a portion of which may be considered as consideration for the travel reimbursement if specifically invoiced to reflect that fact; and (3) the state provides valid consideration of equal or greater value for the travel reimbursement by participating in the multi-state contracts sponsored by the entity. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-02; Position Statement 12-01.

State treasurer may accept travel-related expenses from nonprofit to which state paid dues 10 years ago. Since there has not been any fundraising by the organization for at least 10 years, the payment of expenses would be by a nonprofit organization that receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit organizations or entities. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-01.

It would not be a violation for the director of the Colorado lottery to accept travel reimbursement and waiver of the registration fee by NAASPL to attend a conference since the Colorado lottery is a dues-paying member of NAASPL and the travel reimbursement to the lottery director for NAASPL conferences is included in the membership benefits. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-07.

Where governmental exchange organizations require member governmental entities to pay membership dues and such dues are invoiced expressly to cover travel and other expenses for representatives from the member entity to attend government exchange organization (GEO) events, the payment of such expenses would be supported by consideration and, therefore, not prohibited by this section. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 10-01.

When dues paid to government exchange organizations by state agencies and local government members of the organizations include travel allowances, reimbursement to covered individuals attending the conferences hosted by the organizations is permissible. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-01.

A member of the general assembly may accept travel expenses from a GEO and a nonprofit organization to attend a legislative leaders' study tour of Israel since the state is a dues-paying member of the GEO and the nonprofit receives less than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-19; Position Statement 12-01.

Employees of Colorado lottery may accept travel reimbursement from NAASPL to attend a conference since the Colorado lottery is a member of NAASPL and pays $15,000 annually in dues to that organization. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-06.

Director of Colorado lottery may accept travel reimbursement and waiver of registration fee by NAASPL to attend conference since Colorado lottery is a dues- paying member of NAASPL and the travel reimbursement to the lottery director for NAASPL conferences is included in the membership benefits. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-07.

Employees of a state agency may accept travel-related expenses from a nonprofit national professional organization whose funding comes from data report registrations, shop reviews and surveys, the sale of code books and reference materials, accreditation and training programs, and testing and certification fees and not from government or industry. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-05.

Joint governmental agencies are not "state or local governments" under subsection (3)(f). Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 10-01.

An authority statutorily created as a political subdivision of the state does not qualify as a "state or local government" under exception in subsection (3)(f), even though it was formed as a political subdivision of the state and receives state funds to operate. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-14.

Exception in subsection (3)(f) does not include local governments of a foreign country, and, therefore, a member of the general assembly may not accept travel-related expenses from a local government in Poland to participate in an economic development mission to that foreign city because resources from foreign governments and political subdivisions of foreign governments are not subject to the same degree of scrutiny and accountability as domestic state and local governments. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-11.

Employees of the department of education (DOE) may accept payment of travel expenses from the government of Taiwan for a teacher exchange program where the "gift" is not to covered individuals since it was offered to the "highest ranking education official" and another person of DOE's choosing; it is not an invitation for a sight-seeing or pleasure trip but rather a trip to take official action; it fulfills a legitimate state purpose; there is no indication that the trip will entail the solicitation of business or lobbying opportunities; and the purpose of the trip to expand educational opportunities is within the purview of the DOE. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-03.

County commissioner may accept travel reimbursement from the county to attend the annual county leadership institute in Washington D.C. sponsored by the national association of counties, a nonprofit organization that receives more than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources and to which the county pays annual dues. Reimbursement by the county is permissible under the "other state or local government" exception in subsection (3)(f). Because there is no indication that either the selection process for attendees or the conference itself present issues of conflict of interest or appearance of impropriety, acceptance of the reimbursement from the county is permissible. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-05.

It would not be a violation of this article for employees of the Colorado lottery to accept travel reimbursement from its for-profit vendors to attend a conference where the contracts for services with the vendors include a provision for this type of travel and, therefore, the lottery is paying consideration to the vendors in exchange for the promise of conference travel reimbursement. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-06.

A university professor or employee may be reimbursed by the federal government for reasonable travel-related expenses to testify before a congressional committee or attend a meeting with federal government officials where lawful consideration is being given in the form of testimony before the congressional committee, an important civic act, and the individual testifying is making available his or her expertise and experience to further Congress' ability to act. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-01; Position Statement 12-01.

Employees of the division of emergency management may accept travel-related expenses from the federal government even though the exception in subsection (3)(f) does not apply if the five conditions set out in Position Statement 08-02 are met. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-02 (Position Statement 08-02 overturned in Position Statement 12-01). But see Letter Ruling 10-01 annotated above.

A PUC commissioner may not accept the payment of travel and lodging expenses to attend a three-day conference, or the days of the conference at which he is not a speaker even though the commissioner may accept the waiver of the registration fee for the day of the forum at which the commissioner is an official speaker. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 12-08.

If payment of employment recruiting travel and related expenses is reasonable and is offered in the course of bona fide recruitment process and the expenses do not create either a conflict of interest or a perception of a conflict of interest, it would not be a violation of this article for a covered individual to accept such payment. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-15.

A government employee may accept a fellowship from a nonprofit entity to attend the John F. Kennedy school of government at Harvard university since the nonprofit does not accept any contributions from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-05.

A member of the general assembly may accept a fellowship from a nonprofit entity to attend a twenty-four-month leadership program offered by the Aspen institute and the Rodel foundation since the nonprofit does not receive funding from for-profit sources. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-08.

Although reimbursement for travel to a conference or event may be permissible under this article and may include dinner with a guest speaker, other portions of the conference such as golf trips, sightseeing, cruises, and other recreational activities are never considered part of a conference, and the covered individual should either not attend those events or attend but pay his or her own way if the cost exceeds $53. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-01.

E. Relative or Personal Friend.

Term "special occasion" as used in subsection (3)(g) should be broadly construed so as not to preclude public employees and officials from enjoying social situations available to other citizens. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

Gifts and other things of value given by relatives or personal friends are not a breach of the public trust, provided that: (1) It can be shown under all of the relevant circumstances that it is a family or personal relationship rather than the governmental position that is the controlling factor; and (2) the public official's or employee's receipt of the gift or other thing of value would not result in or create the appearance of using his or her office for personal benefit, giving preferential treatment to any person or entity, losing independence or impartiality, or accepting gifts or favors for performing official duties. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 08-01.

A member of the general assembly and his family may accept disbursements from a blind trust created to help defray medical and related expenses and to which relatives and personal friends made contributions. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-08.

F. Component of Compensation.

Administrative law judges' acceptance of free membership in the Colorado bar association is permissible because it is a component of the compensation paid or other incentive given to the recipients in the normal course of employment under exception in subsection (3)(h). Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-02.

It would not be a violation of this section for employees of state agencies to donate to a financial assistance program for the benefit of other state employees who are experiencing financial difficulties due to the mandatory furloughs and budget reductions since the program is directly tied to the employment of the covered employees. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-04.

G. Promises or Negotiations of Future Employment.

A university professor employee may be recruited and may negotiate consulting contractual arrangements otherwise permitted by the university if the compensation to be paid is commensurate with the value of the work to be performed. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-01.

Whether negotiations for future employment are barred under this section for want of lawful consideration of equal or greater value, the totality of the circumstances should be considered with particular focus on the following factors: (1) Whether the remuneration that is being offered to the public official or employee is appropriate or patently excessive; and (2) whether the offer of solicitation is made in circumstances indicative of a conflict of interest. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 09-03.

H. Solicitation.

Directors and supervisors may solicit donations to an employee financial assistance program provided they do not know who is participating in the project and at what level and provided that any solicitations made are in the form of a letter or email to all employees and not personal or face to face with individuals.

Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-04.

A legislator may solicit private donations to a legislative caucus, as an organization that the legislator supports, if the legislator avoids an appearance of impropriety by refraining from soliciting contributions from a lobbyist or from any organization or individual who is either actively supporting proposed legislation or for whom the caucus members are in a position to take direct official action while the general assembly is in session. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-07.

A personal invitation to a fund-raising event is not distinguishable from soliciting a donation and therefore it would not be appropriate for members of the general assembly to invite persons, lobbyists, or corporations to a fund-raising luncheon. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-14.

Concerns relating to the solicitation of donations and fund-raising ticket sales to benefit a quasi-governmental body include: Soliciting professional lobbyists and corporations; personal solicitation of ticket purchases by members of the general assembly; seating legislators at tables around the room to assure they sit with those who purchased tickets; or creating the appearance of a climate in which interested parties donate to the quasi-governmental body in exchange for support of legislation. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-14.

Covered individuals may not solicit gifts on behalf of nonprofit entities from registered lobbyists or their principals, entities that have business pending before the state, or in circumstances that suggest the covered individual would ultimately and personally benefit from the gift. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-18.

Creation of a nonprofit organization to solicit and accept contributions for the provision of transition services between governors would not violate this article. However, the commission urges full and timely disclosure and transparency practices and the preclusion of contributions by lobbyists and persons or businesses with matters pending before the state. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-18.

A county commissioner may not solicit or accept monetary contributions to support his candidacy for an officer position in a private national county association, including money raised by a statewide county organization. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-04.

I. Lawful Consideration.

When reimbursement of travel expenses to covered individuals is supported by lawful consideration of equal or greater value, such reimbursement does not constitute a gift under this section. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-01.

The governor may accept payment of expenses to attend the annual meeting of the national governors association, even though it receives more than five percent of its funding from for-profit sources, since it is a nonprofit entity primarily funded by membership dues, including dues paid by the state. If the dues cover the cost of the conference, there is lawful consideration for the expenses. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-03.

It is permissible for the attorney general to participate in a public service announcement paid for by a nonprofit organization since there is valid consideration -- use of his time, name, likeness, and prestige -- for whatever benefit he receives from the publicity of the announcement. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 10-05.

When dues paid to government exchange organizations by state agencies and local government members of the organizations include travel allowances, reimbursement to covered individuals attending the conferences hosted by the organizations is permissible. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-01.

If attendance at conferences and other events is provided for in a contract or grant agreement entered into by a state or local agency or other governmental entity and there is sufficient consideration, reimbursement for travel expenses are permissible. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-01.

J. Gifts from Lobbyists.

A professional lobbyist may not give gifts or things of value to government officials or employees at all, in any amount. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-01.

The gift prohibition on professional lobbyists does not extend to organizations or groups that might be represented by a professional lobbyist or whose industry may be represented by a professional lobbyist. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-01.

A corporation that retains professional lobbyists and employs an in-house lobbyist may provide a bus tour and lunch to members of the general assembly so long as the aggregate value of the gifts provided in any calendar year does not exceed $50. Independent Ethics Commission Letter Ruling 09-06.

Government officials and employees may accept gifts from organizations or groups represented by a professional lobbyist, provided the aggregate value of the entire gift is under $50 and is not allocated among the officials and employees. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-01.

Prohibition on lobbyist gift-giving also applies to gifts given to groups that are composed of covered individuals so that gifts from a professional lobbyist to an office or a group of public officials or employees should be deemed to be gifts to the individuals, and thus prohibited in any amount and in whatever form. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-01.

The trustee of a blind trust created to defray medical expenses incurred by a legislator's ill wife should not accept donations to the trust from professional lobbyists. Independent Ethics Commission Advisory Opinion 11-08.

It would be a violation of this section for a professional lobbyist to have lunch with a public official or employee at a venue where the public official or employee is not allowed to pay for his or her own meal. Independent Ethics Commission Letter Ruling 09-01.

Section prohibits professional lobbyists from giving a gift or thing of value to a covered individual, regardless of the value of the gift, with no exceptions for covered individuals attending political events or political conventions. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 12-02.

Section 4. Restrictions on representation after leaving office. No statewide elected officeholder or member of the general assembly shall personally represent another person or entity for compensation before any other statewide elected officeholder or member of the general assembly, for a period of two years following vacation of office. Further restrictions on public officers or members of the general assembly and similar restrictions on other public officers, local government officials or government employees may be established by law.

Source: Initiated 2006: Entire article added, effective upon proclamation of the Governor, L. 2007, p. 2958, December 31, 2006.

ANNOTATION

The term "personally represent" was intended to mean that elected officeholders and members of the general assembly are prohibited from serving as professional lobbyists for two years following leaving office. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-02.

If employment will require registration with the secretary of state's office as a professional lobbyist pursuant to § 24-6-301 or as a legislative liaison for a state agency pursuant to § 24-6-303.5, the former elected officeholder or member of the general assembly may not accept the employment for two years after leaving elected office. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-02.

However, a former elected officeholder or member of the general assembly may accept a position in the governor's cabinet within two years after leaving elected office. Independent Ethics Commission Position Statement 09-02.

Section 5. Independent ethics commission. (1) There is hereby created an independent ethics commission to be composed of five members. The purpose of the independent ethics commission shall be to hear complaints, issue findings, and assess penalties, and also to issue advisory opinions, on ethics issues arising under this article and under any other standards of conduct and reporting requirements as provided by law. The independent ethics commission shall have authority to adopt such reasonable rules as may be necessary for the purpose of administering and enforcing the provisions of this article and any other standards of conduct and reporting requirements as provided by law. The general assembly shall appropriate reasonable and necessary funds to cover staff and administrative expenses to allow the independent ethics commission to carry out its duties pursuant to this article. Members of the commission shall receive no compensation for their services on the commission.

(2) (a) Members of the independent ethics commission shall be appointed in the following manner and order:

(I) One member shall be appointed by the Colorado senate;

(II) One member shall be appointed by the Colorado house of representatives;

(III) One member shall be appointed by the governor of the state of Colorado;

(IV) One member shall be appointed by the chief justice of the Colorado supreme court; and

(V) One member shall be either a local government official or a local government employee appointed by the affirmative vote of at least three of the four members appointed pursuant to subparagraphs (I) to (IV) of this paragraph

(a).

(b) No more than two members shall be affiliated with the same political party.

(c) Each of the five members shall be registered Colorado voters and shall have been continuously registered with the same political party, or continuously unaffiliated with any political party, for at least two years prior to appointment to the commission.

(d) Members of the independent ethics commission shall be appointed to terms of four years; except that, the first member appointed by the Colorado senate and the first member appointed by the governor of the state of Colorado shall initially serve two year terms to achieve staggered ending dates.

(e) If a member is appointed to fill an unexpired term, that member's term shall end at the same time as the term of the person being replaced.

(f) Each member shall continue to serve until a successor has been appointed, except that if a member is unable or unwilling to continue to serve until a successor has been appointed, the original appointing authority as described in this subsection shall fill the vacancy promptly.

(3) (a) Any person may file a written complaint with the independent ethics commission asking whether a public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official, or government employee has failed to comply with this article or any other standards of conduct or reporting requirements as provided by law within the preceding twelve months.

(b) The commission may dismiss frivolous complaints without conducting a public hearing. Complaints dismissed as frivolous shall be maintained confidential by the commission.

(c) The commission shall conduct an investigation, hold a public hearing, and render findings on each non-frivolous complaint pursuant to written rules adopted by the commission.

(d) The commission may assess penalties for violations as prescribed by this article and provided by law.

(e) There is hereby established a presumption that the findings shall be based on a preponderance of evidence unless the commission determines that the circumstances warrant a heightened standard.

(4) Members of the independent ethics commission shall have the power to subpoena documents and to subpoena witnesses to make statements and produce documents.

(5) Any public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official, or government employee may submit a written request to the independent ethics commission for an advisory opinion on whether any conduct by that person would constitute a violation of this article, or any other standards of conduct or reporting requirements as provided by law. The commission shall render an advisory opinion pursuant to written rules adopted by the commission.

Editor's note: In Position Statement 11-01, released April 8, 2011, the Independence Ethics Commission increased the fifty-dollar gift-ban limit set forth in § 3 (2) to fifty-three dollars, effective until the first quarter of 2015.

ANNOTATION

Law reviews. For article, "The Colorado Independent Ethics Commission: Colorado's New 'Super-Agency'", see 38 Colo. Law. 43 (March 2009).

Considering both language of this article (amendment 41) and voters' intent in initiating it, this article is self-executing in that it does not require any further action by the legislature to be effective. A constitutional provision is self-executing when the provision appears to take immediate effect and no further action by the legislature is required to implement the right given. Here, article can take effect without any further action by the legislature. Its provisions do not merely lay out bare principles without any means of implementation; rather, article has a built-in mechanism for operation. It provides for the creation of the independent ethics commission (commission) that, once in existence, will be independent of the general assembly and will promulgate necessary rules to implement and enforce gift bans and other ethical standards. There is no indication that voters intended to require further legislative action with respect to this article. To the contrary, voters used initiative process to avoid possibility that general assembly would prevent them from establishing commission that would enforce gift bans against general assembly's members as well as other government employees. Developmental Pathways v. Ritter, 178 P.3d 524 (Colo. 2008).

Section 6. Penalty. Any public officer, member of the general assembly, local government official or government employee who breaches the public trust for private gain and any person or entity inducing such breach shall be liable to the state or local jurisdiction for double the amount of the financial equivalent of any benefits obtained by such actions. The manner of recovery and additional penalties may be provided by law.

SCHEDULE

Editor's note: The entire schedule was added, effective August 1, 1876, see L. 1877, pp. 75 through 85.

That no inconvenience may arise by reason of the change in the form of government, it is hereby ordained and declared:

Section 1. All laws remain till repealed. That all laws in force at the adoption of this constitution shall, so far as not inconsistent therewith, remain of the same force as if this constitution had not been adopted, until they expire by their own limitation or are altered or repealed by the general assembly; and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims and contracts of the territory of Colorado, counties, individuals or bodies corporate (not inconsistent therewith) shall continue as if the form of government had not been changed and this constitution adopted.

ANNOTATION

This section and following section are necessary saving clauses, and proper to be inserted in a constitution; for, while it is not the business of the framers of a constitution like ours to prepare and submit to the people a code of laws, it is their duty to preserve existing laws until the legislature, the proper law-making body, can be convened to amend or repeal such existing laws as they think proper, and to prepare such new laws as appear to them necessary for the benefit of the new state. Packer v. People, 8 Colo. 361, 8 P. 564 (1885).

And has force of saving clause in statute. The saving clause inserted in a constitution for the purpose stated is of the same force as a saving clause in a statute. Packer v. People, 8 Colo. 361, 8 P. 564 (1885).

Section continued in force laws concerning office of county assessor. As the office of county assessor existed at and prior to the adoption of the constitution, and the functions and duties thereof were defined by territorial laws, and this section continued in force such laws, so far as not inconsistent with the constitution, until they should expire by their own limitation or were altered or repealed by the general assembly, the duties pertaining to such office may be changed and modified as held in People ex rel. State Bd. of Equalization v. Pitcher, 56 Colo. 343, 138 P. 509 (1914); State Bd. of Equalization v.

Bimetallic Inv. Co., 56 Colo. 512, 138 P. 1010 (1914), aff'd, 239 U.S. 441, 36 S. Ct. 141, 60 L. Ed. 372 (1915).

Applied in Wilson v. People, 3 Colo. 325 (1877); People v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 6 Colo. 202 (1882); People v. Gibson, 53 Colo. 231, 125 P. 531 (1912).

Section 2. Contracts - recognizances - indictments. That all recognizances, obligations and all other instruments entered into or executed before the admission of the state, to the territory of Colorado, or to any county, school district or other municipality therein, or any officer thereof, and all fines, taxes, penalties and forfeitures due or owing to the territory of Colorado, or any such county, school district or municipality, or officer; and all writs, prosecutions, actions and causes of action, except as herein otherwise provided, shall continue and remain unaffected by the change of the form of government. All indictments which shall have been found, or may hereafter be found, and all informations which shall have been filed, or may hereafter be filed, for any crime or offense committed before this constitution takes effect, may be proceeded upon as if no change had taken place, except as otherwise provided in the constitution.

ANNOTATION

This section preserved law concerning murder as it existed before the adoption of the constitution, so as to enable the courts to punish crimes of that character committed under the territorial organization. Packer v. People, 8 Colo. 361, 8 P. 564 (1885).

Section 3. Territorial property vests in state. That all property, real and personal, and all moneys, credits, claims and choses in action, belonging to the territory of Colorado at the adoption of this constitution, shall be vested in and become the property of the state of Colorado.

Section 4. Duty of general assembly. The general assembly shall pass all laws necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this constitution.

Section 5. Supreme and district courts - transition. Whenever any two of the judges of the supreme court of the state elected or appointed under the provisions of this constitution shall have qualified in their office, the causes theretofore pending in the supreme court of the territory, and the papers, records and proceedings of said court, and the seal and other property pertaining thereto, shall pass into the jurisdiction and possession of the supreme court of the state; and until so superseded the supreme court of the territory and the judges thereof shall continue with like powers and jurisdiction as if this constitution had not been adopted. Whenever the judge of the district court of any district elected or appointed under the provisions of this constitution, shall have qualified in his office, the several causes theretofore pending in the district court of the territory, within any county in such district, and the records, papers and proceedings of said district court, and the seal and other property pertaining thereto shall pass into the jurisdiction and possession of the district court of the state, for such county, and until the district courts of the territory shall be superseded in manner aforesaid, the said district courts and the judges thereof shall continue with the same jurisdiction and powers to be exercised in the same judicial districts respectively as heretofore constituted under the laws of the territory.

Section 6. Judges - district attorneys - term commence on filing oath. The terms of office of the several judges of the supreme and district courts and the district attorneys of the several judicial districts first elected under this constitution, shall commence from the day of filing their respective oaths of office in the office of the secretary of state.

Section 7. Seals of supreme and district courts. Until otherwise provided by law, the seals now in use in the supreme and district courts of this territory are hereby declared to be the seals of the supreme and district courts respectively of the state.

Section 8. Probate court - county court. Whenever this constitution shall go into effect, the books, records, papers and proceedings of the probate court in each county, and all causes and matters of administration pending therein, shall pass into the jurisdiction and possession of the county court of the same county, and the said county court shall proceed to final decree or judgment, order or other determination, in the said several matters and causes, as the said probate court might have done if this constitution had not been adopted. And until the election of the county judges provided for in this constitution, the probate judges shall act as judges of the county courts within their respective counties, and the seal of the probate court in each county shall be the seal of the county court therein until the said court shall have procured a proper seal.

ANNOTATION

County courts replaced probate courts. By this and the following section county judges and county courts are made successors to probate judges and probate courts, throughout the state. In re Compensation of County Judges, 18 Colo. 272, 32 P. 549 (1893).

And have all powers of probate courts. Under this provision, upon the adoption of the constitution, the county courts created thereby were immediately clothed with all the powers theretofore possessed by the probate courts. Keystone Mining Co. v. Gallagher, 5 Colo. 23 (1879).

Section does not confer jurisdiction of probate matters claimed by county courts prior to June 22, 1877. Keystone Mining Co. v. Gallagher, 5 Colo. 23 (1879).

Section 9. Terms probate court, probate judge, apply to county court, county judge. The terms "Probate Court" or "Probate Judge", whenever occurring in the statutes of Colorado territory, shall, after the adoption of this constitution, be held to apply to the county court or county judge, and all laws specially applicable to the probate court in any county, shall be construed to apply to and be in force as to the county court in the same county, until repealed.

Section 10. County and precinct officers. All county and precinct officers, who may be in office at the time of the adoption of this constitution, shall hold their respective offices for the full time for which they may have been elected, and until such time as their successors may be elected and qualified in accordance with the provisions of this constitution, and the official bonds of all such officers shall continue in full force and effect as though this constitution had not been adopted.

Section 11. Vacancies in county offices. All county offices that may become vacant during the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six by the expiration of the term of the persons elected to said offices, shall be filled at the general election on the first Tuesday in October in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six, and, except county commissioners, the persons so elected shall hold their respective offices for the term of one year.

Section 12. Constitution takes effect on president's proclamation. The provisions of this constitution shall be in force from the day on which the president of the United States shall issue his proclamation declaring the state of Colorado admitted into the Union; and the governor, secretary, treasurer, auditor and superintendent of public instruction of the territory of Colorado shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices after the admission of the state into the Union, until the qualification of the officers elected or appointed under the state government; and said officers, for the time they may serve, shall receive the same compensation as the state officers shall by law be paid for like services.

Editor's note: The proclamation declaring the state of Colorado admitted into the United States of America was signed by President Ulysses S. Grant on August 1, 1876. See General Laws of Colorado, November 1877, pages 85 and 86.

Section 13. First election, contest. In case of a contest of election between candidates, at the first general election under this constitution, for judges of the supreme, district or county courts, or district attorneys, the evidence shall be taken in the manner prescribed by territorial law; and the testimony so taken shall be certified to the secretary of state, and said officer, together with the governor and attorney-general, shall review the testimony and determine who is entitled to the certificate of election.

Section 14. First election - canvass. The votes at the first general election under this constitution for the several officers provided for in this constitution who are to be elected at the first election shall be canvassed in the manner prescribed by the territorial law for canvassing votes for like officers. The votes cast for the judges of the supreme and district courts and district attorneys shall be canvassed by the county canvassing board in the manner prescribed by the territorial law for canvassing the votes for members of the general assembly; and the county clerk shall transmit the abstracts of votes to the secretary of the territory acting as secretary of state, under the same regulations as are prescribed by law for sending the abstracts of votes for territorial officers; and the aforesaid acting secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, or any two of them, in the presence of the governor, shall proceed to canvass the votes, under the regulations of sections thirty-five and thirty-six of chapter twenty-eight of the Revised Statutes of Colorado Territory.

Section 15. Senators - representatives - districts. Senators and members of the house of representatives shall be chosen by the qualified electors of the several senatorial and representative districts as established in this constitution until such districts shall be changed by law; and thereafter by the qualified electors of the several districts as the same shall be established by law.

Section 16. Congressional election - canvass. The votes cast for representatives in congress at the first election held under this constitution shall be canvassed and the result determined in the manner provided by the laws of the territory for the canvass of votes for delegate in congress.

Section 17. General assembly, first session - restrictions removed. The provision of the constitution that no bill, except the general appropriation bill introduced in either house after the first twenty-five days of the session shall become a law, shall not apply to the first session of the general assembly; but no bill introduced in either house at the first session of the general assembly after the first fifty days thereof shall become a law.

Section 18. First general election - canvass. A copy of the abstracts of the votes cast at the first general election held under this constitution shall by the county clerks of the several counties be returned to the secretary of the territory immediately after the canvass of said votes in their several counties; and the secretary, auditor and treasurer of the territory, or any two of them, shall on the twenty-fifth day after the election, meet at the seat of government and proceed to canvass the votes cast for members of the general assembly and determine the result thereof.

Section 19. Presidential electors, 1876. The general assembly shall, at their first session, immediately after the organization of the two houses and after the canvass of the votes for officers of the executive department, and before proceeding to other business, provide by act or joint resolution for the appointment by said general assembly of electors in the electoral college, and such joint resolution or the bill for such enactment may be passed without being printed or referred to any committee, or read on more than one day in either house, and shall take effect immediately after the concurrence of the two houses therein, and the approval of the governor thereto shall not be necessary.

Section 20. Presidential electors after 1876. The general assembly shall provide that after the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six the electors of the electoral college shall be chosen by direct vote of the people.

Section 21. Expenses of convention. The general assembly shall have power at their first session to provide for the payment of the expenses of this convention if any there be then remaining unpaid.

Section 22. Recognizances, bonds, payable to people continue. All recognizances, bail bonds, official bonds and other obligations or undertakings, which have been, or at any time before the admission of the state shall be made or entered into, and expressed to be payable to the people of the territory of Colorado, shall continue in full force notwithstanding the change in the form of government, and any breach thereof, whenever occurring, may after the admission of the state be prosecuted, in the name of the people of the state.

Done in Convention at the city of Denver, Colorado, this fourteenth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundredth.
