

LOOKING AFTER YOURSELF AFTER A DISASTER

Australian Red Cross
THE POWER OF HUMANITY

CONTENTS

Introduction	3
Common reactions to an extraordinary event	4
Dealing with the emotional impact of a natural disaster	6
When the reaction or distress does not settle	10
Am I more at risk?	12
Worksheets	17
Things to remember	21

CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

In Australia we are accustomed to floods, storms, fires, cyclones and prolonged drought. Occasionally, severe disasters occur and can catch even the most conscientious and well-prepared people off-guard. Lives and property can be lost with little warning, causing a great deal of heartache and suffering.

Immediately after a serious disaster, a person may experience a range of thoughts, feelings and behaviour that can be intense, confusing and frightening. These are common reactions to an extraordinary situation. Most people recover after disasters by drawing on their own strengths and the support of others, and most will gradually rebuild their lives and achieve a sense of well-being again. However, some people may go on to develop a psychological problem. It's important to know the difference between a normal reaction to a stressful or potentially traumatic event and the signs that indicate you should seek additional assistance.

This booklet for adults is designed to help you understand the reactions you – or someone you know – may be experiencing. It contains practical advice, numbers to call and websites to visit if you need extra information or support.

Following a disaster, it's important to remember that you are not alone and that help is available.

COMMON REACTIONS TO AN EXTRAORDINARY EVENT

When a person experiences a stressful or traumatic event such as a disaster, it can have a profound impact on the person's psychological well-being. People may experience many different emotional and physical reactions which vary in severity depending on how close that person was to the event and the degree of loss the person may have experienced.

Common reactions to a disaster

Common reactions experienced following a major traumatic event include:

- feelings of fear, sadness or anger
- feeling overwhelmed
- feeling numb, detached or withdrawn
- difficulty with focusing attention and concentration
- difficulty planning ahead
- tearfulness
- unwanted and recurring memories or bad dreams related to the event
- sleep problems
- constant questioning - "What if I had done x, y or z, instead?" and "What will happen now?"
- 'replaying' the event and inventing different outcomes in order to be prepared should it happen again.

These reactions can be quite strong and are often at their worst in the first week. They are not signs of weakness. In most cases, they fade over the following weeks, although the person may experience them from time to time for a much longer period. However, if at any time these reactions seriously affect a person's ability to participate in day-to-day activities at home or at work, it's important to discuss it straight away with a General Practitioner or mental health professional.

Grief

Grief after the death of a loved one, a pet, or loss of property, can be felt intensely for a long time after the event. Everyone copes differently, but the intensity of the feelings usually diminishes with time. A person may feel one or all of the following:

- a short-lived sense of unreality or feelings of detachment from the world
- numbness, shock and confusion
- anger and self-blame or blaming others for the outcome
- an inability to find anything meaningful and be able to make sense of the experience – “Why has this happened to me?” and spiritual questions – “Where is God in this?”
- feelings of despair and loneliness
- sleep disturbances and changes in appetite
- emotional distress so severe it feels like physical pain
- fatigue
- flooding of memories or preoccupation with thinking about the person who has died
- loneliness or longing for the person who has died
- stress about financial problems, parenting and practical concerns.

Grief reactions can persist and, for some, remain intense for a long time. Having grief counselling and/or becoming involved with support groups are some ways that you can help yourself and your family deal with these experiences. See also beyondblue Fact Sheet 28 – Grief, Loss and Depression.

Survivor guilt

Some people connected to the disaster may also be feeling guilty because they survived, but family members, friends, neighbours and people in their community did not. Survivor guilt is common after a natural disaster and can become a problem for some people if those feelings of guilt are particularly extreme or prolonged. Guilt can also get in the way of asking for help (e.g. “I don’t deserve help.” or “Others need it much more than I do.”).

DEALING WITH THE EMOTIONAL IMPACT OF A NATURAL DISASTER

Following a disaster, it's important to find ways to regain a sense of safety and control. People often need to have access to a safe and secure environment, to find out what happened to family members and friends and to have access to relevant services. There are steps you can take to make the situation more manageable for you and your loved ones.

Helping yourself

- Spend time with family and friends.

Spending time with close friends and loved ones is critical following a disaster. Ensure that you have regular contact with people whom you trust and who support you. Ask for practical help and support when you need it – people often want to help and appreciate knowing what you need.

- Try to get back to a routine.

This is very important, particularly if you have children. It can be hard at first because life may be chaotic, but try to think of ways you can return to the pre-disaster routine as soon as possible – for example, eat at the same time you would normally eat each day.

- Try to be healthy.

Although your life might be disrupted right now, do what you can to eat a balanced diet and get some regular exercise – even if it's just going for a walk. Evidence shows regular exercise can improve mood. Looking after your body will help you gain the strength you will need to get through this time. Also, balance exercise with regular rest, relaxation and adequate sleep. Read beyondblue Fact sheet 30 – Healthy eating for people with depression, anxiety and related disorders and beyondblue Fact sheet 8 – Keeping active – available online from www.beyondblue.org.au or by calling the beyondblue info line on 1300 22 4636.

- Take time out.

Do things that you enjoy. This sounds simple, but often after a disaster enjoyable activities become low priority as the task of reconstruction is viewed as more important. It's important, despite it all, to take part in enjoyable activities. You may find it useful to use the worksheet at the back of this booklet to help plan some enjoyable activities.

- Limit the amount of media coverage you watch, listen to, or read.

While getting information is important, watching or listening to news bulletins too frequently can cause people who have experienced a disaster to feel distressed.

- Write down your worries.

You may find it helpful to write down your worries and concerns and use the problem-solving worksheet at the back of this booklet to identify some practical steps you can take to address those issues. Identify the specific feelings you are experiencing and the concern/worry that may be underlying each of these feelings.

- Express your feelings.

For some people, writing about their experience can be helpful, particularly if they find it difficult to talk about it. Although some distress is normal during this process, if you find writing down your experience too distressing or overwhelming, don't continue. There are many other ways to express your feelings that you may find helpful, such as drawing, painting, playing music, making collages etc.

- Accept help when it's offered.

When disasters occur, they often affect people who have never before had a reason to access government or crisis support services. Getting help can be uncomfortable for some people who are not used to accepting assistance. However, there is no reason not to accept the kindness of others now – you would help them if the situation was reversed.

- Don't expect to have the answers.

When something unexpected happens, there are no guarantees about how the future will turn out. It is normal to feel unsure and confused.

- Realise you are not alone.

Grief, loss and shock, sadness and stress, can make you feel like isolating yourself from others. It may be helpful to remember that many people are feeling the same as you and will share your journey of recovery. Shutting yourself off from others is unlikely to make the situation any better.

“In the face of the force of nature we feel insignificant and there's nothing like these firestorms to make you realise how powerless we are as a species in a lot of ways. But it's important to do things that give you a sense of control over your life – and that's one of the great benefits of exercising and keeping healthy and fit.”

Rob de Castella, whose house was destroyed in the 2003 Canberra bushfire

- Have a plan for anniversaries.

Anniversaries of the event can be upsetting, particularly if the media coverage is intense. There may be formal events to mark the anniversary which you are invited to attend. There may also be informal events arranged by those affected. You may find these times difficult, so it is helpful to have a plan to reduce the impact. Limit your exposure to media coverage, plan your day with relaxing and enjoyable activities and make sure you have people available to support you, should you need it.

- Plan for the future.

Disasters will happen. When you are ready, you can use your experience to be more prepared should you ever be involved in a disaster again. The Red Cross has produced a useful booklet called Four Steps to Prepare Your Household which is available at www.redcross.org.au

“When a disaster strikes, we are reminded of the amazing generosity, kindness and compassion of others. I am forever grateful to the friends, relatives, work colleagues, acquaintances and strangers who did what they could to help us in the weeks, months and years after the fires.”

Liz Tilley, whose house was destroyed in the 2003 Canberra bushfires

There may be a temptation to cope with trauma after a disaster by engaging in unhelpful activities that are likely to get in the way of your recovery from the disaster.

- Using alcohol or drugs to cope

Although these may make you feel better in the short term, overuse or prolonged use of alcohol or drugs can cause serious problems for you and your loved ones.

- Keeping yourself busy and working too much

Keeping busy is good up to a point, but throwing yourself into work or other activities as a way of avoiding painful feelings can be unhelpful in the long term.

- Engaging in stressful family or work situations

Sometimes these are hard to avoid, but, whenever possible, try to reduce stressful interactions between you, your loved ones and friends.

- Withdrawing from family and friends

It's OK to allow yourself some time on your own if you need it, but try not to spend too much time alone.

- Stopping yourself from doing things that you enjoy

Sometimes, after disasters, people feel they should not enjoy themselves in the midst of so much suffering. That doesn't help anyone - it's good for you and others to try to participate regularly in enjoyable activities.

- Avoid talking about what happened

Not everyone is ready to talk at the same time, but most people find that it's very helpful to talk to someone they can trust about what happened and how they are coping.

- Taking risks or making major life decisions

Often, after experiencing a disaster or trauma, people take unnecessary risks or make significant decisions about relationships, accommodation or work. This is not a good time to be making those decisions - take your time. Even decisions such as rebuilding after a disaster are often best left for a year or two if possible, so don't feel pressured to make an early decision just because others are doing so.

“An important thing is to feel empowered, to not feel helpless... That people do take care of themselves... and (to) have friends and family and organisations they can tap into to discuss. And it goes the other way for friends and family and community to make themselves available. Sometimes you get fed up listening to people talking about their problems and losses but it's really important to make yourself available.”

Rob de Castella, whose house was destroyed in the 2003 Canberra bushfire

WHEN THE REACTION OR DISTRESS DOES NOT SETTLE

While it is normal for people who have experienced a traumatic event to go through a range of emotional reactions, for some people the distress persists and they may be at risk of developing a mental health problem, such as:

- depression
- prolonged or complicated grief
- Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD)
- other anxiety disorders
- problems with alcohol and/or drugs.

For more information on these conditions, see the beyondblue website www.beyondblue.org.au or call the beyondblue info line 1300 22 4636.

People who have experienced deeply upsetting things, such as the death of a family member, a friend and/or neighbours, may take a long time to adjust to these changes and regain a sense of normality.

There are signs to look for in yourself and in others to indicate that what you are experiencing may be beyond a normal reaction.

Warning signs

If you or someone you know experiences any of the following symptoms at any time, seek professional help:

- If the distress feels extreme or interferes with the person's ability to participate in day-to-day activities
- Feeling overwhelming fear for no obvious reason
- Panic symptoms: increased heart rate, breathlessness, shakiness, dizziness and a sudden urge to go to the toilet
- Avoiding things that bring back memories of what happened to the point where day-to-day tasks cannot be carried out
- Excessive guilt about things that were or weren't said or done
- Loss of hope or interest in the future
- Thoughts of ending one's life or self-harming.

As a general rule, it's a good idea to seek help if you think that you are not coping. You should speak to a health professional if:

- your problems seem too severe
- the emotional reactions are lasting too long
- you're finding it difficult to engage in day-to-day activities or get along with family and friends.

Everyone can access assistance

Most people who have experienced a disaster will go through times when they find things difficult or challenging and it is important to understand the benefits of professional assistance. Don't think you need to be struggling or suffering severely to access help. You may find it useful to talk to someone who is not a friend or family member. Many people find that one or more visits to a counsellor, chaplain, GP or psychologist greatly assists their recovery. Making the decision to access professional assistance if you need it is a wise choice that can often help you to regain emotional strength and resilience.

“You need to allow family, friends and the wider community to give. It will make you stronger and, years from now, will be an incredible insight into what others need in times of trauma – because you’ve been there and you understand.”

Liz Tilley, whose house was destroyed in the 2003 Canberra bushfires

AM I MORE AT RISK?

Research suggests up to one in five people who have been directly affected by a disaster may develop psychological problems. Getting help early is the best way to prevent problems down the track. You may be more vulnerable to developing a mental health problem if you:

- have experienced the death of family members and friends, or suffered the loss of livelihood or possessions such as a home
- were in great fear for your life or that of your loved ones during the disaster
- have been seriously injured or have witnessed disturbing things
- have experienced a series of stressful life events leading up to the disaster or following the disaster, such as being made redundant or going through a divorce
- have limited social support available to you
- have a history of psychological problems.

It's important to talk to a General Practitioner or a mental health professional if you are concerned.

How family and friends can help

- Give them a break.

Recognise that the person has just been through an extremely stressful event. He/she will need time and space to acknowledge the extent of the losses. You can help by doing practical things, such as offering to mind the children, assisting the person with insurance claims, etc. It's important to remember that people may need support from friends and family members for a considerable amount of time.

- Be sensitive.

If people have escaped with minimal damage to their property and without injury, it's not helpful to say: "Well, at least you still have your house/life/health." He/she has been through a distressing event and it may make the person feel worse to be singled out as "the lucky one" when friends and neighbours have suffered greater losses.

- Choose your news.

It can be tempting to obsess over news coverage, but too much exposure can be upsetting – particularly for teenagers and children. If the images are distressing the person, turn the TV off and do something else.

- Talk it through.

Try not to gloss over or downplay what happened and do not discourage the person from talking about what they have been through. Offer the person a shoulder to cry on and a sympathetic ear. On the flip-side, it's also important not to press the person to remember or describe the event, or talk about feelings if he/she isn't ready. Sometimes, people say things that are meant to be helpful, but instead the comments just leave the person feeling more isolated and misunderstood. For example, it's not helpful to say: "You just need to get on with your life" or "I know how you feel."

- Get help.

If the symptoms are persisting or causing significant distress, encourage the person to seek extra support from others, such as your GP, chaplains, psychologists, social workers, support organisations and/or mental health organisations.

- Keep it simple.

Remember that providing support doesn't have to be complicated. It often involves simple gestures like spending time together, having a cup of tea, chatting about day-to-day life, enjoying a laugh together or a hug.

- Take care of yourself.

It can be very trying looking after someone else and sometimes, we forget to look after ourselves. Be aware of your own health – physical and mental. If you're feeling run down or stressed, talk to a doctor and seek support from others.

The silver lining

It may help to know that the vast majority of people involved in a disaster recover by drawing on personal strengths and the love and support of family members, friends, neighbours and the wider community. Often, there can be positive outcomes despite the tragedy. Many people who have lived through a disaster develop new skills and view themselves and their families in a more positive light, place less importance on material possessions, develop closer bonds with their community and feel a sense of pride in their recovery.

“Six years on, I still feel an enormous faith in the human spirit, our ability to survive, and the compassion and generosity we can offer each other.”

Liz Tilley, whose house was destroyed in the 2003 Canberra bushfires

Who can help?

In a mental health crisis, call:

Lifeline	13 11 14
MensLine Australia	1300 78 99 78
Suicide Call Back Service (national)	1300 659 467
Kids Helpline	1800 55 1800

Mental health information and referral

Australian Centre for Posttraumatic Mental Health

www.acpmh.unimelb.edu.au

Information on coping with trauma, including fact sheets and advice for adults, children and parents on taking care of yourself after a disaster

Australian Child and Adolescent Trauma, Loss and Grief Network

www.earlytraumagrief.anu.edu.au

Information, tips and links to other organisations for everyone involved in the care of children or youth who have experienced trauma, loss and grief

Australian Psychological Society

1800 333 497

www.psychology.org.au

Find a psychologist service and a wide range of information resources

beyondblue: the national depression initiative

To find out more about depression, anxiety and related disorders and where to get help call the beyondblue info line on 1300 22 4636 (1300 bb info) or visit the website at www.beyondblue.org.au and www.youthbeyondblue.com

If you speak a language other than English and require an interpreter, ask the info line operator for assistance from the Telephone Interpreter Service. beyondblue fact sheets are available in 26 languages.

A free copy of an easy-to-read, informative, self-help book Taking Care of Yourself and Your Family: A Resource Book for Good Mental Health by Dr John Ashfield can be ordered by calling the info line or online from the beyondblue website.

Help for mental health problems under Medicare

You may be eligible for a Medicare rebate for up to 12 individual consultations with a psychologist, social worker or occupational therapist in mental health if you have been referred by a General Practitioner, psychiatrist or paediatrician. To find out more, see beyondblue Fact sheet 24 – Help for depression, anxiety and related disorders under Medicare which can be downloaded from the beyondblue website or ordered from the beyondblue info line.

headspace

www.headspace.org.au

Information on mental illness for young people

KidsMatter

www.kidsmatter.edu.au

Information for parents and teachers to support children's mental health and well-being

ReachOut.com

www.reachout.com

Wide range of information to help young people through tough times

Relationships Australia

1300 364 277

www.relationships.com.au

Non-profit community-based organisation providing professional services to support relationships

Help for people who are bereaved

The Australian Centre for Grief and Bereavement

1800 642 066

www.grief.org.au

1300 664 786 – Bereavement Information and Referral Service

Not-for-profit organisation which provides bereavement counselling and support programs, information and referral assistance to members of the general public

The Compassionate Friends

1800 641 091

www.compassionatefriendsvictoria.org.au

24-hour telephone information, referral and service for parents who have lost a child, or people who have lost a brother or sister

GriefLink

www.grieflink.asn.au

Web-based information on grief and loss for the community and professionals

Disaster recovery services

Australian Government Disaster Assistance Website

www.disasterassist.gov.au

Information about Federal Government services available after disasters – this site is updated regularly and lists all major incidents.

Red Cross

Red Cross has a range of practical information, which may be useful after an emergency, including resources for children. Visit www.redcross.org.au or call the Red Cross office in your state.

When a disaster occurs, governments activate their recovery arrangements. This involves providing a range of support services to assist affected individuals and communities including financial assistance, practical support and information such as access to counselling and mental health services. Details of specific services available will be promoted widely through outlets such as recovery centres, through radio, newspapers, government websites or help lines, local health services and businesses, and in disaster recovery newsletters.

THINGS TO REMEMBER

The impact of a disaster can be very distressing for a lot of people – even those who were not directly affected. There is a range of feelings you may be experiencing that are common reactions to an extraordinary situation.

You are not alone. Many people are in a similar position right now and many others have been through it in the past. Remember, this is not your fault and what happened was beyond your control.

If, after reading this booklet, you feel your emotional reaction is beyond what would normally be expected given the circumstances, it's vital to seek advice from your doctor or a mental health professional.

USEFUL STRATEGIES THAT HELP MY HEALTH AND WELL-BEING

After reading this booklet, you may find it useful to write down three or four strategies you would like to remember when things get tough.

Other important numbers

Blank space for writing other important numbers.

www.beyondblue.org.au • info line 1300 22 4636

Information about depression, anxiety and related disorders, effective treatments and how to help someone

www.acpmh.unimelb.edu.au

Not-for-profit organisation undertaking research, policy advice, service development and education to improve outcomes for people affected by trauma

Australian
Red Cross

THE POWER OF HUMANITY

www.redcross.org.au

Red Cross is a humanitarian organisation that helps people and their communities prepare for, respond to and recover from emergencies.

australian centre for grief and bereavement

www.grief.org.au • 1800 642 066

1300 664 786 – Bereavement Information and Referral Service

Not-for-profit organisation which provides bereavement counselling and support programs, information and referral assistance to members of the general public

USEFUL STRATEGIES THAT HELP MY HEALTH AND WELL-BEING

TEAR-OFF WALLET CARD

beyondblue info line 1300 22 4636
Lifeline 13 11 14
MensLine Australia 1300 78 99 78
Kids Helpline 1800 55 1800
Relationships Australia 1300 364 277
Carers Australia 1800 242 636
SANE Australia 1800 18 7263
Suicide Call Back Service 1300 659 467

TEAR-OFF WALLET CARD (reverse side)