Famke Janssen stars in "The Blacklist: Redemption," premiering Thursday on NBC.

What was Carrie Fisher's final television work?

Q: What was the last television appearance Carrie Fisher made? – Peter Wendell, via e-mail

A: If you count her in-voice-only roles, that appearance has yet to happen, since she completed her work on two yet-unseen episodes of Fox's "Family Guy" before her truly untimely passing in December. She had voiced Peter Griffin's brewery boss Angela over 20 episodes since 2005, and series creator Seth McFarlane – who voices Peter and a number of other characters on the show – tweeted that those who work on the series "will miss her immensely."

As for Fisher's last live-action role on the home screen, that would have been the Amazon series "Catastrophe," on which she was working in England before taking the flight back to Los Angeles that became known for a tragic reason. Star and co-creator Rob Delaney wrote a published tribute in which he said he and his "Catastrophe" partner Sharon Horgan "couldn't help but write more for (Fisher) because she's so brilliant."

When this column was written, it wasn't known what the show will do with the last footage Fisher filmed.

Q: Didn't Sophia Bush do another series between "One Tree Hill" and "Chicago P.D."? – Heather Sharp, Columbus, Ohio

A: She did, but it didn't last very long. The fall after she ended her run as Brooke Davis in "One Tree Hill" in 2012, she tried the sitcom world in CBS' "Partners," playing the fiancée of one of two ... well, partners in an architectural firm (portrayed by Michael Urie and David Krumholtz).

The show certainly had a solid pedigree, since it came from "Will & Grace" creator-producers David Kohan and Max Mutchnick, but it ultimately aired only six of its originally ordered 13 episodes in the U.S. before it was canceled. That decision ultimately would lead Bush to another substantial series run, since NBC's "Chicago P.D." now is in its fourth season – and that doesn't count the crossover appearances she's made as Detective Erin Lindsay on "Chicago Fire" and "Chicago Med."

Q: Will "No Tomorrow" get a Season 2? – Jennifer Williams, Stuart, Fla.

A: We'll resist any of the plays we could make off the CW show's title and simply say that a future for it looks highly unlikely. It's one of the season's new series that didn't get an extra episode order beyond those initially bought, and as has been mentioned here before, that appears to be the new way that networks cancel shows early without formally canceling them.

Technically, the show still could get a renewal for next season – but on the level of logic, the desire to keep a show around usually is demonstrated by a full season being ordered. "No Tomorrow" didn't get that, so unless a cable network or streaming service steps in and decides to pick it up, its fate pretty much appears to be sealed.
