Community and culture/community claims Annotation: "This book investigates how Indigenous and traditional knowledge has been produced and positioned within intellectual property law and the effects of this position in both national and international jurisdictions. Drawing upon critical cultural and legal theory, the author illustrates how the problems facing the inclusion of Indigenous knowledge resonate with tensions that characterise intellectual property as a whole. She explores the extent that the emergence of Indigenous interests in intellectual property law is a product of shifting politics within law, changing political environments, governmental intervention through strategic reports and innovative instances of individual agency. The author draws on long term practical experience of working with Indigenous people and communities whilst engaging with ongoing debates in the realm of legal theory" -- back cover

Physical descrip: 1 digital sound disc (35 min.) ISBN: 9780959867855
ISBN: 0959867856 (Trade Cloth)
Annotation: "In the Ngungikurungkurr language of the Daly River in the Northern Territory, the word for "Deep Listening" is 'Dadirri' (Ungunmurr, 2009) and in the Yorta Yorta language of the Murray River in Victoria, it is 'Gulpa Ngawal'. The closest we can get to describing it in English is deep and respectful listening which builds community. Deep listening draws on many senses beyond what is simply heard. It can take place in silence. Deep listening can be applied as a way of being together, as a research methodology and as a way of making a difference."-- Introduction.Annotation pending Annotation: "Lorraine McGee-Sippel was just a small girl when she asked her parents why her skin colour was different from theirs. It was the 1950s and the first step on a journey of unanswered questions that would span decades and lead her to search for her birth family. In the historic climate of the Rudd Government's apology, Yorta Yorta woman, McGee-Sippel, aligns herself with the Stolen Generations as she reveals how she and her family struggled with the far-reaching implications of a government policy that saw her adoptive parents being told their daughter was of Afro-American descent."--Provided by publisher.

Subject: "The professionalization of anthropology through practical engagement is a major force underpinning the reformulations of the nature of the anthropological project. It is therefore imperative that anthropologists critically explore the conditions of their practices, to determine the difficulties and limitations to their ethical practice." "These essays examine the application of expert knowledge in fields where there is the expectation of considerable cultural, social, and political consequence for human populations as a result of state, corporate, or non-governmental re-organization."--BOOK JACKET.

Title: Contexts of child development : culture, policy and intervention / edited by: Gary Robinson ... [et al.].
Publication info: Darwin, N.T. : Charles Darwin University Press, 2008.
Physical descrip: xxiv, 242 p. : ill. (some col.), map, ports. ; 25 cm.

Annotation: "'Contexts of Child Development' is an inspiring and thought-provoking collection that aims to deepen our understanding of child development in order to positively influence the people, policies and practices that help shape childrens lives. Drawing on a range of methodological, theoretical and practical perspectives, and on leading Australian and international research, the volume challenges us to consider issues as diverse as the continuing impact of past colonial policies and practices on Australian Aboriginal child development today; the ways in which a focus on learning through the arts can be beneficial to other areas of development, including literacy; and the potentially disabling consequences of the socio-culturally biased construction of what constitutes a good childhood which currently underpins policy in the UK. A key concern of the collection is to advance insights and understandings of child development in relation to questions of cultural diversity, social disadvantage and state-supported interventions. Hence, many of the contributions focus on the outcomes of child development in Australian Aboriginal communities, including Ernabella and Docker River in the Western Desert, Darnley Island in north-east Queensland, the Tiwi Islands in the Northern Territory, Yakanarra in the Kimberley, and the Yorta Yorta in rural Victoria. While the editors consider that the contributions collectively point to complex patterns of intergenerational reproduction of disadvantage for which there is no single intervention point, they conclude that the challenge for educators, policy-makers, governments and communities alike is to find and follow the ways and means by which it is possible to support the outcomes of child development in order that the deleterious effects of multiple disadvantage might be undone."--Provided by publisher.

Annotation: 'Murray River country brings a fresh narrative to Australia's water crisis - the intimate stories of love and loss of the Aboriginal people who know the inland rivers as their traditional country. The Murray River's devastation demands that something fundamental changes in our water philosophies. Weir moves readers beyond questions of how much water will be 'returned' to the rivers, to understand that our economy, and our lives, are dependent on river health. She draws on western and Indigenous knowledge traditions to unsettle the boundaries of the current debates. In doing so she shows how powerfully influential yet unacknowledged assumptions continue to trap our thinking and disable us from taking effective action.' -- back cover

Title: Aboriginal languages in north-east Victoria - The status of 'Waveru' reconsidered / by Ian D. Clark Publication date: 2011
Annotation: "This study focuses on Aboriginal language and group names in north-east Victoria, one of the most problematical areas in Victoria and shows that a careful analysis of primary sources is still capable of generating fresh insights and removing some of the confusion that surrounds the etermination of these names. It argues that the key to understanding multiple terms of reference in north-east Victoria might involve endonymic and exonymic uses; especially ones that are sensitive to micro and macro group perspectives. It confirms that Kwart Kwart is a cognate of Yorta Yorta, that Minyambuta/ Minubuddong is likely to be a Wiradjuri exonym applied to the Pallanganmiddang, and that Pallanganmiddang is both a local group name and a language name. It is also argued that Waywurru is likely to be a Kulinic exonym referring to the Pallanganmiddang people." -- [Authors abstract] page

Source: History Australia Journal of the Australian Historical Association Vol. 7 no. 3 (December 2010),p. 54.1-54.16
Bibliography note: Bibliography: p. 54.12-54.16 noon
Annotation: "This article explores the role of history in the Yorta Yorta native title case, with a particular focus on the nineteenth-century squatter Edward M Curr's role in the outcome. It begins by describing the crucial importance of historical inquiry to native title proceedings. An account of Curr?s life follows, including details that have been lacking in the biographical record to date. The role of Curr's testimony in the Yorta Yorta case is then explored, leading to some final comments about the relationship between law and history. The article concludes that the prominent status granted to Curr's writings, at the expense of Yorta Yorta oral testimony, is symptomatic of a wider disjuncture between legal and historiographical approaches to knowing the past." Bibliography note: Bibliography: p. 08.15-08.20 Annotation: "The description and analysis of religious faith, whether as embodied experience or as the subject of academic inquiry, is a troubled undertaking at the best of times. It is particularly fraught in the context of settler-colonial Christian missions to Indigenous peoples, where historical distance and positional power dynamics disrupt our understandings even further. Whether seen as a form of control, a vehicle for new forms of self-expression, or a tool of liberation, spirituality is not somethingthat can be easily dismissed, categorised or even described. However, given the importance of Christian missions in the history of Aboriginal peoples and the continuing resonance of Christianity in many Aboriginal communities, the importance of understanding how and why faith worked on Aboriginal missions cannot be overestimated. This paper takes a fresh look at questions of belief through a consideration of the complex forces, including place, power and gender, which shaped one particularly important event in the history of Christian missions to Aboriginal peoples in Australia: the 1883?84 Maloga Mission revival." Title: Law, history, colonialism : an orientalist reading of Australian Native Title law / by Ben Golder Publication info: [Geelong, Vic.] : Deakin Law Review, *2004

Physical descrip: 20 pages ; 29 cm Annotation: "This paper argues that contemporary Australian native title law can be understood as an 'orientalist' discourse. Using the theories of Michel Foucault and Edward Said, the article undertakes a reading of the three decisions (at trial in the Federal Court, on appeal to the Full Federal Court, and then on appeal to the High Court of Australia) in the native title claim of the Yorta Yorta people. This reading characterises native title law as an orientalist legal discourse which continues to colonise and oppress Indigenous Australians to this day through representational practises which constitute them as other and inferior, as barbaric and traditional, as invisible and vestigial. In the purported act of recognition, Australian native title law practises an epistemic erasure of the Indigenous subject." Taken from abstract

Title: Previously unexamined texts in Victorian languages [electronic resource] : the manuscripts of Rev.
William Thomas (1793-1867) / Stephen Morey, Monash University Publication info: 1999 Abstract: Most of the records of the Aboriginal languages of Victoria were written down by untrained people in the 19th century. One of the most prolific was the Rev William Thomas (1793-1867), who was Assistant Protector of the Aborigines in the early days of colonisation of what is now Victoria. This article and the thesis upon which it was based closely examine for the first time the linguistic data collected by Thomas in two main sources - his manuscript notes now in the Mitchell Library, Sydney, and a manuscript entitled "A lexicon of the Australian Aboriginal languages in the six dialects of Ballarat, Bacchus Marsh, Melbourne, Gippsland, Mount Gambier and Wonnin...", now in the State Library of Victoria. The valuable linguistics data about the various languages in these sources is exemplified, discussed and compared with modem Unguistic studies of the languages concerned

Annotation: "... portrays the richness and diversity of Victorian Aboriginal culture through artworks and stories from the early 19th century to the present day. Over 340 artworks and artefacts are featured, from shields, baskets and possum skin cloaks to contemporary artworks dealing with the Stolen Generations, land rights and reconciliation. Old and new are woven together, demonstrating the continuation of culture, and words and phrases from Victorian Aboriginal languages are used throughout. Artists describe their own artworks, and stories and quotes from Elders and other community members provide cultural and historical context, telling of the importance of Country, of life before Europeans arrived, of invasion and dramatic change, a dislocation missions, and of the survival and strength of the living culture." Annotation: "Examination of how modernist knowledge traditions and establish narratives as different and hyper-extent their differences into oppositional relationships. Then illustrations of how the far reaching relationships sustained by freshwater mesh together water as a resource for production and a nurturing life force.These relationships are discussed and how they can be understood ethically and intimately through 'connectivity'. Connectivity brings into the foreground our life-sustaining co-dependencies with many living agencies. This is argument is made about connectivity within the context of extensive river degradation and water scarcity in the Murray-Darling Basin. This ecological destruction has mobilised diverse traditional owner groups from along the inland rivers into an alliance. The purpose of their alliance is twofold, to have more influence with government water policymakers, and to build their capacity to be involved in water management within their traditional owner groups.The traditional owners have developed translation tools to speak to policymakers. The author analyses how this intercultural engagement is both translating information and transforming parties, and shows how Indigenous knowledge traditions are part of building a more ethical relationship with water in Australia." Author's abstract
