

The Yircla tribe dispose of their dead in a very simple way, for they merely lay the body out straight, light a fire beside it, and leave it. Their fights are the results of stealing women and murders. To avenge such outrages, the tribes meet at some appointed place, and the object of the fight is to wound without killing. A corroboree invariably follows a fight. As a sign of affection, a woman sometimes after a long absence puts her arms round her husband's waist. The old men sometimes have a walgarn or meeting, to talk over public affairs in a friendly way, as occurs in other tribes. Probably similar meetings have in other races been the inception of governments.
