Title: Reconstructing long term limits on diffusion in Australia / Mark Harvey

Imprint: 2013

Annotation: "There has been extensive research on precolonial and postcolonial diffusions in Australia, but little research concerning the limits on diffusion? something that is central to advancing analysis of diffusional processes. There is evidence that persistent and systematic limits can be reconstructed for some diffusions in precolonial Australia, and that colonization favored diffusion, altering limits. Precolonial limits and postcolonial changes are modeled using social network theory; weak ties favor diffusion, while strong ties do not. Precolonial limits on diffusion correlate with fewer weak ties; colonization increased the proportion of weak ties, favoring diffusion." [Author's abstract]; examines the diffusion of subsection terminologies, circumcision and subincision rituals; traces diffusion of Mudlungga ceremony; examines borrowing of Jaminjung subsection terminology by Murrinh-Patha language speakers as postcolonial phenomenon; details evidence from plural marking and lexical reconstruction; contains map depicting lines for circumcision, subincision, subsections and dialects for northern Northern Territory; contains map of diffusion of Mudlungga ceremony in Central Australia
