Title: What's that song about?: interaction of form and meaning in Lardil Burdal songs / Cassy Nancarrow
Annotation: "Burdal is a public genre of song and dance belonging to the Lardil people of Mornington Island. The meanings of burdal songs can be interpreted on several levels: culturally ascribed meaning; meaning from the music; and meaning from the song text. Each of these levels is explored with examples. Metre and song text are focussed on in relation to their contribution to meaning-making. Phonological differences between song language and spoken language are examined, along with implications for teaching songs. " [Authors abstract]

Title: Word final phonology in Lardil: implications of an expanded data set / Erich Round
Imprint: 2011
Bibliography note: Bibliography: p. 347-348
Annotation: "The word final phonology of Lardil was brought to the attention of linguists by Ken Hale in the 1960s and since then certain properties of the data have led it to occupy a privileged position, in a canon of data sets against which new theoretical proposals are frequently tested. Several seminal arguments for new and high-profile phonological theories are now based at least in part upon analyses of Hale?s data set. After reviewing what is of such interest in Lardil, a body of data is assembled which alters our understanding of the empirical facts and theoretical implications of Lardil phonology. Hale?s process of Laminalization is reanalyzed as Apicalization; constrained lexical exceptions are found with respect to Apocope, Apicalization and Truncation; and a process of Raising is identified. A discussion of the systematicity of these new data, and of their demonstrable antiquity leads to the conclusion that future formal analyses of the language must account not only for already well-known properties of the data, but for the existence of multiple, active patterns that apply selectively throughout the lexicon." Annotation: Based on field research carried out on Bentinck and Mornington Island; forty-seven Aboriginal people of the Kaidadilt and Lardil tribes were asked to give their perspective on specific health issues, beliefs and behaviours; knowledge of lifestyle relationships to illness associated with poor diet, exercise, alcohol and smoking does not always influence behaviouralpractices; findings indicate that the Kaiadilt people need health professionals who can explain their recommendations in more culturally relevant terms
