

L [REDACTED] G

By Dr John Keating

Rioters steal 350 beer cases
Attack policemen to leave
Squatters defy order to leave terraces
Tenants Jobless hold up traffic
Council sell-off

An off-duty police sergeant in hospital with a fractured skull after being attacked with a mullu while walking his dog. It is believed the sergeant was out walking with his wife and dog at Dixon Rd. Alice Springs, when argument arose with another man. It is understood the man was upset because the dog was barking at him.

Two office surrounded 90 people allegedly striking the police around the head and shoulders. No-one has been assaulted, but then returned with a mullu-nulla, allegedly striking the police around the head and shoulders. No-one has been assaulted, but

A GROUP of teners was served with eviction notices yesterday after five houses for about three Science St. nique Mor about 40 taken part of Catherine

ABOUT 200 people with arms linked blocked briefly on the Great Western Highway yesterday to highlight unemployment.

The demonstration at Colyton, Blacktown and Penrith, involved Operation Jobhunt, a program aimed at finding 1000 jobs in western Sydney during October.

TENANTS of Marrickville council-owned houses argue they have not been told a proposal to sell their homes.

The proposal, to sell 22 of council's 34 residents' homes.

Pickaxes used in riot
 about two people

The 5 Constants

- (1) [redacted] the task execution
- (2) Execute the task quickly
- (3) Suspect everybody
- (4) If suspicious, abort
- (5) If apprehended, deny and depart

Crime 'set to rise'

CAR theft, break-ins and stealing in NSW are tipped to rise in the next few years in a hangover of the recession, according to crime research to be detailed at a trans-Tasman criminology conference starting at Sydney University today.

A big hello to anarchists, marxists, liberationists, DSS recipients, pig [redacted] (alas they are so few in number), absconders, iconoclasts, hippies, punks, freaks and especially [redacted]. [redacted] according to the wisdom of I. Dr John Keating, deserve the biggest salute, congratulation and appraisal. For [redacted] have become and perhaps always were the genuine agents of social change, unlike the flower carrying meek mothballs, slithering socialists, demonic democrats and all the other anal retentive radicals, who in their utterly pathetic, sometimes destructive and usually obstructive attempts in professing to participate in social change, have become the dead weights which drag down the real agents of change.

[redacted] are the embodiment of all things radical; they are the anarchists, urban guerillas and liberationists. It is the [redacted] who put theory into practice daily, if not hourly. It is the activities of [redacted] that have fucked and frustrated many a corporate fat bloodsucking leech as there are but only two methods of fucking over rich people (a) take their lives, (b) [redacted] their property.

[redacted] are the unsung heroes in this desparate battle against the agents of tyranny. [redacted] property and undermine capitalism.

However in reality, [redacted] usually litt to survive as know doubt many of you readers would understand. But this incentive to [redacted] - survival - dignifies and glorifies the act of [redacted] even more. Indeed [redacted] is the noblest of professions.

Therefore as [redacted] like most other professions requires a certain amount of skill and thought, I have devised a formula based on 5 principles which is designed to increase the effectiveness and successfulness of [redacted]. It is important to note however that the following prescription is not to be taken as a guaranteed method for successful [redacted], the formula is simply presented to enlighten some readers to the basic fundamentals of good [redacted].

Each principle will be elaborated upon in turn.

PREMEDITATE THE TASK EXECUTION

This plank underpins the most successful tasks, be they unlawful or otherwise. Simply put, planning the [redacted] can greatly reduce the risk of detection and apprehension. Planning and/or thinking about the [redacted] does not suggest that the [redacted] must concoct a blueprint prior to the [redacted] execution. [redacted] planning assists the [redacted] by arming him or her with advance knowledge of the risk environment, in which the [redacted] must reckon with during the [redacted]. For example simple issues such as; are there cameras?, convex mirrors?, mirror veiling windows?, other security instruments? and the location of such devices in relation to the targeted product. And of course what and where is the product. It is imperative that the [redacted] knows BEFOREHAND what the product is and where it lies in the store. Knowing this will prevent the [redacted] from wandering aimlessly through the store, searching for the product, attracting attention.

The experienced [redacted] will sometimes know the identity of store security staff, i.e. what they look like. This information, for obvious reasons is most valuable to any [redacted]. Though gaining such knowledge is often difficult, it is recommended that career [redacted] attempt to identify store security staff prior to the [redacted].

It is also useful to the [redacted] to have a fair picture of the immediate area surrounding the targeted store. This may assist the [redacted] during evasive action, when he or she is being pursued by security. If the [redacted] knows a police station lies close by the store, the pursued [redacted] will of course decamp in an opposite or alternative direction.

EXECUTE THE TASK QUICKLY

Executing the [redacted] quickly, although a simple suggestion, plays a crucial role in [redacted]. This principle is generally applicable to most risk conduct: indulging in risk conduct for a minimum amount of time equals minimum chance of consequence.

Do not saunter through a store casually or otherwise looking for an item that takes your fancy. This behaviour is a definite NO NO. The longer you remain in the store the greater the risk of detection. This is especially so in the larger department stores which are pervaded with store detectives. It is these store detectives who wander all day through aisle after aisle searching for the wandering, HESITANT [redacted]. Wandering and hesitant [redacted] become the bread and butter for store detectives. This cannot be emphasised enough.

How to avoid lengthy and hesitant shop [redacted]? By planning the [redacted], knowing what and most importantly where the product is. Being armed with such intelligence eliminates the need for the [redacted] to remain any longer in the store than necessary. I suggest that in general a [redacted] should allow him or herself a maximum of 5 to 7 minutes for [redacted] execution, even lesser in some [redacted]. If the [redacted] exceeds this time limit then they are advised to abort.

Although the [redacted] is advised to execute the [redacted] with haste, the speed of the task completion should not be taken to the extreme. That is, do not race in and out of the store as you will be noticed. Ideally the [redacted] should casually saunter into the store walking directly to the target area, execute the task (including the precautions) and leave the store in the same manner.

SUSPECT EVERYBODY

Many [redacted] are duped into believing that the only people to be concerned about during [redacted] are the recognizable security staff, unrecognizable security staff, store staff and adult shoppers. Although these people must be reckoned with they do not complete the list of suspicious persons. All the people in the store, including CHILDREN, OLD PEOPLE, DISABLED PEOPLE, POOR PEOPLE AND SO ON must be treated as suspects during the [redacted]. Why? remember this: many shoppers will protect store merchandise more vigorously than the actual owners. In other words the innocent shopper is likely to do you in faster than you can blink. This also includes children who will inform their parents who in turn inform shop staff. Do not become complacent about the abilities of civilian shoppers, as they will watch, pursue and apprehend the [redacted] with as much zeal if not more than the paid security staff.

Another point to remember is that people must remain suspect after the [redacted]'s departure from the store. Occasionally security staff will tail a [redacted] from the store for various reasons, such as to record the plate number of the [redacted]'s car or to tail the [redacted] into other adjacent stores. Be warned the [redacted] does not immediately finish outside the store, as in some cases it just begins!

IF SUSPICIOUS, ABORT

Again the message in this principle is self-evident. If the [redacted] during the course of the [redacted] becomes suspicious, uneasy, hesitant, uncertain and so on, then he or she is strongly advised to abort the [redacted]. Aborting the [redacted] is the preferred option even if the suspicion was unwarranted, as the [redacted] can always return the following day or work an alternative store. Forfeiting a [redacted] and the time involved in its preparation, though bothersome and disappointing, is greatly preferred to forfeiting the [redacted]'s liberty. In short, during [redacted] operations DO NOT ignore your feelings.

Many seasoned [redacted] will testify that during [redacted] they utilise all 5 senses plus a 6th sense. This 6th sense serves a magnificent function: it is a sense unlike the other 5 which can detect invisible and silent tension and danger. Some would call it the 'gut feeling'. This base term does a disservice to the importance of this sense. Develop it, use it and most of all acknowledge it.

Various observable signals and stimuli denoting the surveillance and detection of a [redacted] during the [redacted] abound, especially in large department stores. These signals/clues can range from:

- unusual coded communications on the store intercom
- the movement and behaviour of staff in the store
- the movement, quantity, behaviour and identity of staff near the store exits and/or service desk
- the movement and behaviour of other people in the store, i.e. someone following you

The above and similar events should not be ignored by the [redacted], as unusual movement and activity within the store (any store size) generally indicates something untoward is underway.

It is strongly suggested to the [redacted] that whenever he or she feels abnormally uneasy or paranoid during a lift then for the sake of your liberty abort the operation.

IF APPREHENDED, DENY AND DEPART

The most unpalatable and feared part of [redacted] is the terror of apprehension. Though contrary to popular belief, apprehension at the storefront does not necessarily imply the end for the [redacted]. However it goes without saying that apprehension must be avoided at all reasonable costs.

This final constant can hold extremely complicated and devastating results for the [redacted]. Suffice to say that the [redacted] who is assailed and apprehended by staff/security should embrace the following postures:

- UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES RETURN TO THE STORE
- leave the situation/area immediately
- deny the allegation
- remain calm and alert
- do not surrender any property (bags etc) to security
- do not offer any information whatsoever, especially your name and address
- do not eject and/or surrender the [redacted] item
- do not bargain with the assailant (staff/security)

IF YOU RETURN TO THE STORE YOU WILL NOT BE PERMITTED TO LEAVE AGAIN UNTIL THE POLICE ARRIVE. In short, returning to the store is the same as walking into a prison cell. If store staff persist in accosting you, which they generally do, particularly store detectives, depart the scene quickly. Remember the longer staff/security detain the accused [redacted] at the shopfront or the carpark etc. either through bargaining, obstruction, force and general harassment the closer reinforcements (police and security) are getting. DO NOT BARGAIN AND ARGUE WITH THE ASSAILANT (SECURITY/STORE STAFF): IT IS FUTILE AND SUICIDAL, DEPART THE SCENE IMMEDIATELY.

If you have to run from store staff, then run. DO NOT RETURN TO YOUR VEHICLE as store staff will record your plate number and report it. Come back later and collect the car or alternatively organise for a friend to pick it up. During serious evasive action when store staff continue to pursue you on foot it may be helpful to run into the property of residents. This is because store staff will be reluctant to follow you on private property.

Many [redacted]ers who have had the misfortune to suffer the experience of apprehension will recall that terrible feeling of a store staff member molesting your shoulder and politely but piously asking you to return to the store: 'I believe you took something from the shop without paying for it'. This period of apprehension becomes the most crucial, sensitive and perilous time a [redacted]er will have to negotiate during [redacted] operations. What will determine the outcome of the dreaded moment may greatly depend on the [redacted]er's response. DENIAL AND DEPARTURE remain the best options to date in dealing with this situation. Sometimes the support of friends may help alleviate the situation. Self-defense is another option but should be employed as a last resort.

Who Runs Australia?

	Wealth (%)	Population (%)
22%	$ $ $	Top 1%
45.5%	$ $ $ $ $	Top 5%
58.5%	$ $ $ $ $ $	Top 10%
72.2%	$ $ $ $ $ $ $ $	Top 20%
92.1%	$ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $	Top 50%
7.9%	$	Bottom 50%

Source: P. Raskall 1986 'Who's Got It? Who Needs It?' Australian Society, MARCH

In summary [redacted]ers should be [redacted] and indeed [redacted] other [redacted]ers to treat their occupation as a legitimate art and a profession. [redacted] is not an activity to dabble and dabble in without thought. It requires skills, vision and understanding. [redacted] for the [redacted]er and also immense misery. Avoid the misery and approach [redacted] with caution, respect and skill.

ABELES

RICH SCUM

NOT WELCOME HERE

YOU HAVE BEEN WARNED