Ireland: End British Occupation

As HAD BEEN anticipated for some time the Northern Irish puppet government, backed as usual by the British government (who then broke up—for holidays), brought in internment. Mr. Faulkner explained he 'would make orders only after a careful scrutiny of information on each person sufficient to convince me that the individual in question is a threat to the preservation of peace and the maintenance of order. The main target at the moment is the Irish Republican Army and 300 have been rounded up.

Mr. Callaghan (after consultation with Mr. Wilson) said that 'so far it has been claimed that internment would be successful only if the Republic of Ireland took similar measures' and he suggests that Mr. Heath should invite the Prime Minister of the Republic and Mr. Faulkner to London for discussions. So much for Mr. Callaghan and civil liberties.

So much for Mr. Callaghan and civil liberties.

British troops have occupied Ulster now for two years. When they first arrived in Londonderry, the Catholic population gave them a friendly welcome mistakenly limiting that they would shield them from attacks by the Paisleyites. But the British occupation has brought further discrimination against the oppressed section of the community. They found that the troops usually intervened when the Paisleyites were on the run, but if the boot was on the other foot, then the troops either turned a blind eye or just happened to be elsewhere.

Their present tactic of raiding homes in Catholic areas is yet another case of discrimination. These raids on the homes of supposed IRA leaders are only provocative: They arrested over 40 IRA suspects and had to release all but three of them for lack of any significant evidence.

The presence of troops in Ulster has given the IRA (Provisionals) its chance. The shooting and bombings are increasing as the gap between the two religious communities videns. This is leading to a situation where the Ulster Volunteer Force is increasingly taking it out on Catholic. They shot up a young Catholic boy who hitched a lift from them, and Saturday's shooting in Springfield Road, Belfast, of a van driver by a British soldier is the result of the inevitable build-up of violence.

Because a soldier mistakes the backfiring of a car for a gunshot. Harry Thornton was shot dead, murdered by British troops. Naturally people reacted violently to this shooting. Once again the forces of the state replied:

To quote Peter Farb from his book Man's Rise to Civilisation, p. 174, '... no one can use force but the state itself—that is, the ruler and his legally sanctioned delegates such as the police and the army. Feuding in a state is an unspeakable crime that is punished severely for its very presence means that some one besides the state is making use of force. Once a society has separated one group of people—those to administer force—from the rest of the population, it can separate them in other ways as well: ... Herein lies the tragedy of Ireland.

INTERNMENT

Each successive Ulster government has moved to a more repressive position as they have been called upon to enact tougher measures. The Prime Minister of Northern Ireland, Mr. Brian Faulkner, has conferred with Mr. Heath and Mr. Marian in London and more troops are being sent to the six counties. They also discussed the details of imposing internment without trial under Sections 11 and 12 of the Special Powers Act of 1922. This Act was used against the IRA in the late 1930's and again between 1956 and 1962. During this latter period both the Stormont and Dublin Governments used Interment Acts and it is argued now that for it to be successful this time, both Govern-ments will have to co-operate once

ments will have to co-operate once again.

It might be coincidence, or just a straw in the wind, but the Lynch government in Dublin was carrying out raids on known IRA men at the same time as the British troops.
Certainly it is logical for both governments to co-operate, despite their religious differences, if it suits their purpose, which is to survive in power. Certainly Heath's government wants Faulkner to survive the present crisis, even though some of his Ulster Tories prefer Craig or Paisley. Troop reinforcement might be yet another sop to head of a revolt within Faulkner's government.
Stormont governments were supposed to introduce reform measures of social reconstruction, stop the discrimination against Catholics in housing and jobs and attract new employment opportunities, but if anything the tribal-like differences between Catholics and Protestants are more marked. The religious fears and hatreds instilled in children from birth are still dividing community against community, street against street and people against people. Protestants want to keep their slightly favoured position, but they and the Catholic communities are oppressed by stupid, bigoted and intolerant religious beliefs which have never had any relevance to the have never had any relevance to the social problems of man. Both have been exploited by the employers, the Church and the State.

THE STATE'S ANSWER

The answer of the State to any The answer of the State to any group which threatens its power is force. However the increasing number of shootings and bombings by both the IRA, the British troops and the Ulster Volunteer Force (the unofficial Orange army) could boil over into a civil war in which the people of both religious groups will be the lossers.

people of both religious groups will be the losers.

The presence of British troops should be seen by both Catholic and Protestant as an occupation. The patrols of uniformed armed men, backed by armoured cars, are a constant reminder of the extreme, to which the State will go in order to keep control of the populace. Their use in Ulster is exactly the same as their use in Aden and Cyprus, but instead of looking towards nationalism, as was the case in the latter two countries social revolution should be the goal of the people. Sooner or later, the governments of the North and South will find common ground on which to unite in order to exploit all the people of Ireland.

We all have the task of getting the British troops out of Ulster, so what the divided goals can see who

We all have the task of getting the British troops out of Ulster, so that the divided people can see who their real oppressors are, to get rid of the religious prejudices and come together to fight the capitalist system that keeps us all in slavery.

The Clyde Struggle

P Oppose Workers' Control

TCS ARE THE initial letters of Upper

UCS ARE THE initial letters of Upper Clyde Shipbuilders, but on Clydeside today they must also stand for Under Communist Supervision. It is the Communist Party which is in control of the yards and under their guidance the tast of defiance—the take-over at UCS—has been channelled into a political campaign for nationalisation, more State aid, and the election of another Labour Government. The politicians have taken over and the workers have been, at least for the time being, pushed into the background.

Harold Wilson, the man who instructed Lord Robens to close the mines and got Dr. Beeching to close the mines and got Dr. Beeching to close the mines and got Or. Beeching to close the railways, has now declared his 'support' for the actions of UCS workers providing, he hastened to add, 'it remains within the law'. Mr. Wedgwood-Benn, writing in last Saturday's Tribune, explained just what is meant by 'staying within the law'. We must carry on the work-in, he wrote, while it is legally possible and then shift the campaign on to a wider industrial and political front'. Such a campaign would consist of 'an inquiry set up by the Scottish TUC, trade union demonstrations against unemployment, a demand for industrial democracy to be introduced by the next Labour Govern-

Now there's something to stir the blood! 'Industrial democracy' when we get another Labour Government! Mean-while, what happens to the jobs on the Clyde? Obviously, according to Mr. Benn and Mr. Wilson, if they can't be saved legally (that is, by permission of Mr. Heath) they must be lost.

COMMUNISTS AGREE

COMMUNISTS AGREE

The Communist Party is in completeagreement with Wilson and Benn. They are trying their best to whip up a similar political campaign while pushing the workers' ideas of direct action well and truly into the background. Their spokesmen on Clydeside, like Councillor James Reid, pour scorn on the idea of workers' control and they even refuse to use the word occupation to describe what has happened at UCS. A 'work-in' is how they describe it, complete with the old management and the old discipline reinforced by the discipline of the largely Communist - dominated Shop. Stewards Committee.

What is involved at UCS, said the Morning Star last Saturday, is not an attempt to carry out a revolution, or create an island of socialism in a see of capitalism. Only pseudo-revolutionary ultra-lefts present the issue in these terms. It is work and the maintenance of the yards which the workers are fighting for...

Of course it is work that Clyde workers are fighting for and already they have shown their willingness to defy the law to get it. No one makes a revolution for the sheer hell of it. A revolutionary situation arises because simple demands like work cannot be conceded by the establishment and a conflict then arises. The Russian workers and peasants made a revolution in 1917 not because they thought it was a good idea, but because that was the only way they could get those very elementary necessities—peace bread and land.

As we write, lames Reid (whom the Morning Star describes as the 'steward's leader' and who is a well-known member of the Communist Party) is leading a delegation of UCS stewards to London to visit Sir John Eden, the Tory Minister for Industry. 'We hope', said Mr. Reid, to have 'a useful and meaningful discussion'. But what if Sir John won't listen to their pleas for State aid and insists that the sackings go on? Will Mr. Reid affocate that the fight for jobs goes on even if it means a conflict with all the forces of the State? Or will he, as Wilson and Benn have advocated, end the work-in and go over to a political campaign for another Labour Government? Surely events will soon catch up with Communits like James Reid.

WORKERS SILENT

WORKERS SILENT

What ordinary shipyard workers think about all this we in London have no means of knowing. All we ever hear on radio and television and in the press are the voices of the Communists like Mr. Reid. The voice of the workers is never heard. However, the fact that the Morning Star is now fulminating against 'pseudo-revolutionaries' in true Stalinist style seems to indicate that not all Clydeside workers go along with the Communists and that some of them are perhaps beginning to wonder what the 'works' in' is all about. So far, all it has meant is working harder to finish work that the liquidator wants done anyway-meantime listening to insulting lectures from James Reid on 'dissipline'.

We can only hope that the whole rotten position of the Communist Party and its allies on the Labour front bench will blow up in their faces; that the workers will realise that politicians will promise anything; that there can be inquiries galore, but that nothing will really change until the workers themselves take matters into their own hands where they are strong at the point of production.

If shipbuilding is no longer produtable on Upper Clyde, then it will be stopped. That is what government is in business for. Anyone who tells workers that capitalists will invest their money and run production as a charity to keep workers in work is either a fool or a liar

A CALL NEEDED

A CALL NEEDED

Unemployment is widespread on Clydeside—and not only in shipbuilding. Yet this is an area rich in skills, in industrial plant of all sorts, and it is surrounded by good faming land. It's not a 'work-in' that's needed, but a clarion call for a West of Scutland Workers' Council that will take over all industry in the area and, in alliance with the farmers, contract out of the capitalisis rat race. Such a Council—made up of workers' delegates, not political parties—would be in a position to make all the things that people need. It could pull down the slums, grow food clean up the whole area of its years of industrial pollution, and generally make life worth living for everyone.

Maybe the workers wouldn't want this kind of solution. Maybe they would prefer to be legally on the dole in ever-

We ARE PART of an age who have exchanged morality for semantics. Political opponents are no longer mindered but liquidated, prisoners of war are re-educated, colonial wars are peace police missions and entire nations are emlayed in the name of freedom. Negroes are murdered in Department of Corrections, Christian charity is denied to the aged and the sick, the poor are hounded out of their alum homes in the name of better housing, and milk asken from small children, and all as part of a universal social service for the good of the entrenched minority. The sick are refused admission to hospitals while sleek doctors profit from the misery of those with money, communities are turned into sterile human wastelands as the towns and countrysides are frained of their public transport, and the broken-backed postal services send us the information that it is all in the interest of better public service. The right of the racialist Tory to publicly spew out his hatred or the financial monopolice efforts to wean us to the acquired pleasures of cancerous cigarettes through the protititude craftismanhip of the advertising industry are offered as our defendable enjoyments of free speech and a free press, while that same Establishment imprisons youths when they make their use of that same Jreedom.

Someone, and I wish that it had been me, said that if a thing is morally wrong then it should not be held to be politically right and judged by moral standards our masters. East or West, stand condemned, but this minor fact will hardly worry them for all the actions that I have listed are the actions of men holding power over their fellow men and they leave it to their fried sattaps to salve the consciences of the clerks. All revolutionary movements cohere around identifiable symbols or recognisable means of proteat. For the fascist Right it was their national flags and the semi-military uniforms and for the militant Left it was an open demonstration of their hatred of the faciory and the public figures who controlled them and this behind the emotional unity of the red banners.

Within these last few years we have entered an historic slough when the great protest movements have exhausted themselves and it had to follow that the young leaderless, uncommitted and without any identifiable political aim, should turn their justifiable sense of social and political frustration against the uniformed police of their particular country and that, by sirtue of their youth, make their youthful anger manifest in their stration of their sexual desires.

And, for being an identifiable threat to the Establishment's desire for unquestioning order, the young have to be destroyed. The Establishment sought to destroy the extreme Right, when they no longer needed them, by making the wearing of those sinforms illegal, smash the militant Left by making their organisations within the factories illegal and this month have attempted to destroy the young for their bawdy humour and all within the legal rules of the game. And so, with my press invitation, I join the Town's well-heeled lunatic fringe in our pigrimage to the Round House to enjoy an erotic giggle at Andy Warhol's play Pork.

Across the Town, the three editors

Across the Town, the three editors of Oz were sweating it out in prison, minutes walk from the Round House Theatre is the Compendium Bookshop landed with all the worry of their own particular court case for selling an underground newspaper that is held to be mind-corrupting, while the Town and I pushed past the ticket-touts into the Round House to play voyeur to Warhol's buskers daugling their tos and their pricks in a play of no particular value as a work of living literature. And in spite of Harold Hobson of the Saniday Times I enjoyed it for in its small fashion it amused and with a free ticket who can complain?

Anthony Zanetta, as Warhol, gave a good performance of decayed sensitivity in a role that demanded that he did no more than sit in a wheelchair and eye the kin. Kathy Dorritie as Pork showed her talents to the full, literally the lot, and Wayne County in drag hawked and swauked his way through the play as a terrible warning to Danny La Rue to end his act before times winged chariot gives him a free ride. It is an odd commentary on the Round House audience at the lirst night that they gave the loudest applause to the small coloured actress who stopped the show by demonstrating her ability to rotate her tis. Those who went there to haite the show hated it and those who went to be amused by a display of crotic fungot what they paid for.

Reviews

Reviews

Too many critics short of an historical anchor were breathing lieardsley into their wine glasses during the interval merely because of Warhol's use of an all-white set but if the play owns a literary daddy it is Ronald Firbank who departed this mortal coil and the Cafe Royal on May 21, 1926. A supreme master of the flowered prose, a most gentle creature, his contribution to the arts was a gay laugh and the creation of a handful of grotesques but most important be lived his fiction and for that we must love the man. Ten? fifteen? years ago I sat in a small private theatre in Irving Street and watched Firbank's play being performed. The play was his The Princess Zonborol, with Brenda Dean Paul, a drug addict who had been bounded across the pages of the whole of the national pressevery time the police arrested her on drugs charge, in the leading role with a mentally retarded child in a sumbling minor role. Here was scandial and we sat in that narrow darkness and lapped it in while the gay shade of Ronald Firbank tripped down Jermyn Street.

PURNELL & SONS are, without doubt, one of the worst publishing house in England and I could cheerfully libel and slander them for a page and a half were it not for the fact that, in the first case they would sue me; and in the second case I find their rubbish visually irresistible. PRAISE THE LORD AND PASS THE CONTRIBUTION by Alan Bestic (Cas-

THE TEMPLES of the ancient world were the first banks, and the traditional close connection between the clergy and money flourishes still. Not that there are not many poverty-stricken priests and parsons, but in the higher tanks of all the churches, Christian, Jewish and all other religions, there is not usually much want. Quite the contrary. Not only are all the churches remarkably well provided for in the matter of money and the goods of this world, they are uniformly chary of giving any account of it. They are evasive when asked how much they have, where it comes from and where it goes to.

have, where it comes from and water goes to.

This was the experience of Alan Bestic when he made his survey of the various sects active today in the United States. He covers a wide range, including various Right-Wing anti-Communist crussales, Billy Graham, the Mormons, the Jehovah's Witnesses, various free-lance outfits and the church, which now hardly exists, which gave Ian Paisley his title of reverend.

butths and the church, which how hardly exists, which gave lan Paisley his title of reverend.

Indeed in America it is not difficult to acquire this distinction. One of the author's more cheerful experiences was with the Universal Life Church. Anyone can become a clergyman of this denomination for a small fee. This church was founded by a sort of beatnik carpenter, Kirby J. Hensley, partly to give him a small living, partly to take the micky out of the establishment, partly to help draft resisters (who do not have to do military service if they are clergy) and partly one feels in a sincere belief that in some way it is life-enhancing to open the doors of the priesthood to everybody. Even animals and children can join.

But apart from the Universal Life doors of the priesthood to everybody. Even animals and children can join.

But apart from the Universal Life Church and one other sect at the end of the book, the record is a pretty depressing tale of bigotry, emotionalism, prejudice, nationalism, smigness and greed. Even the Billy Graham crusade, though willing to go into battle against racism, is unwilling to send financial help to struggling Negro enterprises in the Deep South, which are attempting to raise the population from abject poverty. Men who will risk their lives to preach the brotherhood of man will not risk their purses in the same cause.

The Mormons, whose religion seems to be based on a kind of caricature of the diffusionist school of anthropology, are openly anti-black. The Jehovah's Witnesses are multi-racial, all bonour to them, nor will they do military service, reserving themselves for the last great battle of Armageddon, when they will join God's army, but they do not scruple to knock on people's doors, terrifying housewives, sometimes to suicide, with tales of the imminent end of the world.

the world. The John Birch-type churches The John Birch-type churches are really too repulsive for words. It is alarming however that one such sect is accused by some people living near its headquarters of practising human sacrifice. I mean the accusers are not a bunch of hippies, just Right-Wing respectable John Birch sorts themselves. If people can accuse their neighbours of this sort of thing in a technically advanced, modern country, the head-hunters will soon be taking over! Painted savages manipulating nuclear rockets. Mumbo-Jumbo help us all!

Superstition is rampant enough as it is. One sect sells what it calls Prayer Cloths. These will heal you if you touch them, help you or bring you good fortune. Of course they cost money. The magical powers attributed to relies and to pieces of cloth of course will be familiar to anthropologists and historians. Most of this book is concerned with America, though the Mormons and Witnesses have world-wide organisations. It would be a mistake however to consider Americans as especially superstitious. We have our own dotty sects over here, as well as American imports, only the British are less emotional about it all.

The survival, indeed the flourishing of these beliefs in a scientific age like our own is a sobering spectacle. They appeal to emotions starved of more sensible means of expression. They bring happiness to many, giving their devotees certainty in a harsh world. So I suppose you could say that they give something in return for the money they take. Something which indeed is valuable and not easy to obtain sometimes. Psychoanalysis, Reich, Communism, even anarchism can do the same for other people. Even rationalism I think.

At the end of the book Mr. Bestic takes us to visit the Amish, a Germanspeaking Puritan sect, who have survived almost unchanged in technology, dress and beliefs since the eighteenth century. After all these plump prelates, with their cars and private aeroplanes and business suits and offices and glamorous secretaries, it is refreshing to be told, in answer to the question, 'How do their ministers live?' Are they paid well?' They are paid nothing. They work at other jobs to support themselves and their families, but they ask no money for teaching the word of God.' Although the Amish won't use motor vehicles themselves, they will hire buses, driven by non-believers, to take them to flood disasters or other areas where a catastrophe has occurred, in order to help the victims. Whenever something of this kind happens the Amish are always there, so the accusation of turning their backs on the modern world cannot be sustained. Their old-fashioned agricultural system is first rate. Their society is authoritarian though, governed by elders and by public opinion, and numbers of young people are continually dropping out, but quite a number come back later, and the sect is far from dying.

Also Mr. Bestic has good things to say about idealistic clergy who have gone into the South in order to help Negroes, who are no longer wanted on the old plantation, to start their own These men are having some businesses. These men are having some success, but the churches do not give them much support, and the churches activities afficient affitting a continuous and the churches' racial attitudes are disappointing altogether. Churchmen are wont to say that of course racism is neither scientific nor Christian, but people's attitudes can't be changed in a hurry, and so on, and so forth.

As a scoptic, in be changed in a hurry, and so on, and so forth.

As a sceptic in matters of religion (and of the more militant forms of rationalism too) I don't feel too upset. I do not follow Christ myself, and feel that if those who do fail to live up to their ideals it is not my affair. I do not criticise headhunters for being backward in the taking of heads. But the trouble is that these religions, unlike the headhunters, will not leave you alone. So if they feel they have a right to impose their ideas on me I end by feeling I have a right to point out to them the occasions when their actions have not coincided with their professions. It is a matter of self-defence. I hope Mr. Bestic's book will have a wide circulation, and be used as a weapon of self-defence in the struggle of the individual against these cults.

ARTHUR ULOTH

'Revolution'—Somewhere over the Rainbow

In the ritualistic and conventional demonstrations outside the Old Bailey after the sentencing of the three editors of O2 to fifteen, twelve and nine months respectively, there was a chant of Tear Down the Walls—Set Them Free and a highly symbolic scrabbling at the all-too-solid walls of the Old Bailey. This, without belitting the sincerity of the demonstrators and by no means condoning the vicious sentences, was typical of the underground press and its technicolor dream of an alternative society.

From all sections of the public, protests have come about the harshness of the sentences, from those who thought they were too stiff for the crime, by those who thought that they would not have a deterrent effect, that they thought the editors were not guilty of obscenity, that they were not guilty of obscenity, that they were not guilty of bard-core obscenity, that obscenity and pornography were not crimes. N THE RITUALISTIC and conven-that obscenity and pornography did not exist (except in the eye of the beholder) or that the State's attitude to 'crime' is part of the case for the State's abolition. It would be tedious and superfluous to reiterate the anarchist position on obscenity (see Freezow 10.7.71 What is Obscenity!) but it is obvious that several interesting points will arise from this trial and the future of the underground—if it has one!

One of the man-of-the-world comments on these verdiets is that such a harsh sentence will make marryrs of the three editors and impel the underground over to the left. Indeed it has already been stated that David Widgery (member of International Socialists) has taken over functions on the editorial board and promises that the magazine will have a keenet political edge than below (Sumlay Times 8871). One IS swallow does not make a wummer but it is spriifficant that Tribune (8871) contained on page 4

Mill Workers' Meetings

THERE'S BEEN a kind of plague of textile workers' meetings in Oldham and Rochdale this last couple of weeks with the issue of shop stewards dominating the minds of many of the participants. It all started in an Oldham pub on July 22, when close on 50 people turned up to discuss the need for shop stewards in the local mills. In most sections of the textile industry there are still no recognised shop stewards.

The mainly middle-aged lads and lassies at the Oldham meeting packed the pub with the intention of remedying this situation. Against these genuine people were a couple of union officials from Rochdale accompanied by a handful of their hangers on, who sought to sabotage the proceedings.

The meeting gave these bureaucrats a fair hearing, even when one female fulltime officer of the union cheerfully told Bob Lees that he was blacklisted at every mill in the district. It was recently reported in FRIFIDOM that the union is a party to local blacklisting by employers, and this woman seemed to confirm this claim.

It has been thanks largely to the work

It has been thanks largely to the work of Bob Lees. Keith Cooney. UNION BOSS CALLS POLICE

UNION BOSS CALLS POLICE

The events which took place last week at the half-yearly meeting of the Rochdale branch of the National Union of Textile and Allied Workers, might have made good comic opera.

A ranting Albert Hilton, president of the Rochdale branch, tried to set the tone for a witch hunt against supporters of the shop stewards campaign, while he tried to patronise his Pakistani opponents by treating them like bits of kids. Many Pakistani members who had come to criticise men like Albert Hilton, were prevented from entering the meeting either because they didn't know they had to carry cards (possibly because their contributions are deducted from their wages) or because they arrived a bit late. What all the full-time officials at Rochdale feared was a vote of 'no confidence' being proposed against their leadership, because of their past failures in the field of industrial bargaining. It was this fear which must have panicked them, and Hilton in particular, into making a clown-like display at the meeting rising to his final act of gross buffoonery shortly after the meeting closed.

The meeting itself was well stagemanged; the most vocal opponents of Hilton and his stooge secretary Belfield, having been safely shut outside in the street along with the three police cars and their occupants, who had been instructed by Hilton to be on the spot to deal with the militants.

It was when Hilton tried to close the meeting without allowing 'Any other business', and Brian Bamford tried to propose a motion, that the first sign of trouble occurred. Hilton tried to block the proposal, but finally agreed to accept the motion after the meeting.

the motion after the meeting.

Sources close to Bamford and the Pakistanis suggest that once Hilton had Bamford inside the office, he refused to accept the proposal, which called for shop stewards in the textile industry, because Bamford is unemployed. Zafar Khan then attempted to make the proposal, but Hilton, who by then must have been taking leave of his senses, started to telephone for the police in order to throw the union members out of the office.

But before the police could arrive the

But before the police could arrive the proposal for shop stewards was quickly copied out and proposed and seconded by the two Pakistanis present.

of course Albert Hilton and Arnold Belfield are the best adverts the shop steward campaigners have got in Rochdale. Without the antics of this 'Laurel and Hardy of the trade union world, the arguments of the militants wouldn't have half as much force.

Seen in this light the speeches of Hilton, a kind of poor man's McCarthy, are a valuable asset, for there is nothing funnier than watching a man apparently lashing out at fresh air, with wild talk of outside subvertives disrupting the union, and all the exaggerated claims and boasting about how much the union nosses do for their members is bound to create a situation where the workers expect more militancy from the union officials. officials espect more militancy from the union officials.

One textile union official is even reported to have said that the campaign for shop stewards is being mounted by the mysterious 'Anarcho-Syndicalist League', which is attacking the fabric of the union in a way which he has never experienced in his lifetime.

At Shaw, and several other Oldham branches of the National Union of Textile and Allied Workers, proposals for shop stewards have been put forward without any of the snags which accompanied the Rochdale case. So the stage is now set for a major campaign, with television aiready giving coverage to what must be the best thing that's happened to textiles for many a year.

Close Fine Tubes!

AFTER TODAY the true nature of this struggle has been made clear to all—now the strike committee are calling for the closure of Fine Tubes.

Sixty strikers from Fine Tubes were supported by comrades from: RR, Bristol and Coventry, Chrysler, Coventry, London and Bristol Docks, Centrax, Newton Abbot, Hawker Siddeleys, Stockport, and Plymouth anarchists and local CP and 15 branches.

Things were quiet to begin with

CP and IS branches.

Things were quiet to begin with, just an orderly picket but as the scabs arrived the police got beavy—laying into everyone including the women. Three comrades were taken to hospital and nine arrested, the latter charged with obstruction, breach of the peace and mallicious damage have been bailed and will appear in court on Wednesday.

Exchange between picket and one very large and brutal pig (the one on TV in the white crash helmet, No. 1556):

money, then union recognition and reinstatement—now it is a fight to survive.
All the other US companies down here are waiting to see what happens at Fine Tubes (they must be giving money to them). We have got to win.

The strike has gone on for 59 weeks, the management can't step down nor can we—this means we are fighting on our own. The TU officials are useless, they are still trying to talk to Chairman Barclay. They are only fettering the struggle, we don't need them, we can fight on our own.

Ron Nethercott, T&GWU official, after seeing the police brutality, made an official complaint—to the police about the police!—and will no doubt wonder why nothing will happen.

Again, the factory must close, We can do this by stopping everything going in and out. Help us! If you see companies supplying Fine Tubes (like Howmoor Steels, Osbournes) black them.

MILL STRIKER CONVICTED

IT TOOK the united might of mill managers, police and one trade union official to convict Brian Bamford of assaulting a police officer duri strike at Arrow Mill in May.

Strike at Arrow Mill in May.

During the eight-bour hearing at Rochdale Magistrates' Court, in which six of Bamford's workmates stood up to testify for the defence, it became clear that the president of the National Union of Textile and Allied Workers had been assisting the prosecution. This is not the first time that the president, Mr. Albert Hilton, it believed to have been involved in the persecution of his own members.

In exidence most of the witesess all.

in the persecution of his own members. In evidence most of the witnesses, all Pakistanis, said that Bamford had been hit by the police as they dragged him to the exit after the sit-in strike had been broken up by police and managers. Some of the witnesses, which included the 'dolfers' Rinz. Mashood, Zafar and Sawar, and the spinners Nazir and Baber, claimed that the management had put pressure on before the dispute to get higher production out of the workers.

And the latest reports out of Arrow Mill now suggest that the manager, George Norman, who is believed to have called in the police, has now been de-moted for 'health reasons', and replaced by the Gunja (the baild one) as the Pakistanis call him. The Gunja, who was a witness for the police in the Bamford case, has already come close to creating havee on the shop floor by his rough treatment of the Pakistani workers. The final verdiet on July 16, and the fine of £20 plus £18 costs surprised many of those in Court, but it shouldn't have done. The police and managers, not to mention the local union officials, had already been shaken by the failure of the magistrates to agree at the previous hearing in June. It had even been hard for the Court to find JPs willing to hear the case, but it would have been difficult for the magistrates to do other than find the defendant guilty, especially in a case like this, where the police have so much to lose from an acquittal.

THE CLYDE

Continued from page 1 increasing numbers. If that is so, then there is an end of it—but at least the proposition should be put to them to accept or reject. And if it was accepted then—the Morning Star notwithstanding—there really could be built in the West of Scotland an island of freedom in a sea of slavery. And if that happened would the rest of us wage slaver stand by and watch the State crush it? Of course not. We would surely try to emulate the example of our fellow workers on Clydeside and build free communities, based on need not profit, in every area in Britain.

Dear Comrades,

Bill Dwyer argues in favour of the Common Market on the grounds that it will break down British chauvinism. Although opposition to the Common Market is often expressed in chauvinist terms, does Bill Dwyer think the calls of Heath and his supporters to 'make Britain great' and 'give Europe its rightful voice in the world' are any less chauvinist?

He guess on to talk about the provichauvinist?

He goes on to talk about the provisions made for immigrants in West Germany (without mentioning the wretched for of Algerians in France) and to speak of the high living standards of Europe. It is surely not for anarchists to fall for official propagands in this way but to point out that under capitalism the costs higher fiving standards are polition exploration of the Third World and meaningless dehuminating of labour.

I can think of no greater civic virtue than tolerance. There was a time when Britain, by comparison with other countries, could fairly olaim to be head and shoulders over the rest of the world in this respect. Not now. There has been a steady erosion of this virtue here occasionally highlighted by incidents such as the Rudi Dutschke expulsion (what a glorious English-style snub the Danes delivered when they pointed out, after giving the German student work in one of their universities, that they did not discriminate against individuals on the grounds of their political beliefs) and the enactment of racist laws such as the one currently before Parliament. Countries such as the Netherlands and Demmark have championed tolerance to a degree that Britain appears almost fascist by comparison. The Oz prosecution would have been impossible in Denmark—they have wisely abolished pornography by the simple device of abolishing the laws defining and punishing it. The release of the accused editors on bail subject to their taking no further part, before their appeal, in the magazine is scarcely a vindication of English tolerance!

It is obvious, of course, that the case against Oz was not its poregorable.

appeal, in the magazine is scarcely a vindication of English tolerance?

It is obvious of course, that the case against Oz was not its pormographic content but that it stood for radical changes in society largely in the area of personal freedom, and was having considerable success in spreading its ideas. The establishment is fully aware of the problem of losing its grip on people as instanced by the massive displays of civil diobedience, such as occurred on the lake of Wight and Hyde Park more recently, and which are likely to increase. The whole sordid business of politicalists have and order—and the corrupting effect it has from those in high office down to the lowly policeman, who is called on to commit periury resularly to obtain convictions, and the prison warder, whose humanity is progressively diminished with every turn of a key in a sell door, is no longer being accepted as some God-inspired art but is being seen in the full light of day by an increasing aumber of people who not alone want no part of this rat race but want to build a new world in which tolerance, personal freedom, peace and co-operation will be the cornerstones. I, personally, living amongst heads' and 'freaks', am constantly inspired by simply observing this process in action. With the newspaper headlines for the odd scandal (e.g. Charles Manson) one is apt to forget the thousands who have gone to live in communes, the hundreds of thousands active in the peace movement and other causes involving humanity and justice, the millions who have accomplished a measure of freedom in their own lives at least in ridding themselves of the taboos surviving from the sick—mortally I must—Christian civilisation.

Death of a Liberal

Death of a Liberal

If may be debated at what point of time Malcoim Muggeridge, the liberal, died. Perhaps it was when he reverted to Christianity and at the same time scourged the youth for their exercise of freedom. If seems that the wretched man has now only one purpose in existing, namely, to prove his death. His comment on the Oz verdict—'justly condemned and justly punished'—drives another nall in his coffin.

The good family man

The good family man

The newspapers are having a hard time convincing us that the Oz judge. Michael Argyle, is a civilised human being. We are told that he has 'a fine war record', breeds a large number of dogs, one of whom he wishes to have esated beside him in court, and has three teenage daughters. He also, by the way, owns and breeds raceborses.

Of course, the learned judge is not the only intellectual thug—his savage and vindictive sentencing (not only the Oz editors have been his victims) reveals the true nature of this puritan sadist—but he serves as a true example of his breed. I remember a case of a judge in New Zealand who sentenced an abortionist to seven years' imprisonment. Only a few weeks previous this very judge's own daughter had obtained an abortion with

Bourveois aparchists?

Bourgeois anarchists?

The latest issue of Women's Liberation, journal of the Women's Liberation Front. bewails the fact that most of those involved in the movement are 'anarchist feminiat, petty-bourgeois'. The 'correct' element are those who have a 'socialist working class approach'.

This is not the first time that Marxists have denounced anarchists as bourgeois. As usual the issue of authority is ignored and women are told that a study of economics resulting in the socialist society will free them. It is not pointed out that where Marxists have attained power neither women nor the general society have been emancipated. For the sake of the vitality of Women's Liberation and the interesting contributions it makes to social debate I trust the Marxists remain in a minority, isolated in their drahiess and dourness.

Internment again

Internment again

Once more the government of Northern Ireland is demonstrating its moral bank-ruptey with the re-introduction of imprisonment without trial. United Nation conventions on human rights go down the shit-house as a government clings desperately to power. For anarchist there are classic text-book lessons to be observed both in Northern Ireland and in Pakistan where the survival of central government justified the slaughter of thousands of people. There are no lessons, however, quite as sharp as those at home and Northern Ireland is, at least according to the political fiction of the political survival of the United Kingdom. Nor could internment have been introduced without the approval of the said gentlemen. If those affected in Northern Ireland respond with increased 'terrorism' who is to blame them?

THIS WEEK IN IRELAND

I HAVE NOTHING but bad news and heartbreak from both sides of the border. Repression and Gestapo-like methods are the rule of the day. The ghastly Prohibition of Foreible Entry and Occupation Bill was guillotined and passed the Dail last night. We—The Committee to Oppose Repressive Legislation—held a meeting outside all the time. We have produced a counter Bill entitled 'An act to prohibit the exploitation of the Irish people by foreign or native speculators. Every group got up and publicly declared they would break the Bill directly it becomes law It has to go through the Seanad and then to Dov to sign. The Communist Party of Ireland. The Irish Communist Organisation. The Gaelic League. The Citizens for Civil Liberties. Sim Fein. The Commolty Youth Movement, etc., etc., group that generally are antagonistic towards each other's decloyies were totally united last night in their determination to make this wicked Bill—which would be the envy of the late Hitler or of Vorsign—invortable.

Just read the title, that gives you the line commade.' However, to make one quote from Mr. Buckman, 'The Left cannot afford another tactical error in this fight to the fluish.' The unheard-of procedure of granting bail to convicted men and the possibility cited of the appeal not being heard till January 1972 makes it likely for the whole affair to cool down.

Tribune and IS, but there are always the politicos around who would jump on any and every handwagon, particularly if, as in the case of Oz, the driver's seal is empty. The alternative society is by its very nature a-political. Richard Neville himself in Play Power proclaims a counter culture based on play instead of work. Art was to be play, sea was to be play, politics were to be play, and machines could do the dirty work. Mr. Neville in Play Power offered 'a new culture which is alive, exciting, fun, ephenieral, disposable, unified, unpredictable, uncontrollable, lateral, organic and popular. It is highly significant that O2 (a newspaper title brought over from Australia) originated in an American fairy tale of a little girl who went to the magic lard of O2 accompanied by the Tin Man, the Straw Man and the Cowardly Lion to confront the Wicked Witch and the Terrible Wizard. The book (or books) is little known bere but the film with Indy Garland had a great success. (It is trouic that Indy Garland was destroyed by the ratrace of the mass entertainment industry.) There is something of the fairy tale about the alternative society. One feels that it lies somewhere over the rainbow in a land of bluebirds. The Three bave now confronted the Wizard, but unlike in the book, he has real powers. Thomas Witeman wrote about Richard Nex'lles Play Priwer in the Guardian 9.2.71, We should make it clear that not having Richard Nex'lles Play Priwer in the Guardian 9.2.71, We should make it clear that not having Richard Nex'lles Play Priwer in the Guardian 9.2.71, we should make it clear that not having Richard Nex'lles and his playpower does not mean having to have Mary Whitehouse. It is the reduction of the questions to a series of fabre alternatives that bedevile real discussion. For instance, the alternative to playex is not puritanism—which might the fill of the possion.

It is possible and logically necessary to make the step from rebel to revopassion.

It is possible and logically necessary to make the step from rebsl to recolutionary. It can only be done by thinking of the consequences to any state of freedom of action and expression. An alternative society is necessary but not within the State.
