

This bulletin,in its temporary form,is ,for a group of comrades sharing similar positions and in close contact with one another,a means of exchanging news on struggles, discussions and criticisms and of publications based essentially on the New Movement i.e.on all the struggles of all kinds carried out by those directly concerned for their own emancipation.It is,therefore,important that each recipient make his own contribution to this end,in exchange for what he expects from others.He will,of course, determine the nature,the importance and the regularity of such contributions himself. INFORMATION and DISCUSSIONS on the struggle

POLAND Go slows and lightening strikes over bonus rates by Gdansk dockers, throughout the summer. Gierek sent in troops to try and clear the port with the aid of scabs. Strikes are forbidden in Poland and can be punished by heavy prison sentences or even the death penalty. But the balance of power is such that the leaders can only break strikes with the same methods as those used by liberal capitalism, because they are afraid of a new explosion repeating the events of 1970-1971. There is an interesting article in the English Newspaper Sunday Times (1-9-74)

ITALY

The railways strike movement and the CUB -Rome

The Italian railways have been disturbed for several months by the action of grass roots organisations, above all animated by the C.U.B. of railway workers of the Rome-Naples region. The C.U.B. (Grass roots United committee) of workers were instrumental in the 1968 - 1969 strike wave and general movement, but in most places degenerated into co - alitions of left wing groups, or organisms of the traditional "modernised" Unions, but in a few areas where Unionisation is weak they have retained their rank and file origin. The action of the rank and file committees on the railways is stronger here precisely because the Unions are less implanted in the centre and the South, whereas these actions have more or less failed in the North where Unification is stronger. Also the problem of wages is more urgent in the South because there are no opportunities, as in the North, of finding a second job, or a job for the wife. The weakness of the Unions allows them and the traditional left parties to call these movements and those who lead them "fascist". There is a fascist Union in the Railways, but it has nothing to do with this movement. The C.W.B. at Rome is also the only CUD which hasn't been abandoned by the Trotskyist group Avanguardia Operaia. This CUD assembles workers from different organisations, some political, some purely professional, around concrete objectives. It could represent the peasant direct from non Unification to autonomous organisation. The members are against the Union leaders (they don't bother about us) rather than against the CUD in general. But their autonomous action is the reappropriation of the Union and here comes up again a famous "united" opposition (including the Socialists and leftist groups). At work and life level hostility towards the Union is evident even in the North (e.g. at Genoa the Union supporters dare not go to mass meetings because they are afraid of being physically attacked). CUD mass meetings in Rome are open to all "without a card, or any discrimination, everyone can come". It is "the reappropriation of the power to make their policies directly and without go-betweens". The leaflets of the Rome CUD are on the themes "Let's organise at the shop floor and fight against the selling off our wages"; "removal of accusations and defense of the counter attacks by the traditional Labour organisations"; "what counts is whether we are against the boss, or not"; "proposals against the official propaganda about "the militant failure"; and "equal sacrifice for all in the "crisis" etc.; differentiation of this movement from that of the so-called "autonomous" rail unions, very hierarchical strictly professional bodies, the demands are concrete and precise - 100,000L a month (about sixty pounds) equal for all, reduction of the number of different categories and genders, etc... .

The liaisons at rank and file level for the elaboration of demands and action are very informal: personal contact and the liaisons through the running of the railways themselves play a big role. The strikes are most organised by clandestine and official strike calls; the leaflets of the CUD are circulating all the time, but they contain no calls to action, or to "join up"; they simply explain. A frightening strike breaks out in one sector and then catches on like wild fire. In August the strike affected the whole of Italy. There is a sort of permanent spontaneous agitation with 24h and 48h strikes, go-slow, trading, haiti etc. The whole of the "left" and the organised "extreme" left declare that they have nothing to do with these struggles. The quotations are taken from leaflets in Italy. Photocopies of these and additional information from Liaisons c/o Philippe Doguet - BP 202 - 4030 Liège - 1 Belgium.

Nationalised Committees

KILIAN - In the Via Romana, an industrial zone in the North of the city where several small concerns (10 - 30 workers in each) are threatened with closure, there are several occupations. Two buildings in the district have also been occupied and serve at one and the same time as living quarters for squatters, a place for people passing through and a meeting house. Each evening meetings take place between the inhabitants of the sector, striking workers and various "militants", to establish links, strike pickets, produce leaflets etc. Apparently similar places exist in other neighbourhoods.

Groups, intervention and bourgeois legality

The group Lotta Continua found itself forced to act as a police force against those attacking supermarkets. After trying to exploit and organise other lootings on the lines of the quasi spontaneous organised lootings of supermarkets which occurred last winter, chiefly in Milan and Rome, the police cornered the leaders of this group into a choice between prison for incitement to theft or action to stop the lootings. The militants opted for saving their organisation from roots action and effectively prevented lootings from taking place by playing the role of policemen to avoid being charged by the real police and thus having their organisation dismantled. After this action much of their working class membership left the group.

ENGLAND

In the summer the labour government brought out its plan for "cost of living". Wage rises should be no more than six pounds a week (already more than rises obtained in France, for example, but much less than the rises obtained all last year and the begining of 1973 averaging 30%; the government is also trying to break the existing position of the workers through increased unemployment - 1 1/4 million more now out of work. All the major Unions have accepted the six pound limit.

There is a virtual press blackout on all news of labour conflicts. Nevertheless news that cannot be suppressed shows that already the government's policy is coming under attack. This autumn many major industries are to have their wages reviewed under regular agreements as is the custom in Britain. Already it is assumed that the six pounds represents a minimum right for all, but with increased inflation, it is probable that wage claims will now strip them. None in several areas have expressed any willingness to pay for one hundred pounds a week (a 20% rise on present rates) despite their Union's leadership's capitulation to the government.

On unemployment the battle is already on. All attempts to rationalise and modernise are being resisted. All through the summer there have been conflicts in the National and local press over the introduction of new planning methods. In the Liverpool area a constant battle over redundancy is being waged most notably at Swan Hangers and at Camm-Ledard's ship-yards where open conflict has broken out between workers threatened with redundancy and the Union, accused of inactivity. Lastly a strike threatening to include all the steel workers in Britain, scheduled for September 21st was narrowly averted at the last minute. Black furnace men in Britain's major steel works began a walk out the week before, leaving the managers no choice but to protest over the new 65 million pound new furnace built at Llanwern in South Wales, which local workers refused to start up as scheduled.

Union leaders were forced to proclaim a national strike to try and manage the unofficial movement which was encircling their control. One reason for the Unions' "militant" action is that towards the end of the protracted negotiations over the South Wales issue, they were visited by by-passed by the (nationalised) British Steel Corporation who tried to talk to the workers locally about some contracts. In fact the use of a wild piece of machinery was held up for six months while the men bargained over wage rates. Finally the men were persuaded to return to work with the promise of an official enquiry by the government and arbitration service and the prospect of greatly increased earnings, if they accept the new conditions. The men already came up to one hundred pounds a week and at Llanwern they can expect to earn up to 1400 pounds, which makes nonsense of the government-Union six pound pay rate limit. The enquiry is an attempt to restore the former Union-Basic relationship by-passed in recent events.

However, all is not resolved as the men are demanding that they should be paid for the time they were on strike. The return to work was far from complete on September 21st, above all at Llanwern, although the 3,000 men who had walked out at Scunthorpe in central England were back. (Sunday Times, 21-9-73)

The corporation aims to make the enquiry into something of a test case, in which it will explore the whole question of union rights and cross-territorialities, where important pieces of publicly financed new equipment are being brought in section

British Airways has its subsidiary divisions over the Atlantic off Tirl-Stair and Concorde ~~passenger~~ aircraft. The Steel Corporation fears that the conflict over Llanwern could be repeated over and even larger furnace being built at Redcar in N.E. England.

Another new factor on the labour scene is the formation of workers' co-operatives following an agreement made recently between the former Fisher Bendix occupation has produced one example where the set-up is under the leadership of ex-strikers afterwards. Also in the same situation is the Scottish Daily News, an important Scottish newspaper produced in Glasgow. Both co-ops were supported by large sums of government money and by the Energy Minister Tony Benn and the Labour party "left-wingers". The Fisher Bendix plant is now producing part of the Glasgow press in difficult times and needs more government aid. There are attempts to sell-out again facing very difficult practical problems, but it is too early to dismiss all this as entirely "recuperation". Such extreme realise themselves, difficulties come.

UNITED STATES

Wildcat miners' strike

In 1973, a new bureaucrat, Bill Bear became leader of the U.M.W. (Minersworkers Union). His whole campaign was for a rank and file Union and for a contract for the rank and file and exploited the gap between the men and the bureaucracy for power who ignored the real grievances of the miners. In all contracts between the boxeses and the uniforms.

The new bureaucracy behaved in exactly the same way as the old one. This new 1974 contract more or less outlawed all case-off strikes to deal with the day-to-day problems of exploitation. The mine companies had obtained Supreme Court ruling in 1970 enabling them to get injunctions to get the men back to work when miners walked out (the injunctions were accompanied by various fines and prison terms, if not obeyed). They systematically used this powerfully labour-allied measure to provoke provoked by deliberate violations of collective contracts by the companies, either all on safety problems. The difficulties of American Capitalism have led to increased pressure on miners and in response to very many limited and localised wildcat strikes; 1,400 since 1-1-75, the companies, therefore, recently stepped up action and set out mine-wide an injunction forbidding all strikes until their consent. In two years time all walk-outs would be punished by a fifty dollar fine per worker, per day.

August 4th, 1974 saw at 1:00 pm a strike at Sam Mowbray's Thomaston was cracked that time affecting with lay-off miners. The next day a strike broke out. The federal judge from that affected K.K. Hall ordered the men back to work. The strike spread to the 30 miners off Logan County, West Virginia. This union local was fined six thousand dollars. The strike still spread. Sam Mowbray the black president of the mostly white local 8454 was imprisoned for at least 90 days after having been given the choice of returning to work or going to prison. This only made the strike spread further into the whole of West Virginia, then Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Alabama. After the 1974 president failed to appeal to the limitation of arbitration regulations to draw the movement back into the framework of the contract ... and the men back to work, of course. The result was mill-rallies, mass meetings and flying pickets organised by the rank and file. Among the most active in the strike were the locals 17 and 29 in West Virginia who were among the ^{only} districts who worked by an overwhelming majority for the restrictions. 1974 contract proposed by Miller. On August 12 100,000 miners were on strike.

To get around the fines and injunctions which hit the miners in their own mines a new tactic has been organised. The miners off one pit, say the pickets off a totally different mine and are replaced by their own miners by miners from elsewhere. Thus the strike has caught on like wild-fire. A West Virginia miner told reporters: "Right miners from Pennsylvania said to the contingent: "Where have you been? We're here waiting! Shut our mine down and we'll take care of the rest of the state!"

August 12th after the arrest of Sam Mowbray, a demonstration was organised in Charleston. The roads were all blocked, there was considerable fighting and looting of the local union headquarters, on which militant miners placed a sign reading "closed for strike". The reply of Judge Hall to the growing strike was however the conservative miners against the $100,000 dollars and 100,000 men back to work like the mine owners. But the UMW did nothing. Miller also organised the picket-lines off the miners' families members to cross the picket lines. A striking miner said at a mass meeting "we have got a foot in the door, and we won't stop until we're all the way in" another "I walked out from Miller's office yesterday, and I'm going the whole way as hard to get him out", such responses met with great enthusiasm. Despite the spontaneous spread of the strikes, its strength and self-organisation, and those in the "resistance Left" press talk of the weakness of the strike, which according to them has no organisation and is soon to crumble. By and repeat after, however, the miners talked of blocking all the transport off coal including the ports. (information direct from contacts in USA and from American newspapers.)

ARGENTINE

There appears to be widespread grass roots miners' all over Latin America. It is needed from the working-class to the reformed government unions. The fall of the July government and the organisations made by Mineros Peones following the most recent miners' general strike seems to have originated within the militant movement of Ford car workers (an article in the English newspaper The Guardian July 15 (photocopies of article from English paper) speaks of a strong and disciplined labour force and of possible conflicts between Labour and the army).

SINGAPORE

Solidarity London (123, Lathom Road, London E.8, England) in their issue Vol. 16 no. 2

contains an article received from Singapore on labour problems which shows "how far the techniques of 'paternalistic' management and domination have developed in a 'third world' country.
