

THE LIBERATOR

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 25, 1846

GERRIT SMITH'S CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES...

will denote the distinction between the two classes... migration and importation. The first part of the clause will extend to persons who come into the country as free people...

The last clause reads: "The first section and two first clauses of the second section read without observation..."

It is however to be observed, (said Mr. Iredell,) that the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section (the 1820) are protected from any alteration (till the year 1850)...

Memorial of the Society of Friends to Congress on the Abolition of the Slave Trade. In order to throw additional light on the views entertained of the danger...

Mr. Tucker said he conceived the memorial to be no glaring interference with the Constitution, that he hoped the board of trustees would have some countenance to a request to appear in itself...

Mr. Gerry replied to Mr. Tucker, and desired the gentleman to point out the provisions of the Constitution which proposed that the Legislature should interfere on the Constitution...

Mr. Jackson was in favor of the commitment, and in strong colors the alarming consequences to be apprehended from making the measure a revoh, in order to prevent the passage of the bill...

Mr. Baldwin referred to the principles of second-class citizenship which prevailed in the Southern States. Those mutual concessions which then took place...

He then asserted, that the Quakers are exactly the same situation with respect to their property being secured and guaranteed to them as the Southern States...

of Mr. S. But I do not agree that the change in the law... to prohibit the importation of such persons as are not free-born...

Speech of Mr. Hayne on the Fugitive Slave Bill. In the same volumes, (published at Washington in 1850)...

Mr. Hayne. The question of slavery on its own bearings, of extreme delicacy and importance...
