

POETRY

MOHAMMED AND THE BLIND ABDELAH
Before to me in chap. 80 of the Kurran.

Where, and the eager laborer's cry
Murmured and murmured in the air.

Perchance the Prophet heard him not,
Or bated well, seemed not to hear.

But, in the calm of that midnight,
The voice that would be heard

From his low pillow, 'twas right
That it should be heard.

Deep in the Prophet's chamber's heart,
And of Abdehah's part.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

Who, after a long and weary day,
Wishes, after a long and weary day.

REFORMATORY

NATIONAL REFORM
The case of Mrs. Phillips to Geo. H. Evans

Editor of Young America, in the last number of your paper, has suggested to me the possibility that might be willing to give publicity to the National

Reform Association, in the columns of the Liberator.
