L'ORIGINE D'UN FORMAT

Den Haag, 1941. Alfred Mazure découpe une de ses bandes dessinées prévue pour la presse et en fait un petit livre (8 x 11,5 cm). Le volume fait 212 pages et est disponible pour 25 maigres centimes. Outre la particularité de son format, le livre propose une case par page. Les enquêtes de Dick Bos, véritables tutoriels de self-defense, passent rapidement entre toutes les mains.

Ces publications sont arrêtées quand Mazure refuse de faire porter à son détective le costume de Waffen-SS. Relancé avec succès à la Libération, le support est à nouveau mis à mal par une action du Ministre de l'Enseignement, des Arts et des Sciences qui le qualifie du terme allemand « Schundeliteratur » ou littérature ordurière. Voilà un cas – sans doute unique – d'une aventure éditoriale sabordée par son trop grand succès !

RENOUVEAU D'UN SUPPORT

Ces petits ouvrages — proches de la taille d'un paquet de cigarettes ou d'un jeu de cartes — tiennent dans la paume de la main. Ils sont ainsi lisibles et transportables partout. Conçu dans un contexte de restrictions du papier lié à la guerre, ce format est économique. Il est sans chute ni gaspillage.

Le support offre l'autonomie de l'illustration et — avec la juxtaposition d'images par double page — il induit la dynamique narrative de la bande dessinée. Ne se cantonnant pas à une miniature, ces cases isolées sur une seule page ont l'avantage d'être plus grandes, et donc plus lisibles, que les cases standards des albums franco-belges.

La souplesse du papier et la forte pagination — entre 180 et 250 pages — permettent au petit livre d'également jouer de la logique du feuilletoscope. Ce dernier trouve son origine dans le blow book : des petits livres de magie qui apparaissent aux débuts de l'imprimerie.

FEUILLETOSCOPE ou FLIP BOOK ; petite machine de papier à l'origine du dessin animé et de son pendant photographique : le cinématographe.
