The Pac-12 Conference can almost call Oklahoma City its home away from home when it comes to postseason softball.

The "Conference of Champions" has enjoyed unparalleled success in the NCAA Tournament and the Women's College World Series. Though the Pac-12 did not begin sponsoring softball until 1987, Conference teams have competed in the prestigious event since the NCAA started recognizing it as a sport in 1982. All nine Pac-12 teams have made appearances in the WCWS.

In the NCAA's 39-year championship history, Pac-12 schools have won the title an astounding 24 times, more than any other conference in the nation. Additionally, there have been 12 occasions when the NCAA Championship series featured two Conference schools. Most recently, the 2010 championship game pitted the sport's two most storied programs – Arizona and UCLA -- against each other. Overall, only 13 different teams have claimed the crown: UCLA (12), Arizona (8), Arizona State (2), Florida (2), Texas A&M (2), Oklahoma (2), California (1), Washington (1), Alabama (1), Cal State Fullerton (1), Fresno State (1), Michigan (1), and Florida State (1).

UCLA and Arizona have practically made the Women's College World Series a yearly stop with a combined 52 appearances. The Bruins took home six titles from 1982-90 while Arizona dominated the 1990s with five championships of its own.

The 2019 season continued the standard of strong Pac-12 presence in the NCAA Tournament, with three Conference teams making up nearly half of the eight team Women's College World Series field.

Throughout NCAA softball history, players like Lisa Fernandez, Nancy Evans, Yvonne Gutierrez and Jenny Dalton have re-written the WCWS record books and many team records have been established in the process.

The Pac-12 has continued its successful postseason run, accounting for 11 titles since 2000. As a result of this unprecedented success, the Pac-12 Conference has established itself as the premier softball conference in the nation and truly the "Conference of Champions."
