

Strategic Litigation

What's Strali?

Strali is a nonprofit organization aiming at promoting human rights protection through the judicial system.

1.

What do we do?

We do Strategic Litigation.

Strategic Litigation is a legal tool, born in the United States, whose purpose is to promote the protection of existing rights and raise the attention on rights that are not protected yet.

Strategic Litigation mission: improve existing rights protection or attaining the declaration of new rights that do not exist yet.

How?

Strategic Litigation is simple!

It is based on real, carefully-selected cases that show, thanks to competent Courts judgements, that a specific right must be protected and respected or introduced (in case it does not exist yet).

2.

How does it work?

Strategic Litigation works on two levels:

1. The legal level which takes place in courts, where we seek judgements delivered by national and international judges that may set a precedent or lead to a legislative change.
2. The communicative level, whose goal is to raise public awareness on specific topics through articles, events and social media engagement. Because a strategic case needs to get out of courts and become macroscopic!

3.

What cases is StraLi interested in?

Not every case is suitable to Strali intervention.

Every case is submitted to a Committee that analyses its strategic potential to reach Strali ultimate goal.

Strali evaluates the impact that a single right violation, once it is brought before a judge, may have on the current legislation with the purpose of introducing or improving a right.
